"Had you not better wait till I have done before you call me hard? If I wished to be hard, I should tell you that I no longer cared for you, that my prevailing feeling toward you was one of contempt. It would perhaps mortify you to think that I had shaken off such heavy chains But it is not the truth, Eva. I love you now, passionately as ever, as I always have loved you, as I always shall love you. I hope for nothing, I ask for nothing; in this business it has always been my part to give, not to receive. I despise myself for it, but so it is."

She laid her hand upon his shoulder. "Spare me, Ernest," she whispered.

"I have very little more to say, only this: I believe all this I have given you has not been given uselessly. I believe that the love of the flesh will die with the flesh. But my love for you has been something more and higher than that, or how has it lived without hope, and, in spite of its dishonor, through so many years? It is of the spirit, and I believe its life will be like that of the spirit, unending, and that when this hateful life is done with I shall in some strange way reap its fruits with you."

"Why do you believe that, Ernest?"

"Why do I believe it? I can not tell you. Perhaps it is nothing but the phantasy of a mind broken down with brooding on its grief. In trouble we grow toward the light like a plant in the dark, you know. As a crushed flower smells sweet, so all that is most beautiful and aspiring in human nature is called into life when God lays His heavy hand upon us. Heaven is sorrow's sole ambition. No, Eva, I do not know why I believe it, certainly you have given me no grounds for faith, but I do believe it, and it comforts me. By-the-way, how did you know I was here?"

"I passed you on the Hoe this morning walking with Dorothy."

Ernest started. "I felt you pass," he said, "and asked Dorothy who it was. She said she did not know."

"She knew, but I made a sign to her not to say."

"Oh!"

"Ernest, will you promise me something?" asked Eva, wildly.

"What is it?"

"Nothing. I have changed my mind—nothing at all."

The promise that she was about to ask was, that he would not marry Dorothy, but her better nature rose in rebellion against it. Then they talked awhile of Ernest's life abroad.

"Well," said Ernest, rising after a pause, "good-by, Eva."

"It is a very cruel word," she murmured.

"Yes, it is true but not more cruel than the rest."

"It has been happiness to see you, Ernest."

He shrugged his shoulders as he answered; "Has it? For myself I am not sure if it has been a happiness or a misery. I must have a year or two of quiet darkness to think over before I make up my mind. Will you kindly ring the bell for the servant to take me away?"

Half unconsciously she obeyed him, and then she came and took his hand and looked with all her eyes at all her soul into his face. It was fortunate that he could not see her.

"O Ernest, you are blind!" she cried, scarcely knowing what she said.

He laughed—a sad little laugh. "Yes, Eva, I am as blind now as you have been always."

"Ernest! Ernest how can I live without seeing you? I love you!" and she fell on his arms.

He kissed her, and then somehow, he never knew how, found the strength to put her from him. Perhaps it was because he heard the servant coming.

Next moment the servant came and led him away.

As soon as he was gone Eva flung herself on the sofa and sobbed as though her heart would break.

When Dorothy saw the fresh-faced young officer, who had come up to see Ernest, mysteriously lead him aside, and whisper something in his ear, which caused him to turn first red and then white, she, being a shrewd observer, thought it curious. But when Ernest asked her to ring the bell and then ordered a fly to be brought round at once, the idea of Eva once flashed into her mind. She and Ernest must be at the bottom of this mystery. Presently the fly was announced, and Ernest went off without a word, leaving her to the tender mercies of the cherub who was contemplating her with his rod eye as he had contemplated Eva, at finding her also charming. It must be remembered that he had but just returned from South Africa, and was prepared [illegible] to fall in love [illegible] an apple-woman. How much more then would he succumb to the charms of the stately Eva and the extremely fascinating Dorothy It was some time before the latter could get rid of him and his eye-glass. On an ordinary occasion she would have been glad enough to entertain him, for Dothy liked a little male society, and the cherub, though he did look so painfully young, was not half a bad fellow, and after all a whole soul was in his eyeglass, and his spring was meant to be complimentary. At just now she had a purpose in her little head, and was heartily glad when he darted to reflect over the rival attractions of the two charmers.

(To be continued.)

Late Railway News.

A conference was held on Tuesday at Owen Sound between the Town Council and Board of Trade and Mr. Wragge, Chief Engineer of the Grand Trunk, at which the latter gentleman promised to report favorably to Mr. Hickson on the proposed extension from Tara or Allandale to Owen Sound.

Work will be commenced immediately on the railway from Winnipeg to the international boundary, arrangements for connection with the Northern Pacific Railway at the boundary having already been made.

An absolute denial is given at Winnipeg to the reported negotiation for the sale of the Manitoba & Northwestern Road to the Grand Trunk.

The pay car of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is now out on the Western division, was ditched near Medicine Hat on Tuesday and was badly damaged.

Mr. Pugsley, President of the Regina & Long Lake Railway, who arrived at Winnipeg from the East yesterday, said construction operations would be commenced as soon as the weather permits, and that the line will be built to the South Saskatchewan before the snow comes next fall.

Compromising With the Day.

"No, Bobby," said his mother, "you cannot go skating to-day. It's Sunday, you know."

"Well, ma," persisted Bobby, "can't I go if I'll just skate straight ahead and not try to do any fancy work?"—Puck.

Life in Utah.

Mormon wife (to husband)—Are you going out, dear?

Mormon husband—Yes: I have an engagement with Miss Brigham. She is to give me her answer to-night.

The ancient Peruvians used to flatten their heads.

In an old valise belonging to O. O. Putney, a miner who was killed by an avalanche at Bay Horse, Idaho, were found some faded love letters, a few bones, and a note saying, "I wish these bones buried with me."

A Dubuque, Prohibition Iowa, undertaker recently ordered stock from a Michigan coffin manufactory, and added this postscript to the order: "Put in one of the caskets a gallon of Old Crow whiskey and bill as embalming fluid."

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

The following Bills were ntroduced and read a first time :

To consolidate the debentre debt of the township of Howick. -Mr.Gibson (Huron).

Respecting the driving of sawlogs and other timber on lakes d rivers.—Mr. Murray.

Respecting the Fort Gege Assembly, to be henceforth known as he Niagara Assembly.—Mr. Garson.

Respecting the Gore Dirict Mutual Fire Insurance Co.—Mr. Gibs (Hamilton).

To amend the charter of the Toronto School of Medicine.

To incorporate the outhern Central Railway Co.—Mr. McK

To amend the Act inporating the Ontario & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Co.—Mr. Leys.

Respecting Knox Chch Cemetery, Ayr —Mr. Gibson (Hamin) for Mr. McMaster.

To amend the Assment Act—Mr. Wylie.

To incorporate the ames Valley Railway Co.—Mr. Tooley.

To amend the Assesent Act—Mr. Gibson (Hamilton).

To incorporate the ternational Ferry Railway Co.—Mr. M.

To allow the corpion of the city of London to borrow cin moneys for school purposes—Mr. Mero.

Mr. Wood (Hasti moved for an order of the House for a rn of the number of standard logs cut by al mill owners by authority of the C Lands Department from the timber of it holders during the year 1886. Such re to give the location of mills, names mill-owners with the amount each paid way of dues to the Department, and the owner of limits, with a copy of the partmental Regulations affecting the ame. He said there were no complaip far as he knew as to the administratio this rule, bit there were complaints e principle and terms upon which they e granted.

Hon. Mr. Pa said he was glad to have the hon. eman say that there was no complaide respecting the administration of system—the objection being simply to price. The lumbermen paid 75c a thou feet on the lumber cut. The local miner paid $1.50, which covered the 75 at had to be paid to the Governme and 75c for the limit owner himself. (Mr. Pardee) thought the mover of resolution could hardly have examine question fully, or he would have f that the sum paid to the limit own was as low as possible. Out of that 75 s the limit owner had to meet the bo ground rent, interest on investment, While the hon. gentleman was u a reduction, the limit owners were g an increase, which was pretty good ice that the Government had struck t ppy medium. The bonus in some ca mounted to 75 cents a thousand fe Would it be right to say that the loc l owner should be allowed to take it fo ? Of course there was no objection to return, and it would be brought dow

Mr. Woo ke briefly in explanation, stating tha did not propose that the local mill o should be given unlimited access to de markets, but that under proper reg ns he should be allowed realize on er cut, even if he had to go beyond th ds at present allowed him to do it. ead of an arbitrary price of 15 cents a dard log, the value to the limit hol hould be ascertained and a fair sum demanded from the mill owner. Has making no charges against the Minis for so far as he (Mr. Wood) knew the der-in-Council was administered with ness.

The res ion was adopted.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Dr. Wighby- On Friday next Bill for the provement of live stock in Ontario.

Mr. Pron- On Friday next Bill entitled an t to Extend to all Landholders' Sons the inicipal franchise.

Mr. Hich- - On Friday next Act respectin landholdrs and tenants and distress.

The fol wing Bils were introduced and read the first time.

Respecing the ity of Stratford - Mr. Gibson (Hamilton)

To autorize W.P. Cade to practice as a dental rgeon i Ontario.—Mr. Gibson (Hamilto).

Mr. Les move—That in view of the strong feling throughout the Province in favor of having the tolls abolished on roads held by joint stk companies, it is the opinion of this Hse that the Government should take the atter into consideration and introduce su legislation as will lead to the abolition such tolls.

He said that had brought the matter up in the form of a resolution instead of introducing a Bl, because he hoped the Government wld take the matter up, and that the was a better chance in that wa of his object being attained. Th system now in vogue had been esblished at a time when it was difficult to get roads built and kept in repair, and ompanies were formed for the purpose an allowed to charge tolls. It was time nowhat it should be abolished, as it was quit behind the age. He was not in favor abolishing toll-gates without compensting the stockholders in these companies. Several methods of compensation had bn suggested, one being that the paymers to be made to the stockholders shod be spread over a number of years.

Hon. Mr. Fraser said the hon. gentleman had not for he first time introduced this question, hving evidently given it great attention. Yet the hon. gentleman admitted tha the question was hedged about with manist difficulties, so great and so numerous hat he (Mr. Lees) himself had not come o any conclusion upon it which he was ale to put in the form of a measure to e presented to the House. He (Hon. Mr Fraser) did not suppose that the hon. gentleman sought to call upon the House toplace the responsibility upon the Government of introducing a Bill without regard to the Government's views on the question What the hon. gentleman desired, doubtless, was to have the matter discussed with a view to enabling him to prepare a measure on the subject. This was a matter of municipal regulation, the counties having power to deal with the whole matter by purchase of the roads.

The Government was ared to let the resolution pass in ent shape, but would be glad to the discussion of the subject. ed that the whole question would gone into.

Mr. Gibson (Ham said that he would like to speak b the question, having a very strong thy with the mover of the resolut thought that this toll-gate nuisan admitted to be a serious evil and bers having on previous occasions red themselves against it, it was a for the Government to deal wit he district from which he came wa seriously injured by this nuisance. true that this was a difficult question the original owners of the roads were he owners, the question would be m ily settled, but the stock having ch lands and now representing sums fa vance of the cost of the roads, the es, if they bought the roads, must pa what was in fact simply watered stock. county should not, as the mover of resolution had said, be called upon to the roads as the only means of set ent, because there were parts of the les in every case which were not int ed in the purchase. A plan might be pr d under which the purchase could ccompanied by concessions to those pa f the counties which got less advantages n others in proportion to the amount th ntributed to the purchase.

Mr. Me h suggested that the motion be referre the Municipal Committee.

Hon. G Fraser said that the hon. gentleman d had moved the resolution might in duce a Bill.

Mr. M dith said that this would be casting a private member a duty which should performed by the Government. The G ernment might have devoted to this su t a little of the time they had given the Dominion elections. The matter d been under consideration for several ars, and it was admitted that there as a grievance. He thought that the m ter should be referred either to a select committee or to the Municipal Committe

Hon. O. Mowat said that the leader of the pposition had been in the House for fifte years; he thought there was a grievance; and yet with all his ability and astuteness he was unable to suggest a remedy. He (Mr. Mowat) was not prepared to say that there was a remedy. The general apprehension seemed to be that they could not by any general measure get rid of toll-gates. Anything that it was possible for a Government to do they were in the habit of doing.

Mr. Gilmour said that although he was deeply anxious to see some system devised for getting rid of the toll-gates, he objected strongly to the scheme proposed by Mr. Gibson, namely, that the municipalities adjacent to the road should be assessed. In West York, for instance, the effect of such an arrangement would be that the municipalities lying near Toronto and having the larger assessments would have to pay an unduly large share. He was fully alive to the grievance. His opinion was that they retarded the progress and development of the country.

Hon. A. M. Ross suggested that the hon. gentleman should move for a return showing the toll-gates now in existence and the revenues derived therefrom.

Mr. Wood said he thought the main difficulty in the purchase of these roads was in the people who wanted to buy them. In Hastings, where he believed they had the longest lines of gravel road in the Province, the county and the city of Belleville had agreed without difficulty to the purchase of the road, and had extended them into the smaller, more distant and less wealthy municipalities. If in other cases the counties would extend the roads the greater part of the difficulty would disappear.

Mr. McMahon expressed pleasure at having this matter brought forward. The fault, in his opinion, lay to a great extent with the County Councils. He mentioned the case of the Dundas and Waterloo road, which was sold by the Dominion Government to a private individual, the county not tendering for it. He thought that if a commission were appointed information would be elicited which would be of service in the settlement of the difficulty.

Mr. Waters said he could see no difficulty in this question, these companies owning roads operated under the Road Companies' Act, the provisions of which were clear. It provided that for twenty-one years the companies might hold the roads undisturbed. After that the County Councils were authorized to buy out the roads at a price to be agreed upon, and if they could not agree the settlement was to be by arbitration. If the Government shortened this term of twenty-one years the companies would have an equitable claim for consequential damages. He thought the Government would not be justified in interfering in the matter, as the case was already provided for under this Act, and the County Councils had full power to deal with it.

Mr. Meredith said in the county of Middlesex all the roads, with one exception, were owned by the county. On these roads the tolls had been abolished, but in the township of London there was an important road owned by a private corporation on which tolls were still charged. The last speaker said the County Council had full power in the matter. That was just the difficulty. The township of London was still living under the mediæval system of tolls while the rest of the county had free roads. He hoped that without quarrelling as to the terms the House would recognize this as an important question to be dealt with, and would agree to the amendment. Persons connected with these roads could then be subpœnaed and the facts brought out. He hoped the mover would not press his resolution, as it was evident from what had been stated that the Government would vote it down and some practical good would be achieved through the amendment.

Mr. French formally presented his amendment, which provided for the appointment of a committee consisting of Hon. Mr. Fraser, Messrs. Lees, Wood (Hastings), Balfour.

Hon. Mr. Fraser said that committee would be too small. The Municipal Committee would be too large. He suggested a postponement of the question so that a committee could be agreed upon, and moved the adjournment of the debate.

The resolution was adopted.

The following Bills were presented and read the first time :

To amend the Act relating to the Long Point Company.—Mr. Monk.

For the improvement of live stock in Ontario.—Mr. Willoughby.

To consolidate the debt of the city of Guelph and for other purposes.—Mr. Guthrie.

To amend tbe Act incorporating the Home of the Friendless.—Mr. Gibson (Hamilton).

To change the name of the Thunder Bay Colonization Co.—Mr. Harcourt.

Respecting landlords, tenants and distress.—Mr. Clarke (Toronto) for Mr. French.

Respecting a certain agreement between John D. Ronald and the village of Brussels.—Mr. Gibson (Huron.)

To amend the Act to incorporate the Trinity Medical School.—Mr. McAndrew.

To incorporate the Township of Keewatin.—Mr. Gibson (Hamilton).

Hon. Mr. Howat, in moving the adjournment of the House, announced that the Treasurer would probably make his financial statement on Tuesday next.

Aftter a brief discussion on a question asked by Mr. Meredith as to the time of calling the Public Accounts Committee,

Hon. Mr. Clarke announced that a meeting of the committee would be called for Tuesday morning next.

A BEE IN HIS NIGHT-CAP.

A Slighted Somnambulist Shocks a Card Party Like a Ghost.

A progressive euchre party at Mrs. Kemble's private boarding house on Naudain street, Philadelphia, was broken up very unceremoniously one evening last week. All the boarders except one had been invited to be present, and a number of outside friends of the family had also received and accepted invitations. The guests had had a very enjoyable time and were about to go into the supper room for refreshments when an apparition appeared. The slighted boarder, Mr. Henry Cheesebrough, who is a clerk in the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's employ, came dancing down the stairs and presented himself in the parlor doorway in what may be modestly described as undress uniform. Besides his nightcap only a single garment clothed his person. The ladies were startled and screamed, and before the gentlemen could arrest the intruder a panic had ensued. One young woman fainted and two or three others received scratches and bruises in their efforts to make an exit through a rear window into the yard. Mr. Cheesebrough was seized by Mrs. Kemble's son and one of the visitors and hurried out of sight, being carried bodily upstairs to his room. Though his eyes were wide open, he stoutly declares that he was asleep, and says that he is subject to these fits of somnambulism. There is a suspicion in the boarding-house that his action was a trick to revenge himself for the slight of not favoring him with an invitation to the party.

Why the Bridegroom Wept.

Hon. Chauncey Mitchell Depew delivered at Canajoharie, N.Y., the other day a lecture on "Glimpses of Life Abroad." In the course of his travels in Scotland Mr. Depew had this little experience: "On the banks of the Doon I came across the inevitable American tourist company. It was a bridal party. She was young and he was past middle life, and with them was his friend. The bridegroom was sobbing and wiping his eyes, and his bride was vainly trying to comfort him. Finally his friend led him to one si and near me, and said: 'Don't take on so, old man; cheer up. You are making your wife feel bad and spoiling the trip. What on earth is the matter?' 'Oh,' said he, 'Sam, this whole thing reminds me so of my second wife. She was so fond of burns.'"

Down on the "Irregulars."

At a recent meeting of the Medical Council of Ontario, Dr. H. H. Wright, of Toronto, President of the Council; Dr. Day, of Trenton; Dr Geikie, of Toronto, and Dr. Husband, of Hamilton, were appointed a committee to wait upon the Government and lay before the Ministers the principal amendments which were being asked for. The most important one, and that which is likely to arouse the greatest discussion, is a provision under which the Council shall have authority to erase a doctor's name from the roll, and thus cut short his right to practice, when he shall have been found guilty of infamous or unprofessional conduct, appeal being allowed from the Council's decision to a Superior Court Judge.

Jones Plaits the Journalistic Hair.

Sam Jones says: "If I wanted to get good square judgment on something I had done I had rather go to a newspaper office for it than any other court of justice. I know the justice of journals, their integrity and purity of their motives. I know that they probe into men's characters. No man whose character is pure need fear all the press in America. The way to be safe from so-called newspaper attacks is to be a Christian. The reporters are the best detective force in this country. They have brought more criminals to justice and punctured more shams than all agencies combined."—New York Herald

Paying Business.

He had been saying he would like to get into some paying business which required only a small capital, when the squint-eyed man beckoned him aside and said:

"You seem to be a purty good sort of a man, and I'll put you on to a good thing. Move out to Dakota and sell your wife."

"Do what!"

"Fact. I've sold three and am east after a fourth and not one of them fetched less than $400. Go off like hot cakes out there, and the climate agrees with 'em."

How it Works.

A statesman yesterday asked a prominent railroad man for a light for his cigar and was handed a card, on which the following words were printed: "Would be pleased to comply with your request, but cannot do so on account of the inter-state commerce bill." It seems that statesmen can receive no favors from railroads.—New Orleans Picayune.

A Danger of Cremation.

Medium—Did you wish to inquire of the spirits, madam?

Widow—Well, you see, I have always suspected that they mixed the urns at the crematory, and I want to know if I have been weeping over the right urn for the last three years.—Accident News.

SHE WOULDN'T WEAR TIGHTS.

De Lussan's Refusal Disrupts the Boston Ideal Company—She Will Not Do on the Stage What She Would Not Do in a Parlor.

The celebrated Boston Ideal Opera Company is blown to pieces by an explosion of jealousies. Its career will end with the season. Barnabee, Tom Karl, W. H. McDonald and his wife (Marie Stone) and Samuel L. Studley, the leader, have given Manager W. H. Foster notice that they will only complete the present contract. Barnabee, Karl and two or three others will form a new company. Foster will have another, retaining Zelie de Lussan. She is the prime factor in the demolition of what was once the most harmonious and collectively strongest light opera company in this country. The trouble began when Agnes Huntington was forced to withdraw from the Ideals; it culminated when Barnabee, who had held a financial interest in the trip, managed to clear himself. Practically there will be no Boston Ideals next season, even though Foster retains the title and though Karl and the others form a similar troupe. But the immediate cause of the disruption is not commercial, it is artistic, and relates principally to a dispute over the reason why Zelie de Lussan, the prima donna, declines to appear in tights. She has refused to take any role requiring the absence or immodest shortening of her skirts, advancing the theory that no woman is justified in doing on the stage what she would not do in a polite parlor. Somebody in the company sent to a theatrical journal an anonymous letter charging that her real motive was the concealment of knock knees. This insinuation was obscurely published, and it brought the internal troubles of the Ideals to such an earthquake that only the pieces are kept together with difficulty to the close of the tour in March. Zelie de Lussan, who has caused the trouble, is the young and strikingly pretty daughter of a veteran opera singer. She was born in Brooklyn, and was educated musically with the utmost care here and in Europe. Her home is with her mother in a pleasant flat in West Forty-ninth street. She sang in concerts occasionally, but her first work on the opera stage was at the commencement of the present season with the Ideals. She has been a success. All accounts from inside the company agree that Manager Foster fell immediately in love with her, and the opinion is that the pair are engaged to marry. Every evening an enormous quantity of flowers are his gift across the footlights, and the daily cost of this offering is estimated at $100. The other soprano, Miss Stone, demurred at this forcing of attention upon Miss de Lussan, and the row began. Miss de Lussan's refusal to don any other than seemly feminine costumes was indorsed by her mother, but was ridiculed by her fellow-artists as foolish prudery. During a whole month, it is said, the other principals of the party never exchanged a single word with her, except in the mimicry of the play; and the mock devotion of Karl, as her operatic lover, though accompanied by the stipulated caresses, thinly overlaid a mutual hatred which would have appropriately been expressed by bites rather than kisses. In this way the tour of the Ideals nears its curious end. New York Sun.

Stanley on His Own Conversion.

"I have been in Africa for seventeen years and I have never met a man who would kill me if I folded my hands. What I wanted and what I have been endeavoring to ask for the poor Africans has been the good offices of Christians, ever since Livingstone taught me during those four months that I was with him. In 1871 I went to him as prejudiced as the biggest atheist in London. I was out there away from a worldly world. I saw this solitary old man there and asked myself, 'Why on earth does he stop here?' For months after we met I found myself listening to him and wondering at the old man carrying out all that was said in the Bible. Little by little his sympathy for others became contagious. Mine was aroused. Seeing his pity, his gentleness, his zeal, his earnestness and how he went quietly about his business, I was converted by him, although he had not tried to do it." —From a Recent Interview.

Methodist Church Notes.

The Transfer Committee, under the arrangement of the General Conference, will meet on Thursday, April 7th, at 11 o'clock a. m., in the parlor of the Metropolitan Church, Toronto.

The British Columbia Conference will meet for organization and business in Wesley Church, Victoria, B. C., on Wednesday morning, 11th May, at 10 o'clock.

The examination of probationers and candidates for the ministry in connection with the Niagara Conference will take place in the Methodist Church, Paris, on Wednesday, April 20th, at 9 a. m.

Been There Before.

"And do you doubt my love?" he asked, passionately.

"No, George," she answered with admirable poise, "but when you say that the day you call me yours will usher in an era of lifelong devotion and tender solicitude, you pardon me, dear- you put it on a trifle too thick. You seem to forget, George, that I am a widow."—New York Sun.

Worse Than Misfit.

Young man (whispering to jeweller)—That engagement ring I bought of you yesterday—

Jeweller—What's the matter with it; didn't it fit.

Young man (cautiously) Sh! It didn't have a chance. Gimme collar buttons or it.

A Woman's Retort.

A woman is bound to have the last word. When the editor of the Peavine remonstrated with the principal contributor to the Poet's Corner of his valuable sheet for writing on both sides of her paper, she quietly retorted: "Well, and don't you print on both sides of yours?"—Boston Transcript.

She Made the Most of It.

Wife—"Got a dollar?" Husband "Where's that last dollar I gave you?" "Gone." "I thought I told you to make it go as far as you could." "I did." "Doesn't look like it." "Well, I did; I sent it to the Fiji Island heathen."—Judge.

LATE SPORTING NOTES.

Baseball.

Rochester has signed Troy, of last season's Binghamtons, to play second base in place of McKean.

The Metropolitan Club management have been working all winter to prevent a conflict of dates with the New York Club, and just when they thought they had every point satisfactorily covered the League adopted a schedule that upset all their plans and gave them about twenty-three conflicting dates.

Sam Bittle, the ex-pugilist of Toronto and now baseball pitcher, was trimmed for 16 hits by the Mobile Club, at Mobile, Ala., on Monday.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the American Baseball Association, held in Cleveland, Section 33 of the constitution was amended by this addition: "And in case any player under reserve shall wilfully hold off and refuse to sign a regular contract with the club which has him reserved, for the purpose of harrassing the club or compelling it to increase his salary, or shall by any means, directly or indirectly, endeavor to attempt wilful extortion from the club which has him reserved, he shall, upon complaint and satisfactory evidence being furnished by the club so aggrieved, be placed upon the blacklist by the President and Secretary, and notices issued to all clubs, as provided by this constitution and the National Agreement." In future ball players of the American Association will have to take what's offered them or stop playing ball.

The League clubs will open the season Eas t s. East and West vs. West instead of East vs. West, as in former years. New York opens at home with Philadelphia, Boston opens at Washington, Chicago opens at Pittsburg and Detroit at Indianapolis on April 28th.

To Jump the Falls.

Pat MacAuley, who calls himself "Signor Bladder," the champion jumper of the world, was at St. Catharines on Monday last arranging to jump over the Niagara Horseshoe Fall. He says that on the celebration of the Queen's jubilee, May 26th, he will encircle himself with bladders and a thin inflated rubber suit, sail down the river from Chippewa and make the trip. After he has done with the cataract he avows his intention of jumping from the Cantilever or Suspension Bridge, and will go through the rapids to Lewiston.

The Oar.

Ed. Hanlan telegraphed yesterday to his Boston boat builder to hurry forward the completion of his shells, as he proposes leaving Toronto next week to commence training on the Charles River course.

The Turf.

The announcement in the New York Sun of a week ago that the great English stallion Ormonde had turned roarer appears more fully in the latest English papers. It seems during the winter that Ormonde, among other horses trained at Kingsclere, was seized with strangles, which Candlemas was supposed to have brought into the stable after visiting Derby races in November, and, although for weeks back there had been a clean bill of health in Porter's establishment, and the majority of the horses were getting into work again, Ormonde seems to have gone wrong in his wind permanently. It will not injure his stud prospects, though.

The Ring.

A 36-round fight took place last night in a hall in Westerly, R.I., between Ike Weir the "Belfast Spider," and Jack Williams, both of Boston, the former being the victor. The fight was for a purse of $400 and an outside purse of $500 a side.

Donald Dinnie.

The famous Scotch athlete, Donald Dinnie, has become proprietor of a liquor store in a small town in Victoria, Australia. The following paragraph from a Melbourne paper shows that he finds the law in Australia to be quite as fickle as he found it by hard experience to be in Scotland: "Poor Donald Dinnie's reputation for canniness based upon his well-known caution in the scattering of small siller- is irretrievably ruined. Donald kept possession of somebody's horse for a disputed debt. The fiery steed grazed in a paddock attached to Donald's rural public house at Alphington, and for a time the braw Scot seemed to have the best of the deal. Then commenced a long wrestle between Donald and the remorseless law. After about six trials, sundry executions and a few summonses for assaulting bailiffs, Donald had to part with £40 odd of accumulated penalties to keep himself out of jail. At latest Donald was still guarding those bones of contention which constitute the horse, and another trial was pending. The quadruped is valued at £13."

Why Shoes are Thrown at Weddings.

The custom of throwing one or more old shoes after the bride and groom, either when they go to church to be married or when they start on their wedding journey, is so old that the memory of man stretches not back to its beginning. Some think it represents an assault, and is a lingering trace of the custom among savage nations of carrying away the bride by violence others think that it is a relic of the ancient law of exchange or purchase, and that it formerly implied the surrender by the parents of all dominion or authority over their daughter. It has a likeness to a Jewish custom mentioned in the Bible. Thus in Deuteronomy we read that when the brother of a dead man refused to marry his widow she asserted her independence of him by "loosing his shoe." Also in Ruth, when the kinsman of Boaz gave up his claim to the inheritance of Ruth, and to Ruth also he indicated his assent by plucking off his shoe and giving it to Boaz. It was also the custom of the Middle Ages to place the husband's shoe on the head of the nuptial couch, in token of his domination. American Register.

Very Easily Answered.

Mrs. Hawkins—"Well, Mary, is my bath ready?" Mary—"What is the matter with the hot water, mum." "What is the matter with the hot water" "It is cowld, mum?"—St. Louis Chronicle.

It is considered almost certain that Toronto will be chosen as the headquarters of the new cavalry school to be established.

There is no danger of the young man who goes to see his girl striking for shorter hours.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, MARCH. 24, 1887.

TEMPERANCE SENTIMENT.

The Grey Review bewails "the almost total extinction of Temperance sentiment in the riding among both parties, and the struggle at last election being as to who could show the most love for the liquor interest, even Dr. Christoe, M. Richardson and the ADVANCE, making a vigorous effort in that direction." On the contrary, we can assure the Review that Temperance sentiment never was stronger in South Grey than it is at this moment; but, unfortunately (or fortunately!) political bias is stronger still; and for that reason precisely the high horse mor'l adviser of the Review sought to injure(!) the Conservative candidate among moderate drinking Germans in Normanby, Bentinck and elsewhere by trying to prove that Dr. Jamieson was a temperance man. And, in order that the sword might cut both ways at once, the delightfully innocent Temperance(!) man of the Review tried to prove in Artemesia—that Dr. Jamieson was anything but an advocate of Temperance principles! Of all the people in South Grey who should keep mum concerning this matter, the editor of the Review is the man.

But the Review is not content to lampoon the ADVANCE: Mr. M. Richardson and Dr. Christoe are trotted forth with the usual scanty courtesy afforded opponents. The Review scribe says these gentlemen made an effort in the direction of showing their "love for the liquor interest." It only requires two words to answer the statements of the young man of the Review. They are vigorous, expressive and save multiplying words. In fact they are you lie!

Plant Trees in Spring.

To the Editor of The Advance.

SIR,—Will you allow me to remind your readers, in continuation of a letter addressed to them last fall, that the time is approaching when they must decide whether or no they will lose another year in the matter of preparing a future shelter for their farms. There is nothing to hinder anyone having, in a few years, a high and almost solid wall of evergreen along the north or west of their farms, an addition which would make it far more comfortable to live in, more profitable to crop, and more easy to sell. If anyone will take the trouble to visit some of those farms where such have been grown, they will never rest till they have commenced to plant one.

But what I wished more particularly to mention now is that, to those who have to spare a broader belt of land, that, if they will give say fifty feet in breadth, and plant it closely with deciduous trees, the number of branches, so that they keep it in order, and not make it a harbour for weed and rubbish, a thing easily managed, will prove in winter as effective a wind break as a line of evergreens. For trees when planted closely, and given care grow to tall straight stems, a number of which breaks the force of the wind completely.

It should also be noticed in this connection that here, among others, could be planted hickories, oaks, elms, ashes, and so forth, many of which are very valuable for different purposes, even when only six inches through. From such a belt extending across the farm, the owner can cut, every year, as soon as regrowth up, far more money's worth, and that without the labour of growing, than the same land will ever produce in crop.

For the day is, unfortunately, rapidly approaching, when all such goods will be very dear. At present, over much of our country, quantities of good wood are forced into market, by the necessity of the owners, and while this is done the price stays low. But, this stock is exhausted in many places, and at the present rate soon will be in all. In twenty years a farm of second growth, will be worth fifty cleared farms. Yours etc.,

R. W. PHIPPS.

Toronto, March 17th, 1887.

Editorial Notes.

It is amusing to notice how gravely outsiders deride the idea of substituting rollers for stones in Flesherton flouring mill. Of course they are disinterested parties—very!

Sir John Macdonald places his majority in the House at forty. This is a strong working majority—in fact The Week considers it altogether too large for good government. What must be said of Mr. Mowat's strong backing, then?

Mr. A. F. Campbell, Editor of the Conservator, was elected Mayor of Brampton by acclamation, on the 18th inst., in the room of L. Milne, deceased. Some Editor's are born with silver spoons in their mouths anyhow.

The Canada Citizen says all the delegates to the recent Alliance Convention, held in Toronto, "advise independent, intelligent and immediate political action" in order to secure prohibition. Just how the peculiar kind of "political action" indicated will be put in operation many earnest Temperance workers cannot for the life of them imagine. No doubt time will tell.

Quebec is already trying to get its "extensive" hand into the Dominion money bag and without any just reason for so doing. The ancient province is getting altogether too cheeky and ought to be taken across the Old Man's knee and spanked. N.B.—The Hamilton Times will please excuse us for an apparent infringement of its copyright in the spanking business.

The New York Baptist Weekly, of 17th inst., says: "Sam Jones and some other living Evangelists get off a good many bright things, but we have never seen them credited with making a better point than that reported of Jacob Knapp who, in rebuking hair-splitting theologians, said: "It is not God but the devil who sets men tanning a mosquito's hide on shore, while a shipwrecked crew are perishing unhelped before them."

In an editorial article in last Friday evening's Hamilton Times occurs the following significant sentence: "It becomes our painful duty to take the Toronto Globe across our paternal knee and spank it." Now, the Times is the leading Reform journal in Western Canada, and when it speaks "right out in meeting" in this manner there's something wrong sure. Is the Globe about to imitate the Mail?

The storm raised by friends and sympathizers of Mr. Alex. Mitchell over the appointment of our esteemed citizen, Mr. W. G. Pickell, as bailiff, has had the desired effect. Mr. Pickell positively declines the position under the circumstances and has retired, leaving the field open to his noisy competitors. Mr. P. has acted wisely, for had he persisted in holding his ground to which he was justly and properly entitled the howl would have been long, loud and to a man of his sensitive organization perfectly unendurable. From a selfish point of view, Thornbury's loss is Flesherton's gain for the present at anyrate.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHACKMETACK, a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of Cutting Teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY a positive cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria and Canker Sore Throat. Sold at Medical Hall.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion Constipation Dizziness, Loss of appetite Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SALT RHEUM CURED.—McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face or hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any Sore that nothing else will heal. Try McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. 25c. per box at the Drug Store.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

Ladies troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough hands or face, or Sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It will leave the skin in perfect health, smooth, clean and good color. Be sure and get the genuine, made by McGregor & Parke. Price 25c. Sold at the Drug Store.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

McGREGOR & PARKE'S CARBOLIC CERATE. Have you an old Sore, Cut, Bruise, Corn, Bunion, Salt Rheum, Pimple, Blotches, Rough Hands or Face? If so, there is but one cure, namely, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. If you but try it, it will convince you. It costs but 25c. at the Drug Store.

Have you ever tried McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate for sores of any kind? It is beyond doubt the very best preparation in the market for healing and curing Sores, Burns, Cuts, Pimples, Blotches, and is the only proper method of applying Carbolic Acid. Sold at the Drug Store for 25c. per box.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipt book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

TENDERS WANTED.

250 CEDAR Stakes for the Flesherton Cemetery, wanted. Tenders will be received up till noon on Wednesday, April 6th. Apply to W. CLAYTON, Secy, Flesherton. 2t

LOST NOTES.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating for two notes, one for $8.50, drawn in my favor by Mr. Hillock, and the other for $15, drawn in my favor by Henry Down, both now due, as the same have been lost or misplaced by me. J. W. HODGSON.

Horning's Mills, March 21st, 1887.

Mortgage Sale,

OF VALUABLE FARM PROPERTY!

Under power of Sale contained in a certain mortgage made by one Wm. Handy to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, will be sold by Public Auction at the CROWN HOTEL, in the Village of FLESHERTON, on TUESDAY, APRIL 12, 1887. At 11 o'clock a.m., the following valuable property, viz:

Lot number thirty in the 1st concession south of Durham Road containing 48 acres more or less and also the S. half of Lot thirty-three and a third acres of Lot thirty in the first concession north of the Durham Road in the Township of Artemesia in the County of Grey.

There will also be sold under Mortgage made by Angus McLean the West half of Lot number thirty-three in the 1st concession of the Township of Artemesia in the County of Grey containing by admeasurement 100 acres more or less, subject to the reserved rights of the Crown.

Terms of sale and will be made known on Day of sale. For further particulars apply to

M. J. KENT,
Solicitor, Owen Sound.

TO RENT or FOR SALE CHEAP.

50 acre farm, 14 acres cleared. Apply to M. RICHARDSON.

SCROFULA

Humors,

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

Erysipelas,

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Canker, and

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured. Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

Catarrh,

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured. Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. — THORNBURY

LEITCHS

Tailoring Establishment

FLESHERTON!

Is the place to get your Suits made in June.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$2 50	2 10
Fall Wheat	80	0 77
Spring Wheat	0 75	0 77
Barley	0 85	0 48
Oats	0 26	0 26
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 14	0 14
Eggs, fresh	0 14	0 14
Potatoes	0 30	30
Pork	5 65	.65
Hay, per ton	8 00	106
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16
Sheepskins	0 50
Geese	0 65
Turkeys	0 08
Chickens per pair	0 20	0
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON.

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness.

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Blankets, &c.

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Waggon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Returns many thanks to the public for the liberal patronage bestowed on the above business. All orders solicited and promptly attended to. Repairing done.

I guarantee my work to be first-class, and those who want good work at reasonable prices will find it to their advantage to call on me. Shop in rear of Dr. Parkinson's residence, who will attend to all calls in connection with the business. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

NOTICE.

I have taken many persons' names to vote for me for $45 in favor of Samuel Martin, which fell due on or about 1st Nov., 1886, and have not received value for the same.

JOHN SHERWOOD.

Eugenia P.O.

To Farmers' & Millers'.

FOR SALE.

WEST ½ of 34, Con. 9, Artemesia. Also TWO GRAND WATER POWERS in Eugenia, and a number of Town Lots. Write to D. R. PURDY, P.M. at East Selkirk, Man., or to R. McL. PURDY, Esq., Eugenia, and answer will be made at once.

AUCTION SALE OF VALUABLE FARM Property in the Township of Euphrasia, in the County of Grey. There will be offered for sale by Public Auction at the EUPHRASIA HOUSE, in the Village of HEATHCOTE, in the County of Grey, on FRIDAY THE EIGHTH DAY OF APRIL, 1887, at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon all and singular that certain parcel or tract of land situate in the said Township of Euphrasia, containing one hundred acres more or less composed of the south half of lot number 9 in the second concession. This desirable property lies about nine miles from Flesherton, four and a half miles from Eugenia, and two and a half miles from Heathcote, and has erected thereon a frame log house 20 x 26 and 14 a part frame 24 x 14 which are said to be in a fair state of repair. The property is well watered with a good spring creek running through it and conveniently situated as to travelled roads. There is a small orchard upon the premises containing about sixty fruit trees. The soil of a clay loam, about 4 acres are in a fair state of cultivation. The above premises will be offered for sale under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage which will be produced at the time of sale and will be offered for sale subject to a reserve bid. TERMS and conditions made known on day of sale. For further particulars apply to E. M. CHADWICK, Vendor's Solicitor, Beatty, Chadwick, Blackstock & Gait, 58 Wellington Street East, Toronto.

Dated at Toronto this 3rd day of March A.D., 1887.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money Lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON.

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS! HARNESS.

If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blakets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harris Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRIEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton, - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, S. J. Dixon, is prepared to handle known in Bottoming. Best material used. Good generous satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Sept. 17th, 1886.

Flesherton Meat Market.

SEPT. GOOD, - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

EUGENIA Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

New Goods!

I have received a large assortment of Spring Goods, consisting of Gents, Ladies, Misses, Boys and Childrens Boots and Shoes.

I am offering them at prices that for quality cannot be beat. CALL AND EXAMINE THEM.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

Largest, Cheapest, and Best stock of

--STOVES--

IN THIS SECTION OF COUNTRY, AT

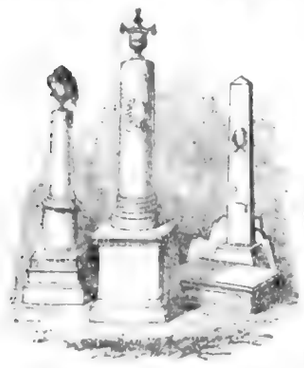
STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

Are also sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

N.B. Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

LITTLE FALLS

Saw Mill!

IN FULL OPERATION.

Special attention given to custom work, so that parties delivering logs to be sawn, can have their Lumber for return LOGS.

SAW LOGS

BOUGHT.

WM HOGG.

Feb. 23rd, 1887.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Eugenia Echoes.

From our own Correspondent.

The Orange soiree and concert held here on the 15th inst. was a decided success, notwithstanding the deprecating insinuations of a certain crook to the contrary. The hall was crowded, which indicates that worthy public entertainments are growing in popularity here. The bill of fare—both for physical and intellectual delectation—was heartily appreciated. Rev. Mr. Corcoran occupied the chair, and gave an instructive, pleasing and interesting opening address, followed by the greeting glee by the Choir, which evidenced assiduous practice. An organ and violin recital, by Miss Akitt and Mr. Jacob Williams respectively, was well received. The song and chorus—"On the Banks of the Beautiful River"—was heartily applauded. Dialogues, songs, &c. now followed in rapid succession—reflecting credit on those who took part therein. "I'll take Thee back again, Kathleen," by Minnie Carr, was received with favor. The quartette, entitled, "The Professor at Home," was the capital hit of the evening and brought down the house. This difficult piece was rendered by Mr. J. R. Hogg (Bass) as Professor; Mr. E. W. Farr (Tenor) as Tax-Collector; Miss Annie Carruthers (Sophrano) as Pupil; Mrs. Saul (Alto) as Housekeeper; Miss Akitt accompanied on the organ. It would be difficult to say who excelled. Encores were repeatedly called, and so promptly were they responded to, that one would imagine the "supply" inexhaustible. We noticed with pleasure and pride the recent additions to our already excellent musical talent, and must congratulate them on their creditable debut. Miss Sarah Pedlar and Miss Lizzie Parks arrested our attention and gave promise (to our mind) of future popularity.

F. T. Carr was called on for an address and responded cheerfully to a few general remarks on the Orange association, its principles rise and progress, and aims, after which Mr. J. R. Hogg, Musical Conductor, and his assistants were tendered the heartiest thanks of the meeting. Mr. Hogg made a neat reply. The singing of the National Anthem and the benediction brought the entertainment to a close. Proceeds $25.

ACCIDENT. Rev. Mr. Corcoran was pitched out of his cutter one day last week while driving along a sideling place on the road, the horse having "bolted." He was quite severely injured in the region of the heart and limbs, also in the shoulder, by coming in contact with a stump, and the cutter striking him. He was unable to fill all his appointments on Sunday, but we are glad to know that he is now able to move around with greater ease.

W. C. T. U. Items.

News comes to us from Halifax, that on the 11th of March, the Liquor dealers got badly snubbed by the city council. A year ago the Legislators adopted a stringent Licence Law. 80 Licences where granted under it. A week ago a large body of Liquor sellers sent a petition to the Council, saying they had been advised that the Law was unconstitutional; and that they had decided to resist the enforcement of the act, and to test its validity in the Courts. They asked the City Council to join them in asking the Legislator to suspend the law till after its Constitutionality had been tested in the courts. After a long discussion the City Council decided it was their business to enforce the law not to test its validity, as during that time no doubt but there would be a high carnival of free drinks, and refused to take action in the matter. Many think that Halifax is face to face with a serious question, and that it might as well be fought out now as well as any other time.

It is thought the resources of the city will be equal to the nearly two hundred Liquor dealers who have organized to defy the Law, most of these Liquor dealers bitterly resisted the Dominion License Law and insisted that only the local Legislator could deal with the Liquor question.

Scott Act fines to the amount of $131 have been paid in London, one fine of $50 in Strathroy.

BOYCOTTING IN PITTSFIELD, MASS:—Miss Merriam, teacher of a free drawing school, has been removed because of her activity against the Licence party in the last election. She is a leader in the Y. W.C.T.U., and was prominent in getting Gen. Stewart L. Woodford there for a week's no Licence campaign; she originated the local party which advocated the no vote, and decorated the hall where the town meeting was held.

COR, SEC.

Official Returns.—South Grey.

On Saturday last, Mr. G. L. McCaul, Returning Officer, made his official declaration of the votes in South Grey, with the following figures:

Township	Poll	Sub	Landerkin	Jameson	Landerkin's majority.	Jameson's majority.
Artemesia	1		72	39	33
	2		40	21	19
	3		38	66		28
	4		28	55		27
	5		49	89		40
	6		39	77		38
	7		40	64		24
	8		16	65		49
			322	476	52	206
Township majority						154
Bentinck	1		54	105		51
	2		100	59	41
	3		70	87		17
	4		94	11	83
	5		100	71	29
	6		124	52	72
	7		81	27	54
			623	412	279	68
Township majority					211
Egremont	1		28	81		53
	2		31	57		26
	3		90	40	50
	4		91	47	44
	5		83	37	46
	6		109	44	65
			432	306	205	79
Township majority					126
Glenelg	1		42	107		65
	2		82	67	15
	3		38	114		75
	4		85	58	27
	5		86	65	21
			333	411	63	141
Township majority						78
Holland	1		103	68	35
	2		49	77		28
	3		109	66	43
	4		94	41	53
	5		62	68		6
	6		33	51		18
	7		65	78		13
			515	449	131	66
Township majority					66
Proton	1		20	29		9
	2		19	37		18
	3		28	75		47
			67	141		74
Town majority
Total			2,292	2,195

Total maj. for Landerkin 97.

Better Your Grave.—Don't allow a cold to rise head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure incipient catarrh: 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh: 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal. —Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff. —Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain. —William L. Page, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

GET YOUR MEAT

—:-FROM-:—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

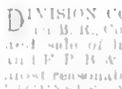
M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S

DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c. OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St., Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER, &c. B.R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of lands. Agent for C.L.C. Company, F.P.B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. Issuer of MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

ANDREW McGIRR,

Issuer of Marriage Licenses,

FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY,

FWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c. prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at low cost rates.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class livery in connection with the opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

Flesherton, Nov. 14th, 1884.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop

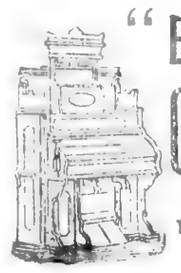
MONEY TO LOAN.

At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,

Flesherton



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

AFTER THE KAISER DIES

The Queen of England's Daughter Will Be the Ruling Power in Germany - Her War with Bismarck.

A Berlin cable says: Two facts are well known here in diplomatic circles which have an important influence on Prince Bismarck's political moves. In the first place the Crown Princess of Germany, who has great influence with her husband, will have a large voice in the government of the country on the death of the Kaiser, an event which may occur at any moment and cannot be delayed beyond a few months at farthest. And it is well known that her desire is to curtail the sovereign power and increase the authority of the Reichstag, and, in a word, to assimilate the autocratic rule of Germany to the parliamentary government of England. In the second place, it is well known that there is no love lost between the Princess and Prince Bismarck, whose rule of blood and iron is repugnant to her democratic ideas.

If left to herself, the Crown Princess would at once bring into power the Freisinnige, or Progressist party, the members of which are anti-monopolists, in fact free traders, who desire the abolition of all repressive, Socialist and Church Laws. In order to curb the Crown Princess, Prince Bismarck brought about the late elections and forced the issues in such a way as to obtain a strong Government majority of National Liberalists, not, as he might easily have done, of Conservatives alone. By his orders the Conservatives gave way in many places to the National Liberals, so that while the Conservatives gained only a few seats the National Liberals have gained forty or more seats. Another result of Prince Bismarck's policy has been the almost total annihilation of the Freisinnige party, which is now cut down from 67 to under 20 members. The new Reichstag has three years to run; therefore, when the Crown Princess begins to rule Germany she will find a majority too strong to be lightly dismissed, and of liberal but not dangerously radical tendencies. Prince Bismarck hopes that, whereas the Crown Princess might have dissolved a Conservative Parliament, she will at least try for a while to use the Liberal majority provided for her. Perhaps he also hopes that a year or two of such trial will give her a new idea of the difficulty of governing through Parliament a nation which has to contend with the absolute power of Russia.

Prince Bismarck is destroying all the Crown Princess' political friends, but at the same time providing her with a new set of friends, sufficiently to her taste to make it hard for her to quarrel with them. There is no mistake so great as to suppose that Prince Bismarck is not providing for the future. When he dies it will be found that not only has he provided a policy for his successors, but that this policy is so arranged that even its bitterest enemy, the Crown Princess, will be forced to carry it out.

FUN IN A MENAGERIE.

An Elephant Plays Ball with a Pony and a Leopard.

A Cincinnati despatch says: There was a private performance last night at a menagerie that is wintering here that was thrilling while it lasted. The few spectators present heartily wished themselves anywhere else until it was over, and then they gloried in the tale that they could tell. An elephant had been bothered for some time by a Mexican pony that was permitted to be near him, and all of a sudden the huge beast coiled his trunk around the pony and hurled him against the leopard's cage. The bars of the leopard's cage were so bent that the leopard was liberated, and yesterday for the insult that had been offered him he pounced upon the elephant, a lively fight ensuing. After an interesting bout the elephant threw the leopard against a brick wall and badly smashed his right fore paw. The leopard then sat down to ascertain his damages, and inadvertently switched his tail under a door. The attendants, who had entrenched themselves outside, were quick to recognize their opportunity. They seized the tail and held on to it tenaciously while a detachment rushed inside, covered the beast with a big box and captured him. His ponyship is laid up for repairs.

TWO MYSTERIOUS DEATHS.

Supposed Poisoning of a Clergyman and His Wife by Candy from Montreal.

A Newton despatch says: Rev. Wm. S. Howland, of this place, formerly a missionary to Ceylon, and his wife died rather suddenly, Mrs. Howland on March 5th and Mr. Howland on March 7th. The doctor's certificate stated that Mrs. Howland died of double pleuro-pneumonia, to which she was subject, and Mr. Howland of gastro hepatitis with evidence of septic poisoning. Both were buried on Wednesday. So many unpleasant rumors have been current since their death that an official investigation has been made. Mr. Howland was called to his wife's bedside from Montreal last week. Some candy which he brought from there he, his wife and two of his children partook of, it is learned, and now the children have symptoms of blood poisoning. The candy has been sent to Harvard College for analysis.

Cholera Marching North.

A Washington despatch says: The Secretary of State is informed that cholera has spread through parts of the Chilian Provinces of Aconcagua and Valparaiso, and is extending along the Valley of Aconagua toward the sea. At a station of the railroad between Santiago and Valparaiso, 35 miles from the latter, about 600 cases have so far been reported, of which about 250 have proved fatal. Stringent sanitary measures have been adopted by the authorities.

Nine-year-old Charley Andrews was riding with his mother from Columbus to Cincinnati. She awoke early in the morning and he was gone. An engine was sent back to recover his dead body, and the boy was found in a fence corner, without a scratch or bruise on him. He said that he wanted his mother. He had in his sleep stepped from a train running forty miles an hour.

Daniel Miller, of Donegal, Pa., bought a pair of common white rabbits a year ago. He now has seventy rabbits, the offspring of the original pair.

THE LAST OF BEECHER.

Burial Services in His Own and Other Churches—An Affecting Scene.

A last (Friday) night's Brooklyn despatch says: There are clear sky and bright sun. The remains of Beecher lay in state in Plymouth Church throughout the night. Flags are at half-mast on all public buildings and on nearly all business houses. The principal business places were closed from 10.30 a.m. until the close of the services at the church. None were admitted into the church but those holding tickets. About 10 a.m. the seats were filled. The pulpit presented the appearance of a gigantic flower bed. Among those present were 40 clergymen from New York, Dr. McGlynn, President Oleana, of the Board of Aldermen, Lieut.-Gov. Jones, Henry George, Senator Evarts and Col. Fackner, of the 13th Regiment, committees from the New York Press Club, Cotton, Stock and Produce Exchanges, Union League Club and pastors of the colored churches in Brooklyn. Mrs. Beecher and her children were not present. Drs. Hall and Halliday occupied the pulpit. The former read the opening sentence of the Episcopal burial service with faltering voice. The choir, nearly hidden behind a bank of calla lilies, then sang the burial chant. Dr. Hall then read the Scripture lesson. The choir rendered the anthem in a beautiful manner, the quartette being supplemented by a large chorus. Throughout the church people were visibly affected. Dr. Hall then read his address from manuscript. Several times he interrupted himself by his emotion, and the tears of the congregation fell fast as the preacher spoke lovingly and trustingly of their departed pastor.

When Dr. Hall's address was finished a perfect burst of pent-up emotion succeeded, and nearly every one in the church wept. Dr. Halliday followed with prayer, and the choir sang, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," after which the anthem "I Heard a Voice," which was composed for this occasion, was given. Following this was the benediction. The recessional hymn, "Hark! Hark! My Soul," was sung, and the vast congregation departed from the church, leaving the remains of their pastor under the guard of Plymouth Company, who will constitute the watch until the body is taken to Greenwood to-morrow.

When the congregation had dispersed the doors were thrown open to the public to view the remains. The Roman Coliseum would not have been large enough to hold all who would have liked to be present to honor the illustrious dead. It was therefore necessary to hold services at the other churches. Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage made the principal address at the First Baptist Church, taking for his subject, "It is a beautiful thing in human nature to show the disposition to speak well of the dead."

Funeral services were also held in the First Presbyterian Church, the Church of Our Saviour, Sands Street Methodist Church, Unitarian Church, First Baptist, and were all very largely attended. The order of exercises was the same in each. Rev. Dr. Talmage spoke at the First Baptist Church and paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of the deceased. H. W. Sage, of Ithaca, who was at the funeral, stated to a reporter that his father had left money to erect a monument to the memory of the great divine.

All day yesterday the body of the great preacher lay embowered in flowers in Plymouth Church.

"I would not have a semblance of mourning about my grave," Mr Beecher had said in one of his most eloquent sermons.

"Death is coronation.

"Life and death are equal kings, and death, even at its worst, is but perfect rest."

And so, when the hearts of those nearest and dearest to him were overwhelmed with grief they endeavored to feel as he would have had them feel, and all the outward and visible trappings of woe customary when death visits a household were carefully avoided, in deference to Mr. Beecher's wish.

WRAPPED IN FLAME.

A Woman Burned to Death Her Husband Absent and Still Ignorant of Her Fate.

A Kentville, N. S., despatch says: A sad tragedy has occurred at Hall's Harbor. Mrs. Henry Parker was alone in the house with her three children, the youngest an infant only twelve days old. As she moved in front of the stove to lay the baby in the cradle her dress caught fire and before the flames could be extinguished the unfortunate woman had been so badly burned that she died six hours after. On finding her clothing on fire she rushed to the front door, and, by her screaming, attracted the attention of a family living on the opposite side of the street. When first seen she appeared completely enveloped in flames. She suffered intense agony until death gave her relief. Her husband is engaged in fishing on the New Brunswick coast, and knows nothing of the terrible event.

A Money Making Scheme, Eh!

A London cable says: The Duke of Westminster and the Duke of Argyll have withdrawn from the honorary council of the American Exhibition, owing to the manner in which their names are mentioned in a petition to the Prince of Wales to accept the Presidency of the Council of the Exhibition, and also they state because they have learned that the exhibition is purely a private speculation. The petition to the Prince, which the managers are handing around for signature, assures the Prince that the Americans hold him in high esteem, and humbly begs that he will be graciously pleased to accept the honorary Presidency of the Council of the Exhibition, which will be a living proof that Americans desire to aid in the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee. That the Prince will decline the offer is a foregone conclusion.

A Question in Moral Ethics.

Minister (to boy, who is digging for worms) Little boy, don't you know that it is wrong to work on Sunday, except in cases of necessity?

Boy (going on with his digging) -This is a case of necessity. A fellow can't go fishin' 'thout bait.—From Life.

—An English inventor claims that bells made by soldering together pieces of bent metal gave a much better volume of sound than cast bells.

A COAT OF TAR.

A Negro Family Treated to Tar and Feathers.

A Manassas (Va.) despatch says: Last Sunday morning before daylight a colored family named Fields, living three miles southeast of this place, were aroused by three masked men, who broke down the door of their hut. The family, which consisted of an old woman, her son and daughter, respectively about 21 and 29 years old, jumped from their beds; but before they could escape they were seized, blindfolded, stripped and bound. While one of the masked men was keeping guard over his prisoners the other two prepared the tar and feathers. The old mother and her children were literally covered with tar and then rolled on feathers. The masked men told the family that if they did not leave the county within ten days they would return and hang them. It is not believed that they will be further molested, as their punishment is severe enough.

Warrants have been issued for the arrest of three young men who are suspected of having committed the assault. The negro family bears an unsavory reputation. A few nights previous to the tar-and-feathering Mr. Colbert had his meat house broken into and robbed while his wife lay dead in the house. Suspicion rested upon the Fields, whose depredations had been a constant source of annoyance. The daughter has served a term in the penitentiary for burglary, and has been several times in the county jail.

A riot occurred on Monday night, growing out of the affair, and stones and other missiles were freely used by the negroes. The riot was finally quelled by the arrest of several negroes and one white man. The Mayor fined most of them, and two negroes, White and Thomas, were sent to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

HOME RULE AND LIBERAL UNION.

Chamberlain Says Unless Something is Done Quickly the Liberals will Remain Divided.

A last Saturday night's London cable says: Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, speaking at a meeting of the National Radical Union at Birmingham this evening, deplored the delay in the reunion of Liberals, and said that the longer the rupture continued the more serious the situation became, and that if they did not agree quickly they would drift further apart. So far as he was concerned, he could not see t way to take any further steps toward a reunion. The Liberal Unionists must now carry out plans to render their organization as effective as possible. Chamberlain further said that Mr. Gladstone was alone able to reunite the party. He knew the Unionist objections and whether or not it was possible even now to meet them. The objections were directed, not against the principles of the party, but against the methods of carrying them out. "An appeal to the country may come quickly," he said, "unless the Government is prepared, in addition to enforcing the law in Ireland, to introduce a measure which, instead of tinkering with the Land Act of 1881, will endeavor to finally end the conflict between landlord and tenant by making the tenant the practical owner of the soil. The Unionists will loyally support such a measure, introduced with a concurrent measure to suppress crime." The Right Hon. James Stanfeld, speaking at Darlington to night, said that the Liberals would oppose to the last the adoption of coercive measures for the government of Ireland

A DEFAULTER.

The Secretary of the Royal Templars of Temperance Goes Off With the Funds.

A Buffalo despatch dated yesterday says: E A Abbott, the Supreme Secretary of the Royal Templars of Temperance, is a defaulter to the extent of at least $5,000. He lived, with his wife and two children, at Aurora, near here, but was in Buffalo every day. As Supreme Secretary he received $25,000 every month in dues, and this he was required to pay over daily to the Treasurer, John Lyth, of this city. Abbott received a salary of $3,000 a year, and had been Grand Secretary for several years. His devotion to the Order was so great that he did not even drink cider. The embezzlement was made of cheques given him to send to pay death claims, and although the Supreme Treasurer used the telegraph wires liberally it is not certain how much Abbott took. A letter was read to-night, written by Abbott on a Grand Trunk Railway train, in which he admits his guilt. He says he regrets he was forced to take the terrible steps he did, but there was no other way except to commit suicide, and thoughts of his wife and children kept him from doing that. He said he would devote the remainder of his life to earning money to pay up the defalcation. He said he would be in Montreal and offered any assistance he could give in the investigation which he knew would be made. Abbott is known to be in Montreal.

Scene in the House of Lords.

A London cablegram says: There was a diverting scene in the House of Lords on Friday night of which no account appeared in the next morning's papers. At the close of the sitting Lord Denman spoke for about ten minutes in opposition to the Law of Evidence Amendment Bill. His observations were somewhat incoherent, including reminiscences of the trial of Queen Caroline, in which his father earned so much distinction. At the close of his remarks, however, Lord Denman, raising his voice and waving his arm in an excited way, exclaimed: "Noble Lords may sneer at me or do their best to snub me. But it is too much when they make a practice of contemptuously turning their backs upon me whenever I rise to speak, and I feel greatly inclined to apply the end of my boot to the nearest part of their persons." It would be a delicious spectacle to see the enraged Denman advancing upon Lord Salisbury and Lord Halsbury with the dire purposes of there and then carrying out his threat.

Wilmington, Vt., is nearly in the centre of the largest maple sugar section in the world. The largest maker there ships 10,000 gallons of syrup yearly, and the business is growing fast.

Moody has raised the needed $250,000 for a training school for missionaries in Chicago. The town needs all the missionaries that the school can produce.

NIAGARA FALLS PARK.

Report on the Value of the Land Proposed to be Expropriated—$525,000 Necessary to be Raised to Make Niagara Free for Ever.

Col. Gzowski, J. W. Langmuir and J. Grant Macdonald, Commissioners for Niagara Falls Park, have presented to the Ontario Government a supplemental report, containing their valuation of the properties proposed to be expropriated for park purposes.

The Commissioners report that the arbitrators in the references made to them for the valuation and payment of lands taken for the Niagara Falls Park, have made their awards in all cases but those of Mr. J. T. Bush and the Thorold, St. Catharines and Suspension Bridge Road.

The amounts awarded to the respective proprietors and the amounts offered by the Commissioners are as follows:

Owner's Name.	Awarded.	Offered by the Commissioners.
Bush	$ 34.000	$ 27,500
Lyman Moore	2,900	1,675
Tench, E. A	8,000	5,500
Tench, jun.	1,500	1,000
Robinson, Eliz	3,600	3,500
Robinson, W.	3,600	3,500
Brundage	15,050	11,388
Buchanan, W. O	21,767	17,861
Wood, Peter	14,000	11,400
Newton, W.	400	400
Clarke, P. S.	2,500	1,500
Buchanan, Estate of Jas.	1,550	1,000
Buchanan, Estate of R. S	8,600	7,120
Davis, Saul	102,500	98,750
Davis, Ellen	35,000	25,000
Davis, Ellen, Prospect House	37,500	37,500
Gladstone, Mrs.	8,252	6,500
Toll Gate	2,900	2,500
Macklem	100 000	26,175
Canada Southern	150	100
Vanderbilt	850	450
Brett	250	250
	$402,867	$290,569

From the above statement it will be seen that the total amount awarded is $402,867, as against $290,569 offered by the Commissioners, the difference between the two amounts being $103,298. This large difference is chiefly confined to five out of 23 cases brought before the arbitrators. In these five cases the principal evidence rested on the incomes of the proprietors derived from charges made to the public visiting the Falls.

While the Commissioners did not anticipate so large a difference between the amounts offered by them and the amounts awarded by the arbitrators, they cannot but recognize the strength of the evidence on which the awards are founded as affording proof of the very large number of visitors to the Falls, and which supports the view expressed by them in their former reports of the undertaking becoming self-sustaining. The amount to be provided to pay for the land, according to the award, being in excess of that offered by the Commissioners, compels them to increase the total amount necessary to carry out the Niagara Falls Park project by $25,000, making the total amount required $525,000.

During the past year the Commissioners endeavored to obtain as reliable information as possible, from various sources, of the annual number of visitors to the Falls, and as far as that could be ascertained, the average number for a period of several years may be safely estimated as between 200,000 and 250,000 per annum. Notwithstanding that a little larger amount will be required for the purpose of carrying out the project, the Commissioners adhere to the recommendation made in their report of 16th March, 1886, that the Park shall be absolutely free to all visitors who enter it to enjoy the natural beauties and such views as it affords without artificial aid, not needing machinery, structures, guides, etc.; but they advise that the maximum charge to visitors who desire to see all the magnificent and wonderful sights, requiring guides and artificial aid, shall be 50 cents instead of 30 cents. Based on such charge, it will require 82,420 visitors annually, only one-third of the whole estimated number, to meet the cost of maintaining the Park, and to provide for the payment of interest and sinking fund on the bonds. The Commissioners' reports of 18th September, 1885, 7th December, 1885, and 16th March, 1886, have so fully referred to the subject in all its bearings that they beg to refer you to them for further information.

In conclusion, the Commissioners beg to call your attention to the Act of the Legislature of Ontario, 48 Vic., entitled "An Act for the Preservation of the Natural Scenery about Niagara Falls," which provides that the payment for the lands taken for the Niagara Falls Park must be made on or before the 28th day of March, 1887, in this Her Gracious Majesty's Jubilee year.

Late Northwest News.

A Winnipeg despatch says: The cases against Mr. Walker, charged with personating at the Dominion election contest, and Mr. Claugh, accused of forgery in connection with the Springfield Provincial voters' lists, have fallen through.

A Chicago detective has arrived here to seek the extradition of Trimacyco, the Italian murderer.

Snowslides in the mountains have temporarily interfered with the moving of trains in that section.

Coal is selling at $20 a ton at Macleod, though it is only twenty-five miles from the Galt mines. A snow blockade is the cause.

The national societies of this city are moving with a view to arranging for the proper reception of immigrants on their arrival here.

Advices from Montreal indicate that Archbishop Tache continues in poor health and has, in consequence, abandoned his projected trip to Rome.

The trial of "Dressy Man," for the murder of Constable Cowan at Fort Pitt during the late rebellion, was commenced at Regina to-day, and resulted in a verdict of not guilty.

In consequence of the retirement of Mr. Brown from the Provincial Cabinet, Mr. Norquay will resume the position of Provincial Treasurer and Mr. Lariviere will again become Provincial Secretary.

Salt, in doses of one to four teaspoonfuls in half a pint to a pint of tepid water, is an emetic always on hand. This is also an antidote to be used after poisoning from nitrate of silver while waiting for the doctor to come.

A LOVER'S REVENGE.

A Fickle Maiden's Room Invaded at Night, Her Long Hair Cut Off, and Her Face Disfigured.

This village is in a commotion over the cruel but novel punishment inflicted on a young lady of this place because of her rejection of her lover, writes a Farnsdale, Pa., correspondent of the New York Sun. The little town is composed of about twenty families, who have lived in peace for almost as many years. Prominent among them are the Dunkelbergers and Holikeffers, who were on the most intimate terms, not because their farms were adjoining, but because the nuptials of Frederick Holikeffer and Miss Mame Dunkelberger had been announced. This union had been a prearranged affair by the parents years ago. The courtship, therefore, of the young couple had been going on since their school days. It was expressly stipulated by the parents of Fred that he should not marry before he attained his 21st birthday, which occurs on March 22nd. These facts were well known to all the inhabitants of the place, and the approaching marriage did not create any excitement outside of the ordinary comment in such cases.

Mame, as the intended bride was called by her lady frinds, was a lively, bright, good-looking girl of 18, and although born at Farnsdale, she cultivated a desire for more society and life than the little country town could give her. Having an aunt living in Newark, N. J., she made frequent and prolonged visits to her, much to the annoyance of Fred, whose disposition was directly opposite that of the girl's. He reproached her more than once for her long absence from home, but in this he assumed such a dictatorial attitude that the young lady refused to accept further advice from him, and subsequently declared that a union between them could never take place. She forthwith started on a visit to her aunt's, leaving her lover in a very unhappy state of mind. The news of the quarrel soon spread, and conjectures were many as to the cause of it. Those intimate with the family said that the fickle-hearted girl had transferred her affections to a Newark man, and that she gloried in the opportunity thus offered by Fred to break the engagement with him. The young man became desperate, and fears were entertained that he would do him self bodily harm, though he had quietly resolved that he would make her suffer for the misery she had caused him. Meanwhile the girl returned home for the purpose of arranging for her permanent residence with her aunt in Newark, at the same time refusing every effort to bring about a reconciliation with her lover. She named Washington's birthday as the time of her departure. The inhabitants of Farnsdale retired as usual on Monday night, and, although somewhat uncertain as to the quarrel, they were not prepared for the announcement the next morning that the Dunkelbergers' home had been entered during the night; that Mame had been made a special object of attack, and that she was probably disfigured for life. The family had hardly begun to realize what had happened before the house was besieged by friends and neighbors eager to hear the story, which Mr. Dunkelberger told as follows:

"The family retired at about 10.30, our customary hour, and as I was to drive my daughter to the station early this morning, I awoke at about 5 o'clock and went directly to her room, but received no response to my repeated calls. The light which always burned in her room was extinguished, and, becoming alarmed, I broke open the door, lit the lamp, and was horrified to find my daughter lying unconscious crosswise on the bed, with her long, wavy hair cut off clean to the scalp and her face frightfully tattooed. Everything in the room was disarranged, and a strong odor of chloroform pervaded the apartment. Simultaneously with an effort to arouse her from the stupor in which she lay, I thought of $1,500 in gold, a wedding present from me, which she had carefully concealed in a little portmonnaie, together with her correspondence with Fred, in one of the bureau drawers, but the perpetrators of the dastardly work had taken it. Meanwhile she became conscious, but swooned away when she saw what had happened. She is now under the care of a doctor and will see no one."

When asked who was suspected as the perpetrators, he said: "Why, everything points to Fred. This is his revenge."

Fred is missing, and the greatest excitement prevails throughout the town.

France to Dig Up the Delphic Temple.

The French Government has at last succeeded in obtaining leave from the Greek Government to search at Delphi for remains of the temple which stood there. It is supposed that there are priceless treasures buried in the ground. There was no sanctuary to which so many valuable presents were made as to the Delphic one, and next to that of Olympus it was the most important in Greece.

For a long course of centuries the soil has not been disturbed. Comte de Mouy, who is an enthusiastic lover of classic antiquity and an archæologist, began, when he was Minister at Athens, negotiations which have been ended successfully by M. de Montholon. He had a keen rival in the American representative at Athens, where there is now an American as well as a French school.—London Daily News.

An Egg Puzzle.

The New York Journal of Commerce replies to a young lady who dates her note from Madison avenue, and uses paper scented with the perfume of violets, and asks it to solve a problem over which she has been puzzling hopelessly. The problem is this: One hundred eggs are placed on level ground in a straight line, one yard apart. A basket is placed one yard from the first egg. How far must a person travel to bring them one by one to the basket? The Journal says it would be a tiresome journey for a young lady with tight shoes. The distance is 10,100 yards, or 5 65-88ths miles.

A citizen of Ionia, Mich., rang the bell at a house when he called, and then stood patiently on the iron doorstep until the servant opened the door. Then he turned pale, and cried out that he was paralyzed; for when he tried to walk he could not move. He felt better just as soon as he discovered that his wet boots had frozen to the iron step as he stood waiting.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Sad Fate of Old World Professional Beauties.

LATEST FASHION AND OTHER GOSSIP

How to Make Garments "Cling."

According to a society writer, since Miss Eaglake, the actress, made her first appearance in this country in her soft, clinging garments, swaying in harmony with every step of the wearer, society has been on the qui vive to discover the secret and gain, if possible, a tithe at least of the swish and sway and rythmic movement which seemed to make the garment worn by Helle instinct with life and motion. The secret has been discovered, and the reigning belles in tip-top circles in New York are more captivating than ever before. These picturesque gowns are made of some soft, clinging material, and worn over divided skirts, making the dress necessarily conform to the gait of the wearer. The secret is said to have been discovered by the costumer of Rosina Vokes and imparted to a select few of his customers.

The Fate of Professional Beauties.

Mrs. Langtry, before she disappeared from English society, had seen many other ladies raised by royal favor to the now extinct position of "professional beauty." There is hardly one of these ladies whose fate is not worthy of commiseration and whose confessions would not be valuable. Their reigns terminated in various ways. One offended by observing that a certain waist was not so thin as formerly; another, that a certain head of hair was not as thick as of yore; a third, in a festive moment, poured a teaspoonful of ice-cream down a royal shirt-collar; a fourth falsely and wickedly stated to her friends that a certain bracelet was a royal gift, whereas in truth and in fact it was bought out of the hard earnings of her husband's brain. The position of reigning favorite involved untold expenses, for to know the Prince involved knowing his set, who were numerous and thirsty, and for whose accommodation in a house often of the tiniest the friends of a lifetime had perforce to be discarded. Fulsome was the adulation poured upon the beauty during her brief reign, and cruel were the slights and snubs put upon her when it ended, and when nothing remained to remind her of it but shattered health, an alienated husband and an infuriated father-in-law. In such circumstances there is nothing for lovely women to do but to go and winter on the Riviera. The future of such a fallen star is dark indeed, unless, of course, her husband can secure election as member of Parliament, when she can get back into society by another door.—London Pall Mall Budget.

Whims of the Toilet.

Japan ladies gild their teeth.

The ladies of the Indies paint their teeth red.

Ladies in Greenland used to color their faces blue and yellow.

The ladies of Guzerat stain their teeth a sable color which they think adds to their beauty.

The two best female violinists in the States are Miss Duke, daughter of General Basil Duke, of Kentucky, and Miss Maud Tarleton, of Baltimore.

According to the New York correspondents women are considered by publishers to be among the best judges of manuscript. Whether it be her critical judgment or her critical instinct, her conclusion as to whether an embryo book or magazine article will take with the public or not is pretty sure to be correct.

A new departure in the ways of women is the formation of a fire brigade. According to the London Fireman, this has been done by a thousand girls employed in a Liverpool cigar factory. They are well officered and drilled, and at a recent blaze in the factory turned out "to a man" and did most effectual work in subduing the flames.

At a recent wedding in New York the bride wore a dress more than a century old. It was made for her maternal great-grandmother in 1778 and worn at her wedding, when Alexander Hamilton was groomsman and General Washington and his staff were present as guests. It was worn for the second time by the bride's mother forty-five years ago.

Woman has no vote in Iowa, but she is allowed to hold office if she can be elected. According to the official register for 1887 three counties have Recorders who do not belong to the voting sex; ten counties have women Superintendents of Public Schools; a woman's name stands in the executive department of the official register; she forms one of the Board of Honored Curators of the State Horticultural Society, and has a seat among the Educational Examiners in Agriculture and Medicine. The Governor has recently appointed a woman visitor to the Insane Hospital, and two of them act as trustees of the reformatories. Altogether Iowa women make a pretty good showing in public life, and the mere fact of not being allowed to vote ought not to trouble them very much.

This Week's Fashion Notes.

The most fashionable fabrics for spring wear will be of cotton.

The skirts of almost all walking dresses are made quite plain, or with a very narrow pleating set underneath the edge.

The stitchings on the backs of the fashionable four-button English gloves grow broader and broader and the buttons constantly increase in size. The favorite color is a reddish mahogany shade, with the stitchings of black.

Little visites of plush are worn for afternoon calls and to the matinees, and at night to the play. They are of a shape to match the costume sometimes, but more generally seal-brown, which goes well with any costume. They reach only some two inches below the waist-line behind, and have sling sleeves.

A charming travelling costume worn by one of the early departures for Europe had a plain skirt of dark electric-blue moire, draped with cashmere of the same shade; the tight, round waist had handkerchief fronts crossing over a vest of the moire, and full sleeves gathered at the elbow to deep moire cuffs. The waist was belted with watered ribbon. The long coat, reaching to the hem of the skirt, was of heavy blue camel's hair lined with brown fur, and the turban was of the same material trimmed with the fur.

Covert coats of light tan and mastic livery cloth, and with the lapped seams, are constantly growing in popularity. They are to be found ready made in the big dry-goods shops. The collars are very high, and many of them button across with a little strap of the cloth; most of them single-breasted and with three pockets, one of them high up on the left breast.

There is in London a tendency to give a hint of the Greek simplicity and richness of drapery in the newest costumes—a result of the Greek plays and tableaux in which many of the fashionable women took part. Some charming ones have been shown in white and daffodil-yellow China crapes that skilfully combine the beauties of ancient and modern dress.

Nothing is prettier for little boys than the Eton suits, with kilt, vest and short Eton jacket, which slopes open from the throat to the waist line, is square cornered there and crosses to the back, where it is slightly pointed. A pointed vest of corduroy or pique covers the front of the waist of the kilt skirt, is lapped down the front and has pearl buttons set closely together. This is pretty in brown or blue serge and Suede-colored or white vest and braid, the color of the vest around the jacket and on the front pleats of the skirt. Black silk hats are worn with these.

Dresses for little girls are made with plain low, square-necked waists, slightly pointed in front, made of fine embroidery or of cashmere, or India foulards. Tiny pearl buttons in rows close together trim the revers. A single full skirt is worn with these waists. The strapped Gretchen waists, instead of having square openings, are made in a V to the waist in front and have merely a low square neck behind; embroidered edges, two inches wide; is turned down around the V front and square back and is slightly gathered in the arm-hole.

A feature of the new bead passementeries is the use of open meshes in the midst of otherwise solid designs. Points and long leaves with one straight edge are the newest patterns in gimps. A great deal of metal cord or gold bullion gimp is shown for wool dresses or coats, and there are cashmere-colored bead trimmings for silks and velvets, in dark, quiet colors that will not be conspicuous. For wool dresses are galloons and pointed braids made of narrow plaited mohair braid in open designs in one color, or two tones, or in contrast.

White gloves are becoming popular for evening wear. Tan are now worn in the twenty-button lengths only with the darker shades of evening dresses. Palest primrose, lilac and mastic are the most popular, and despite the frequent announcement of elbow gloves, well-dressed women continue to wear them up to the shoulder. To hold them in place upon slim arms a little elastic is caught to the inside edge of the glove with a few invisible stitches. It is best to add this even when the arm is plump, as it keeps the glove smooth and saves the injury that frequent smoothing and pulling up causes.

Latest News Notes.

Rev. Mr. Judar, of Medicine Hat, will be the next rector of All Saints' Church in Winnipeg.

The reported excitement in Newfoundland over the disallowance of the Bait Act is said to be greatly exaggerated.

It is proposed to add a "Victoria wing" to the Guelph General Hospital in commemoration of the Queen's jubilee.

The Boston Globe thinks the non-intercourse Bill will be a good thing for Canada when the immigration boom commences in April.

The London World says that Lady Rosebery's diamonds caused quite a sensation at the Calcutta State ball last month, at which were present many distinguished visitors.

It is reported that Parliament will be asked at the coming session to authorize an increase in the Northwest Mounted Police Force, and that each post will be supplied with a Nordenfeldt gun.

Warning has been given by the Imperial Privy Council that unless the losses which have occurred among animals carried on deck while crossing the Atlantic are reduced, the carriage of animals on deck during the winter will probably be prohibited.

An important motion is being argued at Osgoode Hall on behalf of the Ontario & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company to restrain the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from constructing a branch line over the plaintiff's proposed route from Algoma Mills to Sault Ste. Marie.

Queer Things About Money.

A woman who bought an old-fashioned bureau at a second-hand store in Cincinnati discovered a secret drawer which contained $1,300 in gold and old bank bills.

Money was so scarce in certain counties of Southwestern Texas during the earlier part of the winter that in some instances the skins of javelina hogs were used as a circulating medium, and 'possum skins were frequently offered in liquidation of grocery bills.

'Squire Royal, the tax-collector of Taylor County, Pa., took out a well-worn overcoat to sell to an old clothes man, a few days ago, and found $190 in bills rolled up in a sheet of notepaper. The 'Squire is confident that the money is his own, but he has no recollection of having placed it in the pocket.

The pet cat belonging to Mrs. Lucy Cain, of Hannibal, Mo., brought a mouse into the parlor recently, and with it a small piece of paper money. Mrs. Cain thought nothing about the occurrence until one day last week, when she discovered that a roll of bills was missing from her bureau drawer. Then she put two and two together and began a vigorous search of the premises. The missing bills were finally unearthed in a corner of the cellar, where a colony of mice had made a nest of them.

One of several gamecocks that were being shipped to Portland, Ore., escaped from the coop and the baggage car, and all the efforts of the train hands to catch it were unavailing until a bright brakeman released another cock. In a moment the two had engaged in battle, and were easily picked up.

DEATH ON RATS.

How a Woman Solved a Vexatious Problem in Domestic Life.

Mrs. Benedict's business is that of a rat-catcher, a new profession now fairly opened to women, and one which Mrs. Benedict, at least, has made lucrative, says the New York Star. The business of rat extermination is not strictly new, and yet Mrs. Benedict is fairly entitled to rank as its inventor, at least in an important sense. She has raised it to the dignity of a profession. It has always been easy for housewives who were troubled with rats to poison them, but the problem has been to induce them to die outside their haunts. They have usually preferred to retire to their inaccessible retreats in the walls as soon as they have felt the symptoms of arsenical poisoning, and the low state of sanitary science prevailing in their communities is such that poisoned rats are never properly buried or incinerated by their associates. The problem has been how to kill rats without bringing unpleasant odors into the house. Mrs. Benedict has found out how to induce rats to die on the kitchen floor. Like many inventors, she is somewhat indebted to accident. She was engaged, it appears, in the domestic manufacture of plaster casts of various kinds. One of her devices was to mix wheaten flour with her pulverized plaster of Paris, so that the gluten of the flour might make the paste less brittle. One evening she had visitors who rang the door bell just as she was sifting the mixed plaster and flour for the third time by way of mixing them intimately, as the chemist says. She had already set a dish of water at hand, intending to make an experimental cast at once, and when the door-bell rang she hastily removed her apron and went to welcome her guests, leaving her materials upon the kitchen table. Her guests stayed until bed-time, and when they bade her adieu, Mrs. Benedict went in bed without returning to the kitchen. What happened in the night was this: A rat made his way up the legs of the table to the top, where he was speedily joined by others. The dish of flour and plaster was easily reached, and the rats ate freely and hastily of it, as it is their custom to do. It was a rather dry supper, and water being near each rat turned to drink. The water drunk first wet the plaster in the rats' stomachs, and then, in technical phrase, "set" it; that is to say, the plaster thus made into paste, instantly grew hard in each rat's stomach and put an end to any exercise of that organ. The rats decided Mr. Mallock's question: "Is life worth living?" in the negative without quitting the table. The next morning thirteen of them lay dead in a circle around the water dish. Mrs. Benedict, when she entered the kitchen for the purpose of making her fire, saw them and acted—that is to say, she screamed and climbed upon a chair. From that position she studied the scene and very soon saw the cause. Like a wise woman, she kept her secret and made profit of it. She undertook, for a consideration, to clear the premises of her neighbors of the pests, and succeeded. It was not long before the town was as free of this sort of vermin as if the pied piper of Hamelin had travelled that way.

WISE MONKEYS IN INDIA.

They are Shrewd About Some Things, but Too Greedy for Their Own Good.

I remember once coming across a Hindoo who was piously scattering corn for the monkeys, about a hundred of which were gathered round him snatching up the grain with greedy hands and cuffing soundly any monkey that poached on his neighbor's share. Swarms of other monkeys were sitting on the trees and banks close by, with faces of rueful resignation, looking wistfully at the feast before them, but the man explained to us that they belonged to a different caste and would be half killed if they attempted to join the party. One huge fellow we noticed particularly, who sat as near as he dared and looked on, but did not try to pick up so much as an outlying grain, although we were told he was "a noted wrestler."

In certain camping-grounds the monkeys were perfect pests, frequently stealing the servants' dinners, and even snatching food out of their hands, or carrying off their copper cooking-pots, rushing up a tree with them, and throwing them down after eating the contents. The servants would often come and complain of their misdoings, but redress there was none; wide as an Indian civilian's jurisdiction is, it does not extend over the monkey-world. The natives have an ingenious way of catching monkeys, so simple that it may with truth be said that the monkey catches himself. A narrow-mouthed jar is filled with corn, and accidentally, of course, left on the ground. The ever-watchful monkeys quickly take note of this, and no sooner is the owner of the jar out of sight than they steal up to inspect and discuss their windfall. Having satisfied themselves that there is no trap, one of them thrusts in his arm and snatches a handful of corn. He then finds that the mouth of the jar is too narrow to let him withdraw his doubled fist, but he never thinks of dropping the corn, and out rushes the owner from behind a tree and treacherously slips a noose around the victim's neck.—London Field.

An Accommodating Man.

Collector—How many more times do you wish me to call for this money?

Debtor—My dear sir, you need never call again. I shall not be offended.—Texas Siftings.

Three years ago seventeen bachelors of Keystone, Dak., entered into a solemn compact never to marry. Eleven of them are already husbands and two of them are soon to wed.

A Quebec despatch says the records of the Quebec Observatory show that there are actually 108 inches of snow on the ground there, an amount that has not been recorded since 1873.

A vineyardist near Livermore, Cal., keeps from twenty to thirty cats on his place all the time. They are his remedy for rabbits and gophers and effectually keep those pests in subjection.

A bad boy in Massachusetts village surprised and pleased his teacher by promising to contribute a fine steel engraving of Washington to aid in decorating the school room on Feb. 22nd. The teacher left a large space among the evergreen trimmings on the wall, and the boy brought a two-cent postage stamp.

CURRENT TOPICS.

One of the singular projects to which the forty-ninth U. S. Congress turned a deaf ear was that to appropriate a sum of money for digging a hole 3,000 feet deep, or as much more or less as the funds might warrant, in each State and Territory. The memorial of the author of this happy thought promised a general revival of industry as one of its results, and only asked for $4,600,000, being $100,000 for each State and Territory, to carry it out. Its immediate object was "getting useful knowledge or discovering valuable minerals."

A communication to the London Meteorological Society, by Capt. Toynbee, states as his conclusion that clouds of not less than 2,000 feet in thickness are seldom accompanied by rain, or, if they are, it is very gentle, consisting of minute drops; with a thickness of between 2,000 and 4,000 feet, the size of the drops is moderate; with increasing thickness of the clouds comes an increasing size of the drops, and at the same time the degree of temperature becomes lowered. When the thickness amounts to more than 6,000 feet, hail is produced.

The occurrence of earthquakes has a perceptible influence upon health. Describing in a United States medical journal the influence of the recent shocks in Charleston, S.C., Dr. F. Peyre Porcher, of that city, says that many persons experienced decidedly electrical disturbances, which were repeated upon the successive recurrence of the shocks. These disturbances were generally accompanied by tingling, pricking sensations, like "needles and pins," affecting the lower extremities. One gentleman was completely relieved of his rheumatism; another, who for months was nervous, depressed and entirely unable to attend to business, regained his former activity and energy.

Mrs. Folsom is reported to have said that she would rather be known as Mrs. Cleveland's mother than the mother-in-law of the United States President. It is quite natural, says the "Casual" of the New York Graphic. Some of the loveliest of elderly ladies have taken to heart the cheap jokes at the expense of motherhood that have been so curiously popular for many years. Yet, if the statistics might be had, it would transpire that the mother-in-law has been as tenderly cherished as the daughter to whom she willingly consigned the larger portion of her ambition and her dignity; and the "Casual" often remembers one, as doubtless do two-thirds of the male readers of this paragraph, the majesty of whose gentleness and willing thoughtfulness of self was larger than any kingly assumption that can be easily recalled.

The fact is well understood, of course, that Great Britain and other parts of northwestern Europe owe much, in the matter of climate and temperature, to the warming influence of the Gulf Stream. The extent of the effect which is thus produced, according to the calculations made by Dr. Croll, almost exceed belief, or even comprehension, in a mathematical sense. He has found, by careful scientific estimate, that the amount of heat conveyed northward in the Atlantic by this stream is equivalent to 77,479,650,000,000,000,000 foot pounds of energy per day, which is equal to all the heat received by 1,560,935 square miles at the equator, and more heat than is conveyed by all the air currents; and so positive is its climatic effect, and so far-reaching, that, according to Dr. Croll, the heat of the Arctic seas and North Atlantic would be diminished to that immense extent by the stoppage or diversion of the great ocean river.

A most pernicious habit, which is very prevalent among children, is that of sleeping with the head under the bed covers. Sometimes children acquire this habit when young, on account of their "fear of the dark." Unwise parents often do their children a vast deal of harm by using the imaginary man in the dark as a means of frightening the little ones into obedience. Such children, when put to bed, nestle down under the covers as soon as the light is put out, and thus breathe over and over, during sleep, air which is contaminated by exhalations from both the skin and the lungs. Another cause for this injurious mode of sleeping is cold sleeping rooms. The custom of sleeping in rooms in which there has been no fire for weeks or months is a most pernicious one for many reasons, and this may fairly be included among the number of grave objections to the oldtime custom. The temperature of such a room is often some degrees below freezing. Children, and even older people, sleeping in a cold bed room, are often compelled to cover the head with the bed covers to protect the nose and ears from freezing. Children who sleep in this way awake in the morning pale and languid, and present all the evidence of systemic poisoning. Such children do not develop properly. When they sleep with older persons, as is often the case, the evil is greatly increased by the greater degree of impurity of the air beneath the bed clothing. Infants are not infrequently smothered to death by this means. Several cases of this sort have come under the personal observation of the writer. The habit of sleeping with the head thus covered is sometimes continued to adult life, and a vast deal of constitutional injury is thus done.

Why She Wept.

A lady called on a friend who had only been married a few years, and was surprised to find her in tears. "I am the most unhappy woman in Austin, and it is all on account of my husband." "Why, your husband lives for you alone. He stays at home all the time. He never goes away from home; he never brings any of his friends to the house." "Yes," replied the unfortunate woman, putting her handkerchief to her eyes, and sobbing convulsively, "that's—what—makes me—so miserable."—Texas Siftings.

Paid $5 for a Kiss.

Edouard Brisson, a barber, was fined $5 yesterday afternoon by the Recorder for assaulting Miss Angers, daughter of Sergt. Angers. He explained to the Recorder that the style of the young lady as he passed her on Craig street the evening previous so forcibly struck him that he involuntarily put his arm around her waist and kissed the cheek.—Montreal Star.

Farmers who raise turkeys in Lehigh County, Pa., drive them to market as they would sheep. Sometimes flocks of 200 are thus driven along the public roads.

GALATEA AND SERPENT.

Launch of a Cruiser and Torpedo Boat for the British Government.

A new belted cruiser, the Galatea, was launched yesterday from the Napier yard at Govan, on the Clyde, just below Glasgow. Lord Charles Beresford was on board. The Galatea is 300 feet long between perpendiculars, 56 feet extreme beam and 37 feet deep. Her draught of water is 19 feet and her displacement will be 5,000 tons when in fighting condition, with everything on board. The Admiralty expect a speed of eighteen knots an hour. The engines are of the triple expansion type, working twin screws. They indicate 8,500 horse power at a working pressure of 130 pounds. The boilers are of the double-ended multitubular type, with corrugated flues. Her armament is composed of two long range nine and one-quarter inch Armstrong guns, ten six-inch guns of the same class, eight six pounders, eight three pounder quick firing guns and six torpedo impulse tubes. The engines and steering gear under the water line are protected by two inch thick steel decks extending the whole length of the ship. The water line of the ship is protected by an armored belt ten inches thick, and steel faced and strongly supported by a teak and steel backing and capable of resisting shot or shell from ten-inch guns.

There was also launched at the Davenport dock yard the torpedo cruiser Serpent. She is entirely of steel, all exposed fittings being galvanized. Her lines are particularly graceful. Her length is 225 feet, her beam 36 feet and her displacement 1,600 tons. She will have six six-inch breech loading central pivot guns on Vavasseur carriages; eight three-pounder quick firing guns, two Nordenfeldt and one seven pounder. She will be fitted, in addition, with five Whitehead torpedo tubes, each fourteen inches in diameter; one directly in the bow, with one on each side and one on each quarter.

The Handkerchief Cure.

The Philadelphia Times last week contained this interesting and instructive bit of news:

Poet and Editor James R. Randall created a sensation in Augusta the other day. A street car horse became unruly and a male passenger proposed throwing sand in the animal's eyes. "Oh, no!" said the Colonel, "don't do that; it is unnecessary and inhuman. The poor beast only needs to be diverted. Tie a handkerchief round his fore leg and he will start off promptly." The driver agreed to try it and the horse moved at once. Then the driver snatched up his whip, looked at the Colonel and exclaimed: "If that don't beat the Dutch!"

Divices for starting balky horses are about as numerous as the sands upon the seashore or—to put it stronger—as the cures for sea-sickness. Mr. Randall's contribution to the stock is entitled to consideration because it is cheap, readily applied, and does not call for the infliction of pain.

Fortune's Favorites

Are those who court fortune: those who are always looking out for and investigating the opportunities that are offered. Send your address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and they will mail you, free, full particulars about work that you can do while living at home wherever you are located, and earn from $5 to $25 per day and upwards. Capital not required. You are started free. Both sexes. All ages. Some have earned over $50 in a single day. All is new.

Customer (to boy in coal office—"A ton of stove. How much is it?" Boy—"Six fifty, an' 25 cents for puttin' it in." Customer—"Well, you will have to slate it." Boy—"Slate it? That coal is half slate now, mister."—New York Sun.

A Wedding Present

Of practical importance would be a bottle of the only sure-pop corn cure—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—which can be had at any drug store. A continuation of the honeymoon and the removal of corns both assured by its use. Beware of imitations.

A maiden lady says that if single life is bad it stands to reason that double life is twice as bad. But ladies rarely understand mathematics.

I had rheumatism four years in Michigan, and during four months could not move without help. I spent over $1,000 without benefit. McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant cured me so I can work hard and enjoy good health.—George Ketchabaw, Bayham, Ont.

Florida fruit men say that the strawberry crop this year will nearly double that of last year.

An Albany preacher, watching some of his flock as they were having great fun tobogganing, was asked by one of them why he did not take the toboggan for a text. He said that that was a good idea, and that next Sunday he'd preach on winter sports. He was as good as his word, choosing for his text the last four words of the first verse of the twenty-sixth Psalm.

A clerk in Louisville invested $50 in pork at a bucket shop the other day, and succeeded in running it up to $5,000. Then he determined to make it $10,000 and quit and get married. His $5,000 crept up almost to the desired amount, and then the market took a turn against him and in a few hours he didn't have even the original $50. He will not marry this spring.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

D C N L. 12. 87.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

THE

NORTH OF SCOTLAND

Canadian Mort. Company,

(LIMITED.)

HEAD OFFICE

NORTH OF SCOTLAND CHAMBERS!

18 King Street West, Toronto.

Money to Lend

ON THE

Straight Loan System,
Lowest rate of Interest,
Moderate Expenses,
No Fines.

MORTGAGES AND DEBENTURES PURCHASED!

BORROWERS can arrange to have their payments become due the first of any month in the year, pay their principal yearly if they choose. Interest only charged on unpaid principal. If you borrow $1000 and pay the Company $100 of principal back the next year, you only pay interest on $900--All other amounts on same basis.

SPECIAL ATTENTION

Is directed to parties having Mortgages now with this Company and becoming due, that they will find it to their advantage to consult our valuators or write the Company before renewing elsewhere. Our rates of Interest will always be found as low as any other Company in Canada, besides the total costs of a renewal is only $2.00, a small item compared with removing your loan into a New Company.

OUR MOTTO.---Do business on business principals. Lend on good Security at Current rates. Arrange terms to suit our borrowers.

J. W. Henderson, INSPECTOR.

Osler & Hammond, MANAGERS.

For Loans or further particulars write the Company, at Toronto, or see any of the undermentioned Valuators.

W. J. BELLAMY, ESQ.,	-	Flesherton	J. HENDERSON, Esq.,	-	Feversham
WM. LUCAS, "	-	Markdale	C. C. JAMES, "	-	Priceville
D. JACKSON, "	-	Durham	G. RUTHERFORD, "	-	Shelburne
WM. MILNE, "	-	Maxwell	JOHN STINSON, "	-	Singhampton

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 302. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, MARCH 31, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

Money Saved!

BY CLOSE BUYING!

Helps Pay Taxes.

FIVE years in Grey Co. this month and a fair paying business established through the generous patronage of the public. From Dundalk to Holland Centre, on the line, also Maxwell, Priceville, Kimberley, Engenia, Traverston, Rocklyn, Berkeley and other points have given me a good support. My thanks are due to all transient and home customers. I have endeavored to deserve patronage extended, by honest representation of ev'ry article sold; and my increasing business warrants me in assuming that my efforts to deal honorably at fair profits, have been appreciated.

I shall continue my business on the line of truthful representation, just exchange in giving value received, and a fair profit to meet obligations incurred. Stock will be kept complete in

Hampden Watches

My name on, WALTHAM Watches, four grades, a few BARTLETT'S at close prices, ELGIN Watches, and the exceptionally fine made full jewelled COLUMBUS movements. Watch warrants 1, 2, and 3 years, "covering breakages." Filled Gold cases Coin Silver cases, 2 to 5 oz., also Silverware 3 & 4 oz.

Ladies Gold Watches and Chains, R. F. Simmons' roll Gold Chains, best made, Draper's fire gilt. Seth Thomas and Ansonia spring & weight Clocks, a beautiful stock of Silverware, hollow and flat, for table use. Engagement Gem Rings, 18k. Wedding Rings, Brooches, Bar Pins & sets, Lockets and Necklets, Cuff & Collar Buttons, Silver Thimbles, Pebble Specks, Lazarus & Morris, Lenses, Boss Specks. I have $100.00 wholesale in Specks and can suit any sight.

Watch Repair book shows this week watches and clocks booked to No. 1233. My work gives satisfaction, is fully warranted & charges moderate. No second or catch charges after watches are left. Any one coming 15 miles and not finding my stock and prices as this advt. represents, I will pay legal mileage one way and expenses here, meals &c. Goods and work Warranted.

W. A. BROWN,

A Reliable Jeweller,

MARKDALE, - - - ONT.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Pay the printer and be happy.

Steps are being taken to organize a Mechanics' Institute in Shelburne.

Suits of Clothes from 3.75 up, at J. G. Andersons Great Bankrupt Sale.

A fashionable woman's cheek makes a fine billboard for cosmetic advertisements.

Any person that wants a rest, should get a position as clerk in a store that doesn't advertise.

Mr. Jas. Mosier, of this village went to Toronto last Tuesday to take up a position in a marble shop.

The bill to incorporate Thornbury as a town has been read a second time in the Ontario Legislature.

The greatest bargains in mens Lace Boots, ever offered, now at J. G. Andersons Clearing Sale.

117 births, 19 marriages, and 34 deaths were registered in the Township of Mulmur during the year 1886.

Pat—"Phwat is that ye are at, Biddy?" Biddy—"Sure its a bottle of hair resthorer Oi'm puttin on me ould muff."

East Grey Spring Show will be held in Flesherton, on Friday, April 22nd. See bills or write the Secretary—S. Damude, Esq., for particulars. 3t.

A meeting of the plotholders of Flesherton Cemetery will be held in the Town Hall here, on Wednesday evening, April 6th, at 7 o'clock. 2 t.

We hereby challenge the junior Lacrosse team, of Flesherton, to play a junior team, of Markdale, on or before the 7th of May. By order of Com. R. Douglass, Sec.

Nothing suggests the arrival of the millennium more forcibly than the sight of an old tomcat, sleeping peacefully by the fire-place with his head resting on a bootjack.

WANTED.—2 good steady men, to work at Framing and Carpenter work. Must have some experience at the business. Apply to John Whitten, Flesherton. 2 t.

We are always glad to notice the introduction of first-class stock into Artemesia. We have this week pleasure in noting that Messrs. Andrew Beattie and Will Burnett have purchased a thoroughbred Clydesdale stallion, "Just in Time," and will travel him in this section during the coming season. This is a very fine animal.

5000 doz. Eggs wanted at J. G. Andersons. Goods given at regular bankrupt sale prices

Mr. Jas. Beecroft lost a fine two-year-old heifer a week or so ago. A feed house being left open, the beast got in and ate about a bag of chop feed. She died in a few days.

"Yes, indeed, my boy," said a travelling man, emphatically. "Truth is stranger than fiction." Yes, I s'pose so," was the reply; "but it depends a good deal on who's telling it."

The Emperor William of Germany is the tallest monarch, being just six feet. The defunct King of Bavaria was the "shortest," being in debt several million dollars.

A man may chin and a man may work
For the temperance cause all day;
But he can't go a-fishin' and observe prohibition,
Because he aint built that way.

The Salvation Army stopped in front of a saloon in East Portland and began singing "It is water that we want, not beer," and the saloon-keeper turned the hose on them. And yet they were not happy.

The popular Treasurer of the Township of Osprey, Josiah Gamey, Esq., took train at Flesherton Station last Tuesday evening for Ohio, U.S., where he will spend a short time visiting friends.

Auction sale farm stock, implements, etc., at Lot 47, Con. 2nd N.D.R., Glenelg, commencing at twelve o'clock noon on Tuesday, April 5th. Alex. McQuarrie, proprietor; D. McCormick, auctioneer. See bills.

A span of young horses belonging to Mr. John Adams, of this neighborhood, ran through our streets last Thursday at a lively pace. They ran up again the hotel veranda, smashing two posts, then around the block and up through Munshaw's field. They escaped unhurt.

Dr. Armstrong and wife are the guests of Squire Armstrong. The Dr. is as genial and jolly as ever, and tells many amusing incidents which occurred during his trip to the old country last year. He will remain here for some time, after which he will locate permanently for the practice of his profession.

We had a call from the popular Maxwell Carriage manufacturer, Mr. Thos. A. Blakely, on Monday last. Mr. B. is one of the most honorable and straightforward young business men we have come in contact with since we came to Flesherton. We are glad to know that his business is rapidly extending in all directions. Success to you, Tom, old boy!

FOR

Watches, Clocks,

JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, SPEX, &c.,

Go to RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, where you will see the finest stock at the lowest prices in this county, and notwithstanding the very low prices, they are determined to give a discount of 15 per cent. on all cash sales of $1.00 and over come and secure some of the bargains and don't forget it is the only place to get your Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired Properly.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store, FLESHERTON.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices. R. Trimble. (tf.)

FOR SALE.

1 gray Mare coming 6 years old this spring, sound, good working either in double or single, in foal to "Farmers Friend," at Lot 24, Con. 7, Artemesia. Apply to Jas. Genoa, Flesherton, Ont.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE FOR SALE.

Brick House 23x35. Ten Rooms, well furnished all through. Wood Shed 18x22. Also good well in wood shed, with four lots. This is a choice property, and nicely situated on principal street in village. Will be sold cheap for Cash. W. W. Trimble.

Don't forget J. G. Andersons great Bankrupt Sale. No trouble to show goods and quote prices.

Auction sale of farm stock, implements, &c., at Lot 157, Con. 2, E. T. & S. R., Artemesia, at 12 o'clock, noon, on Thursday, April 14th. Positively without reserve, as owner has rented his farm. Wm. Talbot, proprietor; J. W. Morrow, auctioneer. See bills.

A good old deacon in Connecticut was very pious and fond of clams. When once upon a time he attended a Rhode Island clam-bake, he overtaxed his capacity and was sorely distressed. But his faith in prayer was not abated. Leaving the party, and going down on his knees behind a tree, he was heard to supplicate; "Forgive me, O Lord, this great sin of gluttony. Restore my health, and I will never eat any more clams." Then, after a pause—"very few—if any. Amen."

5 LBS. OF JAPAN TEA FOR ONE DOLLAR!
A GENUINE ARTICLE.
at M. RICHARDSON & CO'S.

An old colored women stood at the station in Palatka, Fla., the other day, waiting for the Jacksonville train. Beside her stood two little twin pickaninnies with faces as black as the inside of a stovepipe. When the old mamma's train arrived she exclaimed: "Bress de Lor'!" And then looking down at her children, remarked: "Here, you, Abraham Lincoln, take hold of Jeff Davis' hand and come along heah, quick!" And the namesakes of the two great statesmen of the war joined hands and walked away together as though their names had not expressed such a dissimilarity of purpose.

W.C.T.U.

We have great reason to rejoice, that our work is progressing and meeting with favor in the hearts of those who are brave and strong, to help the temperance cause along; there are those whose hearts are true and who dare to use their power to repress the evil that brings only sorrow and shame to those who are under its painful influence. Oh! how many tears would be hushed and how many bitter words mis-said, if liquor was banished from our midst.

We ask a full attendance of all members and those interested in the work for Saturday the 9th, as it is intended having a course of readings on hygiene, Liquor and its influence. Cor. Sec.

Where the Cat Jumps.

Would you like to see the end of something round? Give your wife a ten dollar gold piece and ask her to call and see Richardson's new Stock of Spring Dry Goods &c.

That War Cloud.

Toronto World.

We are glad to see our old friend the European war cloud bob up serenely again upon the horizon after a few days' absence. In the absence of the war cloud the horizon always looks as depressed as an undertaker's shop on a wet day. There is no silver lining to the war cloud, but it has to be backed by gold, as the taxpayers of Europe know only too well. It requires more money to keep the peace of Europe than it costs to keep the population.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Answers to Arithmetical Problems given in Advance last week.

(1) 5 a. 2 r, 30 per.

(2) 15 5-19 rods.

(3) 583200 lbs.

(4) ship $36000, cargo $3200.

Lizzie Swanton and Annie Richardson answered all correctly.

Robt. Keefer, David Mathewson, and Wesley Smith from Flesherton School and Sarah Hogg from Flesherton Station answered three.

Mary Strain and Fred Ayers answered two each.

Edwin Strain and Albert Beecroft third class pupils, one each.

Jno. Jas. Benson from S. S. No. 9, Art. sent incorrect answers but no solutions. Don't be discouraged Johnny Try again. You may win next time.

A FEW MORE QUESTIONS.

(1) How many posts 6 ft. apart will be required to go round a circular 10 acre field? (b) How many required for a square field of the same area?

(2) A merchant bought apples at 60c. per bag and marked them so that he could throw off 10 % for a customer and still make 20 % profit; find the price he marked them at.

(3) A stream flows at the rate of 1 mile an hour. How long will a boatman who can row 4 miles per hour in still water, require to go up the stream 5 miles and back again?

Answers must be at this office by Tuesday. Solutions must accompany answers in every case.—Mathematical Editor.]

Open Meeting.

(Contributed.)

The Royal Templars open meeting held on Tuesday evening was a grand success. The Town Hall being well filled. The chair being filled by F. Bunt, Esq. The entertainment was well sustained by local talent. Mr. W Campbell opened the programme with a mouth organ solo which brought an encore. A song by Mr. J. Baskerville, brought down the house. A trio by the Misses A. Sproule, L. Armstrong and M. Ayers, was well rendered. Mr. J. Thurston of Kimberley, gave a short address on the temperance work in his locality. The Rev. Mr. Watson then delivered one of his pithy addresses which are always well received. Miss Armstrong gave a fine solo. Rev. Mr. Ferrier was then called upon to address the meeting and was received with loud applause and delivered the most interesting address that has been our privilege to listen to for some time. Subject: "The Local Action of Alcohol; its Effects and Cure," which was highly instructive. He also briefly touched on the moral, social and legal aspects of the Liquor traffic, the whole address was illustrated by the opinions of the highest medical and legal authorities as well as from incidents from real life. Mr. Ferrier is a logical and effective speaker and his address will not soon be forgotten by those who listened to it. A solo by W. Barnhouse closed the musical part of the programme and was rendered in his first-class style. Miss Damude and Mrs. W. W. Trimble presided at the instrument which was a handsome Dominion organ, provided for the occasion by Mr. D. L. White. A vote of thanks to the speaker of the evening, Mr. Ferrier, was moved by Rev. Mr Ayers who made a few happy remarks, the motion was carried unanimously which was tendered to and responded to by Mr. Ferrier, after a vote of thanks to the several performers who assisted with the programme, the meeting was closed by singing God save the Queen.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. Trimble's. (tf)

A BUFFALO HOLOCAUST.

Great Loss of Life and Property Friday Morning.

THE RICHMOND HOTEL BURNED.

The Terror-Stricken Guests Find Escape Cut Off.

THE AGONY OF THE SITUATION.

Men and Women Fleeing With Blood Streaming from Them,

AND HORRIBLY BURNED AND BRUISED.

The Dead, Wounded and Missing, Firms Burned Out and Insurance.

A last (Friday) night's Buffalo despatch gives the following particulars of the burning of the Richmond Hotel: Fire was discovered at 3.30 this morning in the new Richmond Hotel. The house contained a large number of guests, and their heart-rending shrieks could plainly be heard. Ladders were raised and as many as possible saved. St. James' Hall and other adjacent property were burned. Guests from the burning hotel were seen running through the streets, but scantily dressed, seeking places of shelter. Several men with blood streaming from their faces were running about the streets shouting for aid. They had been cut by glass in the windows of their rooms in trying to make their escape. Carney's saloon was converted into a hospital. Eight men and women were there

HORRIBLY BURNED AND BRUISED,

besides many others who had escaped with nothing on but their night clothes. At 4 o'clock the entire Richmond, St. James' Hall and other property in the block were on fire. The whole place burned like a tinder box. The corridor in the centre of the building acted as a great funnel, and as the flames streamed upwards, wrapping themselves about the woodwork of the several floors, the guests found themselves imprisoned by a wall of fire. Many attempted to escape by the windows. The roof of Murdock's gallery and Palacio's cigar store, adjoining the hotel—both situated in a one and a half story frame building—was crushed in by the falling walls. It is stated the fire originated in the cloak room.

Sergeant Jordan saw three women fall back in the flames from the windows on the south side of the hotel. It is stated that the space occupied by the ruins of Creighton's saloon and Palacio's cigar store contains the remains of several unfortunate guests who on that side. A number of children are missing. Two little girls were rescued by firemen. Three of the hotel girls are thought to have been burned to death. F. H. Bryant, a New York travelling man, is very badly burned about the feet and hands. M. W. Barse, one of Orleans' most prominent citizens, is burned about the hands and wrists. The number of those injured is not exactly known. Many dragged themselves to neighboring hotels and saloons and had their burns dressed. A number of insurance men were in the building and several of them were badly injured. W. J. McKay, of Niagara Falls, was one of these. He fell from the fire escape and hurt his back badly. Another—C. W. Dubois, of Syracuse—was severely burned about the face and hands. W. S. Dewey, of Rochester, was also scorched. Mrs. Mann, wife of one of the proprietors, and her young daughter were severely burned. Mr. Stafford, proprietor, and family are safe, though prostrated. Mark Osborne, one of the hotel clerks, formerly of the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, is missing. It is supposed he was killed.

JUMPED FROM THE WINDOWS

THE UNKNOWN DEAD.

A dead man lay in front of Dingen Bros.' store covered by a mattrass. People who thought it might be Supt. Morford, of the Michigan Central Railroad, lifted up the covering, but turned it down again, saying it was not the man. Morford was afterward found. The dead man had black hair and a full face, which was covered with blood, and could not be recognized.

PERISHED THROUGH LACK OF STRENGTH.

A middle-aged man, with close-cropped black whiskers and of heavy build, made his escape from the second or third floor on to the roof of James Creighton's saloon building, a frame structure two stories high. He must have been severely burned internally, for he was unable to accept the means of escape afforded by a small ladder raised to him. He started to descend, but, after proceeding a few steps, he lost his balance and toppled over on the sidewalk. He struck on his head and died almost instantly. The body was later identified as that of Wm. Purcell, of this city, local agent of Bradstreet's.

THE EXTENT OF THE CONFLAGRATION.

By 6 o'clock the fire was under control. Nothing but the walls remained of what was once a splendid hotel. The Boston clothiers were burned out, also Ulrich & Kingsley and Peter Paul & Bro., booksellers; James Creighton, saloon; Murdock, photograph gallery, and Jose Placio, cigar manufacturer. This was as far as the fire went on the Main street side. Wahle's music store is uninjured, except by water. On Eagle street was St. James' Hall. Nothing is left of this except the walls. On Washington street the fire went as far as Tony Smith's saloon. This building was burned in rear and ruined by water in front.

Rather a singular circumstance is that the elegant residence of Jewett Richmond, for whom the new hotel was named, was destroyed by fire a few weeks since.

A CANADIAN VICTIM.

At the undertaking rooms of Brady & Drullard is the body of Wilson Purcell, who lost his life by leaping from one of the upper windows of the burning hotel this morning. Purcell was for a number of years a reporter with R. G. Dun & Co., but lately has been engaged in the investment broker business. He was about 42 or 43 years of age and single. He was a man of some means. The body was horribly burned, the jaw being fractured and the whiskers and hair burned. It is said his home was in Chatham, Ont., or Strathroy, where he has a sister. Coroner Kenney took charge of some of Purcell's personal effects and paid the certificate of deposit in the Buffalo Loan, Trust & Safe Deposit Co., where he has a box. Purcell's friends in Port Arthur and Toronto have been notified.

A THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

Some thrilling scenes occurred at the burning of the Richmond this morning. "I was on the fourth floor," said Mr. C. G. Beggs, of New York, "in a room close to the elevator. The first I heard was the fire indicator. I jumped up, pulled on my clothes and stockings, and opening the door leading into my friend Devine's room, awoke him. He sprang for the window, and I went back into my room and opened the door leading to the hallway. A burst of fierce flame drove me back and burned me terribly, but I had presence of mind to shut the door, and going back into the room, shut the connecting door between our rooms to keep the smoke back. Then I broke the window with my hand and got out on the ledge beside Devine. We stood at the corner of the building, and along the Eagle street side three or four rooms we saw a fire escape. We could not reach it. Then we went back into the room and found another door leading into a short hallway. It was locked. We dashed our shoulders desperately against it, but it would not budge. The fire was getting hotter every moment, and the smoke was suffocating. Finally we broke a space through the upper panel barely sufficient to crawl through." The small hallway commanded the fire escape, and they made their way to the ground. Mr. Devine was entirely unhurt. Mr. Beggs cut his right hand badly in breaking the windows. A large piece of flesh was gouged out of the wrist, so that the pulse could be seen to beat. His remarkable presence of mind certainly saved his life. He says he will go on to New York to-night. "I lost my head," said Devine. "Beggs saved both of our lives."

A. N. MERRIAM, OF TORONTO,

representing Cox & Co., stock brokers, was on the third floor. He heard the indicator, and thinking it was morning call, leisurely touched the button in answer. A moment later he heard the cry of fire, and dressing quickly ran down stairs to the parlor, where he found a crowd of guests and others. Near the rotunda the heat was terrific, and he was badly burned about the head, face and hands. The stairs to the lower floor were gone. "Let us run through the kitchen," cried a woman, and she started, but she fell overcome. Mr. Merriam fears she was lost. The rest of them escaped to the balcony and were lowered to the ground on ladders. Mr. Rumsey, of New York, is very seriously injured, and is not expected to live. He was on the fifth floor, and as he rushed out of his room in his night clothes he ran against Mamie Mann, the little daughter of Mrs. W. J. Mann, in the hall. He grabbed the girl in his arms in his flight and jumped with her from the window to the roof of Bunnell's Museum. He picked his way with his little charge to the edge of the building, and both were brought down a ladder by the firemen. Mr. Rumsey was taken to the Fitch Hospital in a dying condition. He was seriously burned about the shoulders, face and arms, and he had inhaled flames while climbing out of the window. It is supposed he cannot live. While getting out of the window he buried Mamie Mann's head in his night gown and thus protected her from the flames. He was raving this morning in delirium, calling loudly and continually for the little girl he rescued. Edward Whalen, a travelling salesman of Newburg, N.Y., was awakened by the electric bell in his room on the fourth floor, and was fumbling for his watch to see what time it was when he heard the shrieks and yells of the people in the halls. Opening his door he saw the smoke and flames, whereupon he started for his window and jumped down to the shed below. Besides sustaining several severe fractures, he is also terribly burned about the face, hands and feet. His feet and legs are burnt almost to the bone, and some of his fingers are burnt off. If his life can be saved, which appears doubtful, his legs and several fingers will probably have to be amputated. He was groaning with pain this morning and trying pluckily to endure his sufferings. W. J. Mackay, an insurance man from Niagara Falls, was awakened by the electric belt in his room on the third floor, and taking in the danger at a glance, rushed out into the hall. In his flight he fell through a skylight on the second floor and landed on the floor below. He managed to get out on the balcony and got to the street on a ladder. His left arm and back are bruised and cut by glass.

AMONG THOSE WHO ESCAPED

from the burning building were: Peter F. Daly, agent of the Erie Railway in Toronto; A. N. Merriam, of Cox & Co., Toronto, who is badly injured, face and hands burned; Thos. Mumford, Superintendent of the Canada Southern Railway, St. Thomas.

CARING FOR THE INJURED.

Everything possible was done at the Fitch and Emergency Accident hospitals to soothe the sufferings of the injured. At the former a class of trained nurses were assisting the physicians, while the Sisters of Mercy were diligent at the Emergency. At the Sisters' Hospital are four injured persons, as follows: Maggie Mulrey, Fannie Harvey, Mary Nelan, all domestics at the Richmond, burned and, it is feared, internally injured. The three girls ran down stairs through the flames, and had a narrow escape. George F. Michael, commercial traveller, is suffering from shock, but no bones broken. Mr. Michaels had a thrilling escape. He tried to escape by climbing hand over hand along an electric light cable to the roof of St. James' Hall. Three others got on the wire and broke it down. Mr. Michaels fell about 85 feet. Mathew Shannon, house man, is in one of the wards at the General Hospital, burned about the face and hands. Shannon slept with the elevator boy, Joe Flaherty, on the fifth floor. When he heard the electric alarm he woke up the boy and started him down the elevator; then he went back, woke up the domestics and brought four of them down the back stairway to the Eagle street entrance. All were badly burned on their way out. Minnie Neller, a servant, whose home is in Chippawa, Ont., and Kate Pierce, another servant, once reported dead, braved the flames and smoke in the halls and stairways from the fifth floor and were rescued from the third story window by the firemen. Both are burned badly about the face, hands and legs. Nellie Walsh, another servant, rushed out of her room on the fourth floor when the alarm was given and ran up to the fifth floor to reach the roof. Here a man caught her and threw her back, and meeting Mat. Shannon on the floor below, she clung to him with three others and was saved with them. She was badly burned. Maggie Morris, another servant, is at the house of relatives on Elk street, suffering with severe burns. She came down with the party of girls saved by Shannon.

JUMPING DOWN TO DEATH.

Photographer Van Norman, of Brantford, Ont., who occupied a studio in the burning block, detailed his experience. "After I had heard the alarm," he said, "my wife and sister-in-law and myself had no time to finish dressing. Just after waking up I heard crashes on the back roof of my studio, caused by persons jumping through the skylight, and dragged out two poor fellows. One was so far gone that I had to pull him out by the hair. The other seemed crazed; but I got them into the street. While this was transpiring I heard several more crashes and shrieks of people as they jumped, but did not hear a sound after they came through the sky-light. I am sure that at least three bodies will be found under the ruins of the back part of my gallery, as it would be impossible for any one to get out from there alone."

LOSSES AND INSURANCES.

At present writing the police report ten dead in different places, and it is the belief that there are from 25 to 30 killed or wounded in all.

The furniture of the hotel was insured for $46,000 by Messrs. Worthington & Sill in thirty different companies. On improvements to building Stafford & Co. had $13,000 insurance in seven different companies. They are also insured $4,500 on ales, wines, liquors, etc; on billiard and pool tables, $1,200; and other personal effects, $3,500. The plate glass in the buildings is insured in the Metropolitan Plate Glass Co. for $1,943. The insurance held by the Buffalo library on the building, including St. James' Hall and scenery, is $85,000, placed by Messrs. Smith, Davis & Co. The insurance held by the Buffalo library on the rental of hotel is $17,000, and on St. James' Hall $3,000, placed by Messrs. Smith, Davis & Co.

THE RICHMOND WAS SPLENDIDLY FITTED UP

at an expense of $75,000.

Fuller & Townsend, of the Boston Clothing House, estimate their loss at $50,000; fully insured.

Peter Paul & Bro.'s extensive book and printing establishment was entirely cleaned out; loss unknown until the papers are secured from the safe. The insurance will cover the greater part.

Ulbrech & Kingsley, books, loss $35,000; fully insured.

Henry Smith, builder, had not yet completed his contract on the Richmond building, and had $8,000 worth of unfinished work on hand unpaid for, on which he holds insurance to the amount of $5,000.

A REVISED LIST.

Dead—Kate Kent, servant; Minnie Kelly, servant; Kate Pierce, servant; Wilson Purcell, of Dun, Wiman & Co.; Mark Osborne, day clerk at the hotel; — Johnson, a Toronto railway man; Kate Wolf, of Lockport, servant.

The dying are—Jacob Kahn, New York; Maggie Mulrach, Buffalo; Mary Nolan, Buffalo; Edward Whilan, Newburgh.

Those who were burned or seriously injured are as follows: I. H. Finch, Scranton; F. K. Moore, Cleveland; W. A. Hauen, Helena, Mont.; C. W. Debois, Syracuse; W. J. Mann, Mrs. Mann and Jennie Mann, Buffalo, Hon. M. W. Barse, Olean, N. Y.; Mat Shannon, Buffalo; Chas. C. Bidwell, Buffalo; Minnie Weller, Buffalo; Mrs. Kate Pierce, Buffalo; Nellie Welsh, Buffalo; Nettie Harvey, Buffalo; Barry Davis, New York; Geo. F. Michaels, New York; W. J. Mackay, Niagara Falls. A servant girl named Walsh is believed also to be among the dead.

A BUFFALO LAWYER

Hangs Himself to His Bed-Post in a Fit of Melancholy.

A Buffalo, N. Y., despatch says: About 11 o'clock yesterday morning the body of Alva N. Brown, aged about 32 years, was discovered hanging to a bed-post in his room on the top floor of the Studio Building in West Eagle street. Dr. Warren, who made an examination, says death resulted almost immediately from a broken neck. There were bruises on his feet which showed that he had kicked himself out of bed, and from all appearances he had been dead at least fifteen hours. He was clothed in his pants and shirt, and wore a large diamond ring. Mary Ann Fields, janitress said she had not seen him since Wednesday. Deceased had occupied these rooms, which are beautifully furnished for eleven years. He has a sister, Mrs. Thomas E. Brunton, of Newmarket, Ont. The remains were taken to Brady & Drullard's undertaking rooms. Coroner Durney has charge of the case. Brown was a lawyer by profession and had considerable money. He was subject to melancholy fits, and it is thought that in one of these he committed the rash act.

Divorce Work for the Senate.

An Ottawa despatch says: The Senate will not be without work the coming session. Notice has been given on behalf of Mr. John Monteith, proprietor of the Monteith House at Rosseau, Lake Muskoka, that he would apply at the next session of Parliament for a divorce from his wife, Mrs. Mary Ann Monteith, on the ground of adultery and desertion. Mr. and Mrs. Monteith were married in Parry Sound district in 1880, and lived there for some years. The family then moved to Lake Rosseau, where Mr. Monteith purchased the Monteith House. Here Mr. Monteith alleges an intimacy sprang up between a barkeeper employed in the hotel and Mrs. Monteith, and she went off with him, leaving her four children behind.

THE RED HATS.

Taschereau and Gibbons at the Roman Consistory—High Honors to the Canadian and American Dignitaries.

A Rome cable says: A public Consistory was held yesterday in the Sala Regia. It began at 20 minutes past 10 o'clock and concluded at noon. The procession was headed by the consistorial advocates with attendants, arrayed in crimson robes and ermine capes. They were followed by the cross-bearer, cameriers, prelates, bishops, archbishops and cardinals. Then came the Pope, who was borne on the Sedia Gestatoria, flanked with flabelli or white peacock feather fans. He was accompanied on each side by noble guards in blue; the Swiss guard, officers and purple and crimson robed attendants. When the Pope descended from the Sedi he ascended the throne, which had been covered with purple cloth and cloth of gold for the lenten season. The canopy over the throne was backed by a tapestry of perina del vaga, depicting Faith, Hope and Charity. At the base of the throne were two lions couchant, bearing red banners with cross keys. The cardinals occupied benches arranged in a long parallelogram in front of the Pope. The consistorial advanced to the throne and read the instance for the beatification of the persons under consideration. This concluded, sixteen cardinals left the hall to bring from the Sistive chapel the eight new cardinals: Archbishop Gonstables, of Toledo; Mgr. Aloiz, Mazella, ex-Nuncio at Lisbon; Archbishop Taschereau, of Quebec; Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore; Archbishop Bernadow, of Seno; Archbishop Placeo, of Rennes; Archbishop Langenieux, of Rheims, and Archbishop Giordani, of Ferrar. Each new cardinal was accompanied by two others. Cardinal Taschereau was accompanied by Cardinals Bonaparte and Zeigliara, and Cardinal Gibbons by Cardinals Melchers and Mozzella. They proceeded, and bowing thrice kissed the Pope's foot and hand, received the Pope's double embrace and then retired. They again advanced to the Pope to receive the hat, which was brought in on a silver salver. Each cardinal knelt as he came before the Pope, and the hood of the robe was placed over his head by an attendant. The Pope, taking the large red hat, placed it on the kneeling cardinal, resting his hand on it. The cardinals then made obeisance to the Pope, concluding with a double embrace or kiss of peace. The Pope received Cardinal Gibbons with marked affection. Cardinal Taschereau was calm, though he showed signs of great emotion. The Cardinals then gave the kiss of peace to their colleagues of the Sacred College. When Cardinal Gibbons came to Cardinal Mozzella each offered the other hearty congratulations. Cardinal Mozzella was once a professor in the Jesuit College at Woodstock, and is an old friend of Cardinal Gibbons. The Pope then departed, followed by his escort. Crowds lined the Sala Ducale, through which the procession passed. Cardinal Gibbons has been appointed to the following Sacred Congregations: Propaganda, Regular Discipline, Indulgences and sacred relics and studies. Cardinal Taschereau has been appointed to the following: Consistorial Bishops and Regulars, Ecclesiastical Immunities and Propaganda, Monsignor Kirby, the venerable. A student read a Latin composition, expressing joy over the promotion of the cardinals and a Latin chorus praising them was sung. Cardinal Taschereau responded in Latin, expressing his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him. Cardinal Gibbons spoke in English.

THE OLD FOGGIES.

Did the London Corporation Spend Money to Clog the Wheels of Progress?

A London cable says: The Parliamentary Committee, appointed to investigate the charges against the London corporation, held its first session to-day, Lord Hartington presiding. Mr. Firth, formerly a member of Parliament, deposed that he had examined the accounts of the corporation. He found that a special committee had been appointed in 1882 to oppose the Reform Bill, and that there was expended by the committee a total of $250,000. He said that, practically, the city accounts had never been audited, notwithstanding the fact that the corporation employed so called auditors, who, the witness said, were liverymen without practical knowledge of their duties. The meetings held in support of the Reform Bill were raided by roughs, who had been supplied with forged tickets of admission by corporation officials. A man named Hodge made an affidavit that he had been engaged to bribe roughs to break up Reform meetings. Mr. Scott, City Chamberlain, being sworn, presented a written official protest against the production of the corporation's accounts, on the ground that the House of Commons exceeded its rights in demanding the accounts, and acted in a manner derogatory to the rights and privileges of the corporation.

BURIED ALIVE.

Remarkable Story Referring to the Supposed Death and Recovery of a Young Man.

A Providence, R. I., despatch says: The Journal has this story on what it declares excellent authority: "A young man named Stainton, whose home is in Fall River, died, as his friends believed, two weeks ago Monday, from consumption, at the house of his brother, a physician, in Boston. Other doctors were called and pronounced the man dead beyond question. Nevertheless, the consumptive's medical brother believed life was not extinct. As the rest of the family insisted on burial on Thursday, March 3rd, Dr. Stainton visited the tomb every six hours to inspect its inmate. On Friday the body had moved slightly, and, after much disagreement in the family, the coffin was brought back to the house. On Saturday, March 5th, the supposed corpse opened its eyes, and the body began to grow warm. On Sunday consciousness was restored. Late last week Stainton was up, dressed and in good spirits."

A Merced, Cal., farmer has poisoned over 20,000 jack rabbits in the last four years, and yet, in spite of the warfare against them, they are increasing in number and are becoming a veritable plague to the Merced and Fresno farmers.

ROYAL DRAWING-ROOM.

How the Queen and the Princesses Looked in Their New Clothes.

NERVOUS YOUNG LADIES PRESENTED.

A London cable says: The second Jubilee drawing-room was not so largely attended as the first, though there was an immense crowd present. A drawing-room of to-day resembles very much a drawing-room of 1837, but those of fifty years ago were held in St. James' Palace, while nowadays they take place in Buckingham Palace. London "society" has grown, too, within the last fifty years, and consequently the crowd of high-born dames and their daughters who are eager to pay their respects to the Queen has increased in numbers.

The debutantes are as nervous in this Jubilee as they were fifty years ago. For half a century the "coming out" girl has rehearsed in private the awful ceremony by which she is lancee into society. In the secrecy of her bed-room she has pinned a sheet to her skirts to represent a train. She has bobbed before the chairs posing as royal highnesses, and has done her "level best" not to turn her back on any of the said chairs. But the debutante of to-day is as awkward as the debutante was when his late Majesty King William IV. was gathered to his fathers. Full of pluck when she starts to be presented, all the courage has oozed out of the tips of her fingers before she has reached St. James' Park, and by the time she has got into Her Majesty's presence the pushing crowd of women has "knocked her so silly" that she hardly recognizes her own name when the Lord Chamberlain announces it. She has kissed the Queen's hand, she has made several "bobs," but in her nervousness has forgotten to notice what the Princess of Wales wears. Then all of a sudden a page tucks her train under her arm, and the debutante scuttles away, bewildered and befogged, trusting in Providence that she has not turned her back upon a royalty.

The youngest member of royalty present was the Princess Victoria of Wales. She wore a skirt of tulle, draped with faille and festooned with bunches of white roses intermixed with foliage and tied with ribbons. The corsage and train were of rose pink poutt de soie. The train was lined with faille and the trimmings were of tulle. On the train were bunches of roses tied with knots of ribbons. The ornaments were diamonds, rubies and pearls, and on her corsage the princess wore the Order of Victoria and Albert.

The Princess Beatrice wore a dress of pale primrose satin and crape trimmed with clusters of shaded feathers. The train and bodice were of pompadour satin to correspond. The head-dress was a tiara of sapphires and diamonds, with the obligatory feathers and veil. The ornaments were sapphires and diamonds. In addition to four other orders she wore the Hessian and the Saxe-Coburg and Gotha family order.

The Princess of Wales wore a dress of red embroidered satin veiled in fine point de gaze and looped with bunches of poppies. The train was of embroidered satin, and was draped with point de gaze. The corsage was made to correspond. Her Royal Highness wore a tiara of diamonds, with feathers and veil. Her ornaments were opals and diamonds. She wore six orders, including that of her Danish family.

Her Majesty the Queen displayed her customary sumptuous black satin, trimmed with black guipure, and the white tulle veil, surmounted by a diadem of diamonds and pearls. Her necklace consisted of four rows of large pearls. On her corsage were the ribbon and star of the Order of the Garter, together with a perfect blaze of other orders.

It being the 40th birthday of the Princess Louise, she and the Marquis were celebrating the event elsewhere. The Queen's face was wreathed with smiles, and she bore the fatigue with great good-will. Only two of the Cabinet Ministers were present—the Lord Chancellor and the Home Secretary, Mr. Henry Mathews—to each of whom drawing-rooms are comparatively novel affairs.

A SAD DEATH.

Striking Exemplification of the Fact That the Way of Transgressors is Hard.

An Akron, Ohio, despatch says: Two months ago William Wiese, holding a responsible position in the employ of the Schumacher Milling Company, disappeared with upwards of $1,500 borrowed from employes of the mill, where he acted as a sort of banker. He also took the funds of the German Lutheran Church, of which he was Treasurer. His wife was left in straitened circumstances with two children to care for, and on Friday the first information of Wiese's whereabouts came in a letter from him, dated Tilsonburg, Ont. He inclosed some money for his wife and children and asked whether he would be prosecuted if he returned. The help intended for the wife came just a few hours too late, A third little one had been born to the almost heartbroken mother, and her grief at her husband's desertion and anxiety for her little ones made it impossible for her to rally. Friends immediately sent a message announcing his wife's death to Wiese. He telegraphed that he would come at once for the funeral and then face the consequences of his crime.

A Conscience-Stricken Thief.

An Ottawa despatch says: The Secretary of the Department of Railways and Canals to-day received an unsigned letter containing $2 conscience money. The unknown writer stated that the amount enclosed would be sufficient to pay for "a worn-out blanket I stole when working as a navvy on contract 42, Canadian Pacific Railway, Lake Superior section, five or six years ago."

As Aaron True, of Clarke, Canada, was going through the woods the other day, accompained by his dog, which is part collie, part Newfoundland, he came suddenly upon a big gray wolf. The dog at once tackled the beast, and for half an hour the battle raged; but finally the dog got a throat hold and strangled the wolf.

Denver News: There is no valid necessity for the racing indulged in by the police patrol waggon. The ordinary drunk will keep. This is one of the uses to which alcohol is put."

CURRENT TOPICS.

A HARTFORD despatch to the New York Post says that Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe's health remains in the same condition in which it has been for the past year. She shows the effect of her age, but is still able to attend church and visit neighbors. It was thought best that she should not attend the funeral of her brother. During the last visit of Henry Ward Beecher last autumn he told Mrs. Stowe that he was expecting death, and that apoplexy would be the cause.

AMATEUR astronomers who are ambitious to lead a forlorn hope with the chance of covering themselves with glory would do well to watch the sun to-morrow. On that day, according to the calculations of Oppolzer, the mysterious planet Vulcan, if there is any such body, may be seen crossing the face of the sun. As there are no spots upon the sun, the appearance of a small black object upon its dusk, particularly if it were perfectly round, would be suspicious, and if the motion of this object were such as to carry it across the sun in a few hours, the fortunate observer might have reason to hope he had at last caught sight of the long sought and much-mistrusted Vulcan.

DR. C. E. SAUNDERS, writing in the Sanitary Record of the purification of rivers, states that it is his firm belief—and he has had ample opportunities for observation during the past two years—that diphtheria finds an especially congenial habitat in sewage ditches; that it is, in fact, as it used to be considered, a filth disease; and that the cases which baffle discovery of the cause, in isolated, well-drained, well-watered houses, frequently owe their source of infection to a neighboring sewage ditch along which persons may have passed unconsciously, or over which they may have reached to pluck flowers from the edges or have otherwise been brought within the baneful influence of such sewage emanations. There is scarcely a village in the country which does not in some form or other pollute water-courses, and not a few in which such pollution is direct and flagrant.

HUMPTY-DUMPTY had a big fall, but it was as nothing to the fall of King Christian, of Denmark, the other night. It happened at Copenhagen. King Christian was not playing "Copenhagen," however, though he was dancing with the kissable Miss Estrup, and that was next thing to the game aforesaid. In front of the Queen's Throne the waxed floor was as slippery as ice, Down went a couple in the waltz, and a moment later the heels of His Majesty kicked at the heavens. King Christian fell flat on his back at full length. His head struck the corner of a step to the throne. He was stunned and lay as still as death. Miss Estrup was thrown and slightly cut. Great was the hubbub. Comtesse Reventlow was seized with a crise de nerfs and some ladies fainted. By and by King Christian came to and was put to bed. He is up and out now, and is down on dancing.

PATRICK CHALMERS, whose father was a bookseller in Dundee, Scotland, fifty years ago, has been arguing before committees and the public for twenty years in defence of his claim that his father was the originator of the adhesive postage stamp now in general use. The credit of this useful device has hitherto been usually given to Sir Rowland Hill, the eminent postal reformer. It now appears from letters of both Hill and the Scotch bookseller that the latter brought his plan to Hill's notice. The defence of his father's claims to the honor for twenty years and its final acknowledgment by the English Dictionary of National Biography is a singular instance of persistency. The junior Chalmers has been elected a member of several historical societies in acknowledgment of his proof of his father's claims.

A LONDON correspondent learns from a private letter received from Vienna that a magnificent dinner service of the Dresden bright yellow ware, only used for royal presents, is being made there by order of the Emperor William for the Queen for presentation on the occasion of her jubilee. Each plate will have five medallions, having on them either allegorical pictures recalling memorable incidents of the Victorian era or portraits of celebrities of the Queen's reign. There are to be in all 288 large and 120 small plates, and 72 dishes of all sizes, besides tureens, sauce-boats and fruit dishes. The centre piece for flowers and fruit will be surmounted by a statuette of the Queen, and have medallion portraits in relief—white on gold—of the members of the royal family of England.

REPORTS from France indicate that if a war should soon break out, the future strategist of the French army would be Gen. Saussier, a man of whom very little is heard, for the reason that he keeps his mouth shut, and does not mix very largely with the representatives of the social and political world in Paris. But for years past Gen. Saussier has been preparing plans for a possible campaign against Germany, and hence, if hostilities begin, his countrymen will act under much more intelligent guidance than that which directed their course seventeen years ago. At that time Gen. von Moltke was the only man who had a definite plan, and there were no strategical movements on the French side that were worth the name. But this time the great German strategist will find that the lesson of the past has not been lost, and that there are others who can practise the methods that have proved so serviceable to him.

KING WILLIAM IV. died about 2 o'clock in the morning of June 20th fifty years ago, and as he left no children to succeed to the throne the Crown passed to the daughter of his brother, the dead Duke of Kent, Alexandrina Victoria, than only a little more than 18 years of age. Victoria, therefore, became Queen on the 20th of June. Immediately upon the death of the King the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Hawley, and the Marquis of Conyngham started for Kensington Palace to inform the girl of 18 that she was the ruler of the great British people. They arrived about 5 o'clock in the morning, and, upon their sending word that their business was urgent, Victoria came down to them in her white night dress, with a shawl thrown over her shoulders, slippers upon her feet and her hair falling down her back, but perfectly collected and dignified. Victoria met the Cabinet at 11 o'clock the same morning, and presided with as much dignity and composure as Mrs. Cleveland manifested at her first reception. The coronation did not take place until more than a year later, June 25th, 1838.

FIFTEEN years ago, according to the London Economist, at least one-half of the wheat consumed in the United Kingdom was raised there. At present the proportion has shrunk to 30 per cent., while 70 per cent. is imported. The annual average consumption of wheat per capita at the former date was 343 pounds, valued at $7.12½. At present the consumption is 337 pounds, valued at $4.80. The authority quoted says that bread has decreased in value in that period 40 per cent. Notwithstanding the cheapening of the staple product, it will be learned with surprise that the consumption has decreased 1¾ per cent. The cause of this apparent infringement of economic laws is to be found in the increased consumption of vegetable food, such as potatoes and other garden products, thus indicating a decided change in the character of the food eaten. Bread was formerly almost the sole food of most factory operatives and the agricultural classes. Free imports of foreign meats and vegetables, added to the fact that much land formerly devoted to cereals is now devoted to raising garden products, has enabled consumers to diversify their bill of fare.

How Much Can Be Dreamt in Five Seconds

I was sitting with a police official at his office, and we were discussing some fantastic story, when an employee came in and sat down beside us, leaning with his elbows on the table. I looked up and said to him, "You have forgotten to make the soup." "No, no; come with me." We went out together, going across long corridors, I walking behind him, at the college where I had been brought up. He went into the wing of the house which I knew well, and which led to the class rooms. Under the stairs he showed me a stove on which stood an oyster shell with a little white paint in it (I had been mixing water colors the evening before). "But you have forgotten the vegetables. Go to the porter at the other end of the courtyard; you will find them there on a table." I waited for a long time; at last I saw him making signs to me that he had found nothing. "It is at the left hand side," I shouted, and saw him cross the yard, coming back with an immense cabbage. I took a knife from my pocket, which I always kept there, and at the moment when I was going to cut the vegetable I was awakened by the noise of a bowl of soup being put heavily on the marble top of the table next to my bed.

It appears to me that the idea of soup was suggested to me by the smell at the moment when the door was opened by the servant bringing in the soup while I was asleep and it takes five seconds at the most to walk from the door to the bed.—Revue Scientifique.

Never Believed Him Guilty.

I attended the Beecher-Tilton trial from first to last, and was in court both when the first juror was called and when the final verdict was rendered half a year afterwards. I heard all the testimony of every witness and all the other evidence that was introduced. I listened to the whole of every speech of all the lawyers on both sides week after week. I was personally acquainted with all the parties in the case, from Beecher and Tilton to Moulton, the "Mutual Friend." I made notes of all the features of the trial that were published from day to day. And yet, when all was over, I left the court-room wholly unconvinced that Beecher was guilty of the charge brought against him. I stated this fact often in print when he was alive, and I repeat it now that he is dead.—John Swinton's Paper.

The Millionaire.

I tell you, Mike, the men who have no other ambition in this world but to accumulate millions of dollars are the worst enemies to liberty and national peace. Let a man start out once to become a millionaire, and long before he has reached the coveted wealth he has lost all love for his fellow man and fear of God. The misery and distress of the lower classes move him no more than the hoot of the night owl, and he will crush the peace, joy and prosperity of a whole State to gain his end—and buy a seat in the Senate. It takes more brute than brains to make a million of dollars.—Correspondence New York Standard.

How Widows Do Not Woo.

Omaha Girl—Engaged to Mr. De Lovel! Dear me! How do you widows manage to step in among us young girls and carry off our nicest beaux.

Young Widow—Well, in the first place if we really like a man, we don't act as if we hate the very sight of him.

"You don't?"

"No, and if he forgets himself and happens to touch our hands, we don't jump as if he were a reptile."—Omaha World.

Rough on Dumley.

Dumley (irately)—"I understand, Robinson, that you have said that I look like a monkey."

Robinson—"I believe I did say something of the sort. Dumley."

Dumley (threateningly)—"Well, you will have to apologize."

Roninson—"All right, Dumley. The first time I see a monkey I'll apologize."

A Courteous Retort.

Loving Young Wife—You forgot my birthday, Jack.

Cool Husband—I thought it occurred on the 1st of April.

Wife—Other people might think so after seeing my husband.—Chicago Ledger.

An Early Bird.

Jones had asked to be called at 6 a. m.

Mike—"Say, boss, are you within there?"

Jones—"What's the row? It can't be 6 o'clock."

Mike—"No, yer honor; I jist shtopped to till yez that ye've got only two hours more to shlape."—Boston Beacon.

It is said that a sharp saw used on small bundles of cornstalks is a convenient mode of cutting them into short lengths.

A Notary Public of Newark, N. J., had occasion recently to swear a man on a Bible, but couldn't find one in any of the offices of the building. He went to the public library, and while looking for a Bible there saw a copy of the Koran, and, taking it, hurried back and swore his client on it.

EATEN BY WOLVES.

A Young Man's Terrible Adventure in Dakota.

There passed through St. Paul Sunday en route to the east a man whose appearance was loathsome in the extreme, and whose life in the future will be a burden to him. As a reporter was walking about the Union depot he came upon a man with his face wrapped up so that nothing but his eyes were visible. Thinking perhaps that some accident had befallen him, the reporter, accosting him, was told that as soon as an eastern train could be boarded he would let the reporter ascertain for himself as to whether an accident had occurred. As soon as the sleeper was reached the man took from his head the many bandages, and the sight that met the reporter's gaze was a shocking one. The nose and left ear were entirely gone, and the other ear looked as if it had been slit with a knife in a dozen places. Great pieces of flesh had been torn from each cheek, and taken all together the man's face little resembled the features of a human being. The man gave his name as John C. Hazzard, and his story, which was told with many painful halts, was as follows:

"If you want it I will give you the circumstances of an adventure which has left me in this condition. I am a young man of considerable means, and came from southern Ohio last winter to invest in Dakota lands. I was in St. Paul about the 1st of December, and left over the Northern Pacific for Knife River, Morton county, Dakota. After reaching there I learned that an old friend of mine was living some twenty-five miles from there, and started to pay him a visit. Taking a horse I started out early one morning, thinking I would get there along in the afternoon. I had travelled probably fifteen miles when one of those terrible blizzards set in. It turned cold suddenly, and the wind cut like a knife. The snow fell so fast that it was impossible to see but a short distance, and losing my bearings I was soon riding around the open prairie, completely lost. I did not stop for a moment, hoping to come across a house or at least some place where shelter could be found. It did not take long to be thoroughly chilled, and my horse began to show signs of exhaustion. Night came on, and I had made up my mind to kill the horse, and seek shelter by his carcass, when I heard a sound which did not by any means raise my spirits. It was nothing less than a pack of wolves following the scent of our partially covered tracks. The storm had by this time partially abated. The horse heard the howl of the wolves, and made a struggle to increase his pace; but it was no good, for the beast had become so chilled and tired that he could scarcely move. Coming to a little rise in the prairie I saw, a short distance away, a light shining through the window of a shanty, and I thought I was safe. I heard the wolves coming nearer and nearer, and was congratulating myself that I would not be the means of giving them a square meal, when my horse stumbled and fell, with me partly under him, my head striking some hard substance. That is the last I remember until the next day. I was afterwards told by the man who lived in the shanty which I was trying to reach, and to whom I owed my rescue, that the howl of the wolves had attracted the attention of the dogs, and together they had driven the beasts off, but not until I had been almost killed. I was within ten rods of the shanty when found. I will stop in Chicago to see if something cannot be done for me, and if not will go to Europe. At first I feared hydrophobia, but the wounds are healing and I may escape that. I have had the wounds cauterized. I have heard of instances where an artificial nose has been made from flesh taken from some portion of a person's body, and this is the relief I will try to obtain."

The case no doubt will attract considerable interest among medical men where the operation will be performed.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

A Modern Bridal Outfit.

Not long since a Spanish cavalier was married in Paris to a young lady of aristocratic birth. On the day before the wedding the bridegroom went in company with some of his friends to inspect the trousseau, which was "on view." Amid a profusion of pearls, lace and other precious articles he noticed a locked casket. After much pressing the bride consented to open it, and there lay, pillowed on a layer of pink wadding, a six-barrelled revolver, a Spanish poignard and a large bottle of vitriol. "That is for you, if ever you cease to love me," said, with a bewitching smile, the hopeful young bride to her future husband. El Dia.

Time Does Much.

"People used to think it wicked to fiddle, remarked the clergyman, laying down the violin.

"So I have heard," replied an auditor.

"Years ago if my congregation had heard me play they would have considered me beyond redemption. But they don't mind it now."

"I suppose," responded the other speaker, "they have become used to it."

And then the minister looked interrogation points, but said nothing.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Curiosities of the Far West.

There are places in this State where soda may be taken out in solid blocks as ice is out of a pond, and some of it is almost as transparent as ice. The finding of this solid soda by the immigrants who crossed the plains in 1850 and 1852 gave rise to the widely circulated story that under the sands of some of our deserts were solid masses of ice of unknown thickness and extent.—Dayton (Nev.) News-Reporter.

Hung Out His Own Death Signal.

An Olean, N.Y., despatch says: Crape was found to-day on the door of the residence of an old man named George Wood. He was found in the bed sweltering in blood, having shot himself in the head. He may recover. He placed the crape on the door before shooting himself.

A letter from Panama says cholera is playing havoc along the whole course of the Acoucaqua River, Chili. In Lovcampo, Chili, a small town, from 16 to 20 deaths were occurring daily, and the people abandoned the place.

ETHEL ROWE.

That Extraordinary Disappearance of a Ward in Chancery from Dublin.

Dublin has been much excited during the past week over the disappearance of a youthful ward of the English Court of Chancery named Ethel Roe, a girl aged about 13 years, who resided with her grandmother at 27 Pembroke road. On Saturday morning, February 19th, the little girl's room was found empty, her clothes being left on a chair beside the bed. The hall door was found open and it was supposed that the child must have been kidnapped, and that narcotics must have been used. The police made every effort to trace the missing child, but without success. Yesterday the Freeman's Journal published an explanation which appears to be almost as mysterious as the original mystery itself. A letter has been received from the child herself, dated Metz, February 26th, and this document states that she left of her own free will, as a child very naturally and rightly wishes to be with her mother. The composition of the letter is in itself noticeable, in view of the age of the child, who, however, is stated to have been highly educated She writes: "I therefore profited of the first opportunity afforded me to escape, and was accompanied by a faithful friend to my present destination. I need not add how delighted I am to be in my home and with my mother, sisters and brothers, whom, for the past four and a half years, I earnestly longed to join. I shall also express a hope that all advocates of liberty of conscience will approve of the step I have now taken, as it will afford me an opportunity of practising the Roman Catholic religion, in which I have always believed, and which, of late years, I have been always taught to execrate." The Irish Times showed the letter to the friends of the girl in Dublin, and received from her uncle a letter in which he states his conviction that she wrote at the dictation, and most probably under the compulsion, of the person stated to be her faithful friend. He states that the mother gave her up voluntarily to the grandmother in September, 1882, and never asked to have her back since. Ethel is said to have been most happy and contented in her home, and to have taken the greatest delight in studying the Scriptures, and her uncle denies that she was taught to execrate any form of religion. Our Nationalist contemporary gives some explanations of a rather startling kind, and from these it would appear that "a plain working man not connected with the plan at all," asked the child whether she desired to be free from "the thraldom," and restored to her mother. She replied, it is said, in the affirmative, and, in accordance with an agreement, walked out of the house on the Saturday morning on which she was missed, met the plain working man, with whose assistance and that of "a faithful woman servant," she was taken, disguised as a boy, and with her hair cut off, to Belfast, thence to Greenock, from Greenock to Edinburgh, from Edinburgh to Leith and from Leith by steamer to France, where the girl, it is stated, is happy and contented with her mother, her brothers and sisters. The two "poor humble working people" who aided in the escape are said to have had "no other motive in this matter but one of pity of the child and a desire to rescue a human soul." The child's grandmother was, of course, a Protestant. The whole story is a most extraordinary one, and the mystery seems to be by no means solved by the explanation offered.—Belfast Whig, March 2nd.

What 10 Cents Will Do.

A 10 cent bottle of Polson's NERVILINE will cure neuralgia or headache. A 10 cent bottle of Nerviline will cure toothache or faceache. A 10 cent sample bottle of Nerviline is sufficient to cure colds, diarrhœa, spasms, dysentery, etc. Nerviline is just the thing to cure all pains, whether internal or external. Buy at your druggist a 10 cent sample of Nerviline, "the great pain cure." Safe, prompt and always effectual. Large bottles at any drug store only 25 cents.

How Space is Annihilated.

Nothing, perhaps, could give a better idea of the distance India was from England between seventy and eighty years ago than the fact that George III.'s jubilee was celebrated out there the year after its celebration at home. It was kept in the summer of 1810. Calcutta was illuminated for the battle of Waterloo on Monday, Dec. 18th, 1815, the news having arrived a few days before. Nowadays sporting men do not leave the club at Allahabad for bed before they have heard what horse won the Derby that afternoon.—London World.

Some Old Men.

Mr. John Blue, sen., Orford, who is in his 100th year, walked nearly a mile to vote at the late election.

A large portion of the world is at the present time governed by very old men. The Emperor of Germany is 90 years of age, Von Moltke is 86, Prince Bismarck is 71, M. Grevy is 76 and Mr. Gladstone is 77.

Mr. Wm. Brown, of Tiverton, Bruce county, claims he is the oldest printer in Canada. He is 89 years of age, and worked as compositor in Scotland for over forty years.

Some Snow in March.

Don't you forget it, young man, and be sure and make a record of it, for threescore years from now when you tell the story they will not believe it, that on the 10th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1887, the ground throughout Eastern Maine was covered with snow to the depth of seven feet.—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

Fine Old Maple Sweetening.

This is good maple sugar weather. The same old recipe is good for all seasons—ten pounds of glucose and one pound of maple.—Peoria Transcript.

A clerk in a St. Louis store fell ill and was likely to die, and a telegram was sent to his relations in Springfield, Ill., saying that he was not expected to live long. The answer that came back was: "Can't come at present. When he dies ship body to us."

A New York physician has informed 5 o'clock tea parties that their brass teapots generate a very poisonous substance, and society has concluded to limit their use of brass to doorknockers and other things.

A BUDGET FOR WOMEN.

Spring Bonnets Seen at a Wedding in London—Current Paragraphs.

There was such a very pretty wedding at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, on Saturday that we did wish for you to be there to see it. The bride was Lady Adela Rous, and she looked charming in her marriage gown of white moire, with a small wreath of orange blossoms fastened on with multitudinous diamond stars, and a magnificent bouquet of lilies and other white flowers. The bouquet, I am glad to say, was not cumbrously large, as some brides' bouquets have been of late, and the arrangement of lovely blooms was perfect. The train of the wedding dress was carried by two of the very tiniest pages I have ever seen. They were dressed in white satin. The bridesmaids wore really tasteful dresses of some pale blue or eau-de-Nil material, relieved with brown velvet. Their hats had high crowns of either straw or brown velvet, but the brims were blue. Their bouquets were azaleas, in lovely tones of pink and coral intermingled. This attire looked warm and comfortable. I always think that white or cream-colored dresses for bridesmaids look cold and chilling at any time save summer and early autumn. I have never seen such bonnets as those worn by the smart people in the congregation. One lady appeared in a very spring-like bonnet of white straw, trimmed with a high bunch of Naples violets. A large cluster of similar flowers was tucked in the bosom of her dark heliotrope-velvet bodice. A necket of cut amber lay upon folds of white lace, which came down in points upon the sombre velvet. The ear-rings were amethysts, just a little too blue in tone to assort comfortably with the pale mauve of the violets. This lady carried a delicious little wrap made of tiger-skin—just the sort of thing that a very wealthy woman dare buy, for it could not possibly be worn more than half a dozen times in the year, being too conspicuous. A handsome brunette had a ruby velvet jacket quite tight-fitting, edged with beaver. Her bonnet was red and so was her gown, but the former was velvet, the latter silk. A tall and splendid blonde, with glorious coils of pale brown glossy hair, wore a bodice and overdress of putty-colored ottoman over a skirt and plastron of brightly-striped silk. The collar and cuffs were of the strires. The small bonnet was embroidered and edged with a fluff of silk chenile, just a shade darker and a tone richer than the putty tint of the silk. It was trimmed with a group of red roses or poppies. The ear-rings were very long and very old-fashioned, but they were of diamonds and pearls of the rarest. A short ruby-velvet mantle, trimmed with sable tails, just matched the flowers in the bonnet. Two sisters in half-mourning were beautifully dressed—one in black velvet trimmed with chinchilla, and bonnet to match; the other also in black velvet, with trimmings of rich, finely cut steel. A handsome but morose-looking woman had no less than three diamond stars in her bonnet strings. A blonde who was present had something black in her hair. We could not make out what it was, so decided that she had truffled her hair as a refreshing novelty.—Loving Cousin Madge in London Truth.

Something New

and most important. Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, can furnish you work that you can do at great profit and live at home, wherever you are located. Either sex, all ages. Asa P. Rand, Westboro', Mass., writes us that he made $80 profit in a single day. Every worker can make from $5 to $25 and upwards per day. All is new. Capital not required; you are started free. Full particulars free. Send your address at once.

Fannie Rasche, a beggar well known on the streets of New Orleans for years past, died in her miserable hovel the other day, and hidden in her room were a bank book and securities representing $4,500.

N. O. Shelnutt, of Jackson county, Ga., was hanged twice by a mob in January last and still lives to tell the tale. He says that it is a great mistake to think that death by hanging is painful. "There is no pain about it," he says, "and a man can die mighty easy."

A fact is a stubborn thing, and so was rheumatism until the discovery of McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant, which is taken internally and cures thoroughly. Sold by druggists at $1 and trial bottles 25 cents each.

There was a report that during last week the snowfall in the Selkirks was already over 19 feet.

A few days ago Mrs. Mary Pitts, of Darcy Ark., was bitten by a mad dog. A madstone was procured and applied to her wounds. It remained upon each some time, and was repeatedly applied. Hope is expressed that a cure has been effected Mrs. Pitts is the fourth person bitten there recently, all of whom have been treated with a madstone.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

D C N L. 13. 87.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1887.

A MECHANICS' INSTITUTE FOR FLESHERTON.

The importance of a Mechanics' Institute to a community such as this can scarcely be rated too highly. It places within the reach of all classes the best standard literature. It creates a thirst for that knowledge, which enriches the mind and ennobles the intellect. It drives out pernicious "dime" trash, and substitutes therefor works of standard fiction—works of real merit, such as those of Dickens, Scott, Thackeray, Reid, Cooper, Ballantyne, Poe, &c. And all these benefits can be obtained at a trifling individual outlay.

Why do we speak of this matter, seeing that Flesherton is not blessed with such an institution? Simply because we are of opinion, that in a few weeks this desideratum will be an accomplished fact.

Messrs. Dickenson & Co., wholesale book importers, Woodstock, have forwarded us nearly 600 very carefully selected works, representing the tastes of all classes in the community. For instance we find works in history, science, natural history, biography, theology, medicine, law, etiquette, fiction, &c., &c. These books are sent on approbation and the bulk of them carefully selected by an efficient committee—would form a splendid nucleus for a Mechanics' Institute Library. We want our citizens to take hold of this matter with a vim and earnestness that will ensure success; and we are of opinion, that our agricultural friends will lend a hearty helping hand. Next week we shall discuss the matter more fully.

THE TRUTH.

The Hanover Post did misquote us, its assertions to the contrary notwithstanding. Last week the Post, in endeavoring to prove that it was correct, said:—"Here is what the ADVANCE did say:—'We did all in our power to secure the return as M. P. for South Grey, of Dr. Jamieson.'" Now here is what we actually did say—and if any one doubts it, let them examine for themselves in our issue of the 3rd inst.:—"For our own part, then, we are frank to confess, that, in conjunction with other Artemesia Liberal Conservatives, we did all, in our power to secure the return, as M. P. for South Grey, of Dr. Jamieson—a gentleman who, in his private and public life, has been characterized by a strong desire to hew to the line let the chips fall where they may." There it is—word for word, letter for letter! And yet the Hanover Post has the astonishing cheek to assure us that it did not misquote us! We had thought there was only one journalist (so called) in the county mean enough to descend to such deliberate falsehood, but it seems he has quite an ardent disciple in the scribe of the Post. If there is still a spark of honor remaining in the Hanover man he will do us the simple justice to acknowledge his error through the same medium by which he has traduced us.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Death of a Venerable Lady.

We regret to have to announce this week the death of another one of our most respected citizens. Last Monday evening, March 14 Mrs. Francis M. Wright peacefully and joyfully passed to the world above. Grandma Wright, as she was familiarly called by our townspeople, had been gradually failing all winter, but was not seriously ill until two weeks before her death, when she was attacked with senile bronchitis. She died at the residence of her two sons, Alfred and John Wesley, on Adams street, in this place. Grandma was in her 78th year, and was never ill but twice during her life. She was the mother of fifteeen children, ten of whom are still living. Five of them attended the funeral, the others being so far away as to make it impossible for them to reach here. She has thirty living grandchildren and five great grandchildren. Her descendents are scattered from the Pacific Slope to the mouth of the St. Lawrence River. She was a native of County Carlow, Ireland, and left her native home with her husband and oldest child in 1832, since which time she lived fifty years in Canada and five years in Kirkwood. She looked much younger than her years. She was beloved by all who knew her, for her generous, goodnatured and happy disposition. The great love and respect for her was manifest by the large number who visited the house to tender their sympathy to the bereaved family, and to bring floral offering as tokens of their love. Many of the floral offerings were very beautiful. At the head of the casket was a very large pillow of white flowers with the inscription "Our Mother" in the centre of it. At the foot of the casket stood a beautiful floral representation of the Gates Ajar, which was sent by the young ladies in the employ of her sons in St. Louis. There were beautiful offerings from Mrs. Chambers, Mrs. Hughes, Miss Wilson, and others.

This death leaves a vacancy that will be long and sadly felt in her sons' home, as she was so devoted to her family and they to her. Among the many sweet recollections of her last hours will be her prayer when her speech was very difficult. It was only four words, but contained a world to her and her children. It was, "God bless my family."

Her family expected her to live fifteen or twenty years longer, as her mother died at the age of 98, her grandmother at 103, a brother and sister at 86, and she leaves a sister who was born on the first day of this century.

Her husband, the late George L. Wright, died in Canada 1868. The family purpose removing the remains to Oak Hill Cemetery and lay them beside his wife.

The funeral services were held on Wednesday at the Methodist church, and were conducted by Dr. Godbey, assisted by Rev. Mr. Lewis. The attendance was very large and the ceremonies very impressive. After the services at the church the remains were taken to Oak Hill and there consigned to their last earthly abode which she requested should be in Kirkwood, near her two youngest children.—Kirkwood (Mrs. U. S.) Leader.

Have you ever tried McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate for sores of any kind? It is beyond doubt the very best preparation in the market for healing and curing Sores, Burns, Cuts, Pimples, Blotches, and is the only proper method of applying Carbolic Acid. Sold at the Drug Store for 25c per box.

The Golden Side.

There is many a rest on the road of life,
If we only would stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would wake it.
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust never faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted,
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through
When the ominous skies are rifted.
There was never a night without a day,
Nor an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than jeweled crown,
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to Heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
And hands that are swift and willing,
Than to snap the delicate silver threads
Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame Heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla was the first successful blood medicine ever offered to the public. This preparation is still held in the highest public estimation both at home and abroad. Its miraculous cures and immense sales show this. Ask your druggist for it.

District News.

Dog poisoning is still the mania in Collingwood.

Nottawa, a small hamlet in Nottawasaga township, has a roller flour mill.

Mr. Alex. Mitchell has been re-appointed bailiff of the Thornbury division court.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert McLellan, 4th line, Melancthon, celebrated their "golden wedding" on the 17th inst.

Mr. John McNalley's barn near Hanover, Ont., together with all the contents, was destroyed by fire on the 19th inst.

The Shelburne people are making a big push in order to establish a mechanics' institute in that place.

There have been a number of business failures in Shelburne recently. The latest was that of Irwin Bros., planing, furniture, and undertaking men.

Among the number killed, during the recent terrible hotel fire in Buffalo, was Mr. Wilson Purcell, brother of Mrs. W. A. Brownlee, of Mt. Forest.

Mr. Stafford, one of the proprietors of the Richmond hotel, Buffalo—recently destroyed by fire—was formerly a resident of the town of Collingwood

The Bruce Co. treasurer recently absconded. His books have since been audited and as far as can now be learned there is a shortage of $5,000. Further developements are expected in this respect.

Two deers attempted to cross the railway track, between Parkhead and Allenford, while a G. T. R. train was in motion a short distance in their rear. One deer crossed safely but the other came in contact with the engine and was killed instantly.

The Mt. Forest Representative advocates the formation of a local baseball league. the "circuit" to include Teeswater, Gorrie, Listowell, Palmerson, Harriston, Durham, Holstein, Mt. Forest, Arthur and Fergus. Why not take in Flesherton?

The drama, "The Last Loaf," was recently rendered twice by the Mt. Forest Sons of Temperance in that town and once in Arthur. It scored an immense success. The same drama was given in Flesherton a year or two ago and will likely be repeated at an early date.

Orangeville Post: Liveryman Lyons folded his tent like an Arab and silently stole away last Thursday evening. The dolorous wail of the confiding creditor is now heard in the land, but the debtor would come in for a portion of the wailing were he not so shy. A livery is apparently not a very stable institution.

Foreign Mission Hymn.

From New York Baptist Weekly.

From Heathen lands ascends the cry
Of millions who in bondage pine,
They live in darkness, and they die
Without one ray of light Divine

To them the highest gift we owe,
Bequeathed it is by Christ, our Head,
To bear this treasure we must go,
Or send another in our stead.

Our sisters and our brothers true,
To them the Word of Life declare;
They wont for us, our work to do,
And God hath blessed their labors there.

And shall we halt and stay His hand,
By growling, selfish unbelief?
Shall we neglect our Lord's command,
And fill our future lives with grief?

Nay, now to Him who loved us so,
Substance and strength we'll consecrate;
No other glory will we know
Than at His call to work and wait.

Flesherton, Ont. —T. W.

SALT RHEUM CURED.—McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face or hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any sore that nothing else will heal. Try McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. 25c. per box at the Drug Store.

BE ON YOUR GUARD. Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure incipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

LEITCHS

Tailoring Establishment

FLESHERTON!

Is the place to get your Suits made in future.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$2 60 to 2 10
Fall Wheat	$0 76 to 0 78
Spring Wheat	0 76	0 78
Barley	0 35	0 48
Oats	0 26	0 26
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 14	0 14
Eggs, fresh	0 12	0 12
Potatoes	0 40	0 40
Pork	5 65	5 65
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16	16
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 08	0 08
Chickens per pair	0 30	0 20
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CAUTION.

I hereby caution any person against negotiating for a note for $15, in favor of Samuel Martin which fell due about 1st Nov., 1886, as I have not received value for the same.

JOHN SHERWOOD,
3t. Eugenia P.O.

To Farmers' & Millers'.

FOR SALE.

WEST ½ of 33, Con. 9, Artemesia. Also TWO GRAND WATER POWERS in Eugenia, and a number of Town Lots. Write to DR. PURDY, P.M. at East Selkirk, Man., or to R. McL. PURDY, Esq., Eugenia, and answer will be made at once.

AUCTION SALE OF VALUABLE FARM Property in the Township of Euphrasia, in the County of Grey. There will be offered for sale by Public Auction at the REVERE HOUSE, in the Village of THORNBURY, in the County of Grey, on FRIDAY THE EIGHTH DAY OF APRIL, 1887, at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon all and singular that certain parcel or tract of land situate in the said Township of Euphrasia, containing one hundred acres more or less composed of the south half of lot number 2 in the second concession. This desirable property lies about nine miles from Flesherton, four and a half miles from Eugenia, and two and a-half miles from Kimberley, and has erected thereon a hewed log house 20 x 26 and barn (part frame) 23 x 44 which are said to be in a fair state of repair. The property is well watered with a good spring creek running through it and conveniently situated as to travelled roads. There is a small orchard upon the property containing about sixty fruit trees. The soil is of a clay loam, about 40 acres are in a fair state of cultivation. The above premises will be offered for sale under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage (which will be produced at the time of sale) and will be offered for sale subject to a reserve bid. TERMS and conditions made known on day of sale. For further particulars apply to E. M. CHADWICK, Vendors Solicitor, Beatty, Chadwick, Blackstock & Galt, 58 Wellington Street East, Toronto.

Dated at Toronto this 3rd day of March A.D., 1887.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call and examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of Messrs. Notman & Fraser, Toronto Photographers, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885

THE CELEBRATED DR. CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any ... Liver, Dr. Chase's ... will be found a speedy and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

... Liver Complaint ... of which the fact that it is composed entirely ... regulator Mandrake ... Dandelion, combined with many other ... herbs and herbs, acting ... powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood.

500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million ... were sold in Canada in '86. We want every man, woman and child who ... to have Chase's Liver Cure ... plaint to try it's wonderful remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and is worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.

SEPT. GOOD, - PROPRIETOR

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

New Goods!

I have received a large assortment of Spring Goods, consisting of Gents, Ladies, Misses, Boys and Childrens Boots and Shoes.

I am offering them at prices that for quality cannot be beat. CALL AND EXAMINE THEM.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

Largest, Cheapest, and Best stock of

--STOVES--

IN THIS SECTION OF COUNTRY, AT

STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is a means for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

And are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

LITTLE FALLS

Saw Mill!

IN FULL OPERATION.

Special attention given to custom work, so that parties delivering logs to be sawn, can have their Lumber for return loads.

SAW LOGS

BOUGHT.

WM HOGG.

Feb. 23rd, 1887.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON. ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

95 acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Orange Farewell Party!

To the Editor of The Advance.

On Wednesday night the 23rd inst. the Officers and Brethren of L. O. L. No. 883 together with a number of friends assembled at the residence of Brother Edward Stone to bid him farewell previous to his departure for his new home in British Columbia.

Ample justice having been done to the good things provided, and the wants of the inner man supplied, the meeting was called to order by Bro. T. McArthur. On the unanimous vote of the meeting, Bro. Wm. Rutledge, W. M., occupied the chair, and in a brief but appropriate speech alluded to the exemplary character of Bro. Stone, both as an Orangeman and a Christian. A farewell address was then read by Bro. Ashdown on behalf of the Lodge, in which the Brethren expressed their regret that they were called upon to bid adieu to so valuable and worthy a friend. They felt they could ill afford to lose one whose integrity had gained the esteem and respect of every member of the Lodge, but they sincerely wished that their loss would be his gain, and that his future career in his new home would be a happy and a prosperous one. They also begged to convey their best wishes to his estimable and amiable partner in life, praying that she may be spared to him and his children to enjoy many years of happiness and prosperity in the land of their adoption.

The following is the address:—

Edward Stone, Esq.

DEAR SIR & BROTHER,—It is with sentiments of mingled pain and pleasure, that we the Officers and brethren of L. O. L. No. 883, do meet with you to-night to bid you farewell previous to your departure for you new home in distant lands.

We regret that we have to bid adieu to so valuable and estimable a friend, and whose integrity has gained the esteem and respect of every member of this Lodge and we feel that we can ill afford to lose you but we sincerely hope that our loss will be your gain, and we beg to assure you that you will carry with you the best wishes of not only the Brethren, but of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

We would also tender our best wishes to your estimable and amiable partner in life, and pray that she may be spared to you and yours, and that you may both live to enjoy many years of happiness and prosperity in your new home. And should we not meet again in this world, let us hope to meet again in the Supreme Grand Lodge above, where parting is no more.

Again wishing you a safe journey and hoping that your future career may be a happy and prosperous one we now cordially bid you farewell. Signed on behalf of L. O. L., No. 883.

WILLIAM RUTLEDGE. W. M.

Artemesia, Mar. 23rd, 1887.

The meeting was then addressed by several of the Brethren who eulogized in the warmest manner the character of the Brother who is about to leave them.

Some excellent singing was rendered by the ladies, of whom a goodly number were present, which added much to the enjoyment of the evening. The meeting closed about midnight by singing "God save the Queen," after which a general hand-shaking and leave taking was engaged in, and the party dispersed well pleased with a well spent evening.

We may add that Mr. Stone located a homestead near New Westminster, B. C., last summer, returning to Artemesia last fall, and having recently sold his farm, he intends going back to B. C. as soon as circumstances will permit, taking with him his family, also the well wishes of a large circle of friends and aquaintances in Artemesia.

F. GEE.

Commencing to Heave.

Dundalk Herald.

The public school building which was only a short time ago erected in Dundalk at considerable expense to the ratepayers of this section, is not the substantial building that it should be. In examining it we find large cracks in the wall from the cellar to the roof, and one of the foundation walls under the centre of the building has heaved several inches making the floor in the primary departments very uneven. Whether this is due to imperfections in the building or the swampy state of the ground on which it is built, we are not prepared to say.

When, by reason of a cold or from any other cause, the secretory organs become disordered, they may be stimulated to healthy action by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

British Columbia Letter.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Mr. Editor,—I have nothing of any importance to send you at this time only about the weather.

Fall very wet. Snow came on before Christmas and has kept on until now, Mar. 1st. We have had 3 or 4 days of a down pour of rain which is likely to make a finish of it.

Thermomoter fell during the winter to 3 degrees below zero, and mind you it was cold. Don't laugh. There was six inches of ice on the Fraser, a large quantity has been stored here for Salmon packing to the east. There is said to be 25 feet of snow in the Selkirk Rocky Mountain Range. Mails very uncertain in consequence. Settlers anticipating an overflow of the Fraser, should it come warm in April and May.

I have noted your editorial, advising people to stay at home even if half comfortable; my advice is the same. We have what is called a temperate climate; yet it is very disagreeable when the rainy season sets in. I believe as far as farming is concerned the advantage is very greatly in favour of Ontario. Here it is a long time before you can live by the land. You can live on it, but not by it as in Ontario. A man remarked the other day, that it would not do to tell all the truth about British Columbia.

We are only some 12 or 14 miles from the W. Territory boundary line, and to all appearance and accounts, it is no better than this. However, we live in hope that it will prove all right in the future To say that a man requires brains and perseverance for a new country he needs that, a good deal of capital, and a strong constitution as well. These are all wanting here and he will find he needs them all. Flour is now coming from Winnipeg and Quappelle. We are paying the same for it as for Oregon flour. C. P. R., rates are excessive and great complaints are being made about them. The Govt. should see to this. Mar. 4th is election day, and I have told the candidates that none but a good and true supporter of the Govt. need apply, and we are going to send him all right.

There are some farms been sold lately (so I hear) for $22,000; but mind you they are exceptions. Land is held very high, that is, good land, for the reason that it is scarce. Hay scarce and selling at $18. Potatoes $2 per cwt. Wheat and oats $1.50 per cwt. Flour $6.00 bbl. Eggs 50 cts. Butter 37½. Taxes independent of land tax, there is Internal Revenue tax $3, payable by all males 21 years of age, and road tax $2 collected by municipality, the former to Govt.

Always pleased to see the news from Artemesia through the ADVANCE which comes pretty regular, except when prevented by mountains of snow. Yours &c.

J. M. WEBSTER.

Port Haney, B. C. Mar. 1st 1887.

Strictly Original.

Set in type verbatim et literatum.

Flesherton Mar 19

Dear Sir pleas publish in your weekly paper as follows and you will oblige a constant reader

Stones settlement disaster A terrible runaway occured bettween William Fletchers and Richard Stones of the 4 and 5 con of Artemisia on Saturday the 19th inst Mr. John Mcpherson of Gnelg was returning home from this village to day Feeling a little intoxcated and his horses feeling good Saw a team drive at fare speed behind him thinking they were about to run by him for a lark to his team he did aply the whip. It took those gallant team of bays to do as thay ware bid. Says he get out here and Mcpherson and his old sleighs were left a spralling in the ditch.

Walshes team taking in hot persuit to catch them but did not succed as one of their horses was lame. But they left Mcpherson turning back his pair of old bobsleigs the old man was not hurt much excepting a sliver runing in his left thy from the fall against the fence the horses reced some serious injures But being taken in time by a very fenologis man James Sullivan of Gnelg who soon stoped the over flow of blood they are still under his treatment and is to believed to be mending

From The Irish Lake Brother
hood.

Imprisonment for Debt.

Toronto World.

The Mail taunts Nova Scotians with perpetuating imprisionment for debt, "abandoned in almost every civilized country." Well men have been and can be imprisoned in Ontario for not paying their debts. Of course the Mail can argue that Ontario is not a country but a province, or that if it were civilized it would not keep Mr. Mowat in power with an increased majority.

Where Are They?

Dundalk Herald.

On Tuesday afternoon of last week when Mr. Donald Bell of Bell's Corners was returning home from Dundalk, he got out of the sleigh when about a mile from the village, and his horses, a spirited young span, immediately started on the run. Although followed by Mr. Bell he soon lost sight of them, and has not been able to get any trace of them up to the present time. The country has been searched and inquiries made but strange to say nothing has as yet been heard of the lost team.

A Post-Office Question.

Editor Advance: Are those who get their letters, papers &c. at Flesherton post-office, supposed to wait patiently for their mail matter until the matter for other post-offices is distributed and disposed of, before getting their own?

SEVERAL CITIZENS.

[We do not know; ask the Postmaster who is always ready to furnish information in matters pertaining to his office. ED. ADVANCE.]

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stovall, M. D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases.—M. A. Rust, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.—S. P. Henderson, Sadsburgh, Pa.

Cured By Using

For years I was troubled with Bronchitis, weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured.—Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Wapilzen's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.

A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,

FLESHERTON.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loans.

WITH Interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. — THORNBURY.

Gates of the City.

A pilgrim once (so runs an ancient tale),
Old, worn and spent, crept down a shadowed vale;
On either hand rose mountains bleak and high;
Chill with the gusty air, and dark the sky.
The path was rugged and his feet were bare;
His faded cheek was seamed by pain and care;
His heavy eyes upon the ground were cast,
And every step seemed feebler than the last.

The valley ended where a naked rock
Rose sheer from earth to heaven, as if to mock
The pilgrim who had crept that toilsome way;
But while his dim and weary eyes essay
To find an outlet in the mountain side,
A ponderous sculptured brazen door he spied,
And tottering toward it with fast failing breath,
Above the portal read, "The Gate of Death."

He could not stay his feet that led thereto,
It yielded to his touch, and passing through,
He came into a world all bright and fair.
Blue were the heavens, and balmy was the air;
And, lo! the blood of youth was in his veins,
And he was clad in robes that hold no stains
Of his long pilgrimage. Amazed, he turned;
Behold! a golden door behind him burned
In that fair sunlight, and his wondering eyes,
Now lusterful and clear as those new skies,
Free from the mists of age, of care and strife,
Above the portal read, "The Gate of Life."

Love or Lands.

"I bring not houses, lands or gold,
To give, sweetheart, to thee;
No richer than I was of old
Am I to-day," quoth he.
In sooth he looked his poverty,
If ever man did one;
In rags and tatters clad was he,
Bare-headed to the sun!

It was her love of long ago
Who took her outstretched hands.
"If you are he I used to know,
I seek not gold or lands,
If you but love me still, sweetheart,
I am content," cried she.
"And I will share your lowly part,
For I your bride will be!"

"Then, by my troth, my heart is thine!"
Quoth he at her reply;
"Though rags and tatters may be mine,
No beggar now am I.
I'm richer than with gold and lands
The proudest monarchs be,
With thee for mine, and these two hands
To work, sweetheart, for thee!"

—Chambers' Journal for March

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

It was very evident to Dorothy, who was always strictly practical, that to keep Eva and Ernest in the same town was to hold dry tow to a lighted match over a barrel of gunpowder. She only hoped that he might come back now without having put his foot into it.

"Oh, what fools men are!" she said to herself, with a stamp; "a pretty face and a pair of bright eyes, and they count the world well lost for them. Bah! if it had been a plain woman who played Ernest that trick, would he be found dangling about after her now? Not he. But with her, she has only to say a soft word or two, and he will be at her feet. I'll be bound I am ashamed of them both."

Meanwhile she was putting on her bonnet, which was a very favorite time with her for meditation, having already made up her mind as to her course of action. Ernest had authorized her to make arrangements for an interview with the oculist. She proceeded to make those arrangements by telegram, writing to a celebrated surgeon to know if he could make an appointment for the following afternoon. Then she took a walk by herself to think things over. In an hour she returned, to find Ernest in the sitting-room looking extremely shaken and depressed.

"You have been to see Eva," she said.

"Yes," he answered.

Just then there was a knock at the door and the servant brought in a telegram. It was from the oculist. He would be glad to see Sir Ernest Kershaw at four o'clock on the following afternoon.

"I have made an appointment for you with an eye-doctor, Ernest, at four o'clock to-morrow."

"To-morrow!" he said.

"Yes. The sooner you get your eyes looked to the better."

He sighed. "What is the good? However, I will go."

And so next morning they all took the express, and at the appointed time Ernest found himself in the skillful hands of the oculist. But though an oculist can mend the sight, he can not make it.

"I can do nothing for you, Sir Ernest," he said, after an exhaustive examination. "Your eyes will remain as they are, but you must always be blind."

Ernest took the news with composure. "I thought as much," he said; but Dorothy put her handkerchief to her face and wept secretly.

Next morning he went with Jeremy to see Messrs. Paisley & Paisley, and told them to try and let Archdale Hall, and to lock up the numerous and valuable heirlooms, as unfortunately he was unable to see them. Then they went on home to Dum's Ness, and that night Ernest lay awake in the room where he had slept for so many years in the boyhood which now seemed so dim and remote, and listened to the stormy wind raving round the house, and thought with an aching heart of Eva, but was thankful that he had bid her farewell, and wondered if he could find the strength to keep away from her.

And Eva, his lost love, she too lay by the sea, and listened to the wind, and thought on him. There she lay in her beauty, seeking the sleep that would not settle round her. She could not sleep; sweet sleep does not come readily to such as her. For her and those like her are vain regrets and an empty love and longing, and the wreath of thorns that crowns the brow where sorrow sits enthroned.

Yet, Eva, lift up that fevered head, and turn those streaming eyes to heaven. See, through the casement, high above the tumult of the storm, there gleams a star. For you, too, there gleams a star called Hope, but it is set in no earthly sky. Have patience, wayward heart, there is but a space of trouble. As you suffer, so have millions suffered, and behold! they are at peace; so shall millions suffer:

"While thou that once didst make the place thou stoodst in lovely, shalt lie still,
Thy form departed, and thy face remembered not in good or ill."

For of this we may be sure—if suffering be not the widest gate of heaven, then heaven has no gates. Yes, unhappy woman, stretch out those perfect arms in supplication to the God of sorrows for strength to bear your load, for here it shall not be lightened. The burdens which Providence straps on our backs Providence will sometimes lessen, but those which our own folly fastens remain till death deliver us.

So, Eva, dry your tears, for they can avail you naught, and go get you to your daily task—go, tend your children and smile that sweet, sad smile on all alike and wait.

CHAPTER XLI.

HOME AGAIN.

It was very peaceful, that life at Kesterwick, after all the fierce racket and excitement of the past years. Indeed, as day succeeded day, and brought nothing to disturb his darkness, but the sound of Dorothy's gentle voice, and the scent of the flowers on the marshes when the wind blew toward the ocean, and the sharp, strong odor of the sea when it set upon the land, Ernest could almost fancy that the past was nothing but a dream more or less ugly, and that this was a dream more or less pleasant, from which he should presently wake up and find himself a boy again.

English villages change but little. Now and again a person dies, and pretty frequently some one is born; but, on the whole, the tide of time creeps on very imperceptibly, and though in the course of nature the entire population is changed every sixty years or so, nobody seems to realize that it is changing. There is so little in such places to mark the change by. The same church-tower makes a landmark to the eye as it did centuries ago to the eyes of our ancestors, and the same clouds sweep across the same blue space above it. There are the same old houses, the same streams, and, above all, the same roads and lanes. If you could put one of our Saxon forefathers down in the neighborhood of most of our country towns, he would have little difficulty in finding his way about. It is the men who change, not the places.

Still there were some few changes at Kesterwick. Here and there the sea had taken another bite out of the cliff, notably on the north side of Dum's Ness, out of which a large slice had gone, thus bringing the water considerably nearer to the house. Here and there too, a tree had been cut down, or a cottage built, or a family changed its residence. For instance, Miss Florence Ceswick had suddenly shut up the Cottage, where she had remained, seeing nothing of her sister or her sister's husband, ever since Eva's marriage, and had gone abroad—people said to Rome, to study art. For Florence had suddenly electrified the Kesterwick neighborhood by appearing as an artist of tragic force and grewsome imagination. A large picture by her hand had been exhibited in the Royal Academy of the previous year, and, though the coloring was somewhat crude, made a great and deserved sensation, and finally sold for a considerable sum.

It represented a promontory of land running out far into a stormy ocean. The sky above the sea was of an inky blackness, except where a fierce ray of light from a setting sun pierced it, and impinged upon the boiling waters which surged round the low cliff of the promontory. On the extreme edge of the cliff stood a tall and lovely woman. The wind caught the white robe she wore and pressed it against her, revealing the extraordinary beauty of her form, and lifting her long, fair locks, tossed them in wild confusion. She was bending forward, pointing with her right hand at the water with such a look of ghastly agony upon her beautiful face into the great gray eyes, that people of impressionable temperament were wont to declare that it haunted their sleep for weeks. Down below her, just where the fierce ray lit up the heaving waters, gleamed a naked corpse. It was that of a young man, and was slowly sinking into the unfathomable darkness of the depths, turning round and round as it sank. The eyes and mouth were wide open, and the stare of the former appeared to be fixed upon those of the woman on the cliff. Lastly, over the corpse, in the storm wreaths above their heads, there hovered unsteady wings a dim female figure, with its arm thrown across the face as though to hide it. The picture was called in the catalogue "The Lost Lover," but speculation was rife as to what it meant.

Dorothy heard of it, and went to London to see it. The first thing that struck her about the work was the extraordinary contrast it presented to the commonplace canvases of reapers, little girls frisking with baa-lambs, and nude young women musing profoundly on the edge of pools, as though they were trying to solve the great question to wash or not to wash—by which it was surrounded. But presently the weird horror of the picture laid hold upon her, and seemed to fascinate her as it had so many others. Then she became aware that the faces were familiar to her, and suddenly it broke upon her mind that the sinking corpse was Ernest, and the agonized woman Eva. She examined the faces more attentively. There was no doubt about it. Florence had with consummate art changed the coloring of the hair and features, and even to a great extent altered the features themselves, but she had perfectly preserved the likeness both upon the dead face of the murdered man, and in the horror-inspired eyes of his lover. The picture made her sick with fear, she could not tell why, and she hurried from Burlington House full of dread of the terrible mind that had conceived it.

There had been no intercourse between the two women since Eva's marriage. Florence lived quite alone at the Cottage, and never went out anywhere, and if they met by any chance they passed with a bow. But for all that it was a relief to Dorothy to hear that she was not for some long time to see that stern face with its piercing brown eyes

In Dum's Ness itself there appeared to be no change at all. Except that Mr. Cardus had built a new orchid-house at the back, for as he grew older his mania for orchids increased rather than diminished, the place was exactly the same. Even the arrangement of the sitting-room was unchanged, and on its familiar bracket rested the case which Jeremy had made containing the witch's head.

The people in the house had to all appearance changed as little as the house itself. Jeremy confided to Ernest that Doll had grown rather "tubby," which was his elegant way of indicating that she had developed a very pretty little figure, and that Grice (the old housekeeper) was as skinny as a flayed weasel, and had eyes like the point of a knife. Ernest maliciously repeated these sayings to the two ladies concerned with the result that they were both furious. Then he retreated and left them to settle it with Jeremy.

Old Atterleigh too was almost exactly the same, except that of late years his intellect seemed to have brightened a little. It was, however, difficult to make him understand that Ernest was blind, because the latter's eyes looked all right. He retained some recollection of him, and brought him his notched stick, to show him that, according to his (hard-riding Atterleigh's) calculation, his time of service with the devil, otherwise Mr. Cardus, would expire in a few months. Dorothy read what the old man wrote upon his slate, and repeated it to Ernest, for he being practically dumb, and Ernest being blind, that was the only way in which they could communicate.

"And what will you do then?" asked Ernest; "you will be wretched without any writs to fill up. Who will look after the lost souls, I should like to know?"

The old man at once wrote vigorously on his slate:

"I shall go out hunting on the big black horse you brought with you; he will carry my weight."

"I should advise you not to try," said Ernest, laughing; "he does not like strange riders." But the old man at the mere thought of hunting was striding up and down the room, clanking his spurs and waving his hunting-crop with his uninjured arm.

"Is your grandfather as much afraid of my uncle as ever, Doll?"

"Oh, yes, I think so; and do you know, Ernest, I don't quite like the way he looks at him sometimes?"

Ernest laughed. "I should think that the old boy is harmless enough," he said.

"I hope so," said Dorothy.

When first they got back to Dum's Ness, Jeremy was at a great loss to know what to do with himself, and was haunted by the idea that Mr. Cardus would want him to resume that stool in his office which years before he had quitted to go in search of Ernest. A week or so after his arrival, however, his fears were very pleasantly set at rest. After breakfast, Mr. Cardus sent for him to come into his office.

"Well, Jeremy," he said, letting his soft, black eyes wander round that young gentleman's gigantic form, for it was by now painfully large, not so much in height, for he was not six foot three, as in its great width, which made big men look like children beside him, and even dwarfed his old grandfather's enormous frame—"well, Jeremy, and what do you think of doing? You are too big for a lawyer; all your clients would be afraid of you."

"I don't know about being too big," said Jeremy, solemnly, "but I know that I am too great an ass. Besides, I can't afford to spend several years in being articled at my time of life."

"Quite so. Then what do you propose doing?"

"I don't know from Adam."

"Well, how would you like to turn your sword to a plowshare and become a farmer?"

"I think that would suit me first-rate. I have a little capital laid by. Ernest and I made a little money out there."

"No, I would not advise you to take a farm in that way; these are bad times. But I want a practical man to look after my land around here, salary £150. What do you say?

"You are very kind; but I doubt if I can boss that coach; I don't know anything of the work."

"Oh, you will very soon learn; there is a capital bailiff, Stamp—you remember him he will soon put you to the ropes. So we will consider that settled."

Thus it was that our friend Jeremy entered on a new walk in life, and one which suited him very well. In less than a year's time he grew aggressively agricultural, and one never met him but what he had a handful of oats or a mangel-wurzel in his coat-tail pocket, which he was ready to swear were samples of the finest oats, mangel-wurzel, or whatever the particular agricultural product might be, that ever had been or were ever likely to be grown.

CHAPTER XLII.

HOW IT ALL CAME OUT.

How did it all come about?

Let us try and discover. Dorothy and Ernest were together all day long. They only separated when Mazook came to lead the former off to bed. At breakfast-time he led him back again and handed him over to Dorothy for the day. Not that our Zulu friend liked this; he did not like it at all. It was, he considered, his business to lead his master about, and not that of the "Rosebud," who was, as he discovered, after all nothing but a girl connected with his master neither by birth or marriage. And on this point there finally arose a difference of opinion between the Rosebud and Mazooku.

The latter was leading Ernest for his morning walk, when Dorothy perceiving it, and being very jealous of what she considered her rights, sallied out and took his hand from the great Zulu's. Then did Mazooku's long-pent indignation break forth.

"O Rosebud, sweet and small Rosebud!" he commenced, addressing her in Zulu, of which, needless to say, she understood not one word, "why do you come and take my father's hand out of my hand? Is not my father blind, and am I not his dog, his old dog to lead him in his blindness? Why do you take his bone from a dog?"

"What is the man saying?" asked Dorothy.

"He is offended because you come to lead me; he says that he is my dog, and that you snatch his bone from him. A pretty sort of a bone indeed!" he added.

"Tell him," said Dorothy, "that here in this country I hold your hand. What does he want? Is he not always with you? does he not sleep across your door? What more does he want?"

Ernest translated her reply.

"Ow!" said the Zulu, with a grunt of dissatisfaction.

"He is a faithful fellow, Doll, and has stood by me for many years; you must not vex him."

But Dorothy after the manner of loving women, was tenacious as to what she considered her rights.

"Tell him that he can walk in front," she said, putting on an obstinate little look, and she could look obstinate when she liked.

Ernest translated again (for the Zulu vowed he could never understand Dorothy's English), and Mazooku accepted the compromise. Thus for a while the difference was patched up.

Sometimes Dorothy and Ernest would go out riding together, for, blind as he was, Ernest could not be persuaded to give up his riding. It was a pretty sight to see them; Ernest mounted on his towering black stallion "The Devil," which in his hands was as gentle as a lamb, but with everybody else fully justified his appellation, and Dorothy on a cream-colored cob Mr. Cardus had given her, holding in her right hand a steel guiding-rein linked to the Devil's bit. In this way they would wonder all over the country-side, and sometimes, when a good piece of turf presented itself, even venture on a sharp canter. Behind them as groom rode Mazooku, mounted on a stout pony, with his feet stuck, Zulu fashion, well out at right angles at his animal's side.

They were a strange trio.

And so from week's end to week's end Dorothy was ever by Ernest's side, reading to him, writing for him, walking and riding with him, weaving herself into the substance of his life.

And at last there came one sunny August day, when they were sitting together in the shade of the chancel of Titheburgh Abbey. It was a favorite spot of theirs, for the gray old walls sheltered them from the glare of the sun and the breath of the winds. It was a spot, too, rich in memories of the dead past, and a pleasant place to sit.

Through the gaping window-places came the murmur of the ocean and the warmth of the harvest sunshine; and gazing out by the chancel doorway, Dorothy could see the long lights of the afternoon dance and sparkle on the emerald waves.

She had been reading to him, and the book lay idle on her knees as she gazed dreamily at those lights and shadows, a sweet picture of pensive womanhood. He too had relapsed into silence, and was evidently thinking deeply.

Presently she roused herself.

"Well, Ernest," she said, "what are you thinking about? You are as dull as—as the dullest thing in the world, whatever that may be. What is the dullest thing in the world?"

"I don't know," he answered, awakening. "Yes, I think I do; an American novel."

"Yes, that is a good definition. You are as dull as an American novel."

"It is unkind of you to say so, Doll, my dear. I was thinking of something, Doll."

She made a little face, which of course, he could not see, and answered quickly:

"You generally are thinking of something. You generally are thinking of—Eva, except when you are asleep, and then you are dreaming of her."

Ernest colored up.

"Yes," he said, "it is true, she is often more or less in my mind. It is my misfortune, Doll, not my fault. You see, I do not do things by halves."

Dorothy bit her lip.

"She should be justly flattered, I am sure. Few women can boast of having inspired such affection in a man. I suppose it is because she treated you so badly. Dogs love the hand that whips them. You are a curious character, Ernest Not many men would give so much to one who has returned so little."

"So much the better for them. If I had a son, I think that I should teach him to make love to all women, and to use their affection as a means of amusement and self-advancement, but to fall in love with none."

"That is one of your bitter remarks, for which I suppose we must thank Eva. You are always making them now. Let me tell you that there are good women in the world; yes, and honest, faithful women, who, when they have given their heart are true to their choice, and would not do it violence to be made Queen of England. But you men do not go the right way to find them. You think of nothing but beauty, and never take the trouble to learn the hearts of the sweet girls who grow like daisies in the grass all around you, but who do not happen to have great eyes or a splendid bust. You tread them underfoot, and if they were not so humble they would be crushed, as you rush off and try to pick the rose; and then you prick your fingers, and cry out, and tell all the daisies how shamefully the rose has treated you."

Ernest laughed and Dorothy went on:

"Yes, it is an unjust world. Let a woman but be beautiful and everything is at her feet, for you men are despicable creatures, and care for little except what is pleasant to the senses. On the other hand, let her be plain, or only ordinary-looking—for the fate of most of us is just to escape being ugly—and you pay as much regard to her as you do the chairs you sit on. And yet, strange as it may seem to you probably, she has her feelings, and her capacities for high affection, and her imaginative power, all working vigorously behind her plain little face. Probably, too, she is better than your beauty. Nature does not give everything; when she endows a woman with perfect loveliness, she robs her either of her heart or her brains. But you men don't see that, because you won't look, so in course of time all the fine possibilities in Miss Plainface wither up, and she becomes a disappointed old maid, while my Lady Beauty pursues her career of selfishness and mischief-making, till at last she withers up too; that's one comfort."

Ernest had been listening with great amusement to Dorothy's views. He had no idea that she took such matters into her shrewd consideration.

"I heard a girl say the other day that, on the whole, most women preferred to become old maids," he said.

"Then she told fibs; they don't. It isn't natural that they should, that is, if they care for anybody. Just think, there are more than ten hundred thousand of our charming sisterhood in these islands, and more women being born every day! Ten hundred thousand restless, unoccupied, disgusted, loveless women! It is simply awful to think of. I wonder they don't breed a revolution. If they were beautiful they would."

He laughed again.

"Do you know what remedy Mazooku would apply to this state of affairs?"

"No."

"The instant adoption of polygamy. There are no unmarried women among the Natal Zulus, and they as a class are extremely happy."

Dorothy shook her head.

"It wouldn't do here; it would be too expensive."

"I say, Doll, you spoke just now of our 'charming sisterhood'; you are rather young to consider yourself an old maid. Do you want to become one?"

"Yes," she said, sharply.

"Then you don't care for anybody, eh?"

She blushed up furiously.

"What business is that of yours, I should like to know?" she answered.

"Well, Doll, not much. But will you be angry with me if I say something?"

"I suppose you can say what you like."

"Yes; but will you listen?"

"If you speak I cannot help hearing."

"Well then, Doll—now don't be angry, dear."

"O Ernest, how you aggravate me! Can't you get it out and have done with it?"

"All right, Doll, I'll steam straight ahead this time. It is this. I have sometimes been vain enough to think that you cared a little about me, Doll, although I am as blind as a bat. I want to ask you if it is true. You must tell me plain, Doll, because I cannot see your eyes to learn the truth from them."

She turned quite pale at his words, and her eyes rested upon his blind orbs with a look of unutterable tenderness. So it had came at last.

"Why do you ask me that question, Ernest? Whether or no I care for you I am very sure you do not care for me."

"You are not quite right there, Doll, but I will tell you why I ask it; it is not out of mere curiosity.

"You know all the history of my life, Doll, or at least most of it. You know how I loved Eva, and gave her all that a foolish youngster can give to a weak woman—gave it in such a way that I can never have it back again. Well, she deserted me; I have lost her. The best happiness of my life has been wrecked beyond redemption; that is a fact that must be accepted as well as the fact of my blindness. I am physically and morally crippled, and certainly in no fit state to ask a woman to marry me on the ground of my personal advantages. But if, my dear Doll, you should, as I have sometimes thought, happen to care about anything so worthless then, you see, the affair assumes a different aspect."

(To be continued.)

A Thieves' Supper.

A select company of 150 thieves sat down to supper in Glasgow the other night. Each guest was provided with a ticket with the inscription:

ADMIT BEARER
to
A SUPPER
Of Beef Steak Pie and Plum Pudding,
SPECIALLY FOR THIEVES,
On Thursday Evening, 17th February, at 6.30 o'clock, in Tolbooth Hall, 10 High street.

This supper is only for men who have been convicted of theft.

NED WRIGHT
(From London),
Who was himself a Convicted Burglar and Prize Fighter, will make some interesting statements, and, it is hoped, will be able to point out a variety of ways of escape, which have already proved to be a great blessing to others.

As the number is limited to 150, come early and secure your seat.

On the reverse of the card was the following intimation:

Should any wish to enter the hall without being observed they may do so by the back door, entering by Old Exchange court, a few doors nearer the Cross.

The convicts—real and would-be—had to pass under Ned Wright's review, and not a few of them were rejected as impostors. The features of the evening were the want of liquor, the want of speeches, and a performance by Ned Wright's daughter on a violin once belonging to the notorious Charles Peace. The guests seem to have behaved themselves satisfactorily, and had proper respect for the knives, forks and spoons, as one of the onlookers remarked at the end of the feast that "a better ordered congregation could not have been found in a West End church."—St. James' Gazette.

How He Settled the Quarrel.

John Groat is said to have come from Holland to Caithness, Scotland, in 1439; with him came his brothers. They owned land in the Caithness, and increased and multiplied until there were eight families. Once a year they all met in the first house they had built. At one meeting the question of precedence was raised, and there was almost a fight. John O'Groats, as the Scotch called him, who seems to have had the most level head of them all, settled the matter temporarily then, and said that next year he would settle it finally. When the time for the next meeting came John O'Groats had built an eight-sided house with eight doors and windows; in the middle of the house he put a round table. By this means all struggles for precedence were avoided.—New York Sun.

Resurrection of the Hittites.

Capt. Conder, of the Palestine Exploration Expedition, after the labor of four years, has succeeded in deciphering and translating the Hittite inscriptions, which have hitherto excited and tormented the inquisitiveness of Orientalists. Ten principal texts are known; and he has interpretated them all. They have been found chiefly at Carchemish, Hamath and Aleppo, though Asia Minor at large has traces of the class scattered about it. It is a fresh and grand stage in the astonishing recent process of resurrection of a dead and forgotten people.—London Truth.

Friendly Cynicism.

Treat your friends as you treat your corns. When troublesome, cut 'em.

Friends are like flies. If you have a bald place they settle on it.

Never offer to post a letter for a friend. The accidental dropping of a letter may change friend into fiend.

The dog is called the friend of man. This is because he can't eat man, and man won't eat him.

Florist Leander Brown, of Madison, N.J., is the proud parent of triplets—two boys and a girl. They were christened Grover, Cleveland, and Frances.

Talmage says that men who sing and whistle cannot have much evil in their hearts. Bet him a new hat that the warden of any state prison will give him statistics to knock him out on his assertion.—Detroit Free Press.

The gold brick swindlers are beginning to find victims even in the land of gold. Two of them recently did a Los Angeles real estate agent out of $1,700 by the threadbare scheme.

CLAIMED BY ANOTHER PARENT.

A Young Man Who Was Found by His Supposed Mother is Now Confronted by His Adopted Father.

A Cincinnati, O., despatch says: Within ten days Frank Morey, 31 years old, living at Coal City, Ky., a few miles from here, has had a most romantic experience, being nothing less than the finding of a mother, to be followed to-day by his adopted father claiming him, with evidence that upsets the mother's claim and seems to make his own claim as parent certain. For years Frank has searched for his parents, of whom he had no recollection. His story was published a few days ago with the result that Mrs. Harriet Williams, of this city, recognized him as her son, stolen thirty years ago. That was also published. To-day Col. A. J. Morey, an editor of Cynthiana, Ky., visited Coal City and convinced both himself and Frank that the latter was his adopted son. His story is that in 1858, when the boy was 2 years old, he adopted him from a woman who said he was the child of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, of New York, who died at New Orleans of yellow fever. In 1860 Morey entered the confederate army, was captured, and imprisoned at Camp Chase. His wife died and the boy was placed by strangers in the house of refuge here and so forgot his home, while Morey was never able to find him. The adopted father has pictures and documents proving his story, and Frank Morey is compelled to believe them, though loath to give up the woman who he thought was his mother. He is content with the present situation unless another claimant as a parent puts in an appearance and adds to the romance of the situation.

NOVA SCOTIA LICENSE LAW.

Excitement in Halifax Over the Enforcement of the Measure—Strange Scenes in the Streets.

A Halifax, N. S., despatch says: This city is greatly excited over the enforcement of the new Provincial license law, which forbids the selling of liquor in hotels to other than guests, and in the case of guests to be drunk only in private rooms or at meals. At shops liquor cannot be sold in less quantities than a pint, and this is to be carried away and drunk. Between these two restrictions there is no chance for the bar-room toper at all. Little clusters of drinkers could be seen on the sidewalk going partners in a purchase, the liquor being carried out in a measure and drank from glasses borrowed from late bars, or turn about from the measure itself. Keepers of leading hotels say their receipts have fallen off one-half, while the price of licenses is three times as high as before, and much additional help is required to carry drinks to rooms or to tables

The measure was passed last year, but only came into force two days ago. It was strenuously opposed by the Halifax members of the House, but was carried by the votes of the county members, nearly all of whom are constrained to support strict temperance legislation. A peculiar feature of the bill is that inspectors of licenses must be members in good standing of some recognized temperance society.

THAT TEETZEL WINDFALL.

A Fortune of $4,000,000 to be Distributed Amongst Thirty.

A despatch from Pittsburg, Pa., says: The Government of Germany has had in its possession for the last forty-five years a legacy of $4,000,000 left by Andrew Teetzel, who died near Wurtemburg. The heirships of thirty persons in the United States have at last been proven, and the fund is to be sent here. One of the heirs is a well-known business man of Fourth avenue, Pittsburg, Mr. J. K. Teetzel.

A LONG WAIT REWARDED.

A reporter had a conversation with the gentleman this afternoon, and he told the following story of the windfall:

"My brother, James V. Teetzel, who is a New York attorney, conducted the negotiations with the German Government for us. These transactions have been carried on for a long time, and he has crossed the ocean to Germany five or six times in relation to the matter. Thirty heirs are scattered all over the United States. E. Teetzel & Co., bankers, and James B. Teetzel, live in New York. Two others live in Chicago, Ill.; three more at Milwaukee; seven at Benton Harbor, Mich.; George Dale and others at Troy, N.Y., and Terre Haute, Ind. I used to hear my father and grandfather talk about this claim. My great-grandfather settled in this country at Log Jail, N.J., which is now Trenton. The $4,000,000 is composed of Government bonds, other standard common securities, gold and property. It is now ready to be distributed among the heirs, I understand."

THE HIRED GIRL

Goes Crazy and Tortures Her Mistress' Children.

A London cable says: A couple of weeks ago Mrs. Cane, upon returning to her residence in St. John's Wood, heard distressing cries, and proceeding to the nursery found her three children, a boy aged 5 and her two girls, aged 7 and 12, stripped quite naked, and tied to the bed with ropes. They were covered with cuts, bruises and burns. They told their mother that shortly after her departure the general servant went out, and Mary Dobson, the nurse maid, took the children separately to the nursery and stripped and tied them to the bed. That she then got a rope with which she beat them for several minutes, in the case of the two girls drawing blood with almost every blow, and that she then made the poker red hot and burned the children with it in several parts of their bodies. She then went away, leaving them as found by Mrs. Cane. The police were notified, and to-day arrested the girl in a house at Blackwell. She had cut her hair close, and was dressed in a suit of her brother's clothes. She is about 20 years of age, and is supposed to be insane.

An Explanation Necessary.

"Mr. Featherly," inquired Bobby, notwithstanding the injunction of his father that little children should be seen, not heard, "have you got holes in your feet?"

'Holes in my feet!" exclaimed the astonished young man.

"Yes; pa says you must have, or you couldn't drink all the liquor you do."

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

The House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. Harcourt in the chair. On the item of education,

Hon. G. W. Ross, in reply to a question, said that it was not correct to say that the expenditure on Common Schools had remained stationary, that there had been no increase during the past three or four years, but there had been a very large increase in the past fifteen years. Fifteen years ago the grant was $172,000; now it was $240,000. Then it must be remembered that a new Normal School had been established, and that was a direct benefit to the Common Schools; that model and training schools had been established; that aid was given to the teachers' institutes, and that one-third of the amount expended on High Schools was really expended for the training of teachers in those schools.

Mr. Wood (Hastings) said that there was a rumor that the Government was going to make large new grants for higher education, and if this were done a commensurate amount should be granted for Common School education. He expressed his opinion that Model Schools were a very valuable part of the educational system of the country.

On the item maintenance of public institutions, Mr. H. E. Clark asked for information as to the large number of persons of unsound mind said to be confined in the jails of the Province.

Hon. A. S. Hardy said there were 87 persons of this class in the jails last year, and, including these, about 140 applicants for admission to the asylums. The crowded state of the asylums was to some extent due to the presence of harmless imbeciles who might just as well be confined in refuges established by the counties, and the Government was urging the counties to establish such refuges. He said there were 200 idiots for whom applications had been made, and who would find accommodation when the enlargement of the Orillia asylum was completed.

Mr. Ingram inquired about an item for cab hire from the Central Prison to St. Michael's Cathedral.

Hon. A. S. Hardy explained that this was paid in connection with religious services at the Central Prison, and that there was a grant of $750 last year to the Prisoners' Aid Association, which was a Protestant association formed for the purpose of carrying on religious services at the prison. During the late campaign it had been falsely charged that grants for this purpose were made to the Roman Catholic clergy.

Mr. Wood (Hastings) said he was glad to hear the explanation, as misapprehensions on the subject had existed.

Mr. Waters asked if the additions to the asylum accommodation would provide for the insane who, the Provincial Secretary said, were awaiting accommodation.

Hon. Mr. Hardy said the room would be barely enough. The Government would probably go on with the second half of a cottage at Hamilton, half of which was building, and which, when completed, would accommodate 300 lunatics.

Mr. H. E. Clarke asked what had become of the scheme to close the Toronto asylum and build cottages at Mimico.

Hon. Mr. Hardy said that the plan of building cottages at Mimico had never been definitely decided upon by the Government. It was favored by the Superintendent of the asylum, but the Government had not decided to adopt it, though doubtless there was much to be said in favor of it.

Several petitions relative to private bills were presented.

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton)—From a large number of persons in that city, praying for the introduction of temperance text books into the Public Schools.

Similar petitions were also presented from different parts of the Province.

The following Bills were introduced and read the first time:

Mr. Gibson (Huron)—To authorize Marshall Bidwell Mallory to practice dental surgery in Ontario.

Mr. Graham—To authorize the trustees of Warwick Methodist Church to sell certain lands.

Mr. Nairn—Respecting the conditions of sale of personal property; also, for the prevention of frauds and perjury in the sale of horses and cattle.

Mr. Tooley—To amend the Assessment Act.

Mr. Graham asked whether it is the intention of the Government to reduce the rate of interest on drainage debentures held by them against the several municipalities of the Province, and if so to what extent.

Hon. Mr. Ross (Huron) stated that the Government had given notice of a Bill on the subject, and the Bill will be down in a few days.

Mr. Waters moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Ditches and Watercourses Act in regard to railways. He said explanation was not necessary, as the Bill was the same as one he had introduced at the previous session. He moved also that the Bill be referred to the Municipal Committee.

Hon. Mr. Pardee said it was a serious thing to tamper with railway ditches. He would like to have some machinery provided to force railway companies to do the necessary works themselves. He had no objection to the Bill going to the Municipal Committee.

The motion was carried and the Bill was referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Waters moved the second reading his Bill to amend the Municipal Act. He explained that its object was to define in a clearer manner the duties of County Councils in regard to bridges at the boundaries between municipalities. He moved the referance of the Bill to the Municipal Committee.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Murray moved the second reading of the Bill respecting the driving of sawlogs and other timber on lakes, rivers, creeks and streams. He explained that at the present time the trouble is that when a number of lumbermen are operating on the same stream the man operating at the front can control all those behind, and commit injustice. He wished to have the Bill sent to a select committee.

Hon. Mr. Pardee had no objection to the Bill going to a committee. He stated that the object of the introduction of the Bill was to get the opinions of the lumbermen.

The Bill was read a second time and referred to a committee composed of Messrs. Pardee, Meredith, Gibson (Huron), Phelps, Lees, Rayside, Bronson, Monk, Evanturel, Clancy, Armstrong, Wood (Hastings), Marter, Drury, Murray and Stratton.

Mr. Wood (Hastings) moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Railway Act of Ontario. He said the object of the Bill was to provide a way by which parties whose lands are affected by the location of a railway and who are aggrieved may have redress. The Bill provided for petition to the County Judge, who may appoint three commissioners, one of whom shall be a civil engineer. This commission may change the location of a line, but only on condition that the engineer is a consenting party.

Hon. Mr. Pardee said he felt that there was some necessity for an appeal being provided from the dictation of a railway engineer.

The Bill was read a second time and referred to a committee composed of Messrs. Pardee, Meredith, Clarke (Wellington), Creighton, Hardy, Clancy, Morin, Hudson, Leys, Preston and Wood (Hastings).

Mr. Graham moved the second reading of the Real Property Limitations Act. He said the object of the Bill was to give to honest men what belonged to them, and to prevent dishonest men holding, because of crooked fences, lands which belonged to their neighbors. He did not think the present law was ever intended to apply to division lines between farms.

Hon. Mr. Mowat expressed his fear that if the Bill passd in its present shape it would injuriously affect a large number of titles to land. He thought such a matter, if dealt with at all, should be dealt with by the Government on its responsibility. He could not advise the House to adopt the Bill.

Mr. Graham withdrew the Bill.

Mr. Mack moved the House into committee on the Bill to amend the Act incorporating the Eastern Ontario Railway Company.

The Bill was passed without amendment, and the committee rose and reported.

ASPHYXIATION.

How Death by Inhaling Gas is Caused and Can be Prevented.

At the annual meeting of the Provincial Board of Health in Toronto yesterday Dr. J. J. Cassidy reported for the Committee on Poisons and Accidents as to the best means of preventing loss of life from the inhalation of illuminating gas in bedrooms. Accidents from the causes mentioned occurred most frequently in hotels, and the suggestions of the committee applied more particularly to these houses. The observance of the few rules which they submitted would, in the opinion of the committee, successfully prevent the loss of life. In the event of a fatal accident the coroner should have power to fix the responsibility on the guilty person. Their first suggestion was that wire gratings 12 inches by 12 inches should be inserted in the walls above bed-room doors. (2) Where chimney flues did not communicate with bed-rooms special ventilating flues reaching to the outer air should in all cases be introduced. (3) Wherever any kind of illuminating gas was used in a bed-room a suitable automatic cut-off gas burner should be placed in each of the gas fixtures; the gas should not be turned off at the meter except during the repair or refitting of the pipes. (4) It should be the duty of some responsible person to move about the different flats of the building during the night, at periods of two hours or oftener, in order to ascertain whether gas was escaping. (5) A periodical inspection of all gas fixtures, pipes and burners should be made by an inspector of plumbing, who should be appointed at the recommendation of the Local Board of Health. The report was adopted.

MARRIAGE IS NO JOKE.

So Two Couples who were Married for Fun After a Ball have Found Out.

Herbert W. Stone, aged 17, and Charles Eales, aged 20 years, were before Judge King yesterday, charged by their wives with non-support. Young Stone's wife, Grace, is but 14 years of age, and a niece of C. E. Kendall, of this city. Mary Vaughn, aged 16, is the wife of Eales. After a ball at Turn Hall the two couples were married "for fun" by Rev. Charles H. Smith, pastor of St. James' Episcopal Church, two months ago. Stone's mother, who lives at Tonawanda, was in court and anxious to break up the marriage, and, though quite well off, she refused to go on her son's bond for $300. He was sent to jail. Rev. Mr. Smith says the youngsters signed papers that their parents knew of their intention when they applied to him to be married.—Buffalo News.

A Grand Methodist Church.

A Montreal despatch says: The large Methodist Church to be erected on the old Allan property on St. Catherine street is to be one of the finest sacred edifices on the continent. It is to have a seating capacity of 2,000 and school-rooms for 1,000, besides committee, reception and ladies' work rooms. The style is to be 14th century decorated Gothic. The width inside is 78 feet by 141 feet long, with a gallery round three sides. The front, on St. Catharine street, will be 102 feet wide, with three spacious triple porches, carved and moulded. Work on the foundations has begun. The church is for the congregation now worshipping in St. James' Street Methodist Church.

Business Difficulties.

The following assignments are reported: Ontario—Port Arthur, M. J. Dillon, merchant tailor; Rondeau, J. E. Sterling, general store (failed, out of business); Sutton West, W. J. Crosthwaite, hotel; Thorold, Alfred Abbott, tinsmith; Toronto, Chas. S. Benson, grocer; Toronto, J. Hunter Brown, merchant tailor and gents' furnishings; Walkerton, E. Stenabaugh, grocer; Winnipeg; G. L. Garden, groceries and liquors.

Mrs. William Bailey, of Ripley, Pa., went the other morning to milk her cow, a very valuable thoroughbred, and was gone so long that her husband went to see what was the matter. He found the cow standing over the dead body of his wife, whom she had gored to death, and when he undertook to remove the body the mad animal attacked him, and but for the arrival of neighbors would have killed him also.

THE HIRED GIRL.

She Has Her Rights Just as Well as the Parlor Folks.

I have always maintained that many indignities were put upon the servant girls of to-day, and that much of their impertinence and stubbornness arose from the fact, says a writer in Good Housekeeping. Now, our next door neighbor firmly refuses to allow her servant girl to have any company at all. This is outrageous. Hetty has the free and undisturbed use of our dining-room, and may have orderly, respectable company in it any evening she pleases; she may have a beau if she wants to, but she and I must know that he is a respectable man; and he and all her other company must be out of the house at 10 o'clock at night. For more than a year this arrangement has obtained, and we have suffered no inconvenience from it and the privilege has never been abused. Hetty has seldom had her friends call oftener than once in two or three weeks. She has a neat, cosy, well furnished room of her own with furnace heat; she is not tucked away in some dark, cold, shabby little cubby hole unfit for human habitation. She has no regular afternoon out when she is obliged to go and come like a prisoner on parole. She can go out any afternoon when her work is done. Her evenings are almost entirely her own; she has a sewing machine in her room—her own—and makes most of her own clothes. But she is always ready to do anything we ask her to do in the evening.

We never speak slightingly of servants in her presence. In fact, we never use the word "servant" before her. Women less sensitive than Hetty hate the words "service" and "servant"; there is no "ordering around" by any one. We try to remember that Hetty has feelings in common with the rest of womankind, and we respect those feelings.

She nor no other woman on earth is ever asked to polish my boots, but I know girls who do polish the boots of the master of the house. I call that degrading service. If I happen to be in the kitchen when Hetty's coal hod is empty, I go down cellar and fill it for her; sometimes I build the fire. Hetty never shovels snow out of the paths, nor rolls the ash barrels out for the ash man. I relegate such pleasing tasks to myself, maintaining, as I do, that such work belongs to men rather than to women. We offer no suggestions to Hetty regarding the expenditure of her wages. I do not think that we have any more right to meddle in this matter than my employer has to ask how I spend my salary.

I feel some responsibility for the moral well being of everybody under my roof and I try when opportunity offers to impress upon Hetty the necessity of right living and right thinking. We do not make Hetty "one of the family" in the popular sense of that term; but if she wants to come into our sitting room for an hour in the evening when we are alone, she knows that she can do so. And she can have any book or paper in the house if she cares to read them. Mrs. Dane was very ill for a long time since Hetty has lived with us, and if ever there were a faithful servant Hetty was one at that time.

Some of our friends shake their heads and declare that they "never, never could give a servant the privileges" we give Hetty. I do not call them "privileges." There are rights that belong to any good, honest girl who is trying to earn her own living in the way she feels that she is best fitted to earn it. I met Hetty down town the other day, and of course I tipped my hat to her. A friend who was with me looked amazed and asked: "Why, isn't that your servant girl?"

"Yes, it is," I said. He looked at me for a second and then said: "Well; you re a queer fellow: I think I see myself tipping my hat to our kitchen girl." I can, without any self abasement, tip my hat to any good woman on earth, though she be only a charwoman going from door to door scrubbing steps. I think there will have to be a reform in this treatment of house servants before there is an end to this cry about inefficient and impertinent help. We began a reform in our own home when Hetty came and the result has been most gratifying to both mistress and maid.

Royal Templars Recover Stolen Money.

A Pittsburg, Pa., despatch says: S. Nelson, of this city, who was recently appointed Grand Secretary of the Royal Templars of Temperance, in place of Abbott, absconded, returned from the headquarters of the Order at Buffalo to-day. He says the relief fund will not be impaired by Abbott's embezzlement. Abbott took $15,000 with him, but of this amount $7,000 was recovered from a Toronto bank, where Abbott had deposited it. A committee sent to Canada afterwadrs met the ex-Secretary on the street and he turned over to them $2,000 in cash. The balance of the shortage is covered by a bond of the American Surety Company, of New York, for $10,000.

Hunger the Best Sauce

"I seldom talk about the war," said the Union soldier, "but I think about it sometimes. Whenever I look out of the window and see old Kennesaw mountain I think of the best dinner I ever ate. For months and months we had been living on hardtack and sow-belly. About the time we reached Marietta a crowd of us came upon an old, deserted house and found some Irish potatoes and onions. We stewed the potatoes and feasted. Never since have I tasted such a dinner. Ten thousand times have I thought of it. I think of it every time I see a restaurant and every time I see a specially fine spread. For twenty years I have been haunted by the memory of that dinner, where Irish potatoes took the place of hardtack and fast meat."—Atlanta Constitution.

What She Would Do.

Charley (to his pretty cousin, who is fishing)—Any bites yet, Maud?

Maud—Only a nibble or two.

Charley—What would you do, Maud, if you should make such a "catch" as I am said to be?

Maud—Throw it back in, Charley.

Macon Telegraph: Extract from the marriage notice of a millionaire's daughter next January: "The bride's presents were exceeding costly and magnificent. Prominent among them was exhibited the gift of the lady's father, a ripe Florida strawberry upon its own stem. It was the centre of attraction."

FRENCH SMUGGLERS.

Some Shrewd Devices Which Have Not Been Surpassed Anywhere.

At one of the Paris barriers there exists a museum of contrivances used for the smuggling of liquors into the city, which have been captured on various occasions by the employees of the octroi. Here are piles of common white plates, the top one of which, on being lifted off, shows a cylinder of tin piercing the remainder of the pile. Here are rolls of linen which are merely a few yards of stuff wrapped around a tin box fashioned to the requisite shape, and with ends artistically finished off with stripes of linen set on end.

Here the bust of India rubber of a make-believe wet-nurse, who used to take her little charge out daily to breathe the fresh air beyond the barriers. Here are two great blocks of stone that on close inspection prove to be tin-lined boxes with artistically fitting ends. Here are these stout folio volumes bound in calf and labeled "The Philosophy of Nations." With these books under his arm a pale, interesting-looking student used to wander forth into the suburbs to pursue his studies.

One day an inquisitive custom house officer, grown suspicious from the fact that the youth always carried out the same books to study, insisted on opening one of these volumes. He found that the leaves had been nicely cut away with a sharp knife to afford a secret niche for a square case bottle, which was filled with brandy—a similar contrivance existing in each of the other two books.

But the cleverest trick of all was one which was very complicated and costly in its details, but which must have paid handsomely, and it was carried on for months without detection. A lady and gentleman seated in a plain, respectable-looking coupe, drawn by a good horse, and driven by a coachman in livery, were wont to drive out to the Bois de Boulogne every afternoon, returning usually about dusk. The gentleman was evidently an invalid. He was always enveloped in a fur-lined cloak with the collar raised above his throat, and had a cap pulled down over his brows, while the little that could be seen of his countenance was of a sickly pallor. He was always reclining in a corner of the carriage, as if too feeble to sit erect, while his attentive wife sat beside him, evidently solicitous of his welfare, being especially careful to keep his cloak wrapped around him. The guardians of the octroi saw the vehicle and its inmates pass by them without suspicion. One day, however, after making the usual inquiry, "Have you anything to disclose?" the custom-house officer, on closing the door, struck the supposed invalid's foot.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the officer.

No response—not so much as an inclination of the head. Rather surprised, the officer repeated his remark in a louder tone, at the same time touching the sick man's shoulder. At that moment the lady and coachman leaped from their respective places and fled with surprising swiftness, leaving in the hands of the officers the carriage and the invalid, which latter was found to be made of tin and filled with brandy—his face being most artistically constructed of wax. The spaces under the seat of the coup and the coachman's box were also reservoirs of tin, so that smuggling transactions of the party had been practiced on a very extensive scale.—London Tid Bits.

Mr. Spurgeon's Congregation.

At the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, which took the shape of a welcome home" to the pastor, reports were road showing that there had been an increase by baptism of 281, by profession 48, by transfer 86, by restoration 3—making a total of 418. There was a decrease—to other churches 175, leaving without letter 27, non-attendance 95, emigration 17, other reasons 6, death 60—making a total of 380. The net increase for 1886 was 38, bringing the total membership of Mr. Spurgeon's congregation up to 5,351. This leaves the Brooklyn Tabernacle 1,306 behind.

The Theory of Evolution All Right.

In these statements Dr. Wallace maintains that there is nothing in evolution inconsistent with man's spiritual nature and immortal destiny. Many, on the contrary, think that Darwin's theory of evolution lands in sheer materialism. Our own idea has always been that there is nothing inconsistent with Christianity in admitting natural development as one of God's methods of working out His plans. But when this method is spoken of as if the mode was itself the cause, we regard this as a serious mistake, which ignores the Great First Cause of all things.—Christian Guardian.

Douglas, Tender and True.

Not long ago Ruskin expressed the wish that he might see Ireland under an Irish King, and Scotland under a "Douglas, tender and true." The Marquis of Queensberry is the head of one great branch of the House of Douglas, and is a divorced man. A wag suggested that the present Douglas is neither "tender nor true," to which the noble Marquis takes exception, and writes a communication to a London paper, in which he argues that divorced people can be as tender and true as others, if not more so.—Boston Transcript.

Why He Wore Them

Colby Moore, of Monson, Me., has been sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment for arson. This means almost a life-sentence, as Moore is now 58 years of age. The scene when Moore parted from his wife and little 4-year-old daughter was a very touching one. He wore handcuffs and the little girl was puzzled by them and innocently asked: "Papa, what are those for? Are they to keep your mittens up?"—Boston Herald.

The Tichborne Estates.

Sir Henry Tichborne will come of age in May next, and will enter upon the possession of his much "claimed" estates, which will pay him a net income of about $45,000 a year.—N. Y. Tribune.

The death rate of England is decreasing and 150 people are added yearly to each 10,000. At the present rate of increase, according to Dr. M. Tidy, the country's population twenty generations hence will be 27,200,000,000, or enough to fill twenty earths with the present density of population.

Written for THE ADVANCE by T. W.]

The Jubilee and The Advance.

For this our dear adopted land,
Let brighter seasons now begin:
Enrich her by Thy gracious hand;
Shield her from danger and from sin.
Honored with Liberty and Peace
Each rolling year increase thy store,
Ruled by the Laws of Righteousness,
Thy union strengthened more and more.
Our loyal minds predict for thee
No ill this year of Royal Jubilee.

Awake then loyal hearts and true,
Decide on wisdom's words to wait,
Virtue and light and Truth pursue
And all that makes a nation great.
No lack of goods we then shall see,
Canadian life by all shall be Enjoyed this year of Royal Jubilee.

SIX YEARS AGO TO-DAY!

Since the Printing Press was Planted in Flesherton.

Six years ago to-day the Editor of THE ADVANCE arrived in Flesherton, having for his object the establishment of a job printing and newspaper establishment. Less than three weeks prior to that time, he made a brief visit to the place, interviewed some of the principal citizens, and, without scarcely taking pains to count the cost and anxiety such an enterprise would entail, came to the conclusion to "attempt the end and never stand in doubt." He did so. In less than three weeks the tug of war commenced in earnest. About four o'clock in the afternoon he was driven into Flesherton by his brother, Mr. John Fawcett, now of Brandon, Manitoba. That same morning he walked from Thornbury to his father's farm, a distance of eight miles, through a mixture of mud, snow and water. It was also on a Thursday, for he well remembers going into the Thornbury Standard office that morning to say his adieux to his old friend, Mr. J. Farwell, and others. While in that office he was handed a number of copies of the Standard containing notices of himself and the enterprise he contemplated establishing in this place. But we must return and resume the thread of our "discourse." When we arrived in Flesherton that particular evening, just six years ago, large flakes of soft snow were falling, but the roads were in that very unpleasant condition called "betwixt and between"—a little of mud and snow and not much of either. Nevertheless we determined to go to the railway station and ascertain whether our pioneer printing plant had arrived yet or not. Mr. W. J. Matheson was teaming grain to the Station for Mr. R. J. Sproule at the time and we accordingly engaged his services for the return trip. On arriving at the depot we were agreeably surprised to find that our "plant" had arrived the preceding even-

It may be interesting right here to give our readers some idea of the infantile plant which was soon to develop into a healthy and sturdy tree. It consisted of a Potter treadle Power Press the only one of the kind, we believe, in Ontario at the time two founts of bourgeois, two fonts of brevier, one single case small pica, case bourgeois italic and a quantity of job type, rules, cuts, chases, etc. We purchased the lot from an ambitious and skilful amateur, Mr. J. Chapman, of Ridgetown, and recently (and perhaps now) of London, Ont. The bargain and sale was accomplished almost entirely by the agency of the telegraph. Part of the purchase money was paid in cash also by means of the useful and rapid telegraph and the plant shipped almost simultaneously. We have never seen Mr. Chapman and he has never seen us, so that all through it was a remarkable case of mutual confidence. We found type, press, &c. exactly as represented, and notwithstanding the dark forebodings of some, we managed to pay Mr. C. one hundred cents on dollar according to bargain.

Well, we lugged the aforesaid material out of the freight room and stowed it securely within the precints of Mr. Matheson's waggon box. Then commenced our journey to our future home—Flesherton. We got along nicely until we began to descend the hill at the Orange Hall, which was covered partly with great banks of partially melted snow and ice slides. At the worst place on this hill the waggon suddenly slid and only superhuman efforts on the part of the driver and ourself prevented the Potter press tumbling out on some jagged stones by the roadside. We have never fully recovered the effects of that tremendous strain on the "muscular tissues" from that day to this. It was with a great sigh of relief that we finally landed our material safely in the little shop now occupied by Mr. Thos. Duncan, through the kind permission of our esteemed friend, Mr. R. J. Sproule. Next morning our neighbor, Mr. Sept. Good, came up and helped us to "transplant" our pioneer printing press to the office now occupied by us—the scene of our struggles, and all the trials incident to the establishment of an enterprise such as ours.

Friday—"all fool's day"—we unpacked enough type to print our first job, which was a sixteenth sheet dodger ordered by Mr. Fred. Sargeant, butcher—then of Flesherton and now of Markdale. Our second job was tickets for the Methodist Sabbath School Library here.

According to the opinion of many, ours was a foolhardy undertaking, and, no doubt, the fact that we commenced operations on "all fool's day"—and Friday at that (O, horror!)—was considered as a remarkable co-incidence and presager of a direful future! And when we did pause to consider the nature of our undertaking, we frankly confess we were for the moment possessed with the feeling that it was a foolish venture. But the hearty, united and unstinted support accorded us by the people from the very commencement, brightened the prospects and our forebodings passed away like a summer cloud.

We might say, in conclusion, that there is a lot of hard work in connection with establishing a printing press in a small country village. This goes without saying as far as those of the fraternity, who have passed "through the crucible," are concerned. Don't be niggardly in supporting your local papers; for just in proportion to your patronage will the individual and general interests of the community be promoted. Remember the cost of the undertaking, the amount of free advertising given to the village and locality. Remember the local jealousies, the selfishness, the petty ambition to monopolize the local and editorial columns, and a hundred other things which tend to distract and discourage the country journalist. Remembering all these things, don't forget that it is impossible to run the paper and job department on air or empty promises, but do all you can to help it on by substantial patronage and by speaking a kind word for it wherever and whenever you can. You may not always agree with the opinions advanced by the Editor, but what of that? Bosom friends often disagree, but that is no reason why they should quarrel "like cats and dogs." No! life is too short to be wasted in senseless dissensions; and, after all, it is but natural (1) that the Editor of your local paper should have opinions of his own, and (2) that he should give expression to them occasionally. If he hasn't, then he is truly a subject for state protection.

Barley and Red Winter Wheat.

At a meeting of the Grain Section of the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto the following resolutions were adopted, and it was ordered that copies of the same be sent to the Grain and Produce dealers throughout the country, hoping that they would consider the subject of sufficient importance to bring it before the farmers in their vicinity without delay.

BARLEY.

WHEREAS: Owing to the superior quality of the Barley grown in Canada, our farmers have been enabled to compete successfully with American growers in the markets of the United States, even with a duty of 10 cents per bushel against the Canadian grain;

AND WHEREAS: An attempt during the last two years has been made to introduce new seed, and of a variety that does not find favor with American Malsters and Brewers;

AND WHEREAS: It is essentially necessary in order to maintain our present reputation of growing, in Canada, the best Barley on this continent, that only the most desirable matured seed, properly cleaned, should be sown.

RESOLVED, That this Grain Section of the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto urge upon the dealers thgoughout the Country, and farmers generally, to discontinue the growth of Mensury, Russian or Imperial varieties of Barley.

RED WINTER WHEAT.

RESOLVED,—That the attention of dealers and farmers be called to the necessity of more care being exercised in the selection of the Red Winter Wheat seed used, that it be well matured, and not mixed with White Winter Wheat, as the mixture, although producing a sound healthy grain, makes it unfit for grading as Red Winter Wheat, and consequently deteriorates its value.

A Capital Idea!

The Flesherton Sons of Temperance Division Introduces a New Feature.

"How can we make our meetings specially interesting to the younger members of our Society?" is a question which has agitated the Sons of Temperance Division in this town for some time past. The question was partially solved when the idea of a regular monthly open division was conceived and successfully carried out. But on Wednesday evening of last week the climax was reached, when it was decided to devote the first and third Wednesday evening in each month to purely literary purposes. The evenings named will be occupied in debates, spelling matches, and all kinds of proper amusements. In short it is intended to make them evenings of rare social enjoyment and recreation. But perhaps the most important feature will be the reading table. This table will occupy a central portion of the hall and will be ample enough to place on fyle a large number of the current newspapers and periodicals published in Ontario, which have already been secured for that purpose. Of course the usual monthly open divisions will be regularly held as heretofore, and alternate nights will be devoted to the transaction of the regular business of the lodge.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. Thomas Garrett has purchased the property here recently owned by Mr. F. Armstrong, containing 150 acres for $2,050.

Mr. G. Kirby is about to remove to Proton Station to his new store.

There has been a temperance lodge organized here with about fifteen members and a good prospect for an increase.

Mr. Hugh Hogins, of Bolton, is visiting friends in this locality.

Master J. Roseborough has left here to attend the Collingwood High School.

Miss Jennie Haines is at the time of writing, very low with a severe attack of inflammation.

There will be a fruit social held here in connection with the Sabbath school on Tuesday, April 5th.

Death has again visited Inistioge, its victim this time is Mrs. George Glazier, who died at the age of 62, the cause of her death was intermittent fever. Her remains were conveyed to the Methodist cemetery here last Monday followed by a large concourse of friends.

Mr. Wm. Archibald, of Toronto, is spending a few days with relatives in this place.

A Lesson in Exchange.

It was in the days of the early railroad, when it was yet new; the days when the journey to New York was less of a little jaunt than it is now: when greenbacks were not popular here, says a San Francisco. One summer morning a man, walking in happy and feverish haste, with wild excitement beaming all over his face, stepped into the office of a well-known banker.

"I want exchange for this on New York."

"All right. What is it?"

The man looked fearfully around him and then brought out a packet.

"It's $25,000 in greenbacks."

"I guess, I can do it. Going east?"

"Yes. I'm going to-morrow. I don't want to carry all this with me. Couldn't do it. Sure to get robbed. So give me a draft. How much?

"Oh, seeing it's you, one per cent; $250—"

"It goes."

So the banker made out a draft on New York and took the money.

"You're going to-morrow are you?"

"Yes."

"Would you mind taking a little parcel for me and handing it to my brother."

"Certainly. I'll do it with pleasure."

The banker went into the other room and presently came back with the parcel.

"Just put it in your valise, and don't lose it, will you?"

"I'll take the best care of it."

"Thank you. Good-bye. Pleasant trip."

Arriving in New York the Californian went to the address and delivered the package. Then he presented his draft. The man opened the package and gave him the identical $25,000 in greenbacks he had in San Francisco. He had carried them all the way himself.

MCGREGOR & PARKE'S CARBOLIC CERATE.—Have you an old Sore, Cut, Bruise, Corn, Bunion, Salt Rheum, Pimple, Blotches, Rough Hands or Face? If so, there is but one cure, namely, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. If you but try it, it will convince you. It costs but 25c. at the Drug Store.

Extra Tit-Bits.

Messrs. Jos. A. and Guy Blakely have gone to Streetsville.

The ADVANCE till Jan. 1st 1888. for 65 cents cash.

Sale bills printed on from one to two hours notice—neatly and cheaply. Free notice in THE ADVANCE.

Get estimates for route and stock bills at THE ADVANCE office. It will pay you.

Remember social in the Methodist church here to-morrow (Friday) evening.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

Ladies troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough hands or face, or Sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It will leave the skin in perfect health, smooth, clean and good color. Be sure and get the genuine, made by McGregor & Parke. Price 25c. Sold at the Drug Store.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

TENDERS WANTED.

250 CEDAR Stakes for the Flesherton Cemetery, wanted. Tenders will be received up till noon on Wednesday, April 6th. Apply to W. CLAYTON, Secy., Flesherton. 2c

LOST NOTES.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating for two notes—one for $8 50, drawn in my favor by Mr Hillock, and the other for $15, drawn in my favor by Henry Down, both now due, as the same have been lost or misplaced by me. J. W. HODGSON
Hornings Mills, March 21st, 1887

Mortgage Sale,

OF VALUABLE FARM PROPERTY

Under power of Sale contained in a certain mortgage made by one Wm. Handy to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, will be sold by Public Auction at the CROWN HOTEL in the Village of PRICEVILLE on TUESDAY, APRIL 12, 1887. At 11 o'clock a.m., the following valuable property, viz:

Lot number thirty in the 1st concession south of Durham Road containing fifty acres more or less, and also the Southerly thirty-three and a-third acres of Lot thirty in the first con. north of the Durham Road in the Township of Artemesia in the County of Grey.

There will also be sold under Mortgage made by Angus McLean this wife Lillian McLean, joining therein to bar her dower, at the same time and place, the following property. Lots numbers three and four, on the south side of the Collingwood Road in the Village of Priceville, being part of the Town plot of Priceville.

Terms easy and will be made known on Day of sale. For further particulars apply to
M. J. KENT,
London, Ontario.

TO RENT or FOR SALE CHEAP.

50 acre farm, 14 acres cleared. Apply to
M. RICHARDSON.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S
DENTIST,
GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer,
Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES: Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

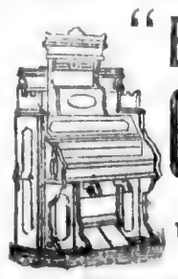
ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY,
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!
THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.
Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE.
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR"—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 303. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, APRIL 7, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

Money Saved!

BY CLOSE BUYING!

Helps Pay Taxes.

FIVE years in Grey Co. this month and a fair paying business established through the generous patronage of the public. From Dundalk to Holland Centre, on the line, also Maxwell, Priceville, Kimberley, Engenia, Traverston, Rocklyn, Berkeley and other points have given me a good support. My thanks are due to all transient and home customers. I have endeavored to deserve patronage extended, by honest representation of ev'ry article sold; and my increasing business warrants me in assuming that my efforts to deal honorably at fair profits, have been appreciated.

I shall continue my business on the line of truthful representation, just exchange in giving value received, and a fair profit to meet obligations incurred. Stock will be kept complete in

Hampden Watches

My name on, WALTHAM Watches, four grades, a few BARTLETT'S at close prices, ELGIN Watches, and the exceptionally fine made full jewelled COLUMBUS movements. Watch warrants 1, 2, and 3 years, "covering breakages." Filled Gold cases Coin Silver cases, 2 to 5 oz., also Silverware 3 & 4 oz.

Ladies Gold Watches and Chains, R. F. Simmons' roll Gold Chains, best made, Draper's fire gilt. Seth Thomas and Ansonia spring & weight Clocks, a beautiful stock of Silverware, hollow and flat, for table use. Engagement Gem Rings, 18k. Wedding Rings, Brooches, Bar Pins & sets, Lockets and Necklets, Cuff & Collar Buttons, Silver Thimbles, Pebble Specks, Lazarus & Morris, Lenses, Boss Specks. I have $100.00 wholesale in Specks and can suit any sight.

Watch Repair book shows this week watches and clocks booked to No. 1233. My work gives satisfaction, is fully warranted & charges moderate. No second or catch charges after watches are left. Any one coming 15 miles and not finding my stock and prices as this advt. represents, I will pay legal mileage one way and expenses here, meals &c. Goods and work Warranted.

W. A. BROWN,

A Reliable Jeweller,

MARKDALE, - - - ONT.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Have you paid the printer?

To-morrow is Good Friday.

Sunday next is Easter.

Master John Duncan, of Toronto, is visiting friends here.

Dress Goods selling at any price from 5c. yd. up at J. G. Anderson's sale.

Mrs. J. W. Henderson, of Toronto, spent a short time visiting friends in Flesherton recently.

Mr. Fred. Ryder has re-commenced operations on his handsome new residence here.

Mr. M. J. Kent, of London, Ont., advertises mortgage sale of valuable property in another column.

See Mr. W. A. Brown's mammoth advertisement on this page of THE ADVANCE and note the bargains.

For the next 30 days you can get terrible bargains at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Don't fail to call. 3t

Auction sale of valuable farm property in Euphrasia, at Revere House, Thornbury, on the 8th inst. See advt. elsewhere.

The Flesherton Junior Lacrosse Club has been re-organized with the following officers:—Capt., W. T. Sproule; Secy., W. Leitch; Treas., F. Sullivan; Man. Com., Fred Ayers, Wes. Armstrong and Frank VanDusen.

Go to J. G. Anderson's and get sample of that extra fine flavored Japan Tea.

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store is the place to get Spex—they keep the famous B. Laurance Spex & can fit any sight. 3t

Mr. Andrew Beattie has purchased that celebrated Canadian draught stallion from the County of Wellington,—"Lucky Lad."

Farm for sale 2½ miles from Flesherton. Apply to Mr. John O'Melia, Flesherton for particulars. See advt. elsewhere in these columns.

Do you want one of those famous Speight Waggons? Go to Wm. Strain, agent, Flesherton. Cheap and first-class. See advt. elsewhere in these columns.

Monday next is cattle fair day, and Mr. Smith, the popular Markdale barber, will be in Flesherton that day, attending to his numerous customers.

Just turn your eye on the "Noted Jewelry Store's" big advertisement on this page and catch on to Russell's important announcement to the public.

East Grey Spring Show will be held in Flesherton, on Friday, April 22nd. See bills or write the Secretary—S. Damude, Esq.—for particulars. 3t.

Flesherton Station Annual Spring Show of Stallions will be held on Tuesday, April 19th. For full particulars, see bills.

Mr. D. E. Wright having sold out his business in Flesherton to Mr. Anderson, has gone to St. Louis, where, we believe, he has secured a position in a mercantile house. We wish him success.

Remember the place for bargains is at J. G. Anderson's Great Sale.

Don't fail to drop into Russell's, Flesherton, and look at his fine stock and remember 25 per cent. off for the next 30 days. 3t

As will be seen on reading advertisement elsewhere in these columns. Mr. S. Spirit is now proprietor of the "Flesherton Meat Market," where he will be happy to attend to the wants of customers.

Farm for sale one mile from Flesherton, in good state of cultivation. See advt. elsewhere in these columns, and apply to D. L. White, Flesherton, for particulars.

Mr. Jas. G. Russell returned from Hamilton last Friday. He was attending the wedding of his youngest sister, Miss Maggie Russell, to Mr. Angus McGillivery, all of that city.

The people of this country, for thirty miles around, have come to the conclusion, that Russell is the Boss watchmaker and jeweller. So always take your watch to him. 3t

Auction sale of farm stock, etc., at Lot 158, 2 E. T. & S. R., Artemesia, commencing at 12 o'clock, noon, sharp, on Thursday, April 14th. For particulars see bills. Wm. Talbot, proprietor; J. W. Morrow, auctioneer.

Auction sale of implements and household furniture in Flesherton, on Monday next, 11th inst., Cattle Fair Day. To commence at 12 o'clock noon. George Glassford, proprietor; A. S. VanDusen, auctioneer. See bills.

You can get the best value in Boots at J. G. Anderson's great Bankrupt Sale. No. 1 Plow Boot for $1, regular price $1.50. Ladies' Shoes for 75c., regular price $1.25. Ladies' Button for $1, regular prices $1.60.

A special school meeting of ratepayers of S. S. No. 5 (Flesherton) will be held in the schoolhouse on Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock, to select a School Trustee in place of Mr. W. G. Pickell, who has resigned office.

Mrs. Symons and family left for British Columbia Saturday evening last. Mr. Wm. Barnhouse accompanied them as far as Toronto en route, where they spent Sunday. The best wishes of all accompany the travellers to their distant home.

Mr. Patton, of the Metropolitan church, Toronto, occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church, Flesherton, Sunday morning last. He delivered a very interesting discourse. In the evening the same gentleman preached in the Methodist church, Eugenia.

$5 was recently handed to Mr. C. J. Sproule, for the benefit of the Methodist choir—of which Mr. S. is leader—by a person who did not wish his (or her) name to become public. Average human nature would proclaim the gift with a flourish of trumpets. Is the millenium at hand?

Mr. W. G. Pickell and family have removed to Markdale. Mr. Pickell and his estimable family will be very much missed by the people of this place. Especially will he be missed in the Church and Sabbath School, in both of which spheres he has for many years been an active and faithful worker.

Chatsworth is building a $3,800 school building this season. Mr. Edward Large, of Markdale, has secured the contract. Mr. George Staples, of Owen Sound, is the architect. The News says it will be one of the handsomest rural schools in the county when completed.

Considerable excitement was caused last Monday evening by a team of horses, belonging to Mr. Samuel Cunningham. The horses grew restive, broke out of a shed, and started to run in the direction of home. They were caught about a mile out of town. Very little damage was done.

Mr. R. P. Legate has removed to the house recently occupied by T. W. Wilson, Flesherton, while the latter has removed to the house recently occupied by Mr. W. Cole. Mr. C. has removed to the brick house formerly occupied by the late Mr. Colquet.

Miss Maud Richardson, our popular milliner, has returned from the city with a beautiful stock of spring millinery, which will shortly be open for inspection by the ladies. Miss Richardson has the happy faculty of choosing that which will best suit the varied tastes of her numerous customers.

The Town Hall here is to be painted outside and thoroughly overhauled inside. It needed something, goodness knows! Among the inside improvements suggested, was the raising of the platform a couple of feet, putting a door in the east end of building, and heating by furnace. This latter would largely increase the seating capacity.

We are beginning to see where our sidewalks are locatod now. They went into winter quarters last December, and, excepting on one or two occasions, have remained under great piles of snow ever since. People should be compelled to keep their sidewalks clear of snow all the time in places of importance like Flesherton. Why not?

A Council of Royal Templars was instituted at Maxwell on Tuesday evening 4th inst. by Dist. Councillor Gordon, with a charter list of 38 members. From the character and ability of the members of the above, we may look for good results in the great Temperace work in Osprey. Richard Heron is the first Select Councillor, Johnston Little, Rec. Sec.—Com.

The Chatsworth News of last week contains a not too flattering notice of the Hammill family, late residents of that place and now of Owen Sound. The News characterizes them as the "worst set of filthy deadbeats that have struck this place in many years;" that "wherever they could get credit they got it, and never paid a cent, all promises to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. W. H. Johnson, our popular liveryman, returned home last week from a brief trip to Michigan. He attended a Sabbath School picnic during his stay! So we were informed, although it does seem surprising that the climate in that state should be less severe than here, as some parts of Michigan are much farther north than the county of Grey.

Mr. E. Linley, hotel-keeper, Maxwell, sent in a letter by mail-carrier Parks on Monday, to the Editor of this paper. Mr. Linley very firmly and respectfully demanded the name of our Maxwell correspondent, and we—quite as firmly and respectfully—refused to accede to the request. Our correspondent maintains that he was correct and is prepared to defend his position. Hence our refusal to grant Mr. Linley's request.

Mr. J. Gordon was in Guelph on Sunday, attending the funeral of his uncle, Mr. Thos. Gordon, who died on the 1st inst. at the advanced age of 74 years. Deceased was a representative of the noble "art preservative of all arts," and was no doubt the oldest member of the craft in Canada at the time of his demise. Mr. J. Gordon attended the Golden Wedding of deceased last fall. Particulars in connection with the death of Mr. Gordon will be found elsewhere in these columns.

How often are people's motives purposely misrepresented. Recently an individual assisted a poor but worthy man to earn a few shillings honorably at a panoranic entertainment, and at once a well-known and unprincipled writer took advantage of the fact by publishing the most unblushing and deliberate untruths in connection therewith! The writer in question would be a dangerous character were it not for the fact that his shady reputation places it beyond his power to injure those whom he so maliciously assails.

THIRTY DAYS!

POSITIVELY

FOR

30 Days Only

THAT THE

Great Slaughter!

Of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex, etc., at RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, Flesherton, will continue.

Russell has just returned from the city, where he has secured some bargains never before known in this section of country—in fact it is impossible to compete with Russell.—All his goods are marked in PLAIN FIGURES, at very low prices and, for the next thirty days only, he is actually going to give 25 per cent. off on all cash sales over $1. Just imagine the finest grade of American Nickel Alarm Clocks at only $2, sold everywhere at $2.50 and $2.75. The finest grade of Plated Chains, beautiful patterns, for $1.60, sold everywhere at 2.25 and 2.50; the finest make of Clocks, beautiful Walnut Cases, from $2.75 up to $8.50, sold everywhere from 3.50 to 10.00. We are not making enough on these goods to pay your mileage or meals, neither will we give you a meal TO CATCH YOUR CUSTOM, but offer you finer goods at a little over half what you can get them for elsewhere! The finest make of Solid Silver Swiss Watches from $6.90 up; and the genuine American Watches from $9.50 up, bearing Warrants from 2½ to 5 years. ☞ We keep only the genuine goods, which bear long warrants. THIS IS THE CHANCE OF YOUR LIFE!—FOR THIRTY DAYS ONLY!—As we must clear them out before the arrival of our Summer stock at that date.

In REPAIRING, everyone knows that Russell's work always gives satisfaction and his work has already given him the name of the boss watchmaker and jeweller in this section. DON'T FAIL TO CALL within the next 30 days and secure some of the GREAT BARGAINS NOW OFFERING.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

COERCION FOR IRELAND.

Gladstone's Powerful Speech Compells the Government to Weaken.

HEALY PREDICTS BLOODSHED.

Croke and the Vatican—Attack on Balfour—Do Not Favor Home Rule.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: In the House of Commons this evening the debate on the motion for urgency for the Coercion Bill was resumed.

Mr. Gladstone referred to the "unprecedented" position of the House, which had already sat two months, during which, he said, its independent initiative had been suppressed. Even now the Conservatives exulted over the prospect of passing a motion forcing the House to an absolute surrender of its whole time until a Bill of an extremely severe character had been carried. The House was threatened with a frequent application of closure if the debates were protracted. No greater calamity could befall the House than this sort of pressure. It would sap the authority of the Chair and bring the procedure rules into disrepute. He had seen more Parliamentary life than any other man in the House, but he never knew of so grave a state of affairs. It was due to the extreme abuse of power by the majority, which, if persisted in, would leave behind a sense of intolerable wrong. The position of affairs was now very different from that when the Coercion Bill of 1881 was passed. There were no papers before the House now, nor was there any indication of the nature of the proposed Government measure. Heretofore in asking special legislation for dealing with crime in Ireland, the members had tried to show that a terrible prevalence of crime threatened social order. Was that the case now? No. The House had been told that the number of agrarian offences prior to the passage of Mr. Forster's coercion Act exceeded the highest number since. Crime then, however, was of a different character from that which the Government now sought to check. At present crime consisted in combining to obtain a reduction of rent. (Irish cheers.) Even the evidence which the Government put before the House showed that this crime was restricted to demands for just abatements of rent. Never had any former Coercion Act been resisted by a majority of the members from Ireland. (Cheers.) Now there was a protest against coercion from an overwhelming majority of the Irish members. (Cheers.) Had the Government any just claim for demanding coercion or urgency for new repressive measures? After appointing a commission to examine on the spot the rent question and the evils arising from land laws, the Government now put aside the recommendations of the commission, and asked Parliament for increased power to make the laws still more offensive to the general sense of the people. (Irish cheers.) Gen. Buller's evidence proved that tenants now paying rent were anxious to pay; that there was no general movement against payment, but only a combined effort to obtain fair rents. The Irish people were apt to follow the example constantly set by others and see what they could make of it. (Cheers.) The Government said the contracts should not be broken, yet Mr. Balfour, while preaching the doctrine of the sanctity of contracts, was going to introduce a Bill breaking leasehold contracts adjusted under the Land Act of 1881, just as the judicial rents were. It was not to vindicate the sanctity of contracts, nor to repress the widespread outbreak of crime, that the Government now demanded coercion for Ireland. Of what nature the Government measure should turn out to be it was the duty of the Liberals now, whether in minority or in majority, to refuse urgency. He trusted that the people of England would see the Liberals united in opposing this ill-omened measure to the last stage, and that the Liberal members would ring out the voices of justice and reason against a Government which, after eighty-six years of experience, were preparing, under the name of a statute of Parliament, to strike a fresh blow at the life and happiness of Ireland and at the prosperity, contentment and unity of the Empire. (Cheers.)

Mr. Healy, remarking that he had just heard for the first time the real object of the Crimes Bill, said he would be delighted if the Government would suppress the National League, because this would relieve the Irish members of great responsibility and the people would then conduct the agrarian movement by themselves. "Suppress the League by all means," said Mr. Healy, "even stop public speaking; but in the latter event the Parnellites will leave to the Government the responsibility for the blood that might be spilled."

In response to a circular asking their views on the subject, the Irish Wesleyan ministers, with six exceptions, have replied that they are opposed to Home Rule.

United Ireland (Mr. Parnell's organ) publishes a bitter attack on Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland. It calls him "The Bloody Balfour, with tiger's heart wrapped in a woman's hood," and says: "He has entered lightly into a struggle with the Catholic Church. In such struggles the proudest despots have been humbled into the dust. Prince Bismarck, swaying the destinies of Europe, in his whole career but once learned the bitterness of defeat, and that was when he laid his hand on the Church, which resents sacrilegious handling of the sacred privileges of the priesthood."

Mr. Beecher's Idea of Heaven.

Mr. Beecher's idea of heaven was not that of a place of rest, but of holy activity. I warrant that Beecher had not been in heaven twenty-four hours before he was asking for something to do. — Rev. Dr. Armitage's Funeral Address.

The First Cause.

Hostess (a Boston lady)—Can I send you some of the soup, Mr. Breezy?

Mr. Breezy (from Omaha)—A very little, ma'am; not over half a dipperful.

San Diego, Cal., has one of the wisest Chinamen in the world. He is a laundryman, and he has kept an advertisement running in the local paper for fifteen years.

WRECK OF THE SCOTIA.

The Steamer Ashore, but her Passengers Safe—A Terrible Voyage Across the Atlantic.

A Patchegue, L.I., despatch says: The steamer Scotia had 1,200 passengers on board. She experienced terrific storms for over a week, and many passengers had limbs broken and received other injuries by being thrown about the steerage. On Friday the machinery gave out, and the wind and sea were running so high that the captain decided to run ashore after cutting the mast away. There are about 500 women among the passengers. The steamer is in no immediate danger. Her appearance gives unmistakable evidence of hard usage by the waves, and the absence of masts and rigging, together with the general disorder of her deck, makes her a most distressing object; while the poor foreigners who crowd her decks, gazing longingly at the land, so near and yet so far, create feelings of commiseration in the hearts of the hundreds of men who swarmed to the beach from all points along the mainland.

For nearly twenty days the steamer met a series of storms, the waves dashing over the decks like huge mountains, and at times threatening to entirely submerge her. During most of the time it was necessary to keep the emigrants packed like sardines in the steerage, where they were subjected to indescribable suffering, being thrown from side to side of the vessel, pitched from their berths, and sustaining more or less serious bruises or fractures of their limbs. Several men and women had their arms and legs broken, while many of the children were black and blue from frequent contact with the posts and beams. The machinery of the steamer had been of little use for nearly a week, and the fact of the vessel having run ashore with her head northeast, directly opposite to her proper course, would indicate that she had been tossing about but with slight control.

At 8 p.m. the Scotia was lying easy in about two fathoms of water 200 feet from shore, and was working in through the pounding of the rising tide. The vessel is leaking, and the pumps are kept continually working to clear her of water. The weather continues fine and a quiet sea prevails. There are no apprehensions entertained as to the safety of the vessel and her passengers during the night.

EXPRESS AND FREIGHT COLLIDE.

The Engineer Killed and Many Passengers Injured.

A Pittsburg despatch says: A railway accident occurred about 1 o'clock on Friday morning, near Leetonia, Ohio, on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, by which one person was killed and a number of passengers injured. The express train which left Chicago in the morning had reached Leetonia, at which point there is a heavy grade, when the engineer discovered the air brake was breaking. He stopped the train, and while examining the brakes a freight train came along and crashed into the rear end of the express, completely telescoping the sleeper and the passenger car next to it. Engineer William Beall, of Allegheny, who was underneath the engine fixing the air brake, was horribly crushed and killed almost instantly. The names of the injured are: J. C. Hazlett, in the sleeping car, fatally hurt; left at Leetonia; Lee Hin, a Chinaman, cut in the head severely; John T. Bingley, conductor of the Pullman car, bruised about the head, leg and hand, and crushed, lives in Chicago; Mrs. Davis, Pittsburg, very badly cut and face bruised; P. Pedow, New Orleans, slightly bruised; Mrs. Louisa Edens' 3-year-old child, badly bruised; Mrs. Gray, of Minnesota, slightly injured; Delia Coyne, of Brooklyn, N.Y., cut about face and hands.

A Jubilee Reminiscence.

Mr. Calvin Phelps writes to the St. Catharines Journal an account of the announcement in Canada of the accession of Queen Victoria to the throne. He says: "I well remember the day when this event became known in St. Catharines. It was, I think, the 29th of June, now nearly fifty years ago. When the news arrived, it came by way of New York, thence by steamboat to Albany, from which place it was brought by the 'telegraph line' of mail coaches to Lewiston over the Ridge road, thence to Queenston and Niagara, which latter were the two most thriving and important places in Upper Canada peninsula. From Niagara the news was sent by a messenger on horseback to this and most other places in the Province. It was nearly noon on that June day when, as several loads of new made hay were being pitched into a large new brick barn, just completed by my father, on the old homestead place on Geneva street, near the 'red mills,' a man dressed as a cavalryman made his appearance at the junction of St. Paul, Geneva and Niagara streets, on a foaming horse, and carried a long tin horn on which he blew a tremendous loud blast, that called about him in a very short time nearly every person east of what is now the saw factory, and as soon as he could get his breath he made proclamation of the fact that the King (George the Fourth) was dead and that Victoria now reigned as the Queen of Great Britain and its dependencies. Afterwards he proceeded to Shipman's old Welland Canal inn (back from the corner of St. Paul and Ontario streets), where he repeated his proclamation to the rest of the people of St. Catharines, and then with a fresh horse began his journey towards the west, to make known to the rest of the people of Upper Canada this, to them, interesting and most important event."

He Was Well Prepared.

Sympathetic Clergyman (to widowed parishioner)—"Was poor Brother Saltonstall prepared to go?"

Consoled Widow—"Yes, indeed. He was insured in a half-dozen companies."—Lowell Courier.

Information Wanted.

An advertisement in a Boston paper states that an active servant is wanted, "who must be a plain cook, and able to dress a little boy 5 years old." Are the advertisers cannibals? And (we ask for information) with what sauce do they eat little boys 5 years old?—Texas Siftings.

Misers may be likened unto patent leather boots—the longer they last the tighter they become.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

Hon. Mr. Hardy presented a Bill respecting distress for rent and taxes, which was read the first time.

Hon. G. W. Ross presented a Bill to amend the Act relating to the Public Schools, which was read the first time.

Mr. Clarke (Wellington) asked whether the regulation regarding the reading of the Bible in the High and Public Schools of the Province, which provides that the portion of Scripture used shall be taken from the selections authorized for that purpose by the Department of Education, is still in force; or whether such readings may be selected by the teacher, under the direction of the trustees, from the authorized version o fthe Bible.

Hon. G. W. Ross replied—Where the trustees of a school prefer that the reading shall be from the Bible itself instead of from the book of selections, or where trustees prefer to have passages read which are not in the book of selections, the Government have no desire to interfere, as long as the Bible or its contents are read daily and systematically. If the text of the regulation requires any modification in order to admit of this course, the modification will be made.

Mr. Waters rose amid applause to move the second reading of the Bill to enable married women to vote for members of municipal councils. He said that the tendency of the day was in the direction of the extension of the franchise, and that extension was not confined to the men. The giving of the franchise to women had everywhere been followed with good results. In Britain women had voted in municipal elections for years. The law had been applied to England first, but had afterwards been extended to Scotland, this itself being a proof that the women of England had used their franchise well. In the last municipal elections in Ontario, notwithstanding that the day was exceedingly inclement, a large woman vote was brought out. The total number of women on the lists was 20,122, and the total number cast was 4,659.

Hon. Mr. Fraser said his hon. friend was an old campaigner in regard to this question. The members of the House knew what his (Mr. Fraser's) opinions on this subject were. They were his own opinions; he was not expressing the opinions of anybody else. This was an open question. He objected to the hon. gentleman's proposition of the Bill, because of itself, and he objected to it because of what it would lead up to. He objected to this mode of dealing with the subject, piece by piece. The House should look the whole question in the face and come to a sensible conclusion upon it. Possibly if the Scott Act and the question of prohibition were disposed of they would hear no more of this question of woman suffrage. Yet, in order that prohibition might be carried, they were asking that women should be given the franchise for all time to come, and to transfer the political power of the country from one sex to the other. He believed that nature never intended that this should be done, and all experience was in favor of his position. He wanted to meet the question squarely, and therefore he moved the six months' hoist.

The amendment was carried on the following division:

YEAS.—Allan, Carey, Ballantyne, Blezard, Blythe, Bronson, Chamberlain, Clancy, Clarke, E. F. (Toronto), Clarke, H. E. (Toronto), Clarke (Wellington), Conmee, Craig, Creighton, Cruess, Dryden, Fell, Fraser, Freeman, French, Gibson (Hamilton), Gibson (Huron), Guthrie, Hammell, Harcourt, Hess, Hudson, Ingram, Kerns, Lees, Lyon, McMahon, Master, Meredith Metcalf, Miller, Monck, Morgan, Nairn, O'Connor, Pardee, Phelps, Preston, Rayside, Ross (Middlesex), Snider, Stewart, Sprague, Stratton, Tooley, Willoughby, Wilmot, Wood (Hastings), Wood (Brant), Wylie—55.

NAYS.—Armstrong, Balfour, Biggar, Bishop, Dack, Ferguson, Garson, Gilmour, Graham, Leys, McKay, Mack, Marter, Meacham, Morin, Mowat, Ostrom, Smith, Waters—19.

Mr. Ingram moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Assessment Act by increasing the amount of the exemption on incomes from $400 to $800.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Gibson's (Hamilton) Bill dealing with the same subject was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

The following Bills were introduced and read the first time:

For the prevention of accidents by fire in hotels and other public buildings—Mr. McKay.

To amend the Franchise and Representation Act, 1886—Mr. Tooley.

To amend the Ontario Medical Act—Mr. Gibson.

Hon. A. S. Hardy moved the second reading of the Bill for the protection of women in certain cases. The Bill provides for the punishment of persons having criminal intercourse with a woman in an asylum or other place to which the Inspection Act applies. A case of this kind had arisen, and the prisoner had been acquitted because the woman was not at the time of the commission of the offence a lunatic. The Bill made the offence punishable whether the woman was a lunatic or not.

Mr. Meredith said he must sympathise with the object of the Bill, but he doubted the power of this Legislature to deal with the matter.

Hon. O. Mowat said he thought there was very little doubt that the Provincial Parliament had jurisdiction in the matter. It might be well, however, to add a few words making it clear that the Legislature was dealing with only such cases as were not provided for by the criminal law. As he had said, he had very little doubt on the subject, but, even if he had more doubt, he did not know that that would prevent him from advocating action by this Parliament. He did not know that the Dominion Parliament would be ready to pass such legislation. The Charlton Act was passed with some difficulty, and it did not go as far as this Bill.

The Bill was read the second time.

Mr. Ferguson moved the second reading of a Bill to amend the Ditches and Watercourses Act.

Mr. Meredith said that the whole matter should be dealt with after a full investigation, and that there should be no patch work legislation.

Mr. Harcourt said that several County Councils had decided to send deputations to the Municipal Committee to make representations in regard to this matter. He hoped that a day would be fixed to hear them. So far the Act has worked well, not because it was perfect, but because the ratepayers were so desirous of having the drainage done that they gave all the assistance they could. But any ratepayer had it in his power to obstruct the working of the Act.

Hon. A. S. Hardy said that Thursday next had been appointed to hear the engineers, and the County Councils might be heard at the same time.

Mr. Clancy said that he did not wish to cast any reflection on the engineers, but he never knew them to cast aside a profitable job. He was opposed to the Bill, believing that no person should be allowed to cover any portion of a drain.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Garson moved the second reading of a Bill to abolish property qualification for municipal offices. He thought that electors should have the greatest possible freedom of choice of candidates. It was not always the best business men in a municipality who owned the greatest amount of property. In the town of Niagara it was almost impossible to get any change in the Council, on account of the small number of persons who were qualified.

Mr. Gibson said he had introduced a Bill of the same nature. He was in favor not of an entire abolition of property qualification, but of a material change in the law. If wealth was to be the test, those who were best qualified for councillors in that respect would not offer for election. He was in favor of such an amendment in the law that any one who was qualified to vote in a municipal election would be qualified as a candidate for municipal honors, and he had introduced a Bill to that effect.

Mr. Fraser said there was no reason why the Bill should not go to the committee. The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Gibson then moved the second reading of the Bill which he had referred to. His Bill also provided that where street watering was done under the frontage tax system, the more valuable property might be compelled to pay a higher tax. The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. McMahon moved the second reading of a Bill to amend the Act relating to mutual fire insurance companies. The Bill gives legal voting power to all shareholders, irrespective of the amount of stock they hold, and allows the location of a head office to be changed by a majority vote, instead of a two-thirds vote.

Hon. O. Mowat said that he thought the interests of all the shareholders were best attended to when the greatest power was placed in the hands of those having the greatest pecuniary interest in the company, and he therefore did not think there should be any change in the law in this respect. He intended to bring in a Bill dealing with the question of insurance, and he would, therefore, suggest that this Bill be allowed to stand.

Mr. Meredith said it should be distinctly understood that the Government was opposed to the changes, otherwise the House would be flooded with insurance agents from all over the country.

The order stood.

Mr. Bishop moved the second reading of a Bill to amend the Municipal Act by reducing the qualification for councillors in rural municipalities. Read a second time and referred to Municipal Committee.

Mr. Biggar's Bill to amend the Assessment Act was read a second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Balfour moved that the order for the second reading of the Bill to incorporate the Village of Tilbury Centre be discharged and the Bill referred back to the Committee on Private Bills.

Mr. Meredith asked with what object.

Mr. Balfour explained that the village was partly in Kent and part'y in Essex, and the object was to have it annexed to Essex instead of to Kent.

Mr. Meredith said the object was to escape the operation of the Scott Act, which was in force in Kent and not in Essex.

Hon. C. F. Fraser said that this was only an incident of the proposed change. The people of the village had a right to be heard on the question of whether they preferred to live under the Scott Act or not.

The Bill was referred back to the Committee on Private Bills.

Mr. Meredith suggested that business might be expedited by not holding any session of the House on Friday next, but devoting the whole day to committee work.

Hon. O. Mowat accepted the suggestion.

Mr. Meredith said he hoped the members of the House would not go home.

Hon. O. Mowat said he could answer for his friends attending to their duties.

Hon. Mr. Hardy brought down the report on immigration, a return relating to schools in Prescott and Russell, and the papers connected with the new Parliament buildings.

Hon. Mr. Fraser moved that the last return be printed.—Carried.

Latest From the Northwest.

It is probable the Provincial Minister of Agriculture will visit the eastern Provinces after the session of the Legislature, with a view to presenting the claims of Manitoba from an immigration standpoint.

Mr. Norquay left for Ottawa and Mr. Scarth for Toronto this morning. Gen. Strange also left for Ottawa. He says it is impossible to make any estimate as yet as to the losses of cattle on the ranches in Alberta.

Rev. Messrs. Robertson and Pitblado have gone east to attend the sittings of the Presbyterian Home Mission Commission.

Throughout the Territories the snow has disappeared and the rivers are moving.

Petitions are being circulated in some portions of the Territories for permission for the manufacture and sale of beer.

A Lockout.

"Is that you, Mr. Brown?" called out Mrs. Brown from the window above as Brown fumbled with his latchkey at the door.

"Yesh—hic—my dear, I've been—hic—to a meeting—hic—Labor—hic—Club, and—"

"Well, I've declared a lockout," snapped Mrs. Brown as she slammed down the window.

The Birmingham, Conn., Electric Light Works were overrun with rats until the superintendent had a happy thought. To wires attached to dynamos he fastened bits of meat and scattered them about. The rats smelled the meat, nibbled, and—good-by, rats.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMAYR.

The Mayor of Belleville has been served with an indictment for maintaining a nuisance in the police cells. The case will come before the police magistrate to-day.

It is rumored at Ottawa that the Government will at the coming session of Parliament ask for a grant of money to build a new residence for the Governor-General on Nepean Point.

The New Brunswick Legislature unanimously passed a resolution yesterday demanding reciprocity with the British colonies in the West Indies, South America and elsewhere.

The Montreal Trades and Labor Council are petitioning for amendments to the city charter restricting the powers of the Chairman of the Finance Committee and giving the Mayor a veto power.

Edward Tierney, a young man who lived near Trenton, shot himself fatally with a shotgun on Saturday afternoon. Dissipation is supposed to have been the cause. An inquest was not considered necessary.

A drunk named Wm. Duff, who appeared before the London police magistrate on Saturday and was fined $2, indulged in a saucy remark about the Chief of Police, whereupon the court raised his fine to $10, and sent him down for two months in default of cash.

On Saturday night, between 10 and 12 o'clock, David Haun, a resident of Bertie, was run down and killed by a train on the Grand Trunk Railway about two miles west of Stevensville, his body being mangled in a horrible manner. A bottle of whiskey was found with him.

The Earl of Derby has declined to act as Chairman of the Silver Commission.

At Wienner-Neustadt, Lower Austria, yesterday a powder mill exploded, blowing three soldiers to atoms.

Eighty-five persons lost their lives by the explosion in the Bulli colliery at Sydney on Thursday. The bodies have been recovered.

The French Chamber of Deputies has raised the import duty on oxen to 38 francs. The Chamber also voted in favor of placing import duties of 20 francs on cows, 8 francs on calves, 5 francs on sheep and 12 francs on fresh meat.

Despatches report another revolutionary scare in Spain. Last evening the garrisons of Madrid and other cities were under orders to be in readiness for immediate action, the Government fearing a coup d'etat would be attempted by the revolutionists.

Lord Salisbury's health excites continued uneasiness among his friends, who say he is rather going down hill than up, and complain that he continues to work twice as much as he should, and insists on dealing himself with all the most difficult and intricate subjects.

Monsignor Galemberti, the special Papal Delegate to Berlin, has telegraphed to the Pope that he has obtained from Prince Bismarck all the religious concessions asked by the Vatican, but has not obtained any political concession. The leaders of the Centre (Catholic) party maintain great reserve toward Mgr. Galemberti.

Gen. Gene telegraphs from Massowah as follows: "Ras Aloula demands a further quantity of arms in exchange for Major Savoiroux. I have refused. The communications I had with King John of Abyssinia for the release of prisoners had no connection with peace negotiations."

Advices from Germans who have settled in Livonia announce a renewal of the system of Russian repression there. The teaching of Russian as the primary language in the German Lutheran schools is enforced, and German workmen are continually molested. The Lutheran pastors sent a memorial to the Czar, who confirmed the action of the authorities.

NO ONE IS TAXED.

A Place Where the Citizens Receive Instead of Paying Revenue.

The Eldorado of taxpayers is the large village of Langenselbold, in the district of Hanau. It has a population of about 3,000 souls and a communal property of upwards of $3,000,000, the annual income of which is about $100,000, nearly one-third of which revenue is derived from the rent of meadow land. The communal forests require the services of four foresters. The villages are not only fortunate enough to be entirely free from communal taxes, but they actually receive each year two cords of firewood and twenty marks of money. The gooseherd would scarcely swap places with many a village "dominie," for his income is fully 1,000 marks. The streets of the village are lighted free of cost, and when one of the villagers closes his earthly career, he or she is taken to the last resting place "free gratis, for nothing." In order, however, to check immigration into this Canaan, the wise fathers of the commune have fixed the cost of acquiring the citizenship of the place at 500 marks.

Knew Where He Came Short.

A. Stinit, of Cornwallis, Ore., knows his pet weakness and has arrived at the conclusion that he will never begin earlier than now to fight it. Therefore he has published in the local Chronicle the following unique notice:

"I hereby notify all persons within this State that they must not give or sell me any intoxicating drink under any consideration. If they do, I shall prosecute them to the full extent of the law."

New Title for the Queen.

Mr. Howard Vincent, M. P. for Centre Sheffield, England, intends proposing that in consequence of the Jubilee an addition should be made to the title of the Queen, in compliment to the colonies. He suggests that Her Majesty shall be entitled Queen of Great Britain, Ireland, Canada, Australia, South Africa and all the British Colonies, and Empress of India. It is probable the proposal will receive the attention of the Cabinet on Saturday.

Business is Business.

Old Lady (to street urchin)—Wouldn't you like to be a good little boy and go to Sunday school and be taught not to swear or say wicked things?

Little Boy—No'm. Me fadder's goin' to git me a job on the canal to drive mules soon's navigashun opens, an' I mustn't do anythin' to interfere wid de bizness.

CEYLON.

The Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886.

(Essay by Thomas C. Watkins.)

The Island of Ceylon—known in the remote ages at different periods of its history as Sarendib, Taprobane and Lanka—lies between 5 deg. 53 min. and 9 deg. 51 min. north latitude and 79 deg. 42 min. and 81 deg. 55 min. east longitude; lying southeast of the southern extremity of Hindustan and separated from it by Palk Straits, which is a narrow channel, only available for vessels of light draught. The Portuguese were the first Europeans who settled on this island and held possession of a portion of it from early in the sixteenth to the middle of the seventeenth century. The Dutch disputed the possession of it with the Portuguese, and in A.D. 1656 finally expelled the Portuguese from the island and continued to govern the maritime Provinces for 140 years, while the Central or Kandyan provinces remained under their native rulers. The English in turn disputed the Dutch possession of the island, and in 1796 the last stronghold of the Dutch at Colombo capitulated to the English, and the island became part of the British possessions in the Eastern seas. The Kandyan monarchs still continued to rule in the interior, until in 1815 the King of Kandy was ultimately deposed, and the whole island brought under the Crown Colony system of Government, of which it is at present the largest and most completely organized representative. The entire area of the island is about one-sixth less than that of Ireland and contains 25,365 square miles; the extreme length is 271 miles, and the entire breadth 137 miles. At the close of 1885 the population was 2,825,000. The proportion of Europeans to natives is less than two per thousand. The natives are divided as follows: 1,920,000 Sinhalese, 687,000 Tamils, 182,000 Moormen, other native races, 13.000; Burghers, or natives of European descent, 18,000; Europeans, 5,000. The Veddahs are supposed to be a remnant of

THE ABORIGINES OF CEYLON.

They have no fixed habitations, roaming about the forests of the southern and eastern provinces, living in caves and hollow trees. Their dialect is different from the Sinhalese language, and they have very little intercourse with each other. The Maldive Archipelago is a group of coral islets, sparsely inhabited by a race of Sinhalese origin, speaking a broken dialect of Sinhalese. It is tributary to Ceylon, and the Sultan sends an ambassador there annually. These islands are difficult of access, and intercourse with them is quite limited. An interesting ethnological collection from these islands was exhibited in the Ceylon court of the Exhibition. Ceylon is decidedly healthy for a tropical country; from its insular position the climate contrasts favorably with that of India. There are no extremes of temperature, and throughout the low country the thermometer varies but little the year round. The mean temperature at Colombo is nearly 81° Fahrenheit. There is, however, considerable difference in the daily temperature in the hill districts. The coolest months are December and January; the warmest are March, April and May. Sir E. Tennant, who resided on the island for years as Lieutenant-Governor, in his interesting and valuable work on the colony, writes: "There is no island in the world, Great Britain itself not excepted, that has attracted the attention of authors in so many distant ages, and so many different countries, as Ceylon. There is no nation in ancient or modern times possessed of a language or literature, the writers of which have not at some time made it their theme. Its aspect, its religion, its antiquities and productions have been described by classic Greeks as well as by those of the lower Empire, by the Romans, by the writers of China, Burmah, India and Cashmere, by the geographers of Arabia and Persia, by the mediæval voyagers of Portugal and France, by the annalists of Portugal and Spain, by the merchants and the adventurers of Holland, and by the travellers and topographers of Great Britain." Tennant's own enthusiastic description of the island is summed up thus: "Ceylon, from whatever direction it is approached, unfolds a scene of loveliness and grandeur unsurpassed, if it be rivalled, by any land in the universe. The traveller from Bengal, leaving behind the melancholy delta of the Ganges, and the torrid coast of Coromandel, or the adventurer from Europe recently inured to the sands of Egypt and the scorching headlands of Arabia, is alike entranced by the vision of beauty which expands before him, as the island rises from the sea, its lofty mountains covered by luxuriant forests, and its shores, till they meet the ripple of the waves, bright with the foliage of perpetual spring." The speed and comfort with which a trip to Ceylon can be made now on the

MAGNIFICENT STEAMSHIPS

on that line induce many besides merchants and planters to visit this most interesting island. Those in search of charming tropical scenery and vegetation, the lovers of archæology, the naturalist or sportsman, will each reap a rich reward, and find ample scope for their enterprise, well repaying the time and trouble of the journey. The scenery and vegetation are rich in all that delights the eye, while no country in the world can boast of a more varied and beautiful insect life to occupy and delight the naturalist. Elephants, leopards, wild buffaloes, bears, wild boars, deer of many varieties, with snipe and other wild fowl in profusion, will supply occupation for the sportsman. To the archæologist the many ruined cities, with their stone carving and clear, close-cut inscriptions, offer almost endless variety and intense interest. Amongst the numerous old ruins of the cities which flourished thousands of years ago, perhaps the most wonderful are those of Pollonnarum and Auradhapura in the centre of the island. The latter was the chosen capital of King Panduk Abhaya, 437 B. C., and continued to be the capital for twelve centuries. Ancient historians say that the outer walls of that city enclosed 250 square miles, and was completed in the first century of the Christian era. Nothing but the ruins with their interesting records in stone and the large Dagabas now remain, except the sacred Bo tree, which still flourishes. Major Forbes, in his work entitled "Eleven Years in Ceylon," states that in the reign of King Devanampya Tissa, which commenced 307 B.C., Anuradhapura received the collar-bone of the Gautama Buddha, his begging dish filled with relics, and a branch of the Bo tree under which he attained Buddhahood. This branch, being planted, has flourished for nearly 2,200 years, and is now considered to be the most ancient tree in the world of which there is any authentic record. It is held to be sacred throughout the Buddhist world, and is the goal of many a long pilgrimage. Even the fallen leaves are treasured up by the pilgrims and carried to distant lands. There are about three-fifths, or, say, 1,700,000 of the population, which are Buddhists. Colombo, on the southwest coast, is the capital of the island now, with a population of nearly 120,000. A breakwater was recently completed, under the supervision of Sir J. Coode, at a cost of £650,000, which affords ample protection to ships of the largest size, which can lie there now in safety throughout the heaviest monsoon. It has thus become a first-class port, and from its unsurpassed geographical position it is destined to become the great centre of the commerce of the Eastern seas. Colombo lies 2,500 from Aden, 600 miles from Madras, 900 miles from Bombay, 1,400 from Calcutta, 1,600 from Singapore and 3,000 distant from Hong Kong and from Western Australia. Before the construction of the Colombo breakwater, Galle, on the south coast, was the port of call for the mail steamers, but the natural harbor of the island is Trincomalee, on the northeast coast. This has been for many years the rendezvous of Her Majesty's ships on the East Indian station, and still remains so; it is easy of access in any kind of weather, and has a safe and most magnificent anchorage. We turn to the products of the island now, and find that in ancient times Ceylon was known as the land of pearls and precious stones. The search for gems is still continued actively, and the value of those discovered is considerable. This mining and that for plumbago is entirely in the hands of the natives. Plumbago or graphite mines are worked largely in the western province. The product is exported principally to Great Britain and the United States, where it is used in the manufacture of pencils, crucibles and portable furnaces. There were 12,000 tons of plumbago mined and exported in 1882. The pearl fishery, though dangerous and uncertain, is in fortunate seasons a valuable item in the exports of the country. In the last

SUCCESSFUL PEARL FISHING SEASON,

in 1881, the shore of the Government amounted to £59,900. The same primitive system of gathering the pearl oysters exists, as perhaps Noah or some of his sons may have practiced. When the "Superintendent" reports an oyster bed fit for fishing, Government proclaims a fishery to commence on a given day, by that date the arid, and at other times deserted coast-land at Arippu, on the northwest coast, wears the appearance of a bustling town, filled with people of various races and occupations—including divers and boatmen from the coast of Coromandel, pearl merchants from India, China and Malaya, with a numerous crowd of pearl dealers and traders of all classes ready to turn an honest penny if possible. A limited number of boats and divers are licensed; every oyster is gathered by the hand of the diver, no dredge or instrument of any kind is used. The Government exacts two-thirds of all the oysters gathered for royalty, which are sold by public auction at the close of the days' fishing. The manufacture of salt still remains a Government monopoly and produces a profit of from £80,000 to £90,000 per annum. The salt is sold by the Government at four shillings and eightpence per hundred weight. This monopoly, like very many heavy duties imposed by our present wasteful and extravagant Government on numerous prime necessaries of life, which compels thousands of the poorer classes of our people to suffer on account of their coal, their clothing, their woolen and cotton goods being taxed with excessively higher duties, while the rich people who wear fine goods do not pay as high duties on different articles consumed by them exclusively. Oh! we hope to have an honest Government soon, then Ottawa will be forsaken by a little army of land grabbers, boodlers, bribers and thieves. No more rebellions then, for there will be an honest Government in power, which will keep faith with our red men, and will not, with cruelty unheard of, starve them to death, and deprive the half-breeds of their lands. Heavy taxes on the common necessaries of life are admitted by all honest political economists as unjust, and can only be justified by the absolute necessity of raising money to build public works, which will benefit the great masses of the people in a greater degree than the high taxes will injure them, as in the present instance in Ceylon, where, if the circumstances of the country were such as to make it possible for the Government to dispense with the

REVENUE DERIVED FROM THE MONOPOLY,

it would be done away with at once, but the relation between the general revenue and the requirements of the island is such that it would be difficult to abandon the revenue derived from salt, without at the same time giving up the execution of public works of vital importance to the country, for opening up communications with the interior, so as to give a full equivalent to the farmers by greatly reducing the expense of the transportation of their produce to the markets of the world. The importance of this course of procedure may be realized from the fact that, until a comparatively recent date, there were districts in the island where the cost of transport added fully 200 per cent. to the price charged by the Government for salt at the seaboard. Gold and silver mining, and ivory and tortoise shell work are important native industries, as are also making pottery, mats, fans and wood-carving. The beautiful woods indigenous to the island give great scope to the ingenious native carvers and cabinet makers; the most valuable woods are ebony, satin wood, calamander, jak, nedun, palai, iron-wood and hahuilla. The exhibits of these woods in the Ceylon Court are very interesting, and will repay an inspection. There are enormous quantities of fish frequenting the shores of the island, especially in the southwest and north Provinces, which are thickly peopled, and have the appearance of an almost endless village, the inhabitants of which are thriving, as their wants can always be satisfied by a few hours' fishing with the most primitive appliances. The Sinhalese are, however, mostly an agricultural race, and the vast majority of them are engaged in tilling the soil. The stupendous works commenced 500 years B.C. and continued by successive monarchs of Ceylon in the construction of innumerable reservoirs or tanks for storing the rainfall for irrigation purposes, testify to the great importance attached to agriculture in ancient times. The great tank of Kalawewa submerged an area of over forty miles in circumference. The retaining "bond" or earthwork is more than twelve miles in length, with a thickness of 300 feet at the base. The Legislature has for some years voted considerable sums annually from the general revenue for the repair, maintenance and improvement of these tanks, and to smaller works, thus greatly promoting the interest and happiness of the rural population. The Sinhalese farmers have confined their labors lately to the production of staple articles of food, such as rice and other cereals, cocoa, gardens of areka palms,

CINNAMON, COFFEE, VEGETABLES AND FRUITS,

such as plantains, pine apples, custard apples, mangoes, oranges, limes, melons, bread fruit, etc. The most prosperous branch of farming operations, however, and that which has been the greatest stimulant to the prosperity and progress of Ceylon, thus enabling the Government to undertake the construction of railways, and intersect the island with splendid roads and bridges, is the extensive coffee plantations in the hill districts. Nearly one-fifth of the island is comprised in the hill, or mountain zone. The highest peak of the range is Pidurutalagala, which is 8,296 feet high. The most interesting and best known is Adam's Peak. The majority of the plantations lie at an elevation of between 2,000 and 5,000 feet above the sea, where the climate is well nigh perfection, and the luxury of the planter's bungalow, with its European comforts, surrounded by roses and geraniums, with English fruits and vegetables, can be most justly appreciated after the heat of a journey from Colombo to the hill stations. The coffee plant is not, like cinnamon, indigenous to Ceylon; but there were few native hamlets formerly in the low country who had not a few coffee bushes growing around their doors; but it was not until about 1830 that European enterprise was first directed to the cultivation of coffee in the island. Since then it has been carried on with varying success until 1875, when the export of coffee reached nearly 1,000,000 cwts., representing at the ruling prices then about £3,000,000 sterling. The excessively large returns on the capital invested drove forest land up to extravagant prices, and Crown lands, at an upset price of a pound an acre, sometimes sold at auction at from £20 to £24 an acre. This mad land fever did not continue long unchecked. In 1878-79 the coffee bushes suffered from the effects of a fungus known as "leaf disease" so severely that the crop was greatly diminished, and the planters began to turn their attention to other crops better adapted to the climate and soil. Cinchona and tea have now been cultivated successfully, but the planters look to tea now as the great prospective source of their future wealth, the cultivation of which will, they think, restore their fortunes and bring back prosperity to the Island. There were over 100,000 acres of tea plants under cultivation in 1877, and the export of tea has risen already from 2,105 lbs. then to 9,000,000 in 1886. The prospect is so bright at present that planters are digging up large plantations of coffee bushes, and planting tea in their places. It is expected that within six years the exportation of tea will reach 40,000,000 lbs. No country can boast of a better supply of laborers, who are chiefly brought from India. The Sinhalese peasants are excellent domestic servants; they are good at chopping down trees and clearing jungles, also in digging for irrigation purposes, and works enforced under the Village Communities Act, but very few of them will undertake the routine work of labor on the plantations. Ceylon has therefore become the favorite resort of immigrants from the Malabar and Coromandel coasts, who flock over in thousands and settle on the estates. There are no unnecessary restrictions, and the coming and going of these laborers are made as free and easy as possible. Public "rest houses" and hospitals are provided by the Government at easy distances along the central road running from Kandy to Jaffna, by which most of the immigrants find their way to the plantations. In years when

THE CROPS OF COFFEE OR TEA

are abundant, as many as 150,000 Coolie laborers will migrate to Ceylon in one year and return to their native villages after the crops are harvested to spend the money they have earned in providing for their families, and then at the approach of the next harvest immigrating again to help to save it. In addition to coffee, cinchona and tea, cocoa is becoming an important item on many of the plantations, and the quality produced is very superior. India rubber, tapioca, vanilla and other tropical products are also successfully grown on many properties. The extensive cultivation of cinnamon and cocoanut palm is in the hands of natives; both thrive best in the low country near the sea. For many years the export of cinnamon was a Government monopoly, but now there are not any restrictions on its growth or export. In 1883 there were 2,335,000 lbs. of cinnamon exported. The cultivation of the cocoanut palm, which is applied to so many multifarious uses, is the most important production amongst the Sinhalese of the low parts of the island. The liquor he drinks is distilled from its sap, the kernel of the nut is necessary for use in his daily curry, the milk of the nut is the beverage offered to every visitor; his lamp is fed by the oil it produces; his fishing nets are manufactured from its fibre, as is also the rope wherewith he restrains his goat or cow from straying away, while the rafters of his house, the thatch of the roof and the window-blinds are made from its leaf and wood. The extensive cultivation of this palm and its immense value to the 3,000,000 islanders, and to the outside world, may be gathered from the facts already named, that its various products are a in the daily life of the island population, while the exports of the oil, copra and fibre exceed £700,000 in value annually, and the revenue derived from the excise duty levied on the "arrack" (spirit) distilled from the sap exceeds £170,000. With a fixed determination on the part of the local Legislature to continue without interruption an annual grant from the public funds for the restoration of the ancient irrigation works, and thus make Ceylon again independent of foreign importation of rice, with a similar determination to push the railway system into the heart of the planting districts, so as to give cheap and easy transport to the seaboard, this beautiful island—from its grand geographical position, its excellent harbor accommodation and healthy climate—is destined to receive again its ancient Brahmin title of "The Pearl on the Brow of India; or, Lanka, the Resplendent." The Ceylon Court, occupying the western end of the North Court, is 150 feet long by 50 feet wide. The decorations on the walls and roof of the court, in which yellow, the sacred color of Buddhism, predominates, are strictly Sinhalese in their character. The dado round the court reaches nine feet high above the floor; it is ornamented with representations of the mythological animals—the elephant, lion, bull, horse and goose—as they appear sculptured on ruined monuments in the ancient cities of Ceylon. Higher up, a frieze, a yard in width, is covered with Sinhalese paintings, depicting some of the more popular birth stories of Buddha; the frieze is surmounted by an ornamental cresting and depending from the roof-plate are fringed draperies. The Gantama Buddha or Buddhist god, is represented on the west wall of the court, facing the entrance, by a figure in alto relievo ten feet high, seated in the conventional attitude of contemplation. Beneath the figure of Buddha, on either side of the word "Ceylon," are representations of the Buddhist, the sun and moon. The gateway at the west end of the court is conspicuous for beautiful carvings in relief, executed in ebony, cocoanut and tamarind, which are amongst the principal cabinet woods of Ceylon. This gateway is the fac simile of one carved in stone at Yapahu, an ancient royal residence of the Sinhalese monarchs. The porch through which the court is entered at its eastern end is of teak wood, and was built by Sinhalese workmen in Ceylon; the pillars with their elaborate carvings being faithful representations of portions of the King's Audience Hall at Kandy. The floor is laid in ornamental mosaic work. The wall which flanks the porch on each side (as well as that outside the court, between it and Old London) have been designed to represent as nearly as possible the massive walls which surround the Dalda Maligawa (or Buddhist Temple of the Sacred Tooth) and other structures, both religious and secular, in Kandy. In the open space between the Ceylon Court and Old London and facing the Indian palace is the Ceylon Tea House, which gives a vivid idea of the style of Sinhalese timber architecture. It stands upon a raised terrace, the floor of which is laid with ornamental tiles; the south side and west end of the building are beautifully decorated with exceedingly effective mural tiling. The frieze ornaments are composed of the leaves and blossoms of the tea plant, and those in the band above the

UNIVERSAL NECESSITY

DADO, OF LOTUS FLOWERS.

In each of the four side bays is a framed painting on tiles, the subjects being a view of Colombo from the harbor; Strathellie Estate, factory and bungalow; Galboda Estate, showing the Oriental process of weighing tea, and a view of Devon Estate, Dumbula, showing bungalow and waterfall. Upon the wall there is a painting representing a Tamil girl picking tea. The woodwork has been painted and decorated to harmonize with the architecture, yellow being the predominating color, relieved by red, which has been adopted for the color of the devices painted thereon. Seven Sinhalese men were brought over from Ceylon to the Exhibition. Of these four were employed as attendants on customers at the Ceylon Tea House, and they undoubtedly formed one of its most attractive features. They were typical specimens of the low-country Cinhalese, and wore their national costumes. Their habit of wearing combs in their hair, which was tied in a knot at the back of their heads, is the height of fashion in Ceylon, and a curious characteristic of that country. The chief man of the party, a goldsmith by trade, Wimalasurendra, is one of the most expert workmen at his trade to be found in Ceylon, and as such has been honored by the Government with the native rank of Muhandiram of his caste. Two of them are carpenters, having been specially selected for their great ability in their profession; the most of the superior carving exhibited, in cabinet woods and in plumbago, was executed by them. Ceylon made a most imposing display of her various productions, of which the under-named are a few: Natural objects, such as ores and minerals, building stones, gems, pearls, pearl oysters, corals, horns, tusks and hunting trophies. Food products, such as rice, tea, coffee, cocoa, spices, paddy, dry grains, starches, vanilla, jafna moss, sugar, jaggery, arrack and rum, preserves and pickles, beche-de-mer, edible birds' nests, dried fish, salt, drugs and medical substances, as cinchona bark, medicinal preparations and native medicinal plants and medicines; raw products and manufactures consisting of oil seeds and oils, essential oils, resins and tanning substances, fibres and ropes, cotton and silk, mats and basket work, timbers and cabinet woods, tobacco and cigars, india rubber, products of the cocoanut palm and products of the low country estates. Means of transport, such as carriages and carts, boats, agricultural implements, models, etc. Art works of jewellery, gold and silverware, metal ware, carved work in ivory, ebony, cocoanut shell and tortoise shell; porcupine quill work, lace, lacquer work, pottery, furniture and arms. Fine arts, consisting of paintings, drawings, photographs, maps and plans, books, stamps, etc. Ethnology was represented by Buddhist articles, Vedda productions, models of natives and of native dresses, masks, musical instruments, Maldive collections, etc. When we think of Britain's vast dependencies, of the hundreds of millions of people of nearly all races, and inhabiting nearly all climates, we are led to think, for what object the Anglo-Saxon race has been raised up to the very pinnacle of physical, of moral and of religious power. With her colonies encircling the globe, with her language spoken on every shore, with every sea on our earth whitened by the sails of her merchantmen and war ships, distributing the products of her millions of looms, and other innumerable manufactories to the inhabitants of every clime and bringing back in return the varied productions of every land to minister to the wants, and the luxuries of the lords of creation, resident on that little island in the far western seas, whom Cæsar found surrounding their Druidical altars offering up human sacrifices to their gods. What has brought about such an astonishing change? Such a complete metamorphosis in their habits, their lives, their thoughts, their actions? The Bible—that Book of God, applied by His Spirit to the consciences of the masses of the people of that insignificant, little island, inspiring them with supreme love to God, and love for their fellow-creatures as for themselves—has stimulated the race to grand and noble efforts, many being willing and ready to sacrifice their lives in order to rescue their fellow-creatures from the slavery of sin and lead them to the fold of Christ. The religion taught by our Saviour does not consist in emotion. It is love. It is the sword that must slay intemperance. It is the hammer which must kill infidelity. It is the power that must raise the world.

GUMS, DYES AND DYE STUFFS,

A Profitable Investment

Can be made in a postal card, if it is used to send your address on to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, who can furnish you work that you can do and live at home, wherever you are located. few there are who cannot earn over $5 per day, and some have made over $50. Capital not required; you are started free. Either sex; all ages. All particulars free.

A Short Walk.

When an office starts out to seek the man it does not have sufficient exercise to give it an appetite.—San Francisco Alta.

The Learned Societies

Through their members have testified to the great efficacy of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It provokes no line of demarcation, securing alike the good will of the highest and the most humble, and with strict impartiality, removing with equal celerity the corns of each. Try Putnam's Corn Extractor.

Since Sir Charles Dilke inherited a fortune from a kinsman bearing the name of Snooks, much fun has been poked thereat. Yet "Snooks" was originally "Sevenoaks" and there are families in England now spelling their name "Sevenoaks" and pronouncing it "Snooks." It is claimed in extenuation of the name "Sniggs" that it is only a corruption of "Sevenacres."

Franklin Hinkley, of Fail Mountain, is a good subject for the hair restorers. He was ill for some time with disease of the spine, and the hair of his head, beard, moustache, eyebrows and eyelashes all came out, and there is no prospect of its return. He would make a good photograph to be labelled "Before Using."

Messrs. Harrison Bros., Hamilton, write: "We find sale of McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant increasing and it gives the very best of satisfaction as a cure for rheumatic affections."

The men employed in gathering spiders' silk near Bhim Teel, India, are supplied with small sticks with which they select the clean webs. The total weight of the webs collected during one season does not exceed 10 pounds. The silk is wound around the sticks, from which it is removed by immersion in hot water.

In consequence of news from the Governor of Herat that the Governor of Turkestan has ordered Iskander Khan with 12,000 men to surprise Herat, the Ameer of Afghanistan has ordered 10,000 men to be in readiness to reinforce the troops at Herat. The Ameer has caused the beheading of Sayad, the father-in-law of the late chief of Kohistan, having discovered that Sayad was in communication with Ayoob Kahn.

The sentry on guard at the powder magazine in Chatham dockyard noticed a man lurking about the magazine on Saturday night. The man not replying to the challenge, the sentry bayonetted him in the thigh. He was found to be an employee named Clarke and was sent to an hospital to be detained as a suspect.

Marvellous Memory DISCOVERY.

Wholly unlike Artificial Systems—Cure of Mind Wandering. Any book learned in one reading. Heavy reductions for postal classes. Prospectus, with opinions of Mr. PROCTOR, the Astronomer, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Drs. MINOR, WOOD and others, sent post free, by

PROF. LOISETTE,
237 Fifth Avenue, New York.

DEAF—A VERY INTERESTING 80-page book on Deafness, Noises in the Head, &c. How relieved. Sent free. Address NICHOLSON, 177 McDougall St., New York

I CURE FITS!

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DCNL. 14. 87.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, APRIL. 7, 1887.

"THAT ROLLER MILL."

Our editorial article, "Roller Mill Wanted," which appeared three weeks ago, has brought at least one stone miller down on us "like a thousand of brick." His letter appears in another column, above the nom de plume, "Miller," and is certainly quite an interesting production. One thing in connection with it amused us immensely, viz., the repeated references to the Editor of this paper as "he" instead of you.

We are always pleased to throw open our columns for the discussion of live topics—such as this—and even our avowed enemies are not denied the privilege of airing their views, when they do so "decently and in order." Frequently those who favor us with contributions are men who are too mean or penurious to support home enterprise, but because their own pockets have been touched they forthwith wax eloquent in proclaiming their wrongs—real or imaginary.

"Miller's" chief object in writing seems to have been a red hot desire to get whack at that unfortunate N.P. He knows as well as that there is a nose on his face, that roller flour has come to stay. And, notwithstanding his boast of superior knowleege, we know of millers who have profited largely by changing to the "new system." But it is N. P. scalps he is after, as note his remarks on the duty on American machinery. Pray, Mr. "Miller," cannot roller machinery be manufactured quite as cheaply in Canada as in U. S.? You answer no, if the duty were only removed. Ah, but my dear sir, just as soon as that duty is removed, up goes American machinery in price, and then what better are you off than before? The prices have been lowered simply because of the duty: remove that and up go the prices like so many sky rockets! But then the N. P. must be whacked. And we are free to confess it has not, as yet, reached that degree of perfection we should like to see it attain. But Rome was not built in a day, and the N. P. is yet in "long clothes."

But let us return to "that roller mill" question. We are led to understand (1) that meagre profits accrue to the miller who adopts the roller system; (2) that bread made from roller flour does not contain as much nutriment as bread made from stone flour; (3) that bread made from roller flour becomes as "dry as a chip twenty-four hours after baking;" (4) the flour made twenty years ago was just as good and made as light, white and wholesome bread as the roller flour of to day."

Let us speak of these points categorically:

(1)—Admitting for sake of argument, that the profits are meagre, would not increased patronage help to swell the aggregate. "Large sales and small profits" is the motto of the wide awake, successful merchant. Why not apply the same rule, with slight alterations, to milling? But then we don't admit that the profits are meagre: and even if they were, surely "half loaf is better than no bread," as stone millers are sure to perceive in process of time.

(2)—It is a debatable question—a question in fact, that has produced (pro and con) able articles in milling journals from the pens of competent critics—as to whether there is more nutriment in stone than in roller flour.

(3)—We deny emphatically that bread made from roller flour becomes as dry as a chip in "twenty-four hours after baking." Practical personal experience has completely disproved this theory, and shown that bread so made can be kept nice and moist thrice twenty-four hours at least.

(4)—In this case "Miller" frankly acknowledges that roller flour makes "wholesome bread." It is refreshing to gain a point so easily. But "Miller" forgets to tell us why the stone flour of to-day is so much inferior to that produced by the same process twenty years ago. Perhaps this is one of the "lost arts." Such being the case he, as a practical man, ought to welcome the advent of the roller system which enables the good housewife to make as wholesome bread now as she did twenty years ago, when the stone process was the rule and not the exception as at present.

It seems to us that our correspondent makes a poor case out of,—let us confess—crude and rather antiquated material. Almost in the act of severely condeming the new process, we find him acknowledging its superiority, and immediately afterwards censuring the Government because it refused to legislate in favor of the minority as against the majority, by placing a tax of 75 cents per barrel on American flour! As if that had any particular bearing on the question of a roller mill for Flesherton! Stick to your text, "Miller." We know what Flesherton requires better than you do. We know that thousands of dollars are annually being lost to our town for want of a roller mill. Is it in human nature to stand inactive while other places are being built up at our expense. No, sir—in fact it would pay Flesherton to give a liberal bonus for such an enterprise if it could not be obtained otherwise.

The Thornbury News man would have the world believe him to be possessed with brains. He has undertaken a difficult task, but we honestly think he had some brains—away back sometime in the remote past. At the time of writing, however, the process of evaporation has reduced them to such an extent, that it is questionable whether the most prowerful microscope would enable one to discover their whereabouts. In the meantime the News scribe manages to get along tolerably well without them—by borrowing or stealing ideas from his contemporaries!

HE DIDN'T GET IT.

Referring to the statement of a Thornbury paper, giving the Nottawasaga Light to Mr. Neil McColman, our excellent Conservative contemporary, the Flesherton ADVANCE, says:

It may be considered ungrateful on our part but we cannot help saying that in our opinion the Conservative party is digging a good deep grave for itself in thus putting a premium on political crookedness. All a man has to do nowadays is to act the traitor to his party and forsooth! he is made a lighthouse keeper or something else! A few more such blunders and East Grey Conservatism will receive its congi

As we have remarked there is no foundation for the statement of the Thornbury paper. And we may further assure our contemporary that East Grey has nothing whatever to do with this matter; and if any such appointment should have to be made Collingwood will undertake to fill the bill with a competent and reliable man. And now, dear ADVANCE, we would respectfully suggest that you overhaul your French.—Collingwood Enterprise.

Thanks, dear Enterprise, thanks—awfully!—for the information and—er—um—the advice. Having overhauled our French, we make the horrible and astounding discovery, that instead of spelling it c-o-n-g-e, our intelligent compositor put it in type thus: congi!

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Our Township Fathers.

Artemesia Township parliament met in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on 4th inst., at 11 o'clock a. m.

Present,—Messrs. Christoe, Boland McArthur, Sharp and Cairns.

The Clerk read the minutes of previous meeting which were duly approved.

Moved by Mr. Boland, seconded by Mr. McArthur, that the Reeve and Mr. Sharp be a committee to go and test the depth of the cranberry marsh and ascertain the best means to have it put in thorough repair.—Carried.

McArthur, Sharp—That the Reeve and Mr. Bellamy be a committee to paint and repair Township Hall.—Carried.

McArthur, Sharp—That the Auditors' Report, as amended and finally audited by the committee, be adopted and fyled, and that 200 copies be printed for distribution.—Carried.

McArthur, Sharp—That the Reeve issue his order for the Auditors' salary, amt. $12 each, total $24.—Carried.

Boland, Cairns—That By-Law No. 411, appointing Municipal officers, be now read a third time, signed, sealed and entered in the By-Law book.—Carried.

Boland, Sharp—That the Reeve and Mr. McArthur be a Committee to investigate and report upon the necessity of building a bridge across the Saugeen river, on the South line—opposite the Burnett farm—also to examine and report upon the deviation, (on the South line) through Mr. Oliver's property.—Carried.

Accounts.—R. J. Sproule, stationery $2.09; J. J. Field, for work done under the direction of Board of Health (1886) $16.50; Geo. Latimer, work on Valley Road, with surveyor, $1.50; W. J. Bellamy, quarter salary as Clerk $37.50; Medical Hall $2.80. All of which were ordered to be paid.

Boland, McArthur—That this Council appropriate $150 to each Ward, and that the Councillors for each Ward be commissioner; and that their commission be 8 per cent. for expending said amount; also, that the Reeve issue orders on certificates of Commissioners.—Carried.

Orders were then issued for $2 for each member of the Township legislature also indigent monthly allowance, after which the house adjourned. Time 3 o'clock p. m.

Have you ever tried McGregor & Parker's Carbolic Cerate for sores of any kind? It is beyond doubt the very best preparation in the market for healing and curing Sores, Burns, Cuts, Pimples, Blotches, and is the only proper method of applying Carbolic Acid. Sold at the Drug Store for 25c. per box.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. — THORNBURY

AYER'S PILLS. Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Regulate

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Ewing, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

LEITCHS

Tailoring Establishment

FLESHERTON!

Is the place to get your Suits made in future.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$2 00 to	2 10
Fall Wheat	$0 76 to	0 78
Spring Wheat	0 76	0 78
Barley	0 35	0 48
Oats	0 26	0 27
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 14	0 14
Eggs, fresh	0 12	0 12
Potatoes	0 40	0 40
Pork	5 65	5 65
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16	16
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 08	0 08
Chickens per pair	0 30	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S.

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolton Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,

FLESHERTON.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULL, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON.

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Belts, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER.

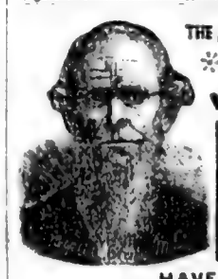
Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th 1885.



THE CELEBRATED DR. CHASE'S MANDRAKE & DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 800 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

New Goods!

I have received a large assortment of Spring Goods, consisting of Gents, Ladies, Misses, Boys and Childrens Boots and Shoes.

I am offering them at prices that for quality cannot be beat. CALL AND EXAMINE THEM.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP ❁ AND ❁ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment:

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

TO RENT or FOR SALE CHEAP.

50 acre farm, 14 acres cleared. Apply to

M. RICHARDSON.

LOST NOTES.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating for two notes—one for $8 50, drawn in my favor by Mr. Hillock, and the other for $15, drawn in my favor by Henry Down, both now due, as the same have been lost or misplaced by me. J. W. HODGSON.

CORRECTION.—The Down note is not due until 3rd March, 1888; the Hillock note is now due.

Horning's Mills, March 21st, 1887.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

CAUTION.

I hereby caution any person against negotiating for a note for $15, in favor of Samuel Martin, which fell due about 1st Nov., 1886, as I have not received value for the same.

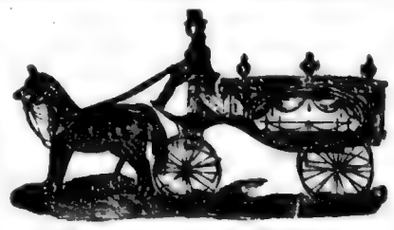
JOHN SHERWOOD,

3t. Eugenia P.O.

To Farmers' & Millers'.

FOR SALE.

WEST ½ of 33, Con 9, Artemesia. Also TWO GRAND WATER POWERS in Eugenia, and a number of Town Lots. Write to DR. PURDY, P.M. at East Selkirk, Man., or to R. McL. PURDY, Esq., Eugenia, and answer will be made at once.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

An Untold Woe.

There are unknown depths in the human soul,
And o'er them wastes of waters roll;
There are wrecks untold, all covered o'er,
And vanished dreams that will come no more.

And gems of thought and memories fair,
And once-loved treasures lie buried there—
Buried so deep 'neath the voiceless waves,
That mortal eye cannot trace their graves.

Low down where they lie they are guarded well;
Of their secret presence none can tell;
For eyes may brighten, and may smile,
And the heart with anguish be torn the while.

We little dream when the mask is worn
O'er a heart by suffering and anguish torn,
Of its silent strength; for who can know
The scares depths of an untold woe?

Ah! Many the burden silently bear
With the sigh repressed and the voiceless prayer,
And murmur not through the lonely night,
But hope and wait for the morning light.

Will it ever come, and shall we ever know
Why the way was so rough and dark below?
In the world beyond, where the way grows clear,
Will it brighter be for the darkness here?

[The above lines have been published at the request of a friend of Mr. John Sample. The sad and sudden death of the wife of the latter is well known to ADVANCE readers.]

"That Roller Mill."

To the Editor of The Advance.

Having notic'd an item in the ADVANCE agitating the necessity of some one building a roller mill in Flesherton. I would if you will allow me space give a few ideas on that subject. I am satisfied that it would be a benefit to the farmers who drive so far to get roller flour, and also to the business men in the village so far as convenience is concerned. But am not very sure as to the great amount of money to be made by the proprietor of the mill. I believe the writer of that item is quite correct when he says that roller flour has come to stay as people generally want something that causes them the most trouble to get and then is not good for them when they have got it for general health. He remarks that a great many men will condem roller flour as unhealthy and then go and buy a barrel to use themselves. There are whole families who can give advice but fail to practice it themselves. He says stone flour is a thing of the past. So it is. But how was the flour made that our father's and mother's tell us of, that they used twenty years ago that was just as good and made as light, white and wholesome bread, as the roller flour of to-day. There is no getting around it. There was just as good bread before there was a roller mill as there is to-day, and stronger men and healthier women than at present. One thing is certain, that people who use roller bread are continually going to the stone mills to get Graham flour and cracked wheat to help to digest the fine flour. Why medical men tell us that man is the only animal possessed of a stomach that will digest fine, pure wheat flour at all. So much for man. But then the housewife says it is so white and we must have it even at a risk of Doctor bills. I am quite well aware that it is white and also that it is as dry as a chip in twenty four hours after it is baked. Then he says that the millers who have roller mills are fairly coining money. Well, I am of the opinion that he does not know much about the business of milling. I am personally acquainted with some millers who were the first to put in rolls who are financially far from healed. Let us find out where their vast profits come from. We will take wheat at the market price, say 75 cents per bushel and the miller grinds twelve bushels for one of toll; and suppose he takes in one hundred bushels a day of grists every day, on an average for the year; but before going any further, I will just say that there is not a single mill in the County of Grey that takes in that amount every working day in the year but suppose they do, they just make $6.25 per day out of their gristing. But some one says gristing alone will not pay. Well we will take the Merchant miller who buys wheat and ships flour to make money of. Let him take a glance at a Montreal or Toronto paper and compare the prices of flour in either places and he will find that the flour sent to Montreal will not stand the freight over the great C.P.R. that we hear so much talk about, and I can buy the same grade of flour cheaper in Toronto than I can in Flesherton or any other village in this vicinity. I would be pleased to be shown where the immense profits come from in milling.

The writer attended a Millers' Convention held in Toronto about two years ago where all the prominent Millers of Ontario where present, when a large petition signed by all present, and sent to the Dominion Parliament petitioning them to place a duty of 75 cents a barrel on all American flour coming here so that they could ship Ontario flour to the Eastern Provinces at a living profit. And what was the result? They turned a deaf ear to this request, and why? Because our M.P.P's generally voted against our interests and to the interest of Quebec. I think I am safe in saying that at present the Ontario millers are the most abused class of business men to be found, when you take the vast amount of Capital into consideration, that they have invested in their mills. Then he says that one reason why Flesherton has no roller mill is because the proprietor thinks that people will all go back to the stone mills again. Be that as it may, I am of the opinion that he has other reasons for standing as he says with his arms folded. Mr. Flesher is a man that counts the cost first and the profits afterwards. He is evidently thinking of that $6.25 cents per day with the wages and board of two men the interest of his money invested in the mill the large amount of insurance he would have to carry to be at all safe, together with other incidental expenses. He is also machinist enough to know that a roller mill is a very complicated machine and short lived, and that a man wants at least twelve per cent on his money to invest it in a roller mill, as it is only a matter of time till he would have no mill. There are other capitalists than Mr. Flesher standing with folded arms. For instance there is a roller mill needed in Dundalk, and there are men there quite capable of building one, as far as money is concerned. And any amount of good wheat bought there by the grain buyers that could be ground into flour, there, as well as any other place, and why? because those men cannot see there way out and know well that it costs too much to make a barrel of flour with a roller mill and then sell it at say $4.00. Anything that costs too much to produce, means ruin to the producer. One great cause of there not being more roller mills is the immense cost to build one in Ontario. The writer is acquainted with a miller who corresponded with some American firms, who furnish roller mill machinery and found that on a 50 barrel mill there was $1,500 of a reduction in price over the cheapest estimate he could get in Ontario. So the Canadian miller is forced to pay that $1,500 more for his machinery or otherwise pay 25 per cent of Duty before he can get from the Americans. So he is between two fires, his own being the hottest, so it is plain to see that the Ontario miller is a highly favored individual when he cannot get a roller mill in his own County without he pay half as much more as it is worth, or paying the 25 per cent of Duty on the American machinery while they glut his markets with their flour, I may say comparatively free of Duty. If he had said that the mill furnishers were coining money, instead of the millers, then he would be near the point. In conclusion let me ask what is Protection doing for the millers, and if he thinks my statements are overdrawn, let him enquire of some reliable mill owner and see how far I am wrong. Thanking you for the space I have taken up in your paper. MILLER.

The Swift Toboggan.

From our own Correspondent.

EUGENIA TOBOGGAN CLUB.

Eugenia is one of the places in this world where nature appears to have been lavish in her gifts of the romantic, the picturesque, the beautiful scenery, and not less their useful and pleasure-enhancing provisions, in fact it seems as if they were thrown together in one heap. Almost all the requirements for the happiness, life and health, and sport giving favours, mortals could wish. For instance the silvery ice, for the gliding skate. But our attention of late has been diverted from those minor amusements to that more recent pastime, tobogganing.

What lovely natural toboggan slides Eugenia possesses. On the recent beautiful evenings, with the slides in magnificent condition, what jovial crowds gathered to the summit of yonder hill. When we arrived on the scene, we were greeted with, "chase a toboggan ride Mr. and Mrs.—" Well, we looked at the long steep incline of sparkling ice, the sheen of which seemed to dazzle our eyes. We looked at the toboggan, viz., two hand-sleighs, built with a view to speed and strength. A 12 ft. Elm plank one sleigh under each end bolted on, a commodious vehicle surely. The shouts all ready and as many young men and maidens, old men and women pile on as can secure a seat, some 10 or 12. Then the word is passed all ready. Go—

Our heart is suddenly palpitating as if in great excitement or under a love sick spell, in the presence of the beloved. But as we hear the quick cut of the tobog. on the ice, and catch a glimps of the fence posts as we fly past on with ever increased velocity, we clutch with instinctive effort to our seat We are momentarily increasing our speed and as we try to look ahead—of! we're rushing on to the edge of the precipice at the falls. The sins of our past life flit before our aroused imagination and we become desperate. Darn't open our mouth in such a cutting wind Shall we fall off? Our nerves refuse The steersman on the front end of the tobog—lying horizontal—in fashion of ancient worship custom, has his hands on the nose of the tobog. and with an adroit twist, pass the wood-pile that seemed to menace certain destruction. Another twist, and a snow bank shoots into our face. We fly throught spaces alight somewhere after bounding over the heads of some half a dozen less fortunate fellow beings; and raise one paw, scrape our face, and find ourself safe and saved by a friendly snow bank.

Although head first, we punched quite a tunnel therein. How provoking as that mischievous crowd gigles at us "have another ride." Not any thank you, we reply. We have another engagement we must be off. We suddenly remember another mocking giggle from those girls and to prove we're no coward, we take a seat again and the pleasurable excitement prevails and we dare the trip again, and are fascinated with the sport again. And why? We love the tobog.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

BRON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

Ladies troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough hands or face, or Sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It will leave the skin in perfect health smooth, clean and good color. Be sure and get the genuine, made by McGregor & Parke. Price 25c. Sold at the Drug Store.

SALT RHEUM CURED.—McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face or hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any Sore that nothing else will heal. Try McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. 25c per box at the Drug Store.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Price $1; six bottles, $5.

High Love No Place on Earth.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox in Lippincott's Magazine.

The world has outlived all its passion;
Its men are inane and blase;
Its women mere puppets of fashion;
Life now is a comedy play.
Our Abelard sighs for a season,
Then yields with decorum to fate;
Our Heloise listens to reason,
And seeks a new mate.

By the lady-like minds of our mothers
We are taught that to feel is bad form.
Our effeminate fathers and brothers
Keep carefully out of life's storm;
Our worshippers, now, and our lovers,
Are calmly devout with their brains;
And we laugh at the man who discovers
Warm blood in his veins.

But you, O twin souls, passion-mated,
Who love as the gods loved of old,
What blundering destiny fated
Your lives to be cast in this mould?
Like a lurid volcanic upheaval
In pastures prosaic and gray
You seem with your fervors primeval,
Among us to-day.

You dropped from some planet of splendor,
Perhaps, as it circled afar,
And your constancy swerveless and tender
You learned from the course of that star.
Fly back to its bosom, I warn you
As back to the ark flew the dove;
The minions of earth will but scorn you
Because you can love!

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

"I don't quite understand you. What do you mean?" she said, in a low voice.

"I mean that in that case I will ask you if you will take me for a husband."

"You do not love me, Ernest; I should weary you."

He felt for her hand, found it, and took it in his own. She made no resistance.

"Dear," he said, "it is this way: I can never give you that passion I have given Eva, because, thank God, the human heart can give birth to it but once in a life; but I can and will give you a husband's tenderest love. You are very dear to me, Doll, though it is not in the same way that Eva is dear. I have always loved you as a sister, and I think that I should make you a good husband. But, before you answer me, I want you to thoroughly understand about Eva. Whether I marry or not, I fear that I shall never be able to shake her out of my mind. At one time I thought that perhaps if I made love to other women I might be able to do so, on the principle that one nail drives out another. But it was a failure; for a month or two I got the better of my thoughts, then they would get the better of me again. Besides, to tell you the truth, I am not quite sure that I wish to do so. My trouble about this woman has become a part of myself. It is, as I told you, my 'evil destiny,' and goes where I go. And now, dear Doll, you will see why I asked you if you really cared for me, before I asked you to marry me. If you do not care for me, then it will clearly not be worth your while to marry me, for I am about as poor a catch as a man can well be; if you do, well, then it is a matter for your consideration."

She paused awhile and answered:

"Suppose that the positions were reversed, Ernest; at least suppose this: Suppose that you had loved your Eva all your life, but she had not loved you except as a brother, having given her heart to some other man, who was, say, married to somebody else, or in some way separated from her. Well, supposing that this man died, and that one day Eva came to you and said, 'Ernest, my dear, I cannot love you as I loved him who has gone, and whom I one day hope to rejoin in heaven, but, if you wish it, and it will make you the happier, I will be your true and tender wife, and the mother of your children.' What should you answer her, Ernest?"

"Answer? why, I suppose that I should take her at her word, and be thankful. Why, to hear her voice day by day would in itself be a happiness. Yes, I think thus, I should take her at her word."

"And so, dear Ernest, do I take you at your word; for as it is with you about Eva, so it is with me about you. As a child I loved you, ever since I have been a woman I have loved you more and more, even through all these cold years of absence. And when you came back, ah! then it was to me as it would be to you if you suddenly once more saw the light of day. Ernest, my beloved, you are all my life to me, and I take you at your word, my dear I will be your wife."

He stretched out his arms, found her, drew her to him, and kissed her on the lips.

"Doll, I don't deserve that you should love me so; it makes me feel ashamed that I have not more to give you in return."

"Ernest, you will give me all you can; I mean to make you grow very fond of me. Perhaps one day you will give me everything."

He hesitated a little while before he spoke again.

"Doll," he said, "you are quite sure you do not mind about Eva?"

"My dear Ernest, I accept Eva as a fact, and make the best of her, just as I should if I wanted to marry a man with a monomania that he was Henry VIII."

"Doll, you know I call her my evil destiny. The fact is, I am afraid of her; she overpowers my reason. Well, now, Doll, what I am driving at is this: Supposing—not that I think she will—that she were to crop up again and take it into her head to try and make a fool of me! She might succeed, Doll."

"Ernest, will you promise me something on your honor?"

"Yes, dear."

"Promise me that you will hide from me nothing that passes between Eva and yourself, if anything ever should pass, and that in this matter you will always consider me not in the light of a wife, but of a trusted friend."

"Why do you ask me to promise that?"

"Because then I shall, I hope, be able to keep you both out of trouble. You are not fit to look after yourselves, either of you."

"I promise. And now, Doll, there is one more thing. It is somehow fixed in my mind that my fate and that woman's are interwined. I believe that what we are now passing through is but a single phase of interwoven existence; that we have perhaps already passed through many stages, and that many higher stages and developments await us. Of course, it may be phantasy, but at any rate I believe it. The question is, Do you care to link your life with that of a man who holds such a belief?"

"Ernest, I dare say your belief is a true one, at any rate for you who believe it: for it seems probable that as we sow so shall we reap, as we spiritually imagine so shall we spiritually inherit, since causes must in time produce effects. These beliefs are not implanted in our hearts for nothing, and surely in the wide heavens there is room for the realization of them all. But I too have my beliefs, and one of them is, that in God's great Hereafter every loving and desiring soul will be with the soul thus loved and desired. For him or her at any rate, the other will be there, forming a part of his or her life, though perhaps it may elsewhere and with others also be pursuing its own desires and satisfying its own aspirations. So you see, Ernest, your beliefs will not interfere with mine, nor shall I be afraid of losing you in another place."

"And now, Ernest, my heart's love, take my hand, and let me lead you home; take my hand, as you have taken my heart, and never let go of it again till at last I die."

And so hand in hand they went home together, through the lights and shadows of the twilight

CHAPTER XLIII.

MAZOOKU'S FAREWELL.

Dorothy and Ernest got back to Dum's Ness just in time to dress for dinner, for since Ernest and Jeremy had come back, Dorothy, whose will in that house was law, had instituted late dinner. The dinner passed over as usual, Dorothy sitting between Ernest and her grandfather, and attending to the wants of those two unfortunates, both of whom would have found it rather difficult to get through their meal without her gentle, unobtrusive help. But when dinner was over and the cloth removed, and Grice had placed the wine upon the table and withdrawn, an unusual thing happened.

Ernest asked Dorothy to fill his glass with port, and when she had done so he said:

"Uncle and Jeremy, I am going to ask you to drink a health.

The old man looked up sharply. "What is it, Ernest, my boy?"

As for Dorothy, she blushed a rosy red, guessing what was coming, and not knowing whether to be pleased or angry.

"It is this, uncle—it is the health of my future wife, Dorothy."

Then came a silence of astonishment. Mr. Cardus broke it.

"Years ago, Ernest, my dear nephew, I told you that I wished this to come to pass; but other things happened to thwart my plans, and I never expected to see it. Now in God's good time it has come, and I drink the health with all my heart. My children, I know that I am a strange man, and my life has been devoted to a single end, which is now drawing near its final development; but I have found time in it to learn to love you both. Dorothy, my daughter, I drink your health. May the happiness that was denied to your mother fall upon your head, her share and your share too! Ernest, you have passed through many troubles, and have been preserved almost miraculously to see this day. In her you will find a reward for everything, for she is a good woman. Perhaps I shall never live to see your happiness and the children of your happiness, I do not think I shall; but may the solemn blessing I give you now rest upon your dear heads! God bless you both, my children, and here and now I thank Him that He has brought this good thing to pass. All peace go with you, Dorothy and Ernest!"

"Amen!" said Jeremy, in a loud voice and with a vague idea that he was in church. Then he got up and shook Ernest's hand so hard in his fearful grip that the latter was constrained to halloa out, and lifted Dolly out of her chair like a plaything, and kissed her boisterously, knocking the orchid-bloom she wore out of her hair in the process. Then they all sat down again and beamed at one another and drank port wine—at least the men did—and were inanely happy.

Indeed, the only person to whom the news was not satisfactory was Mazooku. "Ou!" he said, with a grunt, when Jeremy communicated it to him. "So the Rosebud is going to become the Rose, and I sha'n't even be able to lead my father to bed now. Ou!" and from that day forward Mazooku's abstracted appearance showed that he was meditating deeply on something.

Next morning his uncle sent for Ernest into the office. Dorothy led him in.

"Oh, here you are!" said his uncle.

"Yes, here we are, Reginald," answered Dorothy; "what is it? Shall I go away?"

"No, don't go away. What I have to say concerns you both.—Come and look at the orchids, Ernest, they are beautiful. Ah!" he went on, stammering, "I forgot you can't see them. Forgive me."

"Never mind, uncle, I can smell them;" and they went into the blooming-house appropriated to the temperate kinds.

At the end of the house was a little table and some iron chairs where Mr. Cardus would sometimes come and smoke a cigarette. Here they sat down.

"Now, young people," said Mr. Cardus, wiping his bald head, "you are going to get married. May I ask what you are going to get married on?"

"By Jove," said Ernest, "I never thought of that! I haven't got much, except a title, a mansion with 'numerous and valuable' heirlooms, and one hundred and eighty acres of park," he added, laughing.

"No, I don't suppose you have; but, luckily for you both, I am not so badly off, and I mean to do something for you. What do you think would be the proper thing? Come, Dorothy, my little housewife, what do you reckon you can live on—living here, I mean, for I suppose that you do not mean to run away and leave me alone in my old age, do you?"

Dorothy wrinkled up her forehead as she used to as a child, and began to calculate upon her fingers. Presently she answered, "Three hundred a year comfortably, quietly on two."

"What!" said Mr. Cardus, "when the babies begin to come?"

Dorothy blushed, old gentlemen are so unpleasantly outspoken, and Ernest jumped, for the prospect of unlimited babies is alarming till one gets used to it.

"Better make it five hundred," he said.

"Oh," said Mr. Cardus, "that's what you think, is it? Well, I tell you what I think. I am going to allow you young people two thousand a year and pay the housekeeping bills."

"My dear uncle, that is far more than we want."

"Nonsense, Ernest! It is there and to spare; and why should you not have it, instead of its piling up in the bank or in investments? There are enough of them now, I can tell you. Everything that I have touched has turned to gold; I believe it has often been the case with unfortunate men. Money! I have more than I know what to do with, and there are idiots who think that to have lots of money is to be happy."

He paused awhile, and then went on:

"I would give you more, but you are both comparatively young, and I do not wish to encourage habits of extravagance in you. The world is full of vicissitudes, and it is impossible for anybody to know how he may be pecuniarily situated in ten years' time. But I wish you, Ernest—to keep up your rank—moderately, if you like, but still to keep it up. Life is all before you now, and whatever you choose to go in for, you shall not want the money to back you. Look here, my children, I may as well tell you that when I die you will inherit nearly all I have got; I have left it to be divided equally between you, with reversion to the survivor. I drew up that will some years back, and I do not think that it is worth while altering it now."

"Forgive me," said Ernest, "but how about Jeremy?"

Mr. Cardus' face changed a little. He had never got over his dislike of Jeremy, though his sense of duty caused him to stifle it.

"I have not forgotten Jeremy," he said, in a tone that indicated that he did not wish to pursue the conversation.

Ernest and Dorothy thanked the old man for his goodness, but he would not listen, so they went off and left him to return to his letter-writing. In the passage Dorothy peeped through the glass half of the door which opened into her grandfather's room.

There sat the old man writing, his long, iron-gray hair hanging all about his face. Presently, he seemed to think of something, and a smile which the contorted mouth made ghastly spread itself over the pallid countenance. Rising, he went to the corner and extracted a long tally-stick on which were cut notches. Sitting down again he counted the remaining notches over and over, and then took a penknife and cut one out. This done, he put the stick back, and, looking at the wall, began to mutter, for he was not quite dumb, and to clasp and unclasp his powerful hand. Dorothy entered the room quickly.

"Grandfather, what are you doing?" she said, sharply.

The old man started and his jaw dropped. Then the eyes grew dull, and his usual apathetic look stole over his face. Taking up his slate he wrote, "Cutting out my notches."

Dorothy asked him some further questions, but could get nothing more out of him.

"I don't at all like the way grandfather has been going on lately," she said to Ernest. "He is always muttering and clinching his hand, as though he had some one by the throat. You know he thinks that he has been serving the fiend all these years, and that his time will be up shortly, whereas you know, though Reginald has no cause to love him, he has been very kind to him. If it had not been for Reginald my grandfather would have been sent to the mad-house; but because he was connected with his loss of fortune, he thinks he is the devil. He forgets how he served Reginald; you see even in madness the mind only remembers the injuries inflicted on itself, and forgets those it inflicted on others. I don't at all like his way."

"I should think that he had better be shut up."

"Oh, Reginald would never do it. Come, dear, let us go out."

It was a month or so after Mr. Cardus' announcement of his pecuniary intentions, that a little wedding party stood before the altar in Kesterwick church. It was a very small party; consisting indeed only of Ernest, Dorothy, Mr. Cardus, Jeremy, and a few idlers who, seeing the church-door open, had strolled in to see what was going on. Indeed, the marriage had been kept a profound secret, for since he had been blind Ernest had developed a great dislike to being stared at. Nor indeed had he any liking for the system under which a woman proclaims with loud and unseemly rejoicings that she has found a man to marry her, and the clan of her relations celebrate her departure with a few outward and visible tears and much inward and spiritual joy.

But among that small crowd, unobserved by any of them, quite close up in the shadow of one of the massive pillars sat a veiled woman. She sat quiet and still, she might have been carved in stone; but as the service went on she raised her thick veil and fixed her keen brown eyes upon the two who stood before the altar. And as she did so the lips of this shadowy lady trembled a little, and a mist of trouble rose from the unhealthy marshes of her mind and clothed her fine-cut features. Long and steadily she gazed, then dropped the veil again and said beneath her breath:

"Was it worth while for this? Well, I have seen him."

Then she rose, did this shadowy, noble-looking lady, and glided from the church, bearing away with her the haunting burden of her sin.

And Ernest? He stood there and said the responses in his clear, manly voice; but even as he did so there rose before him the semblance of the little room in far-away Pretoria, and of the vision which he had had of this very church, and of a man standing where he himself stood now, and a lovely woman standing where stood Dorothy his wife. Well, it was gone, as all visions go, as we, who are but visions of a longer life, go too. It was gone, gone into that awful limbo of the past which is ever opening its insatiable maw and swallowing us and our joys and our sorrows—making a meal of the atoms of to-day, that it may support itself till the atoms of to-morrow are ready for its appetite.

It was gone, and he was married, and Dorothy his wife stood there wreathed in smiles and blushes which he could not see, and Mr. Halford's voice, now grown weak and quavering, was formulating heart-felt congratulations, which were being repeated in the gigantic echo of Jeremy's deep tones, and in his uncle's quick, jerky utterances. So he took Dorothy his wife into his arms and kissed her, and she led him down the church to the old vestry, into which so many thousand newly-married couples had passed during the course of the last six centuries, and signed his name where they placed his pen upon the parchment, wondering the while if he was signing it straight, and then went out, and was helped into the carriage and was driven home.

Ernest and his wife went upon no honeymoon; they stopped quietly there at the old house, and began to accustom themselves to their new relationship. Indeed, to the outsider at any rate, there seemed to be little difference between it and the former one, for they could not be much more together now than they had been before. Yet in Dorothy's face there was a difference. A great peace, an utter satisfaction which had been wanting before, came down and brooded upon it, and made it beautiful. She both looked and was a happy woman.

But to the Zulu Mazooku this state of affairs did not seem to be satisfactory.

One day, it was three days after the marriage, Ernest and Dorothy were walking together outside the house, when Jeremy coming in from a visit to a distant farm, advanced, and joining them, began to converse on agricultural matters, for he was already becoming intensely and annoyingly technical. Presently, as they talked, they became aware of the sound of naked feet running swiftly over the grass.

"That sounds like a Zulu dancing," said Ernest, quickly.

It was a Zulu; it was Mazooku, but Mazooku transformed. It had been his fancy to bring a suit of war toggery, such as he had worn when he was one of Cetywayo's soldiers, with him from Natal, and now he had donned it all, and stood before them a striking yet alarming figure. From his head there rose a good two feet into the air, a single beautiful gray feather, taken from the Bell crane; around his waist hung a kilt of white ox-tails, and beneath his right knee a small tuft of white goat's hair. For the rest he was naked. In his left hand he held a milk-white fighting-shield, made of ox-hide, and in his right his great "bangwan," or stabbing assegai. Still as a statue he stood before them, his plume bending in the breeze, and Dorothy, looking with wondering eyes, marvelled at the broad chest scarred all over with assegai-wounds, and the huge, sinewy limbs. Suddenly he raised the spear and saluted in sonorous tones:

"Koos! Baba!"

"Speak," said Ernest.

"I speak my father; I come to meet my father as a man meets a man. I come with spear and shield, but not in war. With my father I came from the land of the sun into this cold land, where the sun is as pale as the white faces it shines on. Is it not so, my father?"

"I hear you."

"With my father I came. Did not my father and I stand together for many a day? Did I not slay the two Basutus down in the land of Sikukini, chief of the Bapedi, at my father's bidding? Did I not once save my father from the jaws of the wild beast that walks by night" (the lion)? "Did I not stank by my father at the place of the Little Hand" (Isandhlwana), "when all the plain was red with blood? Do I dream in the night, or was it so, my father?"

"I hear you. It was so."

"Then when the heavens above smelt out my father, and smote him with their fire, did I not say, 'Ah, my father, now art thou blind, and canst fight no more, and no more play the part of a man; better that thou hadst died a man's death, O my father! But as thou art blind, lo, whither thou goest, thither will I go also and be my father's dog.' Did I not say this, O my father?"

"Thou didst say it."

"And so we came across the black water, my father and I and the great Lion, like unto whom no man was ever born of woman, and came hither, and have lived for many moons the lives of women, have eaten and drunken, and have not fought or hunted, or known the pleasure of men. Is it not so, my father?"

"Thou speakest truly, Mazooku; it is even so."

"Yes, we came across the black water in the smoking ship, came to the land of wonders, which is full of houses and trees, so that a man cannot breathe in it, or throw out his arms lest they should strike a wall; and behold there came an ancient one with a shining head wonderful to look on, and a girl rosebud, small but very sweet, and greeted my father and the Lion, and led them away in the carriages which put the horses inside them, and put them in this place, where they may look forever at the sadness of the sea.

"And then behold the Rosebud said: 'What doth this black dog here? shall a dog lead Mazimba' (Ernest's Zulu name) 'by the hand? Begone, thou black dog, and walk in front or ride behind; it is I who will hold Mazimba's hand.'

"And then my father, sinking deep in ease, and becoming a fat (well-to-do) man, said to himself, 'I will take this Rosebud to wife.' And so the Rosebud opened her petals, and closed them round my father, and became a Rose, and now she sheds her fragrance round him day by day and night by night, and the black dog stands and howls outside the door.

"And so, my father, it came to pass that Mazooku, thy ox and thy dog, communed with his heart and said: 'Here is no more any place for thee. Mazimba thy chief has no longer any need of thee, and behold in the land of women, thou too shalt grow like a woman! So get up and go to thy father and say to him: "O, my father, years ago I put my hand between thy hands and became a loyal man to thee; now would I withdraw it and return to the land whence we came, for here I am not wanted, and here I cannot breathe." I have spoken, O my rather and my chief."

"Mazooku, son of Ingoluvu, unfana ga Amazula" (child of the Zulu race), answered Ernest, adopting the Zulu metaphor, his voice sounding wonderfully soft as the liquid tongue he spoke so well came rolling out, "thou hast been a good man to me, and I have loved thee. But thou shalt go. Thou art right: now is my life the life of a woman; never again shall I hear the sound of the rifle or the ringing of steel in war. And so thou goest, Mazooku. It is well. But at times thou wilt think of thy blind master, and of the wise captain who sleeps (Alston), and of the Lion who threw the ox over his shoulder. Go and be happy. Many be thy wives, many thy children, and countless thy cattle! The Lion shall take thee by the hand and lead thee to the sea, and shall give thee of my bounty wherewith to buy a little food when thou comest to thine own land, and a few oxen, and a piece of ground, or a waggon or two, so that thou shalt not be hungry, nor want for cattle to give for wives. Mazooku, fare thee well."

(To be continued.)

Singular Accidents.

A citizen of Valdosta, Ga., was chopping kindling wood in his kitchen a few evenings ago, when a piece of it flew up and hit him on the nose, breaking the nasal bone. He fell senseless to the floor, and was weak from the loss of blood when found.

While Louis Gott was hunting near Palmyra, Mo., last week, he received a violent blow on the side of the head which made him dizzy for a few moments. When he recovered he saw a prairie chicken limping away, and he thinks it was the chicken that struck him.

Mrs. Gordon, living near Marianna, Ark., sent her little daughter Clara out to milk the cows. When the pail was full the girl reached over to pick it up, but slipped and fell headlong into the milk. The warm fluid almost choked her, and she came near dying before she could be resuscitated.

Aunt Kitty McDowell, of Tazewell County, Ill., suffers a great deal from rheumatism in the feet and ankles, and to relieve the affected parts she bathed them recently in camphor and black oil. Afterwards, while sitting near the fire, the stuff ignited, and her feet were terribly burned before the flames could be extinguished.

A Georgia man stood looking at a rapidly moving circular saw in a planing mill at Ocean Pond, and carelessly threw a small bit of wood against it. In an instant the stick was hurled back with great force against him, striking him squarely between the eyes and knocking him to the floor. He remained unconscious for several hours and has a reminder of the accident in the shape of an ugly wound on the forehead.

During the progress of a recent fire in Chicago a pipeman was standing on a ladder directing a stream into the second-story window, when, in some way, the hose got the better of him and turned so that the stream struck him in the chest. The force of the water knocked him from the ladder against a sign, bruising him badly on the hips. He struck the sign so hard that he rebounded, caught the ladder and still retained his hold on the hose.

Edward Herrick, a street-car conductor, living in Auburn, R.I., wanted to solder a hole in his wife's wash-boiler, and used what he supposed to be an old soldering-iron that had lain around the house for years. He put the iron in the fire and was scraping the rust from the boiler when there was an explosion that scattered the stove in all directions and set fire to the house. Herrick has learned since that the supposed soldering-iron was a railroad torpedo.

While Joseph Ninters, an employee at one of the Negley's Run (Pa.) oil refineries, was riveting a boiler a few days ago the head of one of the iron rivets flew off and tore a hole in his cheek, causing a great deal of blood to flow. A physician who was summoned probbed for the iron, but was unable to find it until his attention was called to a small lump on the injured man's back, between the shoulder blades. Surmising that the lump contained the rivet-head he cut it open and extracted the substance. The iron had made its way down along the muscles of the neck, a distance of nearly a foot.

The Eccentricities of Fame.

On one occasion Lord Brougham went to the House of Commons in his new coach, which Robinson, the coach-builder, had christened after His Lordship—Brougham. He was met in the lobby by the Duke of Wellington, who thus accosted him: "My lord! I always thought your name would be handed down to posterity as the apostle of education—the teacher and enlightener of your fellow-countrymen; but no! Henceforth you will be known as—the inventor of a carriage—Brougham." His Lordship answered, saying: "Your Grace! I always thought your name would be handed down to posterity as the hero of a hundred battles; but no! Henceforth you will be known as—the inventor of a pair of boots—Wellington boots." "Bother it! I had forgotten the boots," exclaimed His Grace.

He Signalled Him.

Said a minister's 7-year-old son: "Papa do you ever look at me while you are preaching?" The father, thinking he was a little hurt by supposed neglect, said: "Certainly, my son; I often look at you and think of you when I am preaching." "But to-day did you notice me at all?" "Yes, I did, son, several times," said the father. "Well, papa, did you see me wink at you two or three times?" "No, my son. What did you wink at me for when I was preaching?" "I winked at you, papa, to get you to stop. You were spinning it too long."—St. Louis Observer.

Versatility.

An English gentleman not long ago advertised for a general servant, "who must be a good plain cook and an earnest deist." And in an English High Church paper there recently appeared the advertisement of a coachman who declared himself to be an "advanced Catholic and skilful in the management of horses."—N. Y. Tribune.

Prof. Alfred L. White, the famous stenographer, has been missing since Washington's birthday. He had lately become a victim to the opium habit, and had on several occasions threatened suicide. He is but 24 years of age. Prof. White was the representative sent by the American Association of Stenographers to Europe in 1884, to compete for the prizes offered at the International Congress. In the contests at London, Glasgow, Edinburgh and Paris in September and October of that year he gained first prize in each, and has since been esteemed among his craft as the most rapid and generally capable shorthand man in the world.

The recent disastrous explosion of melinite at Belfort is explained thus: Melinite does not explode in consequence of shock, but of heat, and the officer in charge of some of the explosive exposed neglected to observe the thermometer, and the temperature becoming too high, half a dozen men were blown to death.

ONLY A DREAM.

(Abner C. Thomas in New York Standard.)

It was the close of a tiresome day. Vexed and wearied with many cares I had seen my four little ones tucked away in their clean and comfortable beds, and, seated in the great armchair, which is my own special possession, I tried to read a little, but I was so exhausted that I nodded and dreamed.

I was in a little boat on a great river. Clouds of darkness were all around me; the heavens held no stars, and the water on which I sailed was turbulent and black as ink. A shadowy form stood at the prow, and with a single oar and steady strokes propelled me. Amid silence and darkness, and with a feeling of meek submission to whatever might await me, I was ferried over the river of death.

As I reached the further shore I noticed a slight lifting of the clouds. No place for human habitation was in sight and no human companionship seemed available. I felt that a journey was before me and looked around to see what course I should pursue. Two roads started from where I stood, one narrow and steep, but straight and tending toward the right; the other broad and of easy grade and better travelled. The boatman, without a word, intimated by gesture that I would do well to keep to the right, and in a moment I stood alone on the unknown shore.

My feet seemed very heavy; I was broken with burdens and anxious for rest, but in full trust that my Great Father had provided the boat for me, and that one of these roads must lead to His house of many mansions, I chose the narrow road, and laboriously began to climb. This continued for a long time and without apparent change, but at last I came to where the light was better and the air softer and sweeter than it had been at the river side.

Little by little this change became more pronounced. The trees by the wayside were more numerous; the foliage was greener, and I rejoiced within myself because of the pleasant land into which I was being conducted. The road still continued steep, but the light kept growing, as in the early morning of a summer's day, and increased far beyond the glories of the sun until I became conscious that I stood within a short distance of the great and wonderful city whence comes the light to enlighten the nations. The gates of pearl were before me, and here on either side lay the crosses and burdens of multitudes of travellers who had gone before.

My heart was full of thanksgiving then, for, I said within myself, "Here I shall see and know my Father whose care has always blessed me, and here I shall find rest." And so with eager haste to join in the song of blessing and eulogium, I knocked at the great door to crave admission.

The door was promptly opened by a man whose face shone with the glory of a tender affection for his fellow man, and from whose shoulders there sprang a pair of white wings which, when folded, were long enough to touch the ground. He wore a single white garment of a white, soft substance, which looked as if it might be fresh and cool. My own garments of earthly texture had been taken away before I found myself in the boat, and I stood before this beautiful spirit naked and travel soiled.

"Who are you, and where do you come from?" was inquired of me.

I gave my name and said that I came from the city of New York.

"That name is a familiar one to me," said the angel; "we have heard of you and are glad to have you among us. You are known to have been industrious and prudent during your stay on the earth, and we feel that you will be a useful citizen of New Jerusalem."

An invitation was then given me to enter and my eyes were almost blinded with the beauties of the heavenly place. My new friend asked me to come with him into his office to register my name, and, after I had done so, urged that I sit with him awhile.

"You will stay here many years," said he, "and it is important that you should start right, particularly in a social way. You must be very careful as to forming acquaintances, and not attach yourself to undesirable angels."

"You surprise me!" I exclaimed. "Surely all the children of the Great Father are alike here, are they not? I was told that I would find no rich or poor here, and that all could join in praise and in looking upon the throne of the King."

"That is all very well," I was answered. "Of course we understand that we are all children of the King, and many, many years ago the deplorable state of affairs you seem to approve of so much existed in full force. It used to be that distinctions of rank did not obtain, and there were no poor people at all; but we have seen the advantages of class distinctions, and have, by a very simple device, arranged matters on a new and different plan. Why, sir, the time was when you would have to comb your own wings and polish your own harp unless some other angel would do it for you out of love and kindness; for no angel worked except for himself and those he cherished."

"Indeed; and how has this change been brought about?" I asked.

"It could not have been done at all in the early days when the King was able to attend in person to all details of city government and when our population was scanty; but about five hundred years ago our previous loose notions of rights in lands became enlightened. A code of law, in every respect similar to the law of the State of New York, was put in force, and all of our present methods grew out of this simple change. We chose the laws of that State because they were made by the people, who change them according to their pleasure, and we know that they must be just and fair. The city had been very fairly started before that, and it was agreed that all of the land should forthwith be divided up among the people then in the city; the titles thus acquired have ever since been respected, and all ownership must now be traced from them."

"I trust," I remarked, "that in this division some provision was made for me, for the King knew that I was coming, and I came upon his invitation, and I am without purse or scrip. All that I struggled for on the earth, which was not used day by day as I got it, is behind me and will be gathered by I know not whom."

"Oh, no," said the angel, "that would never have done. The people who were here when the land was being divided allotted the property among themselves. If you were not here that is no fault of theirs, and we are satisfied that the private ownership of land leads to private enterprise and hence to public benefit. I confidently expect, within a few centuries, to see you one of our real estate owners, and you will then join in approving the change from the primitive methods which formerly obtained here, and which are still talked of by people on the earth. The first thing you had better do is to find a boarding place, and you can then look around and make up your mind what to do."

"I don't think I want that," said I, "for I find that I neither hunger nor thirst, and the air that blows over the city is so sweet and pleasant that I do not care to be sheltered from it. I think I will go to yonder green knoll, beneath the shade of that wild tree, and there rest and brood upon the blessings that the Great King has cast upon me."

"No," said the angel, "you had better not do that. To be sure, the knoll you speak of is unimproved and no use has ever been made of it, but it forms a part of the estate of a very rich angel named Lazarus, formerly a beggar in Judea, but now one of our most prominent citizens. He would resent any trespass, and I don't think you had better go there."

"Does Lazarus use it?" I inquired.

"Not at all," was the reply, "and he would not know that you were occupying it if it were not for the fact that our police angels are very strictly cautioned not to permit trespassing. I think you'll have to get board, for the regulations against tramps are necessarily very stringent. It is always summer here, and our mild climate encourages tramps amazingly."

"I had hoped to rest," I sighed, "but if work is the rule here and the King wishes me to do so, I will work with the best of you. What industries are permissible?"

"There may be a little trouble about getting work for you," said my companion. "You see, what with the immense pauper immigration into the city, we are very fully supplied with laborers. Just look at that great company of them. They fill our streets and are becoming a sad nuisance."

I looked as I was bid, and there beheld a great number of men and women and children with sad and weary faces.

"The difficulty with all these people is," said my friend, "that they are so lazy and improvident. They try to dictate the amount of wages that they are to get and refuse to submit to the regulations of the employing angels. I fear that the socialistic influence among them is very injurious. There are many industries here, but the principal ones are the raising of flowers and the manufacturing of harps and crowns. Which of these would you prefer to engage in?"

"I know nothing of either," I sadly replied, "for I have been only a lawyer, and I doubt if I could do anything at my profession in a place where I am entirely unknown. But I love flowers, and I would enjoy to delve in the soil which our Great Father has made, and to raise flowers which might beautify the city to His honor and glory. May I not go on some piece of vacant and sterile ground and there strive to do this work?"

My guide laughed at this and said: "Your idea is far more romantic than practical, for the land, as I have already said, is all taken up and divided among others. Your better plan is to seek some work that will not require the use of the ground, for that cannot be had without capital, which you do not possess. You must first get to work and live prudently, and by and by you will be able to save enough to buy yourself a piece of ground. Every angel ought to have some interest in the soil and build himself a home. It makes him a more useful citizen. Now, if you had just a little capital I could suggest a purchase which could not fail to be a good one. Do you see that charming piece of land on the shore of the Jasper Sea?"

I looked and beheld a tract of country so fair that it delighted my eyes, and right adjoining it was a sheet of water as pure as crystal.

"That piece of property," the angel continued, "was purchased many years ago by Judas, formerly of Galilee, for thirty pieces of silver. It was a great bargain at the time, and since then it has largely increased in value, and he has cut it up into plots and will doubtless make an excellent thing out of it. We did not like Judas very much at first; I think there was something unfortunate in his earthly career, but he is certainly an excellent business man, and the exact nature of the criticisms once made against him has gradually been forgotten. He has lived it down, as it were."

"What did Judas do that made this property so valuable?" I inquired.

"I didn't say that Judas did anything," was the answer. "In fact, he has lived out of town a great part of the time because of social reasons; but the population has increased in that vicinity, and the improvements were all made without any effort on his part. Judas is very shrewd at a bargain, you may be sure. He does not offer the whole of it for sale now, but he will sell alternate plots, so that the improvements made on them will enhance the value of the remainder; and if you had anything at all I would strongly advise you to purchase. If you wait only a few years the price will surely advance."

"From what you tell me I should judge that I cannot be allowed to stay in the city unless I can persuade some owner of the land to permit me to do so, and that this can only be done on condition that I shall labor for him. Is this true?" said I.

"Oh well, now," the angel answered, "that is hardly correct, you know. To be sure you cannot stay on private property without compensating the owner. You wouldn't propose to confiscate property, I'm sure. But then the citizens of this city are very charitable, and there are asylums and poor-houses and other places of that kind for the infirm and suffering poor. You will be provided with wings by the King without charge, and these you can hypothecate for any immediate needs and I know that you will get along nicely. Others do. I might mention many cases of citizens of your native place who are doing excellently. There is, for instance, a certain Cornelius, who is a boatman on the Jasper Sea. He started with nothing, but he owns his own boat now and is kept quite busy. He talks about a railroad, the cars to be drawn by poor angels whose wings have been lost by foreclosure, but I fear that the King would object to that. He is very enterprising, Cornelius is."

All of this made me very sad, and I left the angel and walked forth into the street, and into a park around which benches had been placed for homeless wanderers such as I seemed to be. I sat on one of these and wept myself to sleep. I was startled by a touch on my shoulder and fancied that it was from a police angel with a command to "move on," but awaking suddenly I looked up through tearful lashes at the face of my wife, and found that I was still sitting in my chair in my New York home.

I have told the story in my little family, and we all rejoice that it was a dream and that we can still trust in the promises of the Great Father and hope for better things.

A Laughing Plant.

The well-known, and once too popular, intoxicant called "laughing-gas" is the protoxide of nitrogen, an artificial product of the chemist. We do not suppose that the same compound grows in an Arabian bean, but this vegetable seems to have the same merry virtue. Nature is humorous, as well as economical, and likes to surprise science by duplicating its exploits. The laughing plant is not a flower that laughs, but one that creates laughter, if the printed stories of travellers are to be believed. It grows in Arabia, and is called the laughing plant because its seeds produce effects like those produced by laughing gas. The flowers of this wonderful plant are of bright yellow, and the seed pods are soft and woolly, while the seeds resemble black beans, and only two or three grow in a pod. The natives dry and pulverize them, and the powder, if taken in small doses, makes the soberest person behave like a circus clown or a madman; for he will dance, sing and laugh, and cut the most fantastic capers, and be in an uproariously ridiculous condition for about an hour. When the excitement ceases the exhausted exhibitor of the antics falls asleep, and when he awakes he has not the slightest remembrance of his doings.—Vick's Floral Magazine.

A Possibility in Mr. Beecher's Case.

It is probable that had Mr. Beecher understood telegraphy he might have communicated with his family after the stroke which rendered him speechless. The contraction of the fingers of his right hand would seem to indicate the possibility that he was conscious, and had he known how to regulate those contractions in the formation of telegraphic signals he could have thus conveyed his thoughts while otherwise utterly powerless. I knew of a case some years ago in which a telegrapher thus communicated with me when we supposed him unconscious. In holding his hand I felt a faint twitching of the muscles of his fingers and recognized telegraphic signals thus made. He was perfectly conscious of what was passing around him, but unable to speak or move a muscle, except the faint contraction of the finger muscles as described. It was a remarkable case and unparalleled so far as I know.—Boston Globe.

A Famous Brake.

A correspondent inquires what is meant by the Westinghouse brake. It is a railroad brake, invented by Mr. George Westinghouse twenty or more years ago. It was one of the earliest contrivances by which the engineer can apply the brakes to each of the cars as well as to the engine. The engine of the train carries a tank, in which air is stored at a high pressure, the steam from the engine driving the compressor. A tube runs from the engine the entire length of the train, underneath the cars at the couplings heavy rubber tubes take the place of the iron ones. Under each car is a small chamber, into which, like pistons, run long rods connecting with the brake heads. When the engineer applies the brakes he simply turns a stop cock; the compressed air rushes through the tubes into the chambers below the cars, forces apart the piston heads, and so applies the brakes to the wheels.

Lord Deas on Tobacco.

The late Lord Deas, of Scotland, who died a couple of weeks ago, had an unspeakable dread of an open window and an ungovernable horror at the degrading smell of tobacco. On one occasion there was an undeniable odor of the unpardonable weed. In vain Lord Deas thundered at the officers of the Court. The offender could not be found till, at last, a breathless, white-faced man proclaimed with a shaking voice that he rather thought the smell came from the counsel's room. But Lord Deas, whose nose and whose feeling of etiquette alike protested against such a calumny, made the unhappy man sink into his shoes by fiercely ejaculating, "No such thing! Dae ye mean to tell me that the gentlemen o' the Bar smoke common twist?" His Lordship was undeniably correct.

A Bullet that Soothes.

A German chemist has invented a new kind of anæsthetic bullet, which he urges will, if brought into general use, greatly diminish the horrors of war. The bullet is of a brittle substance, breaking directly when it comes in contact with the object at which it is aimed. It contains a powerful anæsthetic, producing instantaneously complete insensibility, lasting for twelve hours, which, except that the action of the heart continues, is not to be distinguished from death. While in this condition, the German chemist points out, the bodies may be packed in waggons and carried of as prisoners.—Court Journal.

A Fleet Owned by Monks.

"I have heard of monks doing many things," says Mr. Labouchere, "but I never heard of them being sailors. It seems, however, that in the White Sea there is a fleet of six steamers, which are owned, officered and manned by monks. They ply between Archangel and the Island of Jolovetsk, where there is a monastery, and their business is to convey pilgrims to the island. As many as 30,000 people annually make the journey between May and September, the only time when the island is accessible."

After J. Lemmon's fine chestnut horse had drawn the hose reel as far as the corner of Sydenham and Princess streets last night it was turned around, when it suddenly saw the steam engine, and was frightened to such an extent that it dropped and died without a kick. Its owner says the fright broke his horse's heart. The animal cost $160.—Kingston News.

CURRENT TOPICS.

A distinguished French chemist, M. Favier, has invented still another explosive which will make all its predecessors take a back seat. It is nameless as yet, will not explode accidentally, costs one-fifth less than melinite, and is as powerful as the latter, if not more so, and more easily handled. Certainly no well regulated, peaceable nation could be without this article.

Mrs. Helen Gougar has sent an open letter to the women of Kansas, who are to vote in the municipal elections, saying "You will be required to give your name. Do not give your husband's name or your pet name, but the one by which you were christened." This first result of the action of the Kansas Government in permitting women to vote goes far towards justifying the experiment.

The Paris reports that the drummers and trumpeters of the German army are hard at work learning the beats and calls of the French troops. It also alleges that in many engagements in the war of 1870 the command to cease firing was often given to the French infantry by German buglers, and that the command to halt, sounded by the same buglers, often stopped a charge of French cavalry and placed them in a position where they could be mowed down.

Mr. Stokes, the public analyst of Paddington, Eng., calls attention in his last quarterly report to the necessity for the consumers of tinned foods to eat them the same day that the tins are opened. The foods very rapidly begin to decompose and form the poisonous products known as "ptomaines," especially in hot weather. In one case brought under Mr. Stokes' notice death followed very rapidly after the eating of a somewhat stale sample of tinned lobster.

Lord Rosebery, who married a wealthy Jewess of the Rothschild family, took her to India with him. They attended a dinner in Calcutta at which the Duchess of Manchester was seated next to the Rajah of Mozuffernugger. The rajah asked: "And this Lord Rosebery of your great country—has he brought his wives with him?" "S-sh!" exclaimed the Duchess, blushing scarlet. "That's Lady Rosebery over there, next the viceroy!" The Oriental regarded Lady Rosebery for some moments and then remarked with a sigh: "Poor young man! I hope they allow him a nicer one at home!"

Few Levitical families of our own country and time, says the Christian Leader, can show a record of such protracted service as that of the three distinguished brothers, the Bonars. But time is at length beginning to tell on them. Dr. Horatius, known all over Christendom as the greatest living hymn writer of the Christian Church, is about to receive a helper—most likely in Mr. Sloan, of Anderston; and this week we have to record the taking of steps by the kirk session of Free St. Andrew's, Greenock, to secure an assistant for their pastor, Dr. J. J. Bonar, who is now in his 84th year, and who was licensed in 1835. The third brother, Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, the biographer of McCheyne, is still discharging the onerous duties of his important Glasgow pastorate with remarkable vigor.

It is asserted by some of the highest medical authorities that lime-water and milk are not only food and medicine at an early period of life, but also at a later, when, as in the case of infants, the functions of digestion and assimilation are feeble and easily perverted. It is found that a stomach taxed by gluttony, irritated by improper food, inflamed by alcohol, enfeebled by disease or otherwise unfitted for its duties—as is shown by the various symptoms attendant upon indigestion, dyspepsia, diarrhea, dysentery and fever—will resume its work, and do it energetically, on an exclusive diet of bread and milk and lime-water. A goblet of cow's milk may have four tablespoonfuls of lime-water added to it with good effect; the lime-water may be made by putting a few lumps of unslaked lime into a stone jar and adding water until the lime is slaked and of about the consistence of thick cream—the lime settling and leaving the pure and clean lime-water on the top.

It will be five years on the 1st of April next since the time when Lord Wolseley took over the office of Adjutant-General to the Forces, says Edmund Yates in the London World, and five years are usually the limit of staff employment. In Lord Wolseley's case, however, an exception is very properly to be made, as he has twice vacated his appointment to proceed on service—in 1882 and again in 1885. The time he was absent in Egypt and on the Nile is not to be reckoned, and he is to continue in the undisturbed emoluments of the office for some time to come. It is most fortunate for the army that it possesses such a vigorous Adjutant-General at the present moment, and one so sensible as Lord Wolseley is of our military shortcomings. For "low be it spoken" Lord Wolseley's views as to the state of our army are not to be gauged by his utterances at public banquets.

The death of Mr. Beecher has served to recall the fact that a good deal of the world's work is being done by men over the age of 70. Conspicuous examples like the Emperor of Germany, who is 90; Von Moltke, who is 86; M. Grevy, who is 76; Mr. Gladstone, who is 77, and Prince Bismarck, who is 71, naturally strikes the mind first; but were a careful investigation to be made of the conduct of great enterprises even in this country, where youth comes early to the front, the number of men born before 1816 who are occupying positions of conspicuous influence would be found to be surprisingly large. In Hamilton we have at least one business man, still actively at work, who is over 80 years of age, and the State of Connecticut possesses in a banker and railroad president, who has passed his 97th birthday, what we take to be the oldest specimen of an active business man in the world.

Notable Criminals.

Talmage said in his lecture the other night, "that the man who can sing, and won't sing, should be sent to Sing-Sing." That would be too severe. It is the man who can't sing, and will sing, and does sing, who ought to be sent to Sing-Sing. P. S. —For ninety-nine years.—Essex Liberal.

A window open a slight distance at both top and bottom, and a chimney draught is also open, are the only sure way of keeping pure air in a sleeping-room whose doors are closed.

SCOTT ACT FINES.

It Would Cost the Province $200,000 to Enforce the Scott Act in all the Scott Act Counties.

Mr. H. Totten, of the License Branch, testified before the committee of the Legislature Friday on items in the Public Accounts relating to the enforcement of the Scott Act. He explained that the salary of Mr. Young, Police Magistrate in Halton, had been paid last year by the Government out of the appropriation for his (Mr. Totten's) branch. The reason for this was that when the Scott Act was carried in Halton about five years ago the Government agreed to make an earnest effort to enforce it. Mr. Young was appointed, and his salary at first was paid out of the License Fund, made up of the fees from druggists' licenses and fines for convictions under the Act. But the Dominion Government having taken the fines out of the control of the Province, the Provincial Government, in order to keep faith with Mr. Young, paid his salary. But Mr. Totten stated in reply to a question that he would not recommend the payment in the same way another year. He explained that the difficulty in the enforcement of the Scott Act by the Province lay in the fact that the revenue from fines did not accrue to the Province, and some of the counties demanded these fines to be handed over to them instead of being used to enforce the Act. He declared also that there was great difficulty because of the lack of certain minor but necessary changes in the Act. There were doubts as to a number of points which were exceedingly harassing, hampering very much the action of the officials. In reply to a question he stated that in his opinion it would require $200,000 a year if the Provincial Government undertook to enforce the Scott Act in all the counties in which it had been declared to be in force. The loss through the Act to the Province in license fees and cost of enforcing the Scott Act he estimated at $100,000 a year, while at the same time he did not know of any particular reduction in the cost of administering justice or in the number of offenders against the law as a result of the Act. There were in some Scott Act counties reductions in the number of offenders, but there were reductions in other counties as well. In the course of his evidence Mr. Totten gave a number of facts relating to the administration of the departments and duties of the officers employed.

One Charitable Princess.

There is no member of the royal family who does so much really practical good work as Princess Christian, and it is a real blessing to the poor of Windsor that she should be settled near the town, as she is constantly engaged in laboring for them, and she sets an admirable example to her rich neighbors. There has been much distress in and about Windsor during the winter, and, thanks to a fund raised by Princess Christian, about 5,500 adults and children have received dinners; large quantities of coals and groceries have also been dispensed, and great numbers of blankets have been lent. The Princess has herself presided at most of the seventeen dinners which have been given.—London Truth.

An Obliging Guest.

A resident of the provinces has gone to pass a few days with some relatives in Paris. Becoming infatuated with the gay capital, he remained until patience on the part of his hosts ceased to be a virtue.

Too polite to openly remonstrate, they threw out a hint:

"Don't you think, my dear fellow," they said to the bore, "that your wife and children must miss you?"

"No doubt. Thanks for the suggestion; I'll send for them."

Business Difficulties.

The following assignments are reported: Ontario—Caledonia, Mrs. E. Bain, general store; Kirkhill, Duncan McLeod, grocer; Lowville, A. B. Culloden, general store; Renfrew, A. S. McLachlin, tailor. Manitoba—Winnipeg, J. Falconer, dry goods.

Canadian Curiosities.

Chief Justice Macdonald sent Crier O'Brien on a message. On his return Judge Weatherbee fined him $10 for being absent from court.—Halifax Herald.

Gilbert Patty, of College Corner, Ind., loved Della, the lovely daughter of farmer W. W. Copstick, and Della loved Gilbert. But her father was down on the young man, and said that he shouldn't have his daughter. So on a recent Sunday, when all the Copsticks were at church save Della, Gilbert drove up in a buggy and Della jumped in beside him, and away they went. But before they could find a Justice to marry them old man Copstick, on a fast horse, overtook them, yanked Della out of the buggy, set her on the horse, and mounting beside her galloped home, leaving Gilbert disconsolate.

GOD BLESS MOTHER.

(George Cooper in Brooklyn Magazine.)

A little child with flaxen hair,
And sunlit eyes, so sweet and fair,
Who kneels, when twilight darkens all,
And from whose loving lips there fall
The accents of this simple prayer:
"God bless!—God bless my mother!"

A youth upon Life's threshold wide,
Who leaves a gentle mother's side,
Yet keeps, enshrined within his breast,
Her words of warning—still the best;
And whispers, when temptation-tried
"God bless!—God bless my mother!"

A white-haired man who gazes back
Along life's weary, furrowed track,
And sees one face—an Angel's now!
Hears words of light that led aright,
And prays, with reverential brow:
"God bless!—God bless my mother!"

In China a son is responsible for the debts of his father, and this responsibility continues to the third generation. This enables a man to borrow money on the strength of having a son. In these parts, it is the son who gets credit on the strength of having a father.

Berlin Catholic papers comment with anger and scorn upon an order issued by Herr Krupp, forbidding the workers employed at Essen to read two local Catholic papers. In his circular Krupp says he considers the papers dangerous to the peaceful relations between employers and their workpeople, and prohibits all of his employees living in his dwellings from either keeping on hand or reading them. His overseers are directed to see that the ukase is carried out.

W.C.T.U.

"For God and Home and Native Land."

O Lord of Hosts! Thou living head
Who hold'st the nations in Thy hand,
Bless now the efforts that are made
For God and Home and Native Land.

"For God"—we would Thy love proclaim
And spend our days at Thy command,
Breathe on us then: our love inflame
For God and Home and Native Land.

"For Home"—ourselves we gladly give
To form a world encircling band
To war against strong drink, and live
For God and Home and Native Land.

"For Native Land"—for thy dear sake
We will the fatal foe withstand,
March on in strength, the kingdom take
For God and Home and Native Land.

Flesherton. —T. W.

(For The Advance.)

LOCAL SKETCHES.

OUR INSURANCE ADVANTAGES.

This title, "Local Sketches," was recently used by some other correspondent, but as it expresses so well the intent of these occasionals, there will be no need to change it on that account.

For religious, benevolent, social and educational institutions, Flesherton can show as high percentage as any place we know of. It has an active connection with and part in three Mutual Relief societies, which offer to its citizens advantages of which our forefathers never conceived. The "Ancient Order of United Workmen," the "Royal Templars of Temperance," and the "Sons of Temperance," each have features of excellence that call for the attention of every thoughtful person and of every one who wishes to live for something more than sordid self and the present moment.

It may be to the profit of some of your readers to consider a few reasons why such persons should avail themselves of insurance in one or other of these societies. The reasons are—

1st,—Biblical.—Plain as the light we read in I Timothy 5c. 3v., "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel," and each of these societies is intended especially and chiefly to enable men to make provision for "their own."

2nd,—Rational and Economic.—Reason and economy combine to require of us to make the utmost use of whatever Providence may place within our reach, and it would be as bad policy to let used time pass without sowing or harvest time without reaping, as to live within easy reach of securing insurance and still not use it. Alike they are the means of meeting a need which will surely be felt some day.

3rd,—Benevolent.—The needy are always with us, and of such the "widow and the fatherless" are pointed out as most deserving. If a respectable widow and her numerous children, in real need, appealed to you for help, you could not refuse her and still be worthy of a human name; and in each of these societies each payment you make generally goes direct and entire to help the "widow and the fatherless." Herein is solved one phase of the question of systematic benevolence.

4th,—Hygienical and Physical.—A person whom others are dependent upon, if taken by dangerous sickness, will naturally feel anxious about the future of those who may soon be left in a hard, cold world; and if there be no provision made for them, that anxiety will be greatly increased and will hinder recovery. History records cases of death through "sheer anxiety." And when, through timely foresight, an insurance has been effected, the burden is rolled away in this respect, and the mind at peace greatly helps to heal the body.

5th,—Moral Consistency.—Most people condemn the man who spends on selfish indulgence what his family needs. Such a man is generally and justly regarded as a selfish coward. But if those who condemn him spend on ambitious ventures or small indulgences what would pay the cost of an insurance policy, and so expose their loved ones to the risk of destitution, they are not much better. One man neglects "his own" while with them, and society justly regards him as an outcast. Another neglects the opportunity of providing for his own and when he is gone they come to want. Which of the two is the most guilty? Does responsibility to our loved ones end at death? is a question that many beg, but few realize its true answer.

6th—Domestic Felicity.—Sin is the source of all misery; selfishness is the essence of all sin. Selfishness in its domestic aspects can be ..... only by genuine love, and such love can only be developed and maintained by systematically seeking the good of others, and in few ways can this be done so well as by providing for loved ones benefits in which the provider can never share in a material sense. Every assessment paid should be an arrow shot into the heart of selfishness and a sacrifice on the altar of true love. "He laid down his life for us" and we best imitate Him when we make both life and death to minister to another's good.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

In our answers to last week's problems, typographical errors occurred in numbers 1 4. The answer to the first should have been 5 ac. 2 r. 30 yds. instead of 30 per.

The cost of cargo should have been 32,000 not 32,00.

Elizabeth A. Cameron of S. S. No. 9, Artemesia, sent correct solutions and answers to No's. 1 and 2 of issue of March 31st.

Answers to last week's problems:—
(1) (a) 389; (b) 440;
(2) 80 cents per bag.
(3) 2¼ hours.

The following pupils have sent correct answers to the number of questions indicated by the figures following their names.

FROM FLESHERTON P. S.

F. VanDusen (1), Fred Ayers (1), Martha Beatty (1), David Mathewson (1), Willie Sinclair (2), Annie Richardson (2), Lizzie Swanton (1).

FROM S. S. NO. 3, ARTEMESIA.

H. Aikins (2), Annie Aikins, J. J. White, Frankie Stewart, and Newten Large one each.

FROM S. S. NO. 9, ARTEMESIA.

Maggie English (3).

[The first part of the first example seems to have puzzled our school children. No one so far has given it a solution. We hope to see a still greater interest in this department. We are surprised that a greater number of our Flesherton pupils have not shown up. Formerly their solutions came to hand at noon on day of issue.—MATH. ED.]

A FEW MORE QUESTIONS.

(1) What length of rope tied to a stake, will be required to describe a circle enclosing half an acre? (Ans. in ft.)

(2) A box is 8 feet 6 in. long, 2ft. 8in. high and 2 ft. 1 inch wide. How much zinc will it take to line it inside, cover included (Ans. in sq. ft.)

(3) An agent sold a piano for $300 and by so doing gained 20% of cost. For how much should he have sold it, to gain 20% of selling-price?

(4) If the third of 6 be 3, what must the fourth of 20 be?

A slight cold often proves the forerunner of a complaint which may be fatal. Avoid this result by taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the best remedy for colds, coughs, and all throat and lung diseases.

We promised to discuss the question of a Mechanics' Institute for Flesherton at greater length this week than last, but our correspondents have got ahead of us and "blocked us out"—as it were, so to speak. Better luck next time.

Private Residence for Sale.

Brick House 28x35. Ten Rooms well finished all through. Wood Shed 11x22. Also good well in woodshed, with four lots. This is a choice property, and nicely situated on principal street in village. Will be sold cheap for Cash.

W. W. TRIMBLE.

Energy will do almost anything, but it cannot exist if the blood is impure and moves sluggishly in the veins. There is nothing so good for cleansing the blood and imparting energy to the system as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Price $1. Six bottles, $5. Sold by druggists.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf.)

Daniel in the Lions' Den.

A rich old speculator imagined that he know all about art, whereas he was an ignoramus in regard to everything, in fact, except in making money. This old fraud determined to make a valuable present to his son-in-law who was a preacher.

It was suggested to him that an oil painting representing Daniel in the Lions' Den would be very appropriate, so an order was given to a painter to produce the work of art. It was almost finished when the old speculator was called to inspect. It represented a cross section of the den with Daniel walking about among the lions. When the old man saw the picture he refused to take it. He insisted that if Daniel was in the Den neither he nor the lions could be seen, and the artist had to cover the lions and Dan. with a thick coat of black paint.

When the son-in-law was presented with the picture he was somewhat dazed to know what it represented.

"It represents Daniel in the Lions' Den," replied the art critic.

"But I don't see either of them."

"That makes no difference," said his father-in-law. "They are in there. I saw 'em myself."

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices.

R. TRIMBLE. (tf.)

McGREGOR & PARKE'S CARBOLIC CERATE.—Have you an old Sore, Cut, Bruise, Corn, Burn, Salt Rheum, Pimple, Blotches, Rough Hands or Face? If so, there is but one cure, namely, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. If you but try it, it will convince you. It costs but 25c. at the Drug Store.

Sons of Temperance.

Following are the officers for current quarter:—

Mr. J. E. Moore, W.P.
Miss Lizzie Fawcett, W.A.
Mr. C. J Sproule, Rec. Scribe.
Miss S. Smith, Assistant Rec. Scribe
Miss Christoe, Fin. Scribe.
Mr. W. Latimer, Treasurer.
Mr. W. Leitch, Conductor.
Miss Gayley, Assistant Conductor
Rev. Thos. Watson, Chaplain
Mr. Joseph Ward, Sentinel.

Death of Mr. Thos. Gordon.

The citizens generally who were acquainted with the veteran printer, Mr. Thos. Gordon, will regret to learn that he passed away to his last rest at noon today. For the past two years Mr. Gordon has been gradually failing, and this became more apparent within the past few months, when it was evident that even his rugged constitution could not much longer withstand wear of Time which bore so heavily upon him. About five weeks ago he was almost entirely confined to his bed and was scarcely able to be out since. The cause of his death was heart disease, aggravated with dropsy latterly. Two years ago Mr. Gordon retired from printing after having been employed sixteen years in this office. At that time he was made the recipient of a present and an address by the employers and employees of the office, who held him in high esteem, as also did every one who knew him. He was a staunch Reformer, and although never taking an active part in politics, he took a lively interest in them. At the time of his death the deceased was in his 74th year. He leaves an aged widow, in feeble health, to mourn his loss, but no family.

Mr. Gordon began his career as a printer on the 27th of September, 1827, when he enter'd upon an apprenticeship of seven years in the Courier now the Courant office, Elgin, Morayshire, Scotland. On the completion of this long term of service, under articles, he removed to London, where he lived thirty-four years, or until he imigrated to this country in 1867. During his stay in that great metropolis he worked on the Sun, the Morning Post, the Observer, with Messrs. Ibbitson & Palmer for nineteen years, and in other offices. On coming to Canada he went straight to Elora on account of his brother, the late Mr. Andrew Gordon, being a resident of that village. He only remained there however, a few months at that, working for Mr. John Smith, now of Guelph, who then published for a short time the Guelph Chronicle, and for the late Mr. Culloden, who owned the Wellington Times, not long since defunct. At New Year's, 1868, he came to Guelph and worked on the old Advertiser for a time, and subsequently on the Mercury. At the expiration of two months he returned to Elora and worked a short time in the Times office. After removing to Guelph, about eighteen years ago, he worked on this paper up to the 29th November, 1884. Thus it will be seen that Mr. Gordon was actively employed as a printer for the long period of 57 years, and at the time of his retirement was probable the oldest printer in Canada, so that in the death of Mr. Gordon the craft loses one of its oldest members.—Guelph Daily Mercury.

[Mr. John Gordon, of Flesherton, is a nephew of deceased. About one year ago he attended the golden wedding of deceased.]

To-day.

That is John Ruskin's motto, and a grand one it is. If you have a plan, carry it out to-day; if you have been meaning to do a certain kind act, to write a gentle letter to make a call that will carry comfort, do it to-day. How often the day drifts by while we go about our every-day duties in a half lethargy of benumbed will power. Up, then, to-day, and accomplish something! Down goes the temptation the pampered pet sin—conquered to-day just as it was beginning to draw its sluggish coils about us. The windows of our higher nature fly open, and in pours the sweet, pure air, straight from the skies. Let the past be past; yesterday is dead. It is bright, living, glorious TO-DAY.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FARM for SALE

—OR—

TO RENT.

BEING Lot 170, Con. 1 West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Well watered. Orchard. About 2½ miles from Flesherton. For full particulars apply to the undersigned,

JOHN O'MELIA,
Flesherton.

FARM FOR SALE.

BEING Lot 19, 1st E.T. & S.R., Artemesia, one mile from Flesherton, containing 50 acres, all cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Never-failing stream of water runs across farm; also a never-failing spring of water. New bank barn 36x56, with stone stabling full size of barn, underneath. Log House. Wood well and free from frost. Part payment down, time on balance. For full particulars, apply to

D. L. WHITE, Agt.,
Flesherton.

Mortgage Sale!

—OF—

VALUABLE VILLAGE PROPERTY.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by D. McCORMICK, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction, at ATKINSON'S HOTEL, in the Village of PRICEVILLE, on

Thursday, May 5th, 1887,

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following Lands and Premises in the Village of Priceville in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot No. 4 on the North side of Kincardine Street in the said Village of Priceville more particularly described as follows: commencing at a point 54 feet West of the South East Corner of said Lot number 4, thence Westerly 46 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 32 feet from the South West corner of said Lot number 4, thence Northerly 153 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 12 feet from rear of said Lot, thence Westerly 32 feet to Princess Street, thence Northerly 12 feet to rear of said Lot, thence Easterly 78 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 84 feet from the Eastern boundary of said Lot, thence Southerly 165 feet, be the same more or less, to the place of commencing. Containing by admeasurement 886 square yards, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a good 2 story frame building, size 30 feet x 40 feet, with cellar underneath used as a store and dwelling, occupying one of the best business stands in the Village; also a frame stable and a good well.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in one month thereafter without interest.

For further particulars apply to D. McCORMICK, Esq., Auctioneer; FRANCIS WAITE, Priceville; or to the undersigned,

J. W. FROST,
Vendor's Solicitor.

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887.

Mortgage Sale!

—OF—

Valuable Village Property.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction at MUNSHAW'S HOTEL in the Village of FLESHERTON, on Thursday, May 5th, 1887.

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following lands and premises in the Village of FLESHERTON in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot number 151 in the 1st Range North-East of the Toronto and Sydenham Road in the Township of Artemesia and may be more particulary known as Village Lots numbers 3 and 4 on the South-East side of Collingwood Street, in the Village of Flesherton, as laid out in a survey or sub-division of said Lot number 151 made by Wm. Spry, Esq., P.L.S. and re-surveyed and a map or plan thereof made by Thomas B. Gilliland, Esq., P.L.S. which map or plan is registered in the Registry Office of the South Riding of said County of Grey, and dated the 8th day of August, 1870, and containing by admeasurement about ¼ an acre, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a blacksmith shop, size 16x36 feet, a frame building used as a sash and door factory, 30x30 feet, and a frame dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in 1 month thereafter without interest.

For further particulars apply to A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, Flesherton; or to the undersigned,

J. W. FROST,
Vendor's Solicitor.

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887.

AUCTION SALE OF VALUABLE FARM Property in the Township of Euphrasia, in the County of Grey. There will be offered for sale by Public Auction at the REVERE HOUSE, in the Village of THORNBURY, in the County of Grey, on FRIDAY THE EIGHTH DAY OF APRIL, 1887, at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon all and singular that certain parcel or tract of land situate in the said Township of Euphrasia, containing one hundred acres more or less composed of the south half of lot number 2 in the second concession. This desirable property lies about nine miles from Flesherton, four and a-half miles from Eugenia, and two and a-half miles from Kimberley, and has erected thereon a hewed log house 20 x 26 and barn (part frame) 23 x 44 which are said to be in a fair state of repair. The property is well watered with a good spring creek running through it and conveniently situated as to travelled roads. There is a small orchard upon the property containing about sixty fruit trees. The soil is of a clay loam, about 40 acres are in a fair state of cultivation. The above premises will be offered for sale under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage (which will be produced at the time of sale) and will be offered for sale subject to a reserve bid. TERMS and conditions made known on day of sale. For further particulars apply to E. M. CHADWICK, Vendors Solicitor. Beatty, Chadwick, Blackstock & Galt, 58 Wellington Street East, Toronto.

Dated at Toronto this 3rd day of March A.D., 1887.

Mortgage Sale,

OF VALUABLE FARM PROPERTY!

Under power of Sale contained in a certain mortgage made by one Wm. Handy to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, will be sold by Public Auction at the CROWN HOTEL, in the Village of PRICEVILLE on TUESDAY, APRIL 12, 1887. At 11 o'clock a.m., the following valuable property, viz.

Lot number thirty in the 1st concession south of Durham Road containing fifty acres more or less, and also the Southerly thirty-three and a-third acres of Lot thirty in the first con. north of the Durham Road in the Township of Artemesia in the County of Grey.

There will also be sold under Mortgage made by Angus McLean (his wife Idillian McLean, joining therein to bar her dower,) at the same time and place, the following property: Lots numbers three and four, on the south side of the Collingwood Road in the Village of Priceville, being part of the Town plot of Priceville.

Terms easy and will be made known on Day of sale. For further particulars apply to

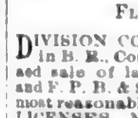
M. J. KENT,
London, Ontario.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S
DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON,
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store,
Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton

ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

☞ Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

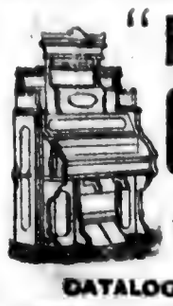
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR"—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 304. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, APRIL 14, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, [illegible]

Money Saved!

BY CLOSE BUYING!

Helps Pay Taxes.

FIVE years in Grey Co. this month and a fair paying business established through the generous patronage of the public. From Dundalk to Holland Centre, on the line, also Maxwell, Priceville, Kimberley, Engenia, Traversston, Rocklyn, Berkeley and other points have given me a good support. My thanks are due to all transient and home customers. I have endeavored to deserve patronage extended, by honest representation of ev'ry article sold; and my increasing business warrants me in assuming that my efforts to deal honorably at fair profits, have been appreciated.

I shall continue my business on the line of truthful representation, just exchange in giving value received, and a fair profit to meet obligations incurred. Stock will be kept complete in

Hampden Watches

My name on, WALTHAM Watches, four grades, a few BARTLETT'S at close prices, ELGIN Watches, and the exceptionally fine made full jewelled COLUMBUS movements. Watch warrants 1, 2, and 3 years, "covering breakages." Filled Gold cases Coin Silver cases, 2 to 5 oz., also Silverware 3 & 4 oz.

Ladies Gold Watches and Chains, R. F. Simmons' roll Gold Chains, best made, Draper's fire gilt. Seth Thomas and Ansonia spring & weight Clocks, a beautiful stock of Silverware, hollow and flat, for table use. Engagement Gem Rings, 18k. Wedding Rings, Brooches, Bar Pins & sets, Lockets and Necklets, Cuff & Collar Buttons, Silver Thimbles, Pebble Specks, Lazarus & Morris, Lenses, Boss Specks. I have $100.00 wholesale in Specks and can suit any sight.

Watch Repair book shows this week watches and clocks booked to No. 1233. My work gives satisfaction, is fully warranted & charges moderate. No second or catch charges after watches are left. Any one coming 15 miles and not finding my stock and prices as this advt. represents, I will pay legal mileage one way and expenses here, meals &c. Goods and work Warranted.

W. A. BROWN,

A Reliable Jeweller,

MARKDALE, - - - ONT.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Look out for Band Concert on Friday, April 22nd. See bills.

Mr. E. K. Richardson returned home last week from Owen Sound.

Get your Horse Bills printed neatly at THE ADVANCE office, where you can have your choice of "cuts."

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store is the place to get Spex—they keep the famous R. Laurance Spex & can fit any sight. 3t

Our thanks are due to our genial friend, Mr. A. M. Gibson, for late copies of Scotch papers.

Mr. T. Bates, of Sault St. Marie, is visiting friends in Flesherton. He looks as hearty as usual.

Don't fail to drop into Russell's, Flesherton, and look at his fine stock and remember 25 per cent. off for the next 30 days. 3t

Flesherton Station Annual Spring Show of Stallions will be held on Tuesday, April 19th. For full particulars, see bills.

East Grey Spring Show will be held in Flesherton, on Friday, April 22nd. See bills or write the Secretary—S. Damude, Esq.—for particulars. 3t.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices. R. TRIMBLE. (tf.)

Dr. Hixon, of Priceville, gave us a call on Monday last.

Mr. Malcolm Ferguson follows the plow on the Brown farm near Flesherton this year.

Mortgage sale of valuable property at Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, on Thursday, May 5th. See advt. and bills.

Mortgage sale of valuable property at Munshaw's hotel, Flesherton, on Thursday, May 5th. See advt. and bills.

Sealed tenders wanted for repairs to Town Hall. See advt. elsewhere in these columns.

Mr. Jos. McCormack, Flesherton, advertises White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale in this week's ADVANCE.

Plant your spring announcements in THE ADVANCE. The soil is fertile and the returns rich. Sow judiciously and early.

The "Maple Leaf Spelling" Association had a match with pupils of No. 3 on Thursday last. The Leafs were victorious.

Mr. Mayman White, of Collingwood Township, sold a three year old colt, sired by a celebrated Perchron stallion, to Mr. Keefer, of St Vincent for $200.

Medical Hall, Flesherton, is the place to get your Field and Garden Seeds cheap and good. See announcement elsewhere in these columns.

The people of this country, for thirty miles around, have come to the conclusion, that Russell is the Boss watchmaker and jeweller, so always take your watch to him. 3t

THIRTY DAYS!

POSITIVELY

FOR

30 Days Only

THAT THE

Great Slaughter!

Of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex, etc., at RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, Flesherton, will continue.

Russell has just returned from the city, where he has secured some bargains never before known in this section of country—in fact it is impossible to compete with Russell.—All his goods are marked in PLAIN FIGURES, at very low prices and, for the next thirty days only, he is actually going to give 25 per cent off on all cash sales over $1. Just imagine the finest grade of American Nickel Alarm Clocks at only $2, sold everywhere at $2.50 and $2.75. The finest grade of Plated Chains, beautiful patterns, for $1 00, sold everywhere at 2.25 and 2 50; the finest make of Clocks, beautiful Walnut Cases, from $2 75 up to $8.50, sold everywhere from 3.50 to 10.00. We are not making enough on these goods to pay your mileage or meals, neither will we give you a meal TO CATCH YOUR CUSTOM, but offer you finer goods at a little over half what you can get them for elsewhere! The finest make of Solid Silver Swiss Watches from $6.90 up; and the genuine American Watches from $3 50 up, bearing Warrants from 2½ to 5 years. ☞ We keep only the genuine goods, which bear long warrants. THIS IS THE CHANCE OF YOUR LIFE!—FOR THIRTY DAYS ONLY! As we must clear them out before the arrival of our Summer stock at that date.

In REPAIRING, everyone knows that Russell's work always gives satisfaction and his work has already given him the name of the boss watchmaker and jeweller in this section. DON'T FAIL TO CALL within the next 30 days and secure some of the GREAT BARGAINS NOW OFFERING.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

The Style is a handsome monthly fashion paper issued gratuitously by M. Richardson & Co., Flesherton. The April number, just issued, is a beauty. Get one free in Richardson & Co's store.

Mr. Smith, the famous Markdale barber, will be in Flesherton on Thursday next, Court day, to attend to the wants of his numerous customers and the public generally.

Special attention is directed to the advt. in another column headed "Public Notice." The sterling remedies therein contained are now offered for sale at the Medical Hall, Flesherton, and are highly recommended.

Mr Geo. Swanton was elected School Trustee on Saturday last, in place of Mr. W. G. Pickell resigned. Very little interest was manifested in the meeting. There were not a dozen ratepayers present.

Five ewes belonging to Mr. John K. Jamieson, Artemesia, dropped thirteen lambs this season—one of the ewes dropping four of the number, and another three. This is as remarkable as it is true.

Auction sale of farm stock, &c., at Lot 133 & 134, 1st W.T.&S.R., Artemesia, commencing at 1 o'clock on Saturday, April 16th, 1887. For particulars see bill. S. Cunningham, proprietor; A. S. Vandusen, auctioneer.

Our cattle fair brought together quite a number of buyers and sellers on Monday. The attendance was not so large as usual, however, owing largely no doubt to the state of the roads in some parts.

The social in the Methodist church, week before last, in aid of choir fund, was a most gratifying success, $17 being realized. The copy of above was mislaid, and hence its non-appearance in last week's Advance.

If all our friends were like Mr. Fred. Gee The Advance would soon have 1000 circulation. Within the past few days he has sent us two subscriptions, and is on the war-path for more. Long life to you, friend Gee! and may your shadow never grow less.

A large gathering of young people assembled at the residence of Squire Armstrong, on Wednesday evening of last week, to do honor to Dr. Armstrong and wife, prior to their departure from Flesherton. A very agreeable evening was spent by those present.

Mr. Joseph Ward did some wall papering for Mrs. Woodburne, at Glenfield Villa, Eugenia, and the latter wishes us to state that the job was performed in a skilful and workmanlike manner. Mr. Ward will be only too willing to be kept busy at this or any other honest labor.

Miss Mittie Frame, the celebrated St. Thomas elocutionist, will give one of her grand entertainments in the Methodist church, Flesherton, on Thursday evening, April 28th. The choir will assist. Admission only 15 cents. Tickets are now ready for distribution; secure one before the rush.

One of our popular Artemesia agriculturists had his hair cut close and his heavy beard shaved off on Monday by the Markdale tonsorial artist. Many people wondered who the mischief the p. A. a was, and whether it was an Indian or a white man had been after his scalp.

Flesherton is about to lose another excellent family in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. F. Bunt and Miss Mina Bunt, who will shortly remove to Markdale. Mr. Bunt, who goes to fill an engagement with Dr. Sproule, M. P., left for that place on Tuesday last. Mrs. and Miss Bunt will not take their departure for a few weeks yet.

MCGREGOR & PARKE'S CARBOLIC CERATE.—Have you an old Sore, Cut, Bruise, Corn, Bunion, Salt Rheum, Pimple, Blotches, Rough Hands or Face? If so, there is but one cure, namely, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. If you but try it, it will convince you. It costs but 25c. at the Drug Store.

Streetsville has now its own local paper, the Review, which is a credit to the place. Every week it comes to our sanctum brim-ful of short, snappy, spicy local and district news and well written editorials. Its about the first exchange we pick up to read, outside our own county. Its a daisy and no mistake about it.

We omitted to mention last week the return home, from "C" School of Infantry, Toronto, of our young friends, Mr. W. J. Davis and Mr. Joseph Field. Both young men spent three months in the Military School named, and, what is more important, carried off honors in the shape of first-class certificates. The young men are worthy members of Flesherton Volunteer company—Mr. J. Field holding the position of Bugler, and, no doubt, Mr. Davis will be promoted to the position of a non-commissioned officer.

No. 6 Company, 31st Batt.

The members of the above company will meet for drill on Saturday evenings at 7 o'clock. 25 recruits wanted. Apply to J. J. Field, Lieut.

A Watch Puzzle.

In how many different positions are the hour and minute hands of a clock or watch directly over each other? Will some of the Advance readers answer this question?

Died.

HAZARD.—At his father's residence, Artemesia, on Monday, April 11th, Draper Hazard—son of John Hazard, Esq., Twp. Collector—aged 23 years. Deceased was a young man of many sterling qualities and universally respected. His parents have the deep sympathy of the public in the sad hour of their bereavement.—ED.]

Accident.

The other day, while crushing some grain at Mr. J. Hickling's, Artemesia, Mr. J. W. Benson, of the same Township, got his arm badly hurt. He was sweeping up some of the grain from under the mill, when his coat sleeve caught in the gearing, drawing in the arm and tearing the flesh badly between the hand and elbow. No bones broken. Dr. Kerr, of Maxwell, was called in and dressed the wounded arm. The patient is now doing as well as could be expected.

For British Columbia.

Mr. Edward Stone and family, with his brother, Henry Stone, left by the 4 p. m. train on Tuesday, en route for British Columbia, the former to settle in his new home, the latter with the intention of locating a homestead there should he find the climate and country suitable. We wish them every success.—F. GEE.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Sneak Thieves in Flesherton.

We did not think there were any of the above class to be found in Flesherton, but recent events have dispelled the illusion. Friday night last a pane of glass (large) in the front window of Beecroft's restaurant was smashed and some confectionery stolen. Tuesday night another pane of glass was smashed into fragments and more confectionery abstracted by certain youthful sneak thieves, who have been "spotted" and will certainly be yanked up before the beak if the dangerous experiment is repeated. This is the fifth time that the window-smashing sneak-thief mania has been indulged in, but the young vagabonds can rest assured that they have got "to the end of the tether."

Catarrh, when chronic, becomes very offensive. It is impossible to be otherwise healthy, and, at the same time, afflicted with catarrh. This disagreeable disease, in its most obstinate and dangerous forms, can be cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Somewhere.

Somewhere the wind is blowing,
I thought as I toiled along
In the burning heat of the noontide
And the fancy made me strong
Yes, somewhere the wind is blowing,
Though here where I gasp and sigh,
Not a breath of air is stirring,
Not a cloud in the burning sky.

Somewhere the thing we long for
Exists on earth's wide bound,
Somewhere the sun is shining
When winter nips the ground.
Somewhere the flowers are springing
Somewhere the corn is brown,
And ready unto the harvest
To feed the hungry town

Somewhere the twilight gathers
And weary men lay by
The burden of the daytime,
And wrapped in slumber lie.
Somewhere the day is breaking,
And gloom and darkness flee,
Though storms our bark are tossing,
There's somewhere a placid sea.

And thus, I thought, 'tis always,
In this mysterious life,
There's always gladness somewhere
In spite of its pain and strife,
And somewhere the sin and sorrow
Of earth are known no more,
Somewhere our weary spirits
Shall find a peaceful shore.

Somewhere the things that try us
Shall all have passed away,
And doubt and fear no longer
Impede the perfect day
O brother, though the darkness
Around thy soul be cast,
The earth is rolling sunward
And light shall come at last

—Alfred Capel Shaw, in Good Words

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

"One word, my father, and I will trouble thine ears no more, since for thee my voice shall be silent forever. When the time has come for thee to die, and thou dost pass, as the white men say, up 'into the heavens above, and thy sight returns, and thou art once more a man, then turn thee and cry with a loud voice: 'Mazooku, son of Ingoluvu, of the tribe of the Maquilisini, where art thou, O my dog? come thou and serve me.' And surely, if I still live, then shall I hear thy voice, and groan and die, that I may pass to thee; and if I be already dead, then shall I be there at thy side even as thou callest. This thou wilt do for me, O my father and my chief, because, lo! I have loved thee as the child loves her who suckled it, and I would look upon thy face again, O my father from the olden time, my chief from generation to generation.'

"If it be in my power, this I will do, Mazooku."

The great Zulu drew himself up, raised his spear, and for the first and last time in his life gave Ernest the royal salute—to which, by-the-way, he had no right at all "Bayette, Bayette!" Then he turned and ran swiftly thence, nor would he see Ernest again before he went. "The pain of death was over," he said.

As the sound of his footsteps grew faint, Ernest sighed.

"There goes our last link with South Africa, Jeremy, my boy. It makes me very sad, and sometimes I think that, as he says, it is a pity we did not go under with Alston and the others. It would all have been over now."

"Thank you," said Jeremy, after reflecting: "on the whole, I am pretty comfortable as I am."

CHAPTER XLIV

MR. CARDUS ACCOMPLISHES HIS REVENGE.

Mr. de Talor owed his great wealth not to his own talents, but to a lucky secret in the manufacture of the grease used on railways discovered by his father. Talor pere had been a railway-guard till his discovery brought him wealth. He was a shrewd man, however, and on his sudden accession to fortune did his best to make a gentleman of his only son, at that date a lad of fifteen; but it was too late, the associations and habits of childhood are not easily overcome, and no earthly power or education could accomplish the desired object. When his son was twenty years of age, old Jack Talor died, and his son succeeded to his large fortune and a railway grease business which supplied the principal markets of the world.

This son had inherited a good deal of his father's shrewdness, and set himself to make the best of his advantages. First he placed a "de" before his name, and assumed a canting crest. Next he bought the Ceswick Ness estates, and bloomed into a country gentleman. It was shortly after this latter event that he made a mistake and fell in love with the beauty of the neighborhood, Mary Atterleigh. But Mary Atterleigh would have none of him, being at the time secretly engaged to Mr. Cardus. In vain did he resort to every possible means to shake her resolution, even going so far as to try to bribe her father to put pressure upon her; but at this time old Atterleigh, "Hard-riding Atterleigh," as he was called, was well off, and resisted his advances, whereupon De Talor, in a fit of pique, married another woman, who was only too glad to put up with his vulgarity in consideration of his wealth and position as a country magnate.

Shortly afterward three events occurred almost simultaneously. "Hard-riding Atterleigh" got into money difficulties through over-gratification of his passion for hounds and horses; Mr. Cardus was taken abroad for the best part of a year in connection with a business matter, and a man named Jones, a friend of Mr. de Talor's staying in his house at the time, fell in love with Mary Atterleigh. Herein De Talor saw an opportunity of revenge upon his rival, Mr. Cardus. He urged upon Jones that his real road to the possession of the lady lay through the pocket of her father, and even went so far as to advance him the necessary funds to bribe Atterleigh; for, though Jones was well off, he could not at such short notice lay hands upon a sufficient sum in cash to serve his ends.

The plot succeded. Atterleigh's scruples were overcome as easily as the scruples of men in his position without principle to back them generally are, and pressure of a most outrageous sort was brought to bear upon the gentle-minded Mary, with the result that when Mr. Cardus returned from abroad he found his affianced bride the wife of another man, who became in due course the father of Jeremy and Dolly

This cruel and most unexpected bereavement drove Mr. Cardus partially mad, and, when he came to himself, there arose in his mind a monomania for revenge on all concerned in bringing it about. It became the passion and object of his life. Directing all his remarkable intelligence and energy to the matter, he early discovered the heinous part that De Talor had played in the plot, and swore to devote his life to the unholy purpose of avenging it. For years he pursued his enemy, trying plan after plan to achieve his ruin, and as one failed, fell back upon another. But to ruin a man of De Talor's wealth was no easy matter, especially when, as in the present instance, the avenger was obliged to work like a mole in the dark, never allowing his enemy to suspect that he was other than a friend. How he ultimately achieved his purpose the reader shall now learn.

Ernest and Dorothy had been married about three weeks, and the latter was just beginning to get accustomed to hearing herself called Lady Kershaw, when one morning a dog-cart drove up to the door, and out of it emerged Mr. de Talor.

"Dear me, how Mr. de Talor has changed of late!" said Dorothy, who was looking out of the window.

"How? Has he grown less like a butcher?" asked Ernest.

"No," she answered; "but he looks like a worn-up butcher about to go through the Bankruptcy Court."

"Butchers never go bankrupt," said Ernest, and at that moment Mr. de Talor came in.

Dorothy was right, the man was much changed. The fat cheeks were flabby and fallen, the insolent air was gone, and he was so shrunken that he looked not more than half his former size.

"How do you do, Lady Kershaw? I saw Cardus 'ad got some one with him, so I drove round to pay my respects and congratulate the bride.—Why, bless me, Sir Ernest, you've grown since I saw you last! Ah, we used to be great friends then. You remember how you used to come and shoot up at the Ness" (he had once or twice given the two lads a day's rabbit-shooting). "But bless me, I hear that you have become quite a fire-eater since then, and been knocking over the niggers right and left—eh?"

He paused for breath, and Ernest said a few words, not many, for he disliked the man's flattery as much as in past years he used to dislike his insolence.

"Ah," went on De Talor, looking up and pointing to the case containing the witch's head, "I see you've still got that beastly thing that your brother once showed me; I thought it was a clock, and he pretty well frightened me out of my wits. Now I think of it, I've never 'ad any luck since I saw that thing."

At this moment the housekeeper Grice came to say that Mr. Cardus was ready to see Mr. de Talor if he would step into the office.

Dorothy thought that their visitor turned paler at this news, and it evidently occupied his mind sufficiently to cause him to hurry from the room without bidding them good-by.

When Mr. de Talor entered the office he found the lawyer pacing up and down

"How do you do, Cardus?" he said jauntily.

"How do you do, Mr. de Talor?" was the cold reply.

De Talor walked to the glass door and looked at the glowing mass of blooming orchids.

"Pretty flowers, Cardus, those, very. Orchids, ain't they? Must have cost you a pot of money."

"They have not cost me much, Mr. de Talor; I have reared most of them."

"Then you are lucky; the bill my man gives me for my orchids is something awful."

"You did not come to speak to me about orchids, Mr. de Talor."

"No, Cardus, I didn't, business first, pleasure afterwards eh?"

"Yes," said Mr. Cardus in his soft, jerky way. "Business first, pleasure afterward."

Mr. de Talor fidgeted his legs about.

"Well, Cardus, about that mortgage. You are going to give me a little more time, I hope?"

"On the contrary, Mr. de Talor, the interest being now eight months overdue, I have given my London agent orders to foreclose, for I don't conduct such business myself."

De Talor turned pale. "Foreclose! Good God, Cardus! it is not possible, on such an old friend too?"

"Excuse me, it is not only possible, but a fact. Business is business, even where old friends are concerned."

"But if you foreclose, what is to become of me, Cardus?"

"That, I imagine, is a matter for your exclusive consideration."

His visitor gasped, and looked like an unfortunate fish suddenly pulled out of the water.

"Let us recapitulate the facts. I have at different periods within the last several years lent you sums of money secured on your landed estates at Ceswick's Ness and the neighborhood, amounting in all" referring to a paper—" to one hundred and seventy-six thousand five hundred and thirty-eight pounds ten shillings and four pence; or, reckoning in the overdue interest, to one hundred and seventy-nine thousand and fifty-two pounds eight shillings. That is so, I think."

"Yes, I suppose so, Cardus."

"There is no supposition about it. The documents prove it."

"Well, Cardus?"

"Well, Mr. de Talor; and now, as you cannot pay, I have instructed my London agents to commence an action in Chancery for the sale of the lands, and to buy in the property. It is a most desirable property."

"O Cardus, don't be 'ard on me! I am an old man now, and you led me into this speculation."

"Mr. de Talor, I also am an old man; if not very old in years, at least as old as Methuselah in heart."

"I don't understand it all, Cardus."

"It will give me the greatest pleasure to explain. But to do so, I must go back a little. Some ten or twelve years ago, you may remember," he began, sitting down with his back to the light, which struck full on the wretched De Talor's face, "that a firm named Rastrick and Codley took out a patent for a new railway-grease, and set up an establishment in Manchester not far from the famous De Talor house, which was established by your father."

"Yes, curse them!" groaned De Talor.

Mr. Cardus smiled. "By all means curse them. But what did this enterprising firm do, Mr. de Talor? They set to work, and sold a grease superior to the article manufactured by your house, at about eighteen per cent. cheaper. But the De Talor house had the ear of the markets, and the contracts with all the leading lines and Continental firms, and for a while it seemed as though the new house must go to the wall; and if they had not had considerable capital at command they must have gone to the wall."

"Ah, and where did they get it from? That's the mystery," said De Talor.

"Precisely; that was the mystery. I shall clear it up a little presently. To return; after a while the buyers began to find that Rastrick and Codley's grease was a better grease and a cheaper grease, and as the contracts lapsed, the companies renewed them, not with the De Talor house but with the house of Rastrick and Codley. Doubtless you remember."

Mr. de Talor groaned in acquiescence, and the lawyer continued:

"In time this state of affairs produced its natural results: De Talor's house was shopped up, and the bulk of the trade fell into the hands of the new firm."

"Ah, I should just like to know who they really were—the low sneaks!"

"Would you? I will tell you. The firm of Rastrick and Codley were—Reginald Cardus, Esq., Solicitor of Dum's Ness."

Mr. de Talor struggled out of his chair, looked wildly at the lawyer and sank down again.

"You look ill; may I offer you a glass of wine?"

The wretched man shook his head.

"Very good. Doubtless you are curious to know how I, a lawyer, and not otherwise connected with Manchester, obtained the monopoly of the grease-trade, which is, by-the-way, at this moment paying very well. I will satisfy your curiosity. I have always had a mania for taking up inventions, quite quietly, and in the names of others. Sometimes I have lost; on the whole, I have made largely. But whether I have made or lost, the inventors have, as a rule, never known who was backing them. One day, one lucky day, this railway grease patent was brought to my notice. I took it up and invested fifty thousand in it straight off the reel. Then I invested another fifty thousand. Still your firm cut my throat. I made an effort, and invested a third fifty thousand. Had I failed, I should then have been a ruined man; I had strained my credit to the utmost. But fortune favors the brave, Mr. de Talor, and I succeeded. It was your firm that failed. I have paid all my debts, and I reckon that the railway-grease concern is worth, after paying liabilities, some two hundred thousand pounds. If you should care to go in for it, Messrs. Rastrick and Codley will, I have no doubt, be most happy to treat with you. It has served its purpose, and is now in the market."

De Talor looked at him in amazement. He was too upset to speak.

"So much, Mr. de Talor, for my share in the grease episode. The failure of your firm, or rather its stoppage from loss of trade, left you still a rich man, but only half as rich as you had been. And this, you remember, made you furious. You could not bear the idea of losing money; you would rather have lost blood from your veins than sovereigns from your purse. When you thought the grease which had melted in the fire of competition, you could have wept tears of rage. In this plight you came to me to ask advice."

"Yes, and you told me to speculate."

"Not quite accurate, Mr. de Talor. I said I remember the words well 'You are an able man, and understand the money-market; why don't you take advantage of these fluctuating times and recoup yourself for all you have lost? The prospect of gain tempted you, Mr. de Talor, and you jumped at the idea. You asked me to introduce you to a reliable firm, and I introduced you to Messrs. Campsey and Ash, one of the best in the City."

"Confound them for a set of rogues!" answered De Talor.

"Rogues! I am sorry you think so, for I have an interest in their business."

"Good heavens! what next?" groaned De Talor.

"Well, notwithstanding the best efforts of Messrs. Campsey and Ash on your behalf, in pursuance of such instructions as you from time to time communicated to them, and to which you can no doubt refer if you please, things went wrong with you, Mr. de Talor, and year by year, when your balance-sheet was sent in, you found that you had lost more than you gained. At last, one unlucky day, about three years ago, you made a plunge against the advice, you may remember, of Messrs. Campsey and Ash, and lost. It was after that, that I began to lend you money. The first loan was for fifty thousand, then came more losses and more loans, till at length we have reached the present state of affairs."

"O Cardus, you don't mean to sell me up, do you? What shall I do without money? And think of my daughters, 'ow will they manage without their comfort?! Give me time. What makes you so 'ard on me?"

Mr. Cardus had been walking up and down the room rapidly. At De Talor's words he stopped, and going to a dispatch box, unlocked it, and drew from a bundle of documents a yellow piece of stamped paper. It was a cancelled bill for ten thousand pounds in the favor of Jonas de Talor, Esquire. This bill he came and held before his visitor's eyes.

"That, I believe, is your signature," he said, quietly, pointing to the receipt written across the bill

De Talor turned almost livid with fear, and his lips and hands began to tremble.

"Where did you get that?" he asked.

Mr. Cardus regarded him, or rather all round him, with the melancholy black eyes that never looked straight at anything, and yet saw everything, and then answered:

"Among your friend Jones' papers You scoundrel!" he went on, with a sudden change of manner, "now perhaps you begin to understand why I have hunted you down step by step; why for thirty years I have waited, and watched, and failed, and at last succeeded. It is for the sake of Mary Atterleigh. It was you, who, infuriated because she would have none of such a coarse brute, set the man Jones on to her. It was you who lent him the money with which to buy her from old Atterleigh. There lies the proof before you. By-the-way, Jones need never have repaid you that ten thousand pounds, for it was marriage-brokage, and therefore not recoverable at law. It was you, I say, who were the first cause of my life being laid waste, and who nearly drove me to the mad-house; ay! who did drive Mary, my betrothed wife, into the arms of that fellow, whence, God be praised, she soon passed to her rest."

Mr. Cardus paused, breathing quick with suppressed rage and excitement; the large white eyebrows contracted till they nearly met, and, abandoning his usual habit, he looked straight into the eyes of the abject creature in the chair before him.

"It's a long while ago, Cardus; can't you forgive, and let bygones be bygones?"

"Forgive!—yes, for my own sake I could forgive, but for her sake, whom you first dishonored and then killed, I will never forgive. Where are your companions in guilt? Jones is dead; I ruined him. Atterleigh is there; I did not ruin him, because after all he was the author of Mary's life, but his ill-gotten gains did him no good; a higher power than mine took vengeance on his crime, and I saved him from the madhouse. And Jones' children, they are here too, for once they lay beneath her breast. But do you think that I will spare you?—you coarse, arrogant knave—you who spawned the plot: no, not if it were to cost me my own life, would I forego one jot or tittle of my revenge!"

At that moment Mr. Cardus happened to look up, and saw through the glass part of his door of his office, of which the curtain was partially drawn, the wild-looking head of Hard-riding Atterleigh. He appeared to be looking through the door, for his eyes, in which there was a very peculiar look, were fixed intently upon Mr. Cardus' face. When he saw that he was observed, he vanished.

"Now go," said the lawyer sternly to the prostrate De Talor; "and never let me see your face again!"

"But I haven't any money; where am I to go?" groaned De Talor.

"Wherever you like, Mr. de Talor; this is a free country, but, if I had control of your destination, it should be—to the devil!"

The wretched man staggered up.

"All right, Cardus; I'll go, I'll go. You've got it all your own way now. You are —— hard, you are; but perhaps you'll get it taken out of you some day. I'm glad you never got hold of Mary; it must have been pleasant to you to see her marry Jones!"

In another second he was gone, and Mr. Cardus was left thinking, among other things, of that look in old Atterleigh's eyes which he could not get out of his mind. Thus did he finally accomplish the revenge to which he had devoted his life.

CHAPTER XLV.

MAD ATTERLEIGH'S LAST RIDE.

A month had passed since Mr. de Talor had crept, utterly crushed, from the presence of the man whom Providence had appointed to mete him out his due. During this time Mr. Cardus had been busy from morning till night. He was always a busy man, writing daily with his own hand an almost incredible number of letters, for he carried on all, or nearly all, his great affairs by correspondence, but of late, his work seemed to have doubled.

In the course of that month the society in the neighborhood of Kesterwick experienced a pleasurable sensation of excitement, for suddenly the De Talor family vanished off the face of the Kesterwick world, and the Ceswick Ness estates, after being advertised, were put up for sale, and bought, so said report, by a London firm of lawyers on behalf of an unknown client. The De Talors were gone, where to nobody knew, nor did they much care to inquire that is, with the exception of the servants whose wages were left unpaid, and the tradespeople to whom large sums were owing. They inquired, vigorously enough, but without the smallest result; the De Talors had gone and left no trace, except the trace of bankruptcy, and Kesterwick knew them no more, but was glad over the sensation made by their disappearance.

But on one Saturday Mr. Cardus' business seemed to come to a sudden stop. He wrote some letters and put them to go to post, and then he went to admire his orchids

"Life," he said aloud to himself, "shall be all orchids now; my work is done. I will build a new house for Brazilian sorts, and spend two hundred pounds on stocking it. Well, I can afford it."

This was about five o'clock. Half an hour later, when he had well examined his flowers, he strolled out Titheburgh Abbey way, and here he met Ernest and his wife who had been sitting in their favorite spot.

"Well, my dears," he said, "and how are you?"

"Pretty jolly, uncle, thank you, and how are you?"

"I? Oh, I am very jolly indeed for an old man; as jolly as an individual who has just bid good-by to work forever should be," he said.

"Why, Reginald, what do you mean?"

"Mean, Dorothy, my dear? I mean that I have wound up my affairs and retired on a modest competence. Ah, you young people should be grateful to me, for let me tell you that everything is now in apple-pie order, and when I slip off you will have no trouble at all, except to pay the probate duty, and that will be considerable. I never quite knew till a week ago how rich I was; but, as I said the other day, everything I have touched has turned to gold. It will be a large fortune for you to manage, my dears; you will find it a great responsibility."

"I hope you will live many years to manage it yourself," said Ernest.

"Ah, I don't know, I am pretty tough; but who can see the future? Dolly, my dear girl," he went on in a dreamy way, "you are growing like your mother. Do you know I sometimes think that I am not far off her now? you see I speak plainly to you two. Years ago I used to think—that is, sometimes—that your mother was dust and nothing more; that she had left me forever; but of late I have changed my ideas. I have seen," he went on, speaking in an absent way as though he were meditating to himself, "how wonderfully Providence works even in the affairs of this imperfect world, and I begin to believe that there must be a place where it allows itself a larger development. Yes, I think I shall find your mother somewhere, Dorothy, my dear. I seem to feel her very near me sometimes. Well, I have avenged her."

"I think that you will find her, Reginald," she answered; "but your vengeance is wicked and wrong. I have often made bold to tell you so, though sometimes you have been angry with me, and I tell you so again. It can only bring evil with it. What have we, poor creatures, who do not understand the reasons of things, and can scarcely see an inch before our noses, to do with vengeance?"

(To be continued.)

Sure Cure for the Measles.

One of the most remarkable pathological cases on record has just occurred at Perigneux. A patient in the hospital suffering from measles jumped out of one of the windows at 4 o'clock in the morning, and fell a distance of four or five yards in the garden. He was at the time at the period of the strongest eruption. Awakened by the pain caused by his fall, he walked about in his night-shirt for some time, the thermometer standing at 8 degrees below the freezing point, until he succeeded in waking the concierge, when he returned to bed. The next day his complaint had entirely disappeared. This mode of cure, however, is not generally recommended by the faculty.—Galignani's Messenger.

Punch, Brothers, Punch.

Bobby was at church for the first time, and, after he had dropped a nickle into the contribution box, he turned to his mother and whispered audibly:

"Ma, that man didn't ring up my fare."

Ingratitude.

The man who would have remained for ever in the obscurity to which he was entitled, except for the notoriety the press has absurdly given him, is always complaining about the d——d newspapers."—Texas Siftings.

It Saved My Wife's Life.

This is the report of a Princess street gentleman who had the opportunity a few nights since of testing Polson's NERVILINE, the great pain cure. Be prepared for any emergency by having a bottle of Nerviline at hand. It only costs 10 cents to test it, as you can buy test bottles at any drug store. Get a 10 or 25 cent bottle to-day. Sure in rheumatism, neuralgia, cramps, colic, headache. Nerviline, the sure pop pain cure. All druggists, 25 cents a bottle.

Edward Scruggs, of Nashville, Tenn., is totally blind, and goes about led by a negro boy. Yet he transacts business better than most men, and in the past year has made $100,000 by real estate speculation.

Mr. W. Cushman, of Petoskey, Mich., states that he was afflicted with rheumatism twenty-four years, and two large bottles of McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant has done him one hundred dollars' worth of good in relieving his distress.

"You will want to enter something for the county fair, I suppose, Mr. Hayseed?" said the chairman of the agricultural society. "Waal, yes," replied Mr. Hayseed; "you kin put me down for the biggest hog in the country."—Harper's Bazar.

One Cent Invested

in a postal card on which to send your address to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, will, by return mail, bring you free, particulars about work that both sexes, of all ages, can do, and live at home, wherever they are located, earning thereby from $5 to $25 per day, and upwards. Some have earned over $50 in a single day Capital not required; you are started free

Right living is the prime object of all religions, and if you have caught a variety that does not teach you that you might as well label it counterfeit at once.

RACE HORSES, ROADSTERS,

Trotters, Carriage Horses, Saddle Horses, Hunters, Steeplechasers and Work Horses, Fillies and Colts, Brood Mares.

STALLIONS

Thoroughbred "KINKEAD,"

Also, General Purpose Stallion, three year old.

The undersigned, instructed by ROBERT CRAIK, ESQ., M. D., and MESSRS DAWES & CO., will sell at the "ARDGOWAN FARM," Lachine, Quebec,

On SATURDAY, 16th April, 35 HEAD SUPERIOR HORSES,

Suitable for all purposes as above

Catalogues are being prepared and will be ready for mailing on application after 25th March

Those desiring to purchase really good horses should attend this sale. Young racing stock will be worked up to day of sale, consequently no time is being lost.

Sale at TWO o'clock

WILLIAM H. ARNTON,
Auctioneer

BLUEBERRY. A valuable fruit to grow for pleasure and profit Price list free to all Agents wanted to sell plants. Outfit free. Address, WILLOW RIDGE FRUIT FARM, Portland, Mich.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

D C N L. 15. 87.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

Mr. Gibson (Huron) moved for a return of amounts received by county or city treasurers throughout the Province on account of fines imposed for violation of the Scott Act.—Carried.

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton) moved the second reading of the Bill respecting exemptions from seizure under execution. He said that there was nothing very radical in the extension of exemptions which he proposed, the object being to adapt the old system to the necessities of modern life. For instance, the old exemption law made no provision for the exemption of a sewing machine, which in many houses was now a necessity. The details could be considered by a committee.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to a committee composed of Messrs. Gibson (Hamilton), Hardy, Meredith, Clarke (Wellington), E. F. Clarke, French, Awrey, Evanturel, Wood (Hastings), Chamberlain, Stratton, Guthrie, Metcalfe, Garson, Ingram, Leys, Smith.

Mr. Balfour moved the second reading of a Bill to amend the game laws by allowing spring shooting of all ducks except the mallard, bat and wood duck. He said that in the county of Essex, while the Canadians were debarred from spring shooting, the Americans came in boats, shot all the game they wanted and went back, defying the Canadian officers. He read a letter giving a vivid description of the American pirates and robbers who came over in armed cruisers and insulted and threatened any one who tried to interfere with them. He was willing that the permission to shoot ducks in the spring be confined to the section of the Province where this grievance existed.

Mr. Sprague said he was glad to hear that the member for South Essex was willing to have the Bill applied only to the southwestern part of Ontario. He would be opposed to general spring shooting.

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton) said he was strongly opposed to opening up the game laws, which were now considered to be the best the Province ever had.

Mr. Balfour, replying to the objections raised against the Bill, said that the law of last session had been secured mainly through the influence of members of the gun clubs, who were a special class and could afford to spend money to send delegates to represent their interest, which the people could not do. He was surprised to see the member for Lincoln (Mr. Garson) championing the views of the special class as against the rights of the people. In view of the feeling manifested against the spearing clause, he would drop it, though he could give reason for having it passed. In Essex the muskrats were very numerous and did great damage to ditches and in other ways. But that was a local question, perhaps, and he would not urge the change. But he saw no reason why the other clauses should not pass, and he hoped that the members who represented the people and not gun clubs would do all they could to have this change in the law made. (Cries of "Order, order").

The House divided on Mr. Garson's amendment in favor of the six months' hoist, which was carried—Yeas, 44; nays, 34.

Hon. O. Mowat, in moving the House into committee on the whole on the resolution regarding the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park, said that the Falls of Niagara had for many years been the most attractive place of resort on this continent, and that the interest in them was extending. In a single day they were visited by ten thousand people, and they were visited annually by from 200,000 to 300,000 people. Even before the State of New York took possession of the park the number of visitors was between 100,000 and 200,000 persons. A still more remarkable proof of the general interest in the Falls was afforded by the action of the people of the State of New York. They had lately purchased over 100 acres of land in the neighborhood of the Falls for an International Park, and had paid about $1,500,000 for the land. This was all the more remarkable when it was remembered that the revenues of the State are raised by direct taxation, so that the people, in a State where manhood suffrage prevails, had voluntarily taxed themselves for this amount, in order to restore the scenery about the Falls. All the newspapers and all the parties had supported the movement. It was a no-party movement there, as here. In Ontario, too, there had been no opposition to any step that had been taken; his hon. friends opposite had manifested as much interest in the project as had the Government and its supporters. There was thus every indication that the people were fairly alive to the importance of the duty of preserving the beauty of the natural scenery about the Falls. This was the object of the whole movement. All that was beautiful about the Falls was gradually being destroyed by the artificial means adopted for money-making purposes. The first step taken by the Ontario Government was to endeavor to induce the Dominion Government to undertake the work, and with that view the Legislature passed an Act to give the Dominion Government all the necessary power. Negotiations took place to induce them to undertake the work, and ultimately to induce them to undertake a portion of it. These negotiations were unsuccessful. Although he could not speak with authority he believed that the Ontario members of the Dominion Government favored the project, but the other Ministers did not see the matter in the same light. Thereupon the Ontario Legislature passed an Act with a view to having the matter dealt with within its own jurisdiction. In the preliminary proceedings they had the valuable assistance of three commissioners. The Act provided that the commissioners should have a survey of the property made in order to determine exactly what land it was necessary to include in the Park, and to ascertain by means of a conditional agreement or by arbitration what the land would cost. In consequence of the award not having been completed last session the Bill which was then introduced was withdrawn. It was proposed that the money should be raised by debentures charged on the revenues of the Park with a guarantee by the Province. There was no ground for doubting that the revenues would be amply sufficient to pay all expenses, to pay the interest on the debentures and to provide a sinking fund. The debentures would extend over forty years. The park would be perfectly free, and charges would be made only where guides were needed or where expenditure was required for mechanical appliances, such as inclined planes. It was calculated that a small charge, say fifty cents as a maximum, to those who used these advantages would be sufficient. On the American side a small charge was made for the same purpose. Assuming that 250,000 people visited the Falls annually, it would be necessary for only a third of that number to pay this small charge in order to afford sufficient revenue. The attractions on the Canadian side were much greater than on the other. The award for the land would amount to $400,000; the second head of expenses would be the costs of the arbitrators, and the third would be the cost of the works that would have to be constructed. It was proposed not to make the place a flower garden, but to retain in a state of nature what was in that condition now, to remove unsightly buildings and by planting to restore the sites of these buildings as far as possible to a state of nature, and to remove all obstructions which would prevent people going out and enjoying the sights. They proposed to call the park the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park.

Hon. Mr. Mowat concluded by moving that the House go into committee on the resolutions.

Mr. Meredith said although this matter had been before the House before the Province was not committed to it. Judging by the report of the commissioners, the intention was to establish this park without laying any burden upon the Province. But there were not sufficient facts before the House to show the members that there was a fair chance of this expectation being realized. In the first place, it was expected to involve an expenditure of $500,000, of which $200,000 was the estimated cost of the property to be appropriated. But it was found that $462,000 would be the cost of the property, and yet only $25,000 was added to the total estimate. As he (Mr. Meredith) understood the locality, all the property between the road and the river was the property of the Crown. In that case he could see no reason for the purchase of some of the property, especially that of Mr. Macklin and Mr. Davis. The Attorney-General estimated that a fee of 50 cents would be sufficient to clear the expenses. But there were not facts before the House to enable members to judge of that, and he threw the responsibility upon gentlemen opposite. He thought $500,000 too large a sum to be expended on this scheme if the Province was to be responsible for the expenditure. With regard to the name, while not yielding to the Premier in his loyalty and devotion to the Sovereign, he would have been quite content, and, indeed, would have preferred, to see the name by which the park must always be known among the people—Niagara Falls Park. He did not oppose the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said he had not given the estimates of expenditure upon the improvements, thinking they could best be given in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was carried, and the House went into Committee of the Whole upon the resolutions.

Mr. Meredith asked why it was proposed to endorse securities to be issued by the Commissioners instead of issuing the securities of the Province direct.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said the object was to keep this entirely distinct from the other liabilities of the Province.

The resolutions were carried and a Bill based upon them was introduced and read the first time.

Hon. Mr. Hardy moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole upon the Bill for the Protection of Women in certain cases. He explained that it was to bring within the condemnation of the law a man guilty of seducing a woman who was at the time an inmate of a public institution, thus extending the law, which now prohibits the seduction of lunatic women in the asylums. After some discussion the House went into committee on the Bill and passed and reported it without amendment.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Mowat, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill respecting the revised statutes of Ontario, which was considered and reported.

Hon. G. W. Ross moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act respecting public schools. He explained that one section provided for a declaration of trustees by the chairman or secretary having charge of the polling. Under the present law a trustee was required to make a declaration after election, which they sometimes failed to do, and a litigious person could put them to some inconvenience. It was proposed also to impose an additional tax on unoccupied lands. These lands were sometimes held for speculative purposes, and it was unfair to the people of the district that they should be relieved from taxation. As the School Law was being consolidated with the others the latest modifications decided upon were now proposed, and he hoped the result would be a School Law which would not need serious alteration for years to come.

Mr. Harcourt referred in terms of commendation to the clause relating to Kindergarten schools. He dwelt upon the great favor into which this system had grown, and was glad to see that it was to be fully recognized in the law of this Province.

Hon. G. W. Ross said that two years ago arrangements had been made in connection with the Normal School for the study of Kindergarten methods, and as a result the Department would be able to send out Kindergarten teachers. They would supply two from the Toronto Normal School and two from that in Ottawa, and from five to ten each year hereafter as might be required. The school in Toronto was in charge of a lady from St. Louis, and the St. Louis system had been adopted.

Mr. Wood's (Hastings) Bill to amend the Railway Act was discussed and reported. The Bill gives power to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council (in the case of any one feeling aggrieved by the proposal of a location of a line of railway) to appoint an engineer to examine the proposed line and hear the parties, after which he may alter or confirm the line through which the road is proposed to run. There is no appeal from the engineer's decision, as the Bill provides that he be a disinterested party.

Mr. Leys' Bill respecting building societies was read a second time and referred to a select committee. The Bill provides that all transfers of debenture stock must be registered at the head office of the society, or at any place in Canada or foreign country the directors may appoint. The last amendment directs that no society shall hold absolutely more than $10,000 worth of real estate at any one place of business, with a provision that no pending suit shall be affected thereby.

Mr. Gibson's (Hamilton) Bill to amend the Ontario Medical Act was read a second time and sent to a select committee. This Bill is of some importance to the medical profession; the first clause of which increases the representation on the Council of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons by granting the Western University a representative and providing the same for any fully equipped university which may afterwards be created. The profession is protected against malicious prosecutions by enacting that no action shall be taken against any licensed practitioner for malpractice six months after the professional services terminate. The last clauses provide for the erasing of the name from the register of any member of the profession guilty of any gross crime or unprofessional practice, the council having full power to take evidence and give judgment, from which an appeal may be made by the accused to a superior court, but provision is made that no action lies against the council, even if their decision be reversed by the Judge.

Before the reference to the Select Committee the Bill was briefly discussed.

Mr. Clancey's Bill to amend the Registry Act was debated for half an hour and handed over to a select committee after a second reading. This Bill contains one clause prohibiting any land agent registering an instrument in which his remuneration is provided for, and is retroactive in its character.

GASLIGHT.

Ridiculous Ideas that Prevailed When It Was First Introduced.

The first actual application of gas to lighting purposes took place in England in the year 1792, when Mr. William Murdoch constructed an apparatus for lighting his house and office at Redruth, Cornwall. So little was the invention understood and believed in by those who had not seen it in use that even great and wise men laughed at the idea.

"How could there be a light without a wick?" said a member of Parliament when the subject was brought before the House. Sir Humphrey Davy ridiculed the idea of lighting towns by gas, and asked one of the projectors if he meant to take the dome of St. Paul's for a gas meter. When the House of Commons was lighted by gas the architect imagined that the gas ran on fire through the pipes, and, therefore, insisted on their being placed several inches from the wall for fear of the building taking fire. The members might be observed carefully touching the pipes with their gloved hands and wondering why they did not burn. The first shop lighted in London by this new method was Mr. Ackerman's, in the Strand, in 1810, and one lady of rank was so delighted with the brilliancy of the gas lamp on the counter that she asked to be allowed to take it home in her carriage.—From a London Exchange.

"While the Lamp Holds Out to Burn."

In the discussion of Mr. Balfour's Bill respecting line fences between farms the prejudice of county and township councils against absentee owners of unoccupied lands was mentioned. It was said that local feeling would utilise the proposed Act to force the fencing of vacant tracts, and thus put an absentee to expense. To us it seems that the local feeling is entirely right and sound. The county and township councils would receive power to levy special taxes on unoccupied tracts if our system of taxation were not radically wrong. The absentees are speculating in the unearned increment, i. e., in the work and outlay of wealth-producing farmers. The value added to vacant land by adjacent settlement goes to reward holders who positively injure the neighborhood. They pocket as speculators a profit which becomes a tax for all time on those who make the land productive. An effective remedy for the grievance of farmers in this respect would be to take all municipal taxes off improvements and put them all on the value of land minus improvements. When farmers get their eyes wide open they will combine to impose land taxes in such a way as to destroy land speculation.—Toronto Globe

Applauding in Church.

It is becoming a not unusual occurrence in city churches to applaud the minister when he makes a particularly strong point or discloses some fine thought. In the course of Dr. Ryckman's recent sermon on the license question his remarks elicited quite a few taps of applause, but last night Rev. Louis Beaudry, in the Dundas Street Centre Methodist Church, was actually clapped.—London Advertiser.

Teddy's Idea.

Teddy's papa always gets his "shaves" at the barber's shop in town, and so the little boy never had happened to see the operation of shaving gone through with, until grandpa shaved himself; and Teddy watched him for the first time with wide open brown eyes.

All at once he cried out:

"O mamma! mamma! gram'pa's brushing frosting all over his face."

Early Sowing in the Northwest.

Calgary Tribune, March 26th: "Ploughing and seeding in the neighborhood of High River commenced last week. This is nearly three weeks later than last year."

"Some people have no teeth and can't get them, while others who don't want them have them thrust upon them," was Smith's remark when a canine tried to take a mouthful of his leg.

Mr. H. H. Hunnewell, a wealthy citizen of Wellesley, Mass., has presented the town with a fire hall, a park of ten acres, and a public library with 6,000 volumes. The value of the gift is $250,000.

While ill on Saturday night Mrs. Ernest Krouse, of Paterson, N. J., shot herself in the head with a revolver, and will probably die. An hour after the shooting the woman gave birth to twins, a boy and a girl, who are doing well.

There is nothing so necessary as necessity; without it, mankind would have ceased to exist ages ago.

If a man is right he can't be too radical; if wrong, he can't be too conservative.

CURRENT TOPICS.

It is said that wrinkles are due to the gradual wearing away of the flesh underneath the skin, because it has too little or the wrong kind of exercise. Wrinkles of the face usually take a downward course, due to washing and wiping the face; therefore, wash and wipe upward. To fill the cheeks that are growing hollow this is recommended: Take a piece of soft leather—kid or chamois skin will do—and put the end of it between the teeth; then chew gently upon it for several minutes taking care not to raise the teeth from the leather. This exercise, it is claimed, will restore to youthful plumpness the most hollow cheek.

It is well known that the great Shakspeare was unhappy in his domestic relations, and escaped from them as much as he could by living nearly all his life in London, while his wife remained at Stratford. This old scandal is now revived, with the addition that Mistress Anne Shakspeare was a very stingy housekeeper, a poor cook and kept a miserable table. Mr. Ignatius Donnelly, of Minnesota, is the resurrectionist who claims to have discovered these important facts in the Bacon cipher story. Perhaps Mistress Anne's chief fault was that she was not her husband's equal. But that she honored his memory is proven by her request that she be buried by his side.

The seven Bibles of the world are the Koran of the Mahommedans, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Try Pitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the Three Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zendavesta and the Scriptures of the Christians. The Koran is not older than the seventh century of our era. The Eddas of the Scandinavians were published in the eleventh century and are the most recent of these seven Bibles. The Pitikes of the Buddhists contain sublime morals and pure aspirations; their author lived and died in the seventh century before Christ. The sacred writings of the Chinese are called the Five Kings, "king" meaning web of cloth or the warp that keeps the threads in their place. They contain the best sayings of the best sages on the ethico-political duties of life. These sayings cannot be traced to a period higher than the eleventh century B.C. The Three Vedas are the most ancient books of the Hindoos, and it is the opinion of Max Muller, Wilson, Johnson and Whitney that they are not older than eleven centuries B.C. The Zendavesta of the Persians is the grandest of all the sacred books next to our Bible. Zoroaster, whose sayings it contains, was born in the twelfth century B.C.

Until the death of the late Bishop, the Bishopric of Jerusalem was jointly under the protection of Prussia and England. According to the terms of the agreement between the two Powers the right to nominate should be alternate. It was Prussia's turn when this last vacation occurred. For various reasons Prussia refused to exercise her right and she has since, with the entire concurrence of England, retired from the compact. It has for some time been known that the Archbishop of Canterbury has made up his mind to continue the Bishopric, and acting in conjunction with the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of London, he has appointed the Venerable Archdeacon Blythe, late of Rangoon, to the vacant see, under the title of "Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem and the East." To make up for the withdrawal of the Prussian Fund, and to bring up the income to £1,500 ($7,500), the Church Missionary Society and the Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews have each placed £300 ($1,500) a year at the disposal of the Bishop. In addition to this the Bishop is in receipt of his pension as a retired chaplain of the Indian service. The consecration will take place at Lambeth. The Bishop will have jurisdiction over Egypt, Syria, Bagdad and Cyprus. He will reside at Jerusalem.

Death of Lady Strangford. Her Adventurous Career and Charitable Works.

The death is announced of Emily Anne, Viscountess Strangford. She died at sea while on her way to Egypt. She was the youngest daughter of Admiral Sir Francis Beaufort, K.C.B., and early in life developed a love for adventure. In 1860 she became famous through the publication of two volumes of travel in the East, describing a journey which she and an elder sister undertook for the purpose of exploring Egypt and Syria. The sisters were absent three years. They braved dangers and privations, and both were rewarded for their courage by the recognition they received from eminent scientists. Viscountess Strangford's death deprives the poorer classes in London, Eastern Europe and Egypt of one of their best friends. This accomplished lady, since her husband's death, has devoted herself to the organization and administration of some of the most useful and admirable charities in the world. The Victoria Hospital at Cairo was her latest creation. She gave with open hands and had the secret of making others give. She sacrificed health, abandoned the society which she had adorned, and impaired her fortune all for charity's sake. She died on board the Lusitania in the Mediterranean on her way to Port Said to open a new hospital.

As to Spring.

Ethereal spring has sprung: A few patches of snow still linger in the upper canyons, but the hillsides are spangled with buttercups and violets, and the sheep are frisking several frisks on the green turf of a thousand hills.—Heppner Oregon Gazette.

Seven years ago Henry Whittaker, of Syracuse, N. Y., was divorced from his wife, the mother of five children. He then married a widow, who had seven children by him. She died, and Whittaker entered into correspondence with his first wife, who was in England, effected a reconciliation, brought her over here, and married her again.

A Pennsylvania farmer who blew out the gas in a Chester hotel noticed just as the flame was extinguished a little green tag attached to the burner. He got into bed, but his curiosity to know what was on that tag led him to get up again, light the gas, and look. He saw printed on the tag: "Do not blow out the gas, or it will cause immediate death."

By the will of the late Alexander Adam, paper manufacturer, of Aberdeen, the Sustentation Fund of the Free Church of Scotland benefits to the amount of $50,000.

ANTIDOTE FOR CANCER.

A Remedy Within the Reach of All.

From the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette:

About thirty years ago a woman belonging to the middle walks of life, suffering with cancer, was pronounced beyond their skill by the physicians of Shrewsbury Infirmary, England, the tumor being in such close proximity to the jugular vein that, rather than risk the imperiling of her life, they deemed it best not to undertake so grave an operation. Straightway after this announcement was made she returned to her home, which was three miles from Oswestey, the nearest railway station in the county of Montgomery, North Wales. Here she became a greater sufferer, when one day she bethought herself of a neighbor, whom she soon found, and with all the eloquence of one enthralled by an implacable foe she appealed to her sympathy. "If it were possible," she implored, "do, do something to assuage my pain." With that tenderness and willingness characteristic of every true and noble woman to allay her sister's many pains this friend, for she proved a friend in need and deed, forthwith sent her boys (one of whom is our informant) to gather what in the United States is known as sheep sorrel, by the people of England as "sour leaf or the cuckoo plant," in the Welsh language, to the people of North Wales, as "dail surionny gog." To this timely opportunity, and the efficacy of this herb as an antidote for cancer, this our sufferer is in a large measure indebted for her health and life to-day, while not the slightest vestige of this hitherto unconquerable disease is to be found. The leaves were wrapped in brown paper so tight as to make the package impervious to air. This package was then placed beneath an open grate covered with the hot ashes of the same. When sufficiently cooked it was removed, and in as hot a state as possible and not burn, it was now applied, the leaves being in direct contact with the ulcer, which was firmly held to the part affected by a linen handkerchief. Strange to say, at the expiration of one month the tumor came away and has not since appeared. For the first four days the pain was most excruciating, but gradually decreased as it became loosened. There is much to be said in favor of this method over that of the knife. The nature of its drawing power in the form of poultice, though at first very severe, still is gradual and sure, while new blood rushes into the vacuum, caused by removal, thus serving as a fitting helpmeet for aiding and stimulating nature's efforts, and in the meantime the arteries which feed this fell destroyer are given a greater impulse to move rapidly, flow healthy and strengthening the weaker parts as fast as it egresses. In this connection it is to be observed that this method has none of the accompanying after-weakening effect, as caused by loss of blood so frequently exhibited under the operation of the knife, while the chances of a thorough extirpation are far more sanguine as to a thread remaining than that of a surgical operation, which many fear and object to. For those parts not admitting of poultice we submit another formula for the same herb, as applied by this same benefactress in somewhat different cases.

A piece of flat iron or steel is obtained with at least one bright and smooth face. On this the leaves are placed, which in turn is placed on top of the stove or within the oven until the leaves are thoroughly cooked, whence they are removed and spread on a piece of linen in the same way as any other home-made plaster. When cool enough, with sufficient heat not to burn, it is then applied, and our informant states, was productive of the same benefit cent result.

Sympathy for Hackmen.

"We hackmen never get any sympathy from the public," said a local cab driver to me the other evening. "People seldom stop to think of what we are obliged to put up with. They just put us down as a lot of sharks and let it go at that, but if they had a week at cab driving I guess they wouldn't be in such a hurry to say the hard things against us they do now. Cab driving ain't any picnic and don't you forget it. I have worked many a time for twenty-four hours at a stretch without sleep, to say nothing of being half frozen to death into the bargain. Then we have some pretty tough times with our fares now and then. I have had men keep me out all night and then refuse to pay me a cent, threatening to knock me down, and even going so far as to smash the cab windows when I attempted to assert my rights. You never know when you are striking a drinking crowd, and you cannot refuse to drive them from one saloon to another until they become so drunk that they either spend all their money or will not pay up until you call a policeman. I tell you, my friend, cab drivers could relate some pretty lively stories if they wished to, and they are not the worst natured fellows in the world if you treat them right." Brooklyn Eagle

The Judge's First Charge.

A justice's first charge. He said: "Gentlemen of the jury, charging a jury is new business to me, and this is my first case. You have heard the evidence as well as myself. You have also heard what the learned counsel have said. If you believe what the counsel for the plaintiff has told you your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the defendant's counsel has told you, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. But if you are like me and don't believe what either of them has said, then I'll be hanged if I know what you will do. Constable, take charge of the jury."

During the flood at Bismarck, Dak., the other day, a big cake of ice went down the roaring Missouri, and on the ice was a big black bear.

Rev. Chas. H. Ward, of Englewood, N.J., who attempted to kill his wife and wounded himself, has resigned the rectorship of St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

It is said of a great man, just dead, that "he began life a barefooted boy." Come to think, we boys all began that way.

It is the little things that are the most wonderful and difficult; it is possible for human enterprise to make a mountain, but impossible for it to make an oyster.

Nothing goes so fast as time, so they say; and yet there are plenty of men who find no trouble in passing it.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, APRIL. 14, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is easy for a community to "warm a serpent in its bosom"—as Valentine Muggins has it—but its a mighty hard thing to get rid of the reptile.

It got rumored here somehow last autumn, that a syndicate of Flesherton capitalists proposed purchasing a steam yacht to be placed on what is known as Cullen's lake, about two miles distant from this place. The idea is a good one but we fear it will remain under "very serious consideration" until the man of the future tackles the job in a practical manner.

The Hanover Post is not satisfied to tell a lie once—it repeats the dose until conscience becomes seared as with a red hot iron. Young in politics, the Post exceeds its Durham cotem.—the Review—in wickedness. Col. Bob. Ingersoll has acquired a continental reputation by his garbled (mis) quotations from the good book; the Post seeks to cover itself with glory somewhat after the same manner, only in a different and more limited sphere. The latter has chosen to tread a thornier path than the former, relatively speaking. Ingersoll may be sincere; the Post is not.

This attempt to form a third party, in order to promote the cause of Temperance, THE ADVANCE considers a mistake. We have been seriously considering the question for years and can come to no other conclusion. The cause can best be promoted by creating a healthy public sentiment. When this is strong enough, politicians of all stripes will be forced to give the people sound temperance legislation. They cannot then ignore the "voice of the people." The trouble at present seems to be, that too many of our temperance people consider but one of many great issues. Politics is a "necessary evil."

Although we give place to an excellent article from the Toronto Mail to be found elsewhere in these columns it does not follow that we endorse all the the sentiments contained therein. Temperance principles are rapidly growing and eradicating certain obstructive theories from the public mind. The pure white banner "for God, for Home, for Native Land" was raised aloft by THE ADVANCE long before its big city contemporary became a convert to those principles we love and cherish. But we do not feel disposed to jump at conclusions or make a leap in the dark, ahead of enlightened and matured public opinion. We are content to work, watch and wait until the gloom of prejudice shall have been thoroughly dispelled.

The Grey Review defends the members of its party who voted for the "wine and beer clause" in the proposed Scott Act amendment, by stating that many Conservatives voted the the same way. If those Conservatives, who so voted, were professed Temperance men we have not one word to say in their defence. Two wrongs do not make a right, and in putting up such a weak plea, the Review is sacrificing its Temperance principles to the exigencies of party. The member for South Grey's vote on that clause was out of harmony with his alleged teetotal proclivities. Equally inconsistent has been the Review's defence of the Dr. That is the stand we have taken in the past: that is the stand we take now. So long as our member's course is consistent with his professions and the interests of his constituents, he will have our hearty support; but not otherwise.

Now, in reference to the proposed new school building, a great variety of opinion exists. Some entertain the opinion, that the Station's share in the debentures should be paid over forthwith, and that our school building should be erected with the balance. Would that balance (say $2,850) be sufficient for the requirements of the section? Would it provide a school-house adequate to meet future possible requirements? Would it erect a building of sufficient dimensions to accommodate an ever increasing population? These are questions of vital interest and deserving of more than passing consideration. It is to be hoped no policy detrimental to our educational necessities will be adopted, but that future possibilities and present needs will be carefully considered.

RESTRICTING THE TRAFFIC

Toronto Mail.

Through Canada and the United States the drift of public opinion and the tendency of legislation are in the direction of imposing restrictions on the liquor-selling business. In St. Louis a liquor licence now costs $1,500, and in Omaha it costs $1,000. These are high figures; but, as statistics show, they have resulted in a salutary decrease in the number of liquor-selling places. In the former city there is now one saloon to every 302 of the population, and in the latter one to every 484. That the proportion of saloons is compartively small would appear to be the fact from the circumstance that New York, with licenses fixed at $75, has a saloon for every 150 people. The New York Legislature is apparently satisfied with the high license experiment elsewhere, for that body now proposes to increase the license fee in New York city and in Brooklyn from the nominal $75 to $1,000.

In other States which have not adopted or attempted to adopt the principle of prohibition, high license fees are also proposed. On this side of the line Eastern Canada has passed so far the most stringent liquor legislation. Prince Edward Island has as, is well known, prohibited the sale of liquor altogether, the various counties having with one accord adopted the Scott Act. Nova Scotia has just carried into operation a more stringent licensing law than any on a Provincial statute book. Saloons have been abolished; bars are no more. Shops are licensed to sell not less than a pints, but this must not be consumed on the premises. Hotels are allowed to sell for their boarders at their meals, or to send liquor to their rooms; but they must not sell over a counter. At the same time, the license fee has been trebled. The law has put 120 liquor sellers out of the business in Halifax alone, and in the few days that it has been in operation it has practically overwhelmed the regular loafers with sobriety. An attempt was made on the part of these gentry on the first day under the new law to evade it by purchasing their pint at a liquor shop, and adjourning to the side walk, there to drink it in full view of the public. But as they were liable to prosecution as public nuisances, and moreover, as the liquor sellers did not appreciate that peculiar form of protest against tyranny, the experiment was not repeated. One feature of the operation of the law is the circumstance that those who have been fortunate enough to secure licenses are on the side of enforcement. It has cost them a great deal of money for the privilege to sell, and they do not propose to allow the unlicensed to share in the monopoly they have purchased. Seeing that the old habit of resting the elbow on luxurious counter while the festive bartender is mixing a fancy drink is specially discountenced by the law, the new order of things will certainly be an advantage to the young men. The New Brunswick Legislature is now considering a restrictive bill, introducing a system somewhat severe, but not half so advanced as that of Nova Scotia. The saloons under the New Brunswick law will remain, but saloon keepers will be prohibited under heavy penalties from selling to minors or to persons who are intoxicated. The most important feature of the New Brunswick bill is the provision that no licence shall issue in a city unless two thirds of the ratepayers of the ward in which the projected tavern is to be located petition for it. How this will work in the East it is difficult to say, but in some parts of Ontario, Toronto for example, it would be almost as effective for the wiping out of the liquor interest as prohibition. An equally interesting point in the bill is that touching the Scott Act. It requires the municipalities to appoint and pay preventive officers, and names a fine which is to be imposed upon such officers who fail to do their duty. The salaries are to be $500 a year, and the fine for neglect is to be $50 per case. In some Ontario counties, if report speak truly, the inspector's salary under such an arrangement would be eaten up five or six times every year by the fines.

"Kind Words can Never Die."

The Flesherton Advance last week completed its sixth year. The Advance is a good local paper, and its editor has our best wishes for his future success.—Shelburne Economist.

The Flesherton Advance was six years old last week. The Advance is getting to be a big boy now, and appears to grow in excellence as it grows in years.—Meaford Mirror.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Flesherton Advance, celebrated its sixth birthday last week. In a column and a half article Mr. Fawcett reviews the hardships and pleasures he has experienced since he planted the Advance in Flesherton. His was a novel experience, but pluck, patience and perseverance will accomplish much and we are sure friend Fawcett is possessed of these qualities. The Advance is a good paper and of which Flesherton may justly feel proud.—Dundalk Herald.

A slight mistake has been made by our respected contemporaries above. The Advance will complete its sixth year the first week in June next. Six years ago the first of this month we started a job printing business here, but it was two months later (June 1st, 1881) before we published the first number of The Flesherton Advance.]

Our old friend of the Flesherton Advance gives a very interesting account of his first going to Flesherton with his printing plant six years ago. The first printing he did there on Friday, April 1, 1881. All Fool's Day in this case has gone back on its record, and friend Fawcett has been eminently successful.—Thornbury Standard.

For the next 30 days you can get terrible bargains at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Don't fail to call. 3t

Money to Loan.

At 6% Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loans.

WITH Interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. THORNBURY

SCROFULA

Humors,

Erysipelas,

Canker, and

Catarrh,

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Texas.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured. Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured. Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

LEITCHS

Tailoring Establishment

FLESHERTON!

Is the place to get your Suits made in future.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$2 00	to 2 10
Fall Wheat	$0 76	to 0 78
Spring Wheat	0 76	0 78
Barley	0 85	0 48
Oats	0 26	0 27
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 14	0 14
Eggs, fresh	0 11	0 11
Potatoes	0 40	0 40
Pork	5 65	5 65
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16	16
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 08	0 08
Chickens per pair	0 30	0 20
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON.

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil"

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.

A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON.

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER.

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885

THE CELEBRATED Dr. CHASES MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this wonderful remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 800 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton

Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

New Goods!

I have received a large assortment of Spring Goods, consisting of Gents, Ladies, Misses, Boys and Childrens Boots and Shoes.

I am offering them at prices that for quality cannot be beat. CALL AND EXAMINE THEM.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marblezed Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

N.B.—Directions for the guidance of Patients in every disorder are affixed to each Box. Purchasers should observe the Address, 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

TO RENT or FOR SALE CHEAP.

50 acre farm, 14 acres cleared. Apply to

M. RICHARDSON.

LOST NOTES.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating for two notes—one for $8.50 drawn in my favor by Mr. Hillock, and the other for $5, drawn in my favor by Henry Down, both now due as the same have been lost or misplaced by me. J. W. HODGSON.

Flesherton, Feb. 9th, 1887. The Down note is not due until May 9th, 1888. the Hillock note is now due.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

CAUTION.

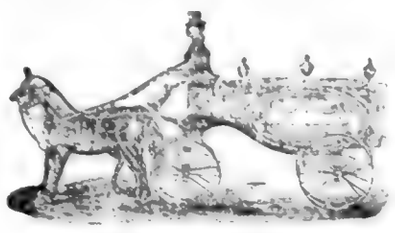
I hereby caution any person against negotiating for a note for $15, in favor of Samuel Martin, which fell due about 1st Nov., 1886, as I have not received value for the same.

JOHN SHERWOOD,
Eugenia P.O.

To Farmers' & Millers'.

FOR SALE.

WEST ½ of 33, Con. 9, Artemesia. Also TWO GRAND WATER POWERS in Eugenia, and a number of Town Lots. Write to DR. PURDY, P.M. at East Selkirk, Man., or to R. McL. PURDY, Esq., Eugenia, and answer will be made at once.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

"What is the latest news in THE ADVANCE? is the question frequently asked by some, who are very much interested in local matters, and yet do not seem to want to expend a dollar and have a copy of their own.

Excitement in and around our village has been somewhat at a stand-still of late and we are waiting patiently for the rush of farm and garden operations, which will no doubt be soon on hand. New plows and harrows are frequently seen being brought home for use, and old ones taken to the shops for repairs. Bright hopes of good times beams on all countenances.

Mr. Frank Winters left here a few days ago to try his fortune in British Columbia where, if he does not succeed in making a fortune, he will at least store up some experience. We wish him every success.

Barney Saigeon was taken suddenly ill with inflammation of the lungs a few days ago and is lying very low at Mr. John Graham's, with whom he was hired for the summer.

A little daughter of Robert Coutt's fell and broke her arm one day last week, but is now doing as well as could be expected.

Mr. F. Shinaman, who has been laid up for a long time, is slowly improving and on fine days is able to get out of the house.

Those who have started sugar-making report a poor season as the sap does not run and many will be disappointed at not having the usual taffy party.

"Requiescat in Pace."

Copy of an ancient document found in the [illegible] Museum by Guess & Co., situated on Wellington St. East in the City of Toronto, dated Aug. 29th, 1887.

MAUD—

"Alas, and is the ending
Thus? O, piles of speechless goods
Could ye but utterance find,
Your mute wails would start
And voice your pain. Ye Cloths
Impressed with Scotish name,
Containing in your inmost souls
The rumbling sound of Heavy mills
Busy wheels are ye content?
Ye ancient webbs of Royal Tyronian
Tweed, ye Bales of Cotton from the Sunny South, ye Prints—reflectors
From the British plates of etchings
Of Canadians craft, ye Bedfast
Linens and ye Damasks fair
Ye lo-mince Cottonades—it's never Fame—Ye matchless shirtings
Towellings rare, behold I want
Weep. Let silence from the Flannels break whose fleecy
Softness once our hills adorned,
Or roamed in freedom over our fields
Of green. Ye silent Ticking in your striped garb upon Wooden bosom,
Rests a weary world—Ye Carpet
Warps of white and cob red blue,
Ye Linings, with scarce a cent for,
Embrace who lists to the lowly tones
Of deceitful man—pass farewell."

WILLIAM—

Great Scott, shade of prophetic
Past, fall on this second Lot and O'er its unfortunate fortune thickly
Mantle spread. Ye [illegible]
Ye the silk [illegible] shapely
Glass fair fencers [illegible]—reflect
Ye ties and black [illegible] for the storm,
Or in the Kitchen [illegible] stay your
Briny tears. Are ye [illegible]
Un understanding bent, consider
Well thy pathless [illegible] track or
Get ye the hand [illegible] departing
Grip, and grasp the COVER from the Blinding storm. Encircling wraps
That drape the female form divine
Grace and Dignity in the rear
Display. Ye vowels spluttling
And ye precious Pearl Ye garments
With [illegible]
Ye ancient HANDS and ye sacred
SKIRTS—N. Hamburgh Sidings and ye
Lace so rare. Yea many mental Failings,
And ye Irish Linens—all your
Spotless purity arise and hold in Lively reverence at our fall. Oh! Twell-
Cleansers of our frail impurity ye
Yon curtains of aesthetic grace
Veil in your Dimities the grief
Stricken, relished from the
Withering blast of scorn.

Moses—what crashing [illegible]
Hurried form surrounds us our fragile
Bark. Tossed [illegible] Fate is wary fort
Fide is worse than seeming Delirium
Early spring attired. Close clashing
Elements of mercantile depression
Reserved in [illegible] darkness
For the dreaded [illegible]
In wrath! Ye gaze [illegible]
Craft, and Swept with [illegible]
Hail Four rope away. The Chain
Of Cusses or Chum [illegible] arrest.
Beware! In concealment [illegible] within His Breast.

Ho Hamet, or [illegible]
Sail is driven the [illegible] PACKET
Express or CUPID [illegible]
On Diseases given [illegible] Mollett with Its vessel freight. Hast
Silence supreme [illegible]
Tried Heart [illegible]
Cries MAXWELL [illegible]
From thy dear tokens [illegible]
Part, though [illegible]
Rob me of the rest.

JAMES—

Cold Leaf enlarges, who [illegible]
Have often raised internal animosity,
Only in my soul, but [illegible]
Life whose potent [illegible]
Its magnified [illegible]
So says the boss stipend [illegible]
Do may on's head [illegible]
Mortal's loop about [illegible]
TRADESMEN [illegible]
Use passe [illegible]
Backaches As [illegible]
Me [illegible]
Supply one half [illegible]
I've Bot STEAD [illegible]
One supposes, cursed hard by Kemp
Is Not a bed of roses. But my Eye is single and my head is clear
By Jennie Lind as happy as a bold
Buccaneer, I'll hoist up my anchor,
With my sail unfurled, farewell
No. 7, Fine bound for the World.

TRAVELER—

Extend thy shade, Oh mystry divine,
That on these battered Trunks—companions
Of my wanderings may fall, thy great
Oblivious veil. Bespeak that rest, since
Their last journeys o'er, that memories
Of the past may resurrect, no more.
Tear stained and storm tossed, many
A wearie mile, in summers heat
Or winters chilly blast—through mud
And mire, from dawn to darkest night,
With saddened visage or with courage
Bright—companions of my strange
Vicissitudes—farewell
In other hands thou can'st my secret
Keep, for other hearts perchance o'er these
May weep. Time levels all—the good
And the unjust, will mingle with
My shattered trunks—in Dust.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Jennie Hames, aged 11 years, whom we reported ill in our last writing, has since succumbed to her illness. She was one of our brightest and fairest children, and will be greatly missed by her companions, both in the day school and in the sabbath school. He remains were conveyed to Fredricksburg for interment.

There has been a great deal of sickness around here this spring—chiefly inflammation.

Mrs. James Cornfield is very ill with inflammation of the lungs.

Master Hilliard Hutchinson left here to attend the Collegiate Institute in Orangeville.

If you have a cold, cough, bronchitis, or any form of throat or lung disease, do not neglect it. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, if promptly taken, will speedily relieve and cure all ailments of this character.

Flesherton Station.

Wednesday afternoon of last week a serious "row" occurred at the Station in which J. G. Carson was terribly pounded on the face and body by A. Hannah. Various accounts are given of the fracas, but how it really originated is shrouded in doubt. Both men were observed scuffling [illegible] after which they went into the bar-room. Here Carson was found lying on the floor shortly afterwards, his face pounded beyond recognition. He was at once brought to Dr. Christie's office in this town where he received every care and attention. It was not long before an excited throng of citizens and neighboring farmers were assembled in front of the Medical Hall, discussing the affair in excited whispers. Owing to the terrible condition of Carson nothing definite could be learned.

Thursday morning's train brought an Owen Sound constable to the Station to look after Hannah. The latter was altogether too wide-awake for the county town detective and very adroitly kept clear of the clutches of the sleepy minion of the law.

Since the above was in type, we learn that both men had been indulging considerably in liquor. Also, that Hannah received several severe blows on the head and body. Later reports say Hannah went to Owen Sound and gave himself up to the authorities, and thereby saved that smart detective another fruitless trip.

From all the evidence placed at our disposal, we can come to but one conclusion, namely, both men drank too much whiskey and one is nearly as much to blame as the other—one was insolent, the other brutal.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made impossible by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ in Canada supplies a constituent part of the health of [illegible] Hop Bitters never [illegible] the world's vegetable [illegible] Dr. Carson's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Recommended at [illegible] $1.00 a bottle at druggists.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, [illegible] Sold at Medical Hall.

BUY Nasmith's Pure Cocoa and [illegible] Cocoa. Only 25c. per tin. Ask for [illegible] Cocoa. Can be had for 25c. by some Dr. Carson's Catarrh Cure. A few drops [illegible] 1 to 2 boxes [illegible] 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed [illegible] Try it. Only 25 cents a sure cure. Sold by druggists.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint [illegible] Sold at Medical Hall.

"BACK ACHE," rheumatism and [illegible] perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria, Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Boston, Ind., says: "I do most cheerfully recommend Shiloh's Consumption Cure." Sold at Medical Hall.

HAVE YOU TRIED [illegible] Perkins & Co.'s Cigars? [illegible] Sold at Medical Hall.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

LADIES troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough hands or face, or Sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It will leave the skin in perfect health, smooth, clean and good color. Be sure and get the genuine, made by McGregor & Parke. Price 25c. Sold at the Drug Store.

SALT RHEUM CURED.—McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face or hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any Sore that nothing else will heal. Try McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. 25c. per box at the Drug Store.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair.—Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. P. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

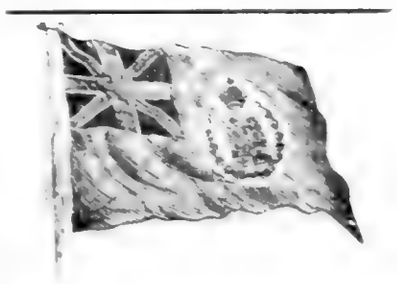
Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain.—William L. Page, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

[illegible] Mass.
[illegible] & Montreal.



HIP.

HIP,

HURRA!

THE Advance

BOOK AND

JOB PRINTING

OFFICE

TAKES the BUN

Everybody must acknowledge that in the matter of first-class Job Printing, The Flesherton Advance office is away ahead of anything in Northern Ontario—in prices, material, and work, combined with rapidity of execution. Auction Sale Bills printed while you wait. Other printing executed with equal promptness.

THE FIGHT OVER IRELAND.

Cloture and the First Reading of the Crimes Bill Carried.

PARNELL'S GREAT SPEECH.

The Irish Will Do Nothing to Hamper Mr. Gladstone in His Glorious Work.

A last (Thursday) night's London despatch says: Lord Hartington at a meeting to-day of the Liberal Union members of both Houses of Parliament explained that the Government had made the Irish Crimes Act Amendment Bill a question of confidence, and if the Liberal Unionists failed to support the Bill, and in that way brought about its defeat, the result would be the advent of Gladstone to power. It was the imperative duty of the Liberal Unionists to prevent this. The meeting decided to support the Bill. Several members were absent. The meeting hall was crowded. Among the prominent persons present were the Earl of Derby, Mr. Chamberlain and Baron Rothschild. The meeting, with the exception of two dissentients, unanimously adopted Lord Hartington's proposal that the Liberal Unionists support the second reading of the Crimes Bill on condition that members be allowed to criticise the measure in committee. Mr. Chamberlain approved the proposal.

In the House of Lords to-night Earl Cadogan (Con.) presented a Bill providing for the purchase of Irish holdings, or in other words for the abolition of the system of dual ownership created by the Act of 1881. It was proposed, he said, to admit leaseholders to the benefits of the Act of 1881. (Cheers.) The leaseholders whose leases expired prior to 1881, numbering 160,000, were to be admitted to the benefits of the Act of 1881 in the same manner as those whose leases expired in that year. It was also proposed that a landlord must issue notice in the form scheduled in the Bill when he obtains an ejectment writ from the Court; that he be required to serve the tenant with that notice in the manner prescribed by the Courts, either by service or by posting; that when the tenant receives this notice he shall become ipso facto caretaker of his holding for the period of six months, and that the redemption shall run as from that date.

Earl Cadogan said the Government found it impossible to adopt the Land Commissioners' recommendation that a period of five years for the fixing of judicial rents be substituted for that of fifteen years, according to the present law. The Government agreed with Lord Hartington that it was an open question whether the Irish rents were excessive or not, or whether excessive rents were exacted. Therefore it would be unreasonable to deal anew with the settlement of rents fixed by the Act of 1881. If those settlements should be disturbed the landlords and tenants would be led to believe that there was no finality to such a settlement. The Government believed the time had arrived to formulate a further measure dealing with tenants' purchase of holdings, and looked to that mainly for a settlement of the questions which unhappily agitated the country. In that alone they believed would be found the solution of those questions. (Cheers.) The Government proposed to deal with the question in two parts. The first was the Bill which had just been described, dealing with questions of urgency and great difficulty arising from the Land Act of 1881. This Bill, which it was hoped would reduce the number of evictions one-half, would be followed by a Bill relating to the purchase of holdings. This latter Bill the Government hoped would permanently settle the difficulty. The Government asked their Lordships who were landlords in Ireland and those connected with them to make heavy sacrifices. The measure strictly regarded the rights of property and was, through an earnest desire to remedy complaints arising from the land laws, drawn in a spirit of fairness and justice. They proposed to relieve tenants who were insolvent through no fault of their own, but through misfortune. For extravagant and improvident tenants the Government proposed a county court, the judge of which, while granting the landlord judgment shall be empowered to a reasonable stay of execution for a period to be decided by the judge, the tenant meanwhile not to be removed from his holding. The Government would constitute the county court judge a judge in bankruptcy within the area of his ordinary jurisdiction.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: In the House of Commons to-night Mr. W. H. Smith suggested that if the Irish Crimes Bill be read a first time to-night, the second reading could be taken up on Tuesday, and then there would be an interval of a week between the second reading and going into committee. He said it was the imperative duty of the Government to insist that the House come to an early decision on the principle of the Bill. Referring to the Land Bill, he said it was of vital importance that the Government use every effort to make the measure law.

Mr. Parnell, upon rising to resume the debate on the Crimes Bill, was loudly cheered. He said that with the production of the Land Bill yesterday Parliament had been put in possession of the complete plan of the Government in all its nakedness and dishonesty. The Land Bill had revealed the extent of the plot and the gravity of the conspiracy through which the Conservatives and Liberal Unionists intended to try and coerce tenants in Ireland into the payment of impossible rents and compel them to purchase their landlords' interests at exorbitant rates. If the House should ever give the Government power thus to coerce the people, the result would most certainly be wholesale repudiation, involving immense loss to the British taxpayer. The Government were pressing on coercion with indecent haste. They had refused to carry out the recommendations of the Land Commission. If the Coercion Bill were passed, the last defence of the tenants against wholesale robbery would be removed. In just land purchase lay the only hope of settling the land question. If it was done at fair prices and in the absence of coercion, Irish tenants would fulfil their obligations to the last penny.

Proceeding to discuss the provisions of the Bill, Mr. Parnell contended that the powers given to the magistrates would enable them to send political opponents to prison for six months—to a plank bed and prison diet. No part of previous Coercion Acts had ever excited so much distrust of English justice as the proposal to change the venue of trial and bring the Irish before special English juries. The proposal meant a reign of judicial murders. Secret societies would spring up, fostered by the sufferings of an oppressed nation, and those who had been persistent in counselling the people to observe patience and moderation might counsel in vain. But he would still counsel them to submit to injustice rather than retaliate or do anything that might drive Mr. Gladstone from their side or increase his difficulties or place them in a false position with the Liberals. Their battle was now won in Ireland. (Cheers.) The party which alone could gain by violence, by the people of Ireland going beyond the law, was the present Government. That was the reason this Bill had been brought forward. Its object was to strengthen the Government's own miserable position. Let not the people of Ireland fall into the toils thus set for them. He greatly feared the results of the Bill, but he would not cease to tell them that the situation was entirely different from that of five years ago, and that for them victory was certain. The people of Ireland would again bear the strain with patience. Mr. Gladstone would not find his action hampered or his hands sullied in the great and glorious work he had undertaken. (Cheers.) He concluded by moving that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the state of Ireland.

Mr. Harrington, amid great laughter, read letters from the Knight of Kerry, Lord Monck and others, applying on behalf of friends and relatives for stipendiary magistrateships in Ireland. When asked where he had obtained the letters, he replied that he had bought them at an auction. This answer was received with shouts of laughter. Mr. Harrington proceeded to explain that the principal qualifications urged in behalf of the applicants were poverty and large families. On being interrupted by cries of "Divide," he said he was not surprised at the impatience shown by the gentlemen opposite upon the exposure of these unpalatable facts, but he had a right, he said, to show the characters of the men at whose mercy it was proposed to place the liberties of Irishmen.

Labouchere, said the disorders in Ireland were due to the execrable laws and the Government's defiance of the wishes of the people. The Conservatives seemed unable to understand that they are dealing with a nation entitled to make its own laws, notwithstanding individuals. The terrorism and outrages which flourished in the Southern States during Andrew Johnson's time ceased in 1876 when Home Rule was granted. The speaker taunted Balfour with ignorance of the condition of Ireland and said that Balfour hardly cared what measure he proposed. He denounced the partisan Irish judges for making exciting political harangues. As regarded the proposal to make the Crimes Bill a permanent measure, if that were done the Bill would never be abrogated, as a majority of the members of the House of Lords were Salisbury's subservient political slaves.

The Speaker interposed and Labouchere modified his expression to "the majority is entirely in Lord Salisbury's hands."

Continuing, he said the Irish conspirators were a class of privileged landlords who were the perpetual enemies of the people and who desired to deprive them of their civil rights. He taunted Chamberlain with having made an offer to the Liberals to oppose coercion if they would accept his Irish plans. When this offer was refused Chamberlain took his goods to the other side. Chamberlain only "wanted his miserable vanity satisfied." The Radicals would not forgive Chamberlain if he voted for coercion. The door of repentance was closing against the Radicals who were affording the Tories an unnatural, hollow and discreditable support. This was the last effort of the classes against the masses. It was a struggle between plutocrats—Irish and English landlords and the men who occupied the land and asked a fair share of its fruits. The struggle was between a system of government by the people and a system based upon the coercion of the people. The English Democrats would stand shoulder to shoulder with the Irish Democrats. Apart from the justice of the cause it was to their interest to do so, because they knew when the Government had finished with Ireland the turn of the English Democrats would come. He did not fear a permanent Conservative success. The flowing tide was with the Democrats and the ebbing with the Conservatives. The Bill would do more than anything else to advance Home Rule.

Mr. Conybears continued the discussion amid cries of "Divide."

Mr. T. P. O'Connor moved to adjourn the debate.

Mr. Gladstone, in supporting the motion, said there were strong reasons for it. He defended Mr. Parnell's delay in moving his amendment, and said this was a grave and serious case, demanding another night for discussion. With reference to Mr. Parnell's speech, Mr. Gladstone said he had never known of an instance in which the case made for such a Bill had been so completely torn to rags. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. W. H. Smith complained because the Parnellities had not risen sooner, and said he was unable to accede to Mr. O'Connor's request.

Mr. Parnell supported Mr. O'Connor's motion.

Mr. O'Connor's motion was rejected by a vote of 361 to 254.

Upon Mr. Smith putting the question Mr. Gladstone rose and walked down the floor into the Opposition lobby, all the members of the Opposition standing and cheering him as he did so.

On returning to the House he was again loudly cheered.

The motion for cloture was carried by a vote of 361 to 253, and the first reading of the Bill was agreed to without a division.

The announcement of the result of the cloture decision was received with cheers and counter cheers, and cries from the Parnellites of "Tyranny!" "Down with the Speaker."

All the members on the front Opposition bench, with Mr. Gladstone leading, left the House followed by a large body of Liberals.

Mr. Morley's speech is but the prelude to organized action. Mr. Schnadhorst, the caucus king, is setting his machinery in motion, and meetings are to be held indoors and out. Demonstrations on a great scale all over the country are planned.

SAVED BY PEPPER.

Courageous and Successful Combat of a Young Lady With a Wayside Assailant.

A Heller's Creek, Pa., despatch says Miss Netta Fink, a 15-year-old girl, had a thrilling experience while returning home from a neighboring store last evening. The store where she had visited is about a mile from her home, and the road, like all country highways, is desolate and lonely. Miss Fink, whose appearance was that of a woman of 20 rather than a girl of 15, started homeward shortly after 6 o'clock, having no fear of being molested, as she frequently travelled over the same road at a later hour. She amused herself by singing sentimental songs in a low tone of voice. When she reached a part where the road is thickly lined on both sides with tall pines she saw the forms of two men some distance ahead cross the road and enter the brush. As it was customary to see farm hands take byways and short cuts home, which branch off from the main road, she was not alarmed, but continued her journey until she passed the spot where the men crossed over, when suddenly a burly-looking fellow, with slouch hat drawn down over his face, jumped out from the brush and seized her by the throat, at the same time trying to force a big red handkerchief into her mouth. Failing in this he kept his hand tightly clasped over her mouth, and then tried to carry or drag her off the road into the brush.

Miss Fink is a robust girl and battled with her assailant with wonderful strength. A desperate struggle followed, during which the girl's clothing was almost torn from her body. She had dropped all the articles she had purchased at the store with the exception of a small package of pepper, which she held in her hand. She quickly dashed it into the brute's face, and by a supreme effort broke from his grasp and ran for her life. At the same time the two men who a short time before had crossed the road sprang out of the brush as if to assist the man who made the attack. The young lady reached home very much exhausted and was scarcely able to tell her story. Somewhat recovering from her shock she related her encounter with the men, whereupon her father, brothers and several neighbors, armed to the teeth, started in pursuit of the trio, while the mother took care of the girl, whose face was terribly bruised and swollen from the rough treatment she had received. The whole neighborhood was aroused and many recruits soon started out to join the pursuing party, who kept the search up until midnight without success. Determined to capture the gang if possible, they resumed the search this morning, but up to a late hour nothing further was heard from them

SNAKES IN THE BACK LOG.

Thrilling Adventure by the Fireside in a Catskill Home.

A Pine Hill, N.Y., despatch says: Up here in the Catskills, where two or three thousand New Yorkers while away the summer, is an old homestead in which a farmer resides with his family. The house is quaint and old-fashioned, not the least of the attractions being great yawning fireplaces, in which immense "back logs" crackle and blaze, while the kettle sings merrily on the hob.

It is still winter at Pine Hill and vicinity, so "back logs" continue to be in great demand.

When the snow and hail were coming down lively last Sunday night, and the wind was blowing no "small guns," the farmer, Matthews, replenished the fire around which his wife and rosy cheeked boys and girls were cosily gathered. As the farmer placed an immense knotty piece of wood, in which there was a deep hole, on the fire one of the children remarked:

"Hope there's no little mousies in there, dad."

"That there was something in the pine knot was soon made evident by the unusual crackling and hissing, and five pairs of dilated eyes watched the hole in the wood intently, as the blaze crept closer and closer to it. Presently there was a jumping and skurrying of the farmer and his family as a snake slowly but surely issued forth from the wood. It squirmed and jumped, and at last, by a violent effort, freed itself from the fireplace. The farmer and eldest son killed the reptile, which was found to be a young rattlesnake. Two other small snakes of the same species also crawled out of the wood and were quickly despatched. During the entire performance the farmer's wife stood on a chair with her skirts gathered heroically about her and shrieked lustily. The next morning, however, according to the farmer's story, his wife pointed proudly to the snakes and said:

"We killed them all within a half hour: didn't we, William?"

The Bohemian Oat Swindle.

A Plymouth, Mich., despatch says: Abraham Gorslin was examined here to-day on the charge of obtaining Mayor Gates' signature to a note on false pretences, and was bound over for trial in the Circuit Court with bail fixed at $500. Gorslin, in November, 1885, being then President of the Bohemian Oat Company, induced Gates to buy thirty bushels of oats at $10 per bushel on promise that the company next year would sell twice that amount for him at the same price, Gates giving his note for $300. The latter brings and swears witnesses in corroboration that Gorslin told him the company had $10,000 on deposit with the State Treasurer to insure the fulfilment of its bonds. Afterwards, when the company collapsed, having delivered only part of the thirty bushels of oats, Gorslin told Gates he was glad to get out of it as he had known all along it was a fraud. Evidence was produced showing the company never had any money deposited with the State Treasurer. Gorslin and his agent Lawrence denied that a statement that such money was on deposit was made.

Mrs. Lemuel Clute, of Ionia, Mich., is confined to the house with injuries inflicted by a big rooster, which flew at her the other day, knocked her down, and followed up his advantage with beak and claws until Mrs. Clute's screams brought the hired girl with a pail of water and a stove hook

PERISHING IN THE TREE-TOPS.

Terrible Experience of Twelve Men in Dakota's Flood—Lions for Neighbors.

A St. Paul, Minn., telegram says: F. B. Thayer, a Pullman car conductor on the Northern Pacific road, gives a graphic account of a perilous trip of a party of twelve, made across the river at Bismarck Thursday night, during the ice-gorge there. His orders were imperative to cross the river, and he managed to hire rivermen to take him and six passengers across in a yawl. The flood was at its height, the Missouri River was full of floating ice and it seemed almost impossible for a boat to live in the angry torrent. Mr. Thayer says:

"We left the landing about 5 o'clock. It looked as though we would make the trip to Bismarck before dark, as the current was running so swiftly that it was only necessary to steer the boat and keep her head down stream. Suddenly and without warning a squall struck us, the boat almost upset, so violent was the shock, and we shipped a sea that completely filled the bottom of our barque and gave us a ducking. The wind seemed to have started the ice, and we were continually being caught in eddies that would turn the boat around and make it unmanageable even with four strong men at the oars. Once we came in collision with an ice-floe with such force that it seemed as if we should go to the bottom.

"We gradually worked the boat into the tree-tops that were a few feet above water and secured anchorage. The wind had increased in violence and soon after dark it began to rain, then hail and finally snow. Our clothing was wet through and finally froze stiff. One of the party had got his feet wet and changed his stockings, but his shoes froze and he was so benumbed that he could not get them on again. He then took a coat from his satchel, cut the sleeves out and wrapped his feet in the sleeves. We stood up in the boat, stamped, swung our arms to keep our blood in circulation and resorted to every form of exercise that our cramped position would permit. One of the party finally gave up and declared he did not care if he did freeze to death, and sank down in the boat. I aroused him by a smart slap in the face that angered him, and he got up and wanted to fight. The same thing occurred several times during that awful night.

"The roaring of the river and the cracking of the ice were simply awful. At times we could not make ourselves heard, and to add to our discomfiture we could hear quite near us the screams of two mountain lions, probably in some tree-top, imprisoned by the flood. At last it grew lighter, the tide suddenly went down, and the muddy waves diminished in size. There was less ice in the river, too, and with benumbed hands we unfastened our moorings and drifted with the flood down the river and finally managed to get ashore."

THE DONAHUE CASE.

"Clutch" Escapes the Clutches of the Law Once More.

A last (Thursday) night's Welland despatch says: The case of the United States Express Co. vs. Donahue was concluded at the Assizes to-day. The defence relied principally upon an alibi, the evidence for which is as follows: Wm. Buchner, the captain of a cavalry troop, swore that within a few days before going into camp at Niagara, on the 22nd June, 1883, he borrowed a sum of money from Donahue at Fort Erie, with which to pay expenses. He was not positive as to how long before going to camp he borrowed the money, but fixed the date of the departure of his company as the 22nd June, and three members of the troop testified to being present at the interview between their captain and Donahue, and all three stated that it was about 8 o'clock in the evening, two days before the camp opened, making it June 20th. James Spain swore to taking a drink with Donahue in Fort Erie on the 22nd June, after the volunteers had left. It would be impossible to leave Fort Erie after the time sworn to by the volunteers and go to Susquehanna in time for the robbery, much less get back by the time sworn to by Spain. Mr. Osler, in a powerful address to the jury, claimed that a verdict for the plaintiff would be believing the questionable testimony of thieves and detectives against that of the reputable citizens who had sworn to the alibi. Mr. Kerr, on the other hand, pointed out that the evidence against Donahue was of the strongest kind, and that the alibi witnesses might easily be mistaken as to dates of events so long past. The jury, after about an hour's deliberation, returned a verdict for the defendant. His Lordship remarked that if he were the jury he would have found differently.

THE BOOM CONTINUES.

Sault Ste. Marie in the Hands of Boomers and Speculators.

A Marquette, Mich., despatch says: The army of boomers, sharks and speculators which is in possession of everything at Sault Ste. Marie continues to increase with every train. Not only town property, but land anywhere within two to five miles is gobbled up like hot cakes. For the present the boomers hold the fort and are perfectly wild with excitement. The most extravagant stories are afloat regarding deals and a great deal of gambling is said to be in progress. The excitement is increasing hourly, and it is claimed $1,250,000 have actually changed hands or are tied up in short time options.

Resistance of Snow to Bullets.

An Ottawa despatch says: Colonel White's report of his experiments on the resistance of snow to bullets, in connection with the recent Nordenfeldt gun experiments before the Gov.-General and Lord Alexander Russell, has just been made public. He says that the Martini bullets fired into a bank of well packed snow were completely spent after traversing a distance of not more than four feet from the point of compact. Snider bullets, in hard packed snow mixed with ice, but not hard enough to prevent digging into it with a sheet-iron shovel, did not penetrate more than about four feet; in perfectly dry snow, packed by natural drift, but capable of being easily crushed in the hand, a bullet penetrated about four feet, and in loose drifted dry snow less than seven feet, though fired from points only twenty or thirty yards distant.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMAYR

On Friday, April 1st, two Ingersoll hotel keepers named Marsden and McMurry were each fined $50 for violation of the Scott Act.

Wm. Keene, a young immigrant who came out on the Parisian, while on his way to London, Ont., fell off the train near Pointe Claire and sustained a compound fracture of the skull.

David Pike, well known as an hostler at the hotels around Zurich, attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat with a razor in bed yesterday morning at the Commercial Hotel. Dr. Buchanan was called and sewed up the gash. He will likely die.

On Saturday afternoon Mr. Geo. Weir, a wealthy farmer living on the 12th concession of East Nissouri, about four miles from Thamesford, hanged himself in the barn with a leather line. He was discovered and cut down, but the doctor says his case is hopeless. The cause is believed to be the loss of some money and family trouble.

Mr. J. L. Northrup, a breeder of thoroughbred cattle, of Westfield, N.Y., was taken to the General Hospital, Montreal, on Saturday, having been badly burned through the burning of a railway car. Mr. Northrup bought a thoroughbred bull from the Pope Farm, at Compton, Que., for $5,000, and was on his way home with it when the accident occurred. It is supposed that the car took fire while some one was smoking. The car was totally destroyed and the bull roasted to death.

A painful accident happened at St. Francois, Que., on the Temiscouata Railway. The foreman had taken out a short piece of fuse for a blast, when a man named Caron took a match and set fire to it. The foreman shouted to him to throw it away in the snow, but he would not do it, thinking he could hold it. His boasting was soon punished, for the fuse exploding, carried off one of his hands, which could not be found, and mutilated the other as well as his face. Amputation of both arms was performed. Hopes are entertained that one eye will be left to the poor cripple.

The Queen received the local officials and the chief English colonists at her villa at Cannes on Saturday.

Lord Hindlip, formerly Sir Henry Allsopp, a member of the brewing firm, is dead. He was 76 years of age.

The Russian Government has placed at the disposal of the police £37,000 to be used in unravelling the Nihilist conspiracy.

It is reported that Emperor Francis Joseph will go to England during the Queen's Jubilee if political affairs permit of his leaving Austria.

The fine Roman amphitheatre at Poli, in Austria, on the Adriatic, suddenly collapsed yesterday and fell into an immense chasm which opened on the site. From this chasm vapors are emitted.

The Pope has sent a confidential communication to the Prussian bishops, inviting suggestions as to the feasibility of establishing a nunciature at Berlin for Prussia, or one nunciature for the whole of Germany.

Saturday brought forth three ghastly reminders of the Richmond Hotel disaster at Buffalo, in the shape of three charred bodies dug out of the ruins, one, that of Lizzie Welch, a servant girl, the other without much doubt that of Robert S. Boyd, of Boston, and the third thought to be that of Katie Kent, a servant. The bodies are so badly charred and disfigured that identification can only be partial.

A most shocking tragedy took place at Conshatta, La., on Saturday afternoon, resulting in the death of J. H. Scheen and A. C. Brown. Brown had become incensed against M. A. Cockerham, a son-in-law of Scheen, on account of some business trouble, and had been seen on the streets Saturday afternoon inquiring for Cockerham. Finding him at Scheen's store, pistols were drawn and they began firing upon each other. Scheen received a shot in the mouth, which passed through and broke his neck, causing instant death. Brown received a shot in each arm, and after promiscuous firing on both sides the men left the store. Young John Scheen seized a double-barrelled gun and fired upon the retreating form of Brown, who ran to a store about 100 yards distant and expired

JUBILEE THANKSGIVING.

The Lords and Commons to Attend Worship in Separate Churches.

A London cablegram says: On May 22nd, the Sunday after Ascension Day, the Speaker and the House of Commons will attend at St. Margaret's, Westminster, their recognized church, at a Jubilee thanksgiving service. The preacher will be the Bishop of Ripon. The last occasion on which the House of Commons attended a church service in State was on the 4th of May, 1856, on the occasion of the national thanksgiving for the restoration of peace after the close of the Crimean war. But perhaps the most memorable occasion was the special service on the 21st of March, 1855, when a fast day was appointed by Royal proclamation, and special prayer was made for a blessing on "the just and necessary war (the Crimean) in which we are engaged." The sermon on that occasion was preached with marvellous eloquence by Canon Melville. It will be observed that only the House of Commons attend the service at St. Margaret's, which is their parish church. The House of Lords are supposed to attend Divine worship at the more aristocratic Abbey of Westminster, close by.

Canadian Cheese in England.

A London (Ont.) despatch says: Prof Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, who had charge of the Canadian cheese exhibit at the recent Indian and Colonial Exposition, left London to-day for England. In an interview he expressed the opinion that Canadian cheese will rule considerably higher this season than for two or three years past, and that the reputation earned by the Canadian dairies at the Indian and Colonial Exhibition will stimulate a much larger trade in that product than heretofore. He also believes that Canadian butter will be in great demand in Great Britain next year.

J. B. Lippincott, of Philadelphia, left an estate worth nearly $3,000,000.

HONG KONG.

The Colonial and Indian Exhibition 1886.

(Essay by Thomas C. Watkins.)

This island with its dependencies forms one of the small colonies of Great Britain on the coast of China. It is but a baby colony yet, but, may e'er a century rolls over, become like India, a vast territorial possession, containing hundreds of millions of the sons of Shem, to be ruled over, and enlightened in the modern arts and sciences, and taught the pure, the divine, the holy principles of the Christian religion by a mere handful of the children of Japhet. The Island of Hong Kong is situated twelve miles east-southeast from the estuary of the Canton River, and ninety distant from Canton, which is the capital of Southern China. The name is taken from the Chinese "Heung Kong," which means "the fragrant sea port." The island is known among the Chinese by the name "Kivan Tai Lo," which means "Petticoat String Road," the original pathway along the northern shore being compared by the Chinese to the string of a petticoat. The island of Hong Kong is situated between 22° 10 min. and 22° 17 min. north latitude and 114° 6 min. and 114° 18 min. east longitude. It is bounded on the north by Victoria Harbor; on the northeast by a pass from a quarter to half a mile wide, known as the Ly-ee-moon Pass on the east Tathong Channel, and on the south and west by the China Sea, here studded with numerous islands. Victoria Harbor, Ly-ee-moon Pass and Tathong Channel separate the island from the mainland of China, in the Province of Kivong-tung, which is not the least riotous of the Provinces of China. It has a circumference of twenty-seven miles, and an area of thirty square miles, very little of which is arable land, owing to the abrupt and rocky hills composing the greater part of the island. It was ceded to Great Britain, together with the harbor and surrounding islets, in January, 1841, and the cession was confirmed by the Treaty of Nanking in August, 1842. Hong Kong and its dependencies were erected into "The Colony of Hong Kong" by letter-patent bearing date the 5th April, 1843. In October, 1860, a part of the mainland jutting into Victoria harbor, and known as the Kow-loon Peninsula, containing an area of three square miles, was also ceded to Great Britain as a dependency of the colony of Hong Kong. The name Rowloon is derived from "Kam-lung," the nine dragons. The administration of the colony, until lately, was in the hands of the Governor, who, with an Executive Council of five official members and a Legislative Council of four official and four unofficial members, presided over by the Governor, all the unofficial members being on the recommendation of the Governor. Sir George Ferguson Bowen, the present Governor, has brought about a change. On his representation to the British Government the Councils have been remodeled. The Executive consists of six official members and the Legislative Council of six official and five unofficial members, three of the latter being nominated by the Crown and the others elected, one by the Chamber of Commerce and one by the magistrates, neither of whom can be Government officers. This island consists mostly of abrupt and rocky hills. There is a continuous range of abrupt and rocky hills, terminating over a thousand feet above the sea in serrated peaks, dividing the north of the island from the south; and Victoria Peak on the west side and Mount Parker on the east side are from 1,820 to 1,840 feet high. The average width of the island is only three miles, consequently the descent from the hills to the sea is very precipitous. The eastern division of the island is much wider, the hills running off at a tangent to the north and south make the extreme width seven miles. The southeastern part of the island is separated by an inlet of the sea a mile and a half wide, which runs up for three miles between the hills, which bears the name of Taitam Bay. This bay separates this part of the island into two peninsulas, called the Taitam and D'Aguilar Peninsulas. Owing to the precipitous nature of the hills they are cut into deep ravines by the torrents of water which rush down them during the

NOMINATED BY THE CROWN,

HEAVY RAINS OF SUMMER,

but in the winter season, when very little rain falls, they are frequently dry. There is, however, a very remarkable exception to this rule in some few of these ravines, which, no doubt, as the torrents rushed down them for ages they wore the rocks away until they cut into springs of water, which now supply perennial streams which leap continuously from rock to rock down these wild romantic ravines. Hong Kong is mostly one great mass of granite, thrown up by some great convulsion of nature from the azoic strata of the earth, and now partly decomposed and washed down into the valley, forming a scanty soil to nourish the vegetables which take root therein, but on the tops of some of the higher hills large beds of clay are found; no doubt having been forced up by volcanic power from the alluvial strata of the earth on top of the immense mass of granite, as she in her mighty throes cast forth this romantic island from her bosom. Embedded in the decomposed granite are huge round boulders, from ten to twenty feet in diameter, of hard granite, having the quartz, mica and felspar well proportioned and of the best description for building purposes. They have but a limited zoology in wild animals, only wild cats, and they are not numerous. In domestic animals they have dogs, cats, buffaloes, goats and pigs. Reptiles are numerous, including pythons and snakes of different kinds. The cobra and green snake (known as the bamboo snake) are the only two found to be poisonous. Lizards, iguanas, newts, bull and edible frogs are abundant. There are immense quantities of insects, comprising beetles of various kinds, mosquitoes, dragon flies, locusts, ants, wasps, bees, butterflies, moths, spiders, centipedes, scorpions, snails, worms, fire-flies, glow-worms, etc. White ants are abundant and very destructive. Oysters, cuttle fish, sea stars, jelly fish and sea anemones are plentiful in the surrounding waters. Since game laws were passed in 1870 numerous varieties of birds make their home in the colony, such as sparrows, hawks, kites, goat-suckers, king-fishers, wagtails, fly-catchers, tomtits, larks, magpies, etc., domestic fowls, peacocks, pheasants, pigeons and doves. In marshes and paddy fields, near the Canton River, rice birds, quail, teal, herons and snipe abound. The flora of Hong Kong is really charming. It affords a field of keenest delight to the botanist. There are over 1,200 species of flowering plants, divided into fifty-nine genera, and 125 natural orders, and every year is adding largely to the number of species. There are several trees, shrubs and plants growing over the island which give it a romantic and pleasing appearance, when taken in connection with its wild, wierd looking back ground of mountains and deep gorges. Hong Kong is the natural home of the beautiful rhodolocia championi, the camelia, azalia, long flowered lily, hibiscus, strychinos, thorn apple and gelsemium. Ferns and orchids are also abundant, most varied and beautiful. The climate of Hong Kong is greatly influenced by the monsoons. In common with the whole of Southern China, the climate is very damp in summer, during the southwest monsoon, and particularly dry in autumn and winter, during the northeast monsoon. The seasons are therefore divided into wet and dry; the

WET SEASON COMMENCING IN MAY

and ending in September, while the dry season extends from October to April inclusive. At the beginning of the year the northeast monsoon blows steadily, sometimes with great force, and continues without interruption until the 1st of March, then its force begins to slacken, later on it wavers, and at last dies away by the end of April. During very warm summers in Australia and over the southern hemisphere, the easterly trade wind of the Pacific Ocean, and its northwestern boundary, the northeast monsoon is drawn several degrees further south than usual, and almost on to the equator, thus giving a longer and cooler spring to Hong Kong. The southwest monsoon usually sets in by the end of May. It commences with a strong breeze, but is never equal in force or weight to the northeast monsoon. Although it brings tremendous floods of rain, which last for a longer or shorter period, according to the influences of the evaporating processes of nature to surcharge the clouds with a greater or less supply of water, it is the finest period of the year for navigating the Chinese seas; but sometimes there are terrible exceptions, for the period of the southwest monsoon is the season for these great, and frequently fearfully destructive, revolving storms, know as typhoons. The southwest monsoon generally ends with October and the northwest commences at once and continues with greater, and sometimes with less force and energy, at times bursting forth into a fierce gale, and at others subsiding into gentle breezes until the following spring. The usual average rainfall is eighty-five inches, of which seventy inches fall from the beginning of May to the end of September. The thriving and beautiful town of Victoria is the seat of the Colonial Government and the centre of the trade and commerce of the colony. It has a most charming site on the north side of the island, along Victoria Bay, and fronting on its magnificent habor. It extends along the bay for a distance of four miles, and stands mostly on the lower elevations and undulations of the hillsides, having steep ascents from the harbor. It presents a most imposing and charming view to the spectators as they sail up the harbor from distant shores. The harbor of Victoria is the capacious channel of the China Sea, lying between the town and the mainland of China, having a length of four miles and a breadth of from two to three miles. It is deep enough to sail the largest vessels, and could accommodate the fleets of the whole world to ride at anchor on its capacious sparkling bosom, as its ripples glitter on the sunlight. It opens towards the Northern seas and Pacific Ocean through the deep channel of the Ly-ee-moon pass, and to the Southern seas direct, along the western shore of the island. The town is long and narrow, but assumes no particular form, as the streets and roads are adapted to the steep and varying slopes of the hill sides, and the narrow strip of land forming the lower levels between the foot of the hills and the harbor. Running along the front of the town, and the greater part of the harbor, is the Praya, a fine road fifty feet wide, with a granite retaining wall on the harbor side, level with the road. Along the Praya, and fronting the harbor, stand the houses of business and store houses of merchants, shippers and traders. Behind the Praya and parallel to it is the Queen's Road, running the whole length of the town. Here are the banking houses and those of other large companies, with the offices of professional gentlemen and the principal store keepers' places of business, part of the eastern and the whole of the western portion being entirely occupied by Chinese shops of every description. The European houses occupy the centre portion only. The steep slopes of the hills start immediately from the south side of the Queen's Road, and the streets run in various directions in this part of the town, so as to utilize the table land at the foot of the hills. These streets are occupied by the stores of traders and dealers of all sorts, but chiefly by the

CHINESE AND INDIAN MERCHANTS.

The Europeans occupy the eastern side and the higher levels of the town, and the Chinese reside in the western and lower parts of the town. The town is well supplied with schools, the principal of which are the Government Central School, which is too small to contain the present number of pupils, but there is a more commodious building in process of erection at present, to be called Victoria College; the Hong Kong Public School, or St. Paul's College, under the direction of Bishop Burdon and a committee; St. Joseph's College, under the management of Bishop Raimondi and the Christian Brothers. There are schools also supported by and under the management of the different missionary bodies, such as the Diocesan Home and Orphanage, the Basé Mission School, the German Foundling House, the Baxter Mission Vernacular Schools for Girls, and the Spanish, French and Italian Convents. Hong Kong has a Chamber of Commerce and several other clubs, amongst which the most noteworthy are the Hong Kong (or English) Club, the Club Germania, the Susitano Club, and Yacht, Cricket, Recreation and Amateur Dramatic Clubs, a Choral Society and several Masonic Lodges. There is first-class hotel accommodation for travellers, the hotels being well located for affording their guests charming views over the beautiful bay and harbor in front, and the wild and romantic scenery amongst the towering hills and lofty mountain peaks stretching off in the rear. The colony has superior dock accommodation for the largest ships. The water for Victoria is brought by a conduit from a large reservoir at Pokfulam, just beneath Victoria Peak, running along the hill sides for over three miles; but the supply is insufficient, and extensive works are in progress now to provide a much larger supply from the Taitam Hills. The water is considered to be excellent when filtered. Hong Kong is in constant communication with Europe, America, India, Australia and the coast parts of China, and a daily service between Hong Kong and Canton and Hong Kong and Macao. There are the Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Co., the Messageries Maratimes, the Pacific Mail Co., the Occidental & Oriental Steam Ship Co. and several large lines of merchant steamers constantly plying between Hong Kong and the ports of the countries named above. The colony made a unique and most imposing exhibition of their natural productions and manufactures. The Hong Kong Court was thronged with crowds of Europeans, Asiatics, Americans and not a few Africans, all admiring the numberless exotics from that far off land, which, having been until very recently a part of China, preserved the arts and modes of manufacture practiced by the inhabitants of the Celestial Empire. The processes of manufacturing very many of the productions of Hong Kong being exactly similar to the systems in common use in China, added great interest to the novel scenes, and patriarchal style of doing things still practiced by the Celestials. There was a vermillion factory in Hong Kong of which a fac simile was on exhibition, showing the entire process of manufacture, from the raw material in room A to the cases ready packed for exportation in room J. A map of the city of Victoria, showing the growth of the town since its commencement in 1843. Samples of the coir matting made by the Chinese prisoners in Hong Kong jail. Fifteen specimens of granite, with one side polished, taken from fifteen different quarries in Hong Kong. A very interesting model of the Hong Kong & Whupoa Dock Company's docking establishment. There are two other large docking firms in Hong Kong. It surprises many to learn that Victoria is the fourth largest shipping port in the world. There were models of various classes of Chinese junks and fishing boats frequenting the waters of Hong Kong, amongst which was a charming flower boat, containing a profusion of Chinese flowers. There were large stands with samples of floor matting, exhibited by the Tak Li firm, Hong Kong, together with the tools for making the matting. Considering the island is nearly divested of trees, there was a very fair show of cabinet woods. There are great efforts now being made to plant trees over the island, which must soon enhance the beauty of the colony very much. There were shown, which manifested great skill in the art. Two charming vases sent by the Mikado of Japan looked very beautiful. Ornamental brass ware, comprising household utensils, tobacco pipes, etc., the manufacture of which is an important industry in Hong Kong, were shown largely. Specimens of coopers' works, manilla ropes and bamboo ropes coiled in native style, were shown largely. Superior implements of industry used by the wealthy Chinese, being better made than those in ordinary use by the poorer classes. Specimens of stone carving, cut out of a solid block of granite. There was an exact model of a Chinese druggist's shop in Hong kong, presented by Dr. Ho Kai, medical practitioner and barrister-at-law in Hong Kong. At the back of the shop the dwelling is placed, according to custom, there. The shop and house, with their various outfittings, drugs, medicines, lounges, carpets, mats, cooking utensils, etc., were all arranged by Mr. A. Chee, a Chinese carpenter, who built the store and dwelling-house also. The model is a faithful representation of real business life in China, even to the most minute details. In connection with the same establishment, there is a collection of Chinese medicines, which were presented by Dr. Ho Kai also. The names of the medicines and the uses to which they were to be applied were given on the bottles. There was a model of the colony of Hong Kong made by Mr. A. Denison, civil engineer and architect of Hong Kong, on the scale of 600 feeet to an inch, showing the harbor, with the Narrow Pass to the east, which forms the entrance to the harbor from the northeast, while the channel on the other side of the island, formed by Hong Kong and a small island in the offing, is the southern entrance to the harbor. The Civil Government buildings are colored black, the military and naval property red, and other buildings white. The red circles with black centres are forts. Local scenes in the colony were very nicely executed by Mr. A. Fong, photographer at Hong Kong. Very handsome specimens of silver-ware, manufactured by Wong Hing, were on exhibition. Samples of ore from Kivantung, a neighboring Province, by Mr. Ho Ankei, of Hong Kong. Sugar from a large sugar refining manufactory of Hong Kong appeared to be of a very superior quality. Also samples of rum distilled in connection with the same company were displayed, reminding people of the sad havoc made of the human race by this demon of destruction, and its sister-destroyer, opium, twin demons of misery, of poverty, of degradation and death—which, while famine slays its thousands, war its tens of thousands, pestilence its hundreds of thousands—intemperance, the king of terrors to our race, the Apollyon from the bottomless pit, come up to our earth to destroy man in every land, to fill millions of once happy homes with want, degradation, crimes without number, broken-hearted wives, vagabond children, quarrelling, strife, the assassin's dagger, the highwayman's pistol, the drunkard's grave for untold, incalculable millions of our race. There were raw materials, such as soya, from which soy (a sauce for fish) is made; also sauces made from various leguminous plants, which is a very important business in Hong Kong. A collection of Chinese essential oils, specimens of biscuits and other cakes made by the Hong Kong steam bakery. Very tempting-looking specimens of preserved fruits and ginger made and exhibited by Sun Shing, of Hong Kong, where it is a large and profitable industry. A collection of beautiful butterflies, moths and needlework by the Chinese children in the French Convent. Needlework by the Chinese children in the Italian Convent; also old embroidery and tables and hats made of bamboo, very deftly braided

SAMPLES OF CHINESE EMBROIDERY

A COLLECTION OF CROCKERY,

made in the pottery districts. Instruments used in crushing and extracting essential oils; also opium boiling apparatus, with specimens of raw and prepared opium and opium pipes and lamps. A jinricksha, which is a two-wheeled carriage with shafts somewhat like a cutter; one Chinaman takes hold of the shafts, which, in common with the rest of the carriage, are made light, but of tough timber and handsomely painted, another takes hold of the box, the one between the shafts pulls, while the one behind pushes, and both trot along at a brisk pace, drawing the occupant along at about four or five miles each hour, while he or she sits comfortably in the seat of the jinricksha, which is just wide enough to hold a full sized man or woman comfortably. The jinricksha is built about half the width of an ordinary buggy, so that it can be drawn through any part of the country in those eastern climes, where the roads are execrable, and very few roads of any kind that a horse and buggy could be driven along. The people while possessing great skill in many of the manufacturing arts, yet seem to lack almost all inventive genius; they do things as their fathers did, from generation to generation, and probably the builders of the Tower of Babel, ship carpenters who built the Ark for Noah, the weavers who wove the cloth for Rebecca's wedding trousseau, the dressmakers who made it, or the milliners who made the toques for Miriam and her companions, who formed the choir which sang such sweet, such triumphant, songs of praise before the children of Israel, as they ascended from the shore of the Red Sea, after seeing Pharoah and his hosts drowned in the depths thereof, each knew how to perform their work just as deftly, just as fashionably, as their sons and daughters of the present day do. There were models of bamboo scaffolding, showing the mode of building scaffolds with that most useful wood high enough, solid enough and strong enough to build a chimney 140 feet high. A beautiful model of a bamboo bridge, exhibiting their mode of throwing bridges over ravines or watercourses was also shown, which appeared to be very ingenious and safe. Some curious specimens of bamboo matting, representing an exact model of show grounds in Hong Kong on festive occasions. There was a handsome model of a Chinese pagoda and monastery, executed and presented by the Carpenters' Guild in Hong Kong, by their representative, Mr. A. Chee. Specimens of iron pans from the Hong Kong foundry. Very handsome rattan ware manufactured and exhibited by the Tai Long firm in Hong Kong. Representative specimens of brass utensils made in Hong Kong, a miscellaneous collection of articles made of bamboo, illustrating the variety of uses which the Chinese apply this article, were exhibited by the Wo Hop firm. Chinese plough, rake, hoe, rice winnowing machine, rice threshing machine and rice pounding machine were exhibited by Mr. Chau Bee. A very handsome blackwood centre table, carved in Hong Kong, the property of Mr. F. D. Sassoon, was displayed. A collection of Chinese pigments and paint brushes were shown. Camphor wood boxes, leather trunks, sails and canvas bags representing important Chinese industries were displayed in quantities. Ivory carvings were exhibited by the Hau Chung Yuk Kee firm. Water color views, a silk embroidered banner, and a silk embroidered scroll were conspicuous, the latter having been presented by the Chinese merchants of Hong Kong to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, President of the Exhibition, and engrossed and embroidered by the Sun Shing firm, in testimony of their loyalty to and high appreciation of British rule in Hong Kong. Silk embroideries shown by the Han Cheung Yuk Kee firm. Mattings were exhibited as wall decorations on the walls of the Hong Kong Court, and they looked remarkably well, and had quite an ornamental and pleasing effect. A singular looking collection of coined at the Hong Kong mint, were displayed. Specimens of bookbinding, including two Hong Kong directories, published in Hong Kong, and other works published in that colony, showed good workmanship and excellent talent in the publishing business of this colony. In the educational department were shown photographs of students at work, pens, ink, paper and other material. Also models of desks, chairs, tables, etc., which showed that the people in that far-off dependency of the British Crown are making good progress in the educational arts, and clearly and forcibly manifesting that wherever the Anglo-Saxon race plant themselves, there civilization, law, liberty, education, equality of rights, both civil and religious, in a word, freedom to do right and opposition to wrong-doing are established, there the temperance banner will be unfurled, there the Bible will be open and free for all to read its inestimable, its grand moral and religious lessons of duty to God and duty to our neighbors, which so many of the race believe in and practice in their lives. Some magnificent specimens of antique embroidery were exhibited by Lady Bowen, and placed so as to enable a contrast to be made between it and the modern embroidery exhibited in adjoining cases. Raw silk and silk filatures, and models of looms showing the process of weaving silk according to the Chinese plan of operations, with one woman supplying the thread, which was to appear most conspicuously in the broche patterns of the pieces of silk from one or more spools, and another woman working the loom and throwing the shuttle by hand. On the same principle it takes five men to one loom to weave Turkish carpets, four of them sitting along in front of the loom with a scissors in hand. The man on the right takes the wool yarn in his fingers, and works it in and out through the warp very deftly and speedily, leaving loops on the right side of the carpet about five-eighths of an inch long, every time he passes it through the warp, when he does about a foot long in the width of the carpet immediately before himself, he passes the wool thread from his fingers to his next fellow-worker on his left, who at once wattles it in and out among the warp in the same manner, while the first man employs himself in cutting the loops with his scissors to make the long pile on the face of the carpet. The second man, when he passes the thread to the third on the left, clips his loops as the first did, and so on. Each works without any shuttle, doing the work with his nimble fingers. The fifth man stands at the right end of the loom and works it with a lever, so as to drive the woof threads tightly together, every time the four others work the woof thread all across the piece. Very nice specimens of glass manufactures, from the Hong Kong Steam Glass Factory, were shown. A specimen sedan chair, such as are used by European ladies in Hong Kong and throughout the East, was exhibited, and also usually worn by the men who carry the dear creatures seated in these sedans. Oil paintings of Hong Kong fruits were very well executed, and gave very correct views of their exact appearance. What an unspeakable blessing the possession of this colony may be, in a religious point of view, to Great Britain and to China, if Britain's philanthropists, if Britain's Christians, only take hold of the great, the grand, the glorious work before them, and send forth Christian ministers, who shall be teetotallers, to invade China, as Paul invaded ancient Greece, and preach temperance, righteousness and a judgment to come to that great nation—to preach Jesus and the resurrection to that numerous people who know not God in that vast territory, who have never yet heard of Jesus and the resurrection, who are without the holy Sabbath day, without the Bible, without Sabbath schools, without scarcely a teacher to tell them of their duty to God and their duty to their fellow creatures, but with alcoholic liquors, with opium—those twin poisons—those twin instruments in the hands of Satan to curse and to destroy the millions of that nation, amongst whom many of China's most learned, most advanced, most intelligent and noble minds will sink under the accursed influence of one or other of those deadly poisons—those soul-destroying agents of the infernal regions. "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Ascalon," that Britain—Christian Britain

HONG KONG COINS,

SOMPLES OF THE UNIFORMS

Britain with her Bibles teaching her to love God with all her heart, with all her mind, and with all her soul, and to love her neighbors as herself that she, the mistress of the seas—that she, who prides herself as being the foremost in the great moral and religious enterprises of the world—that she, with her great publishing houses, sending forth Bibles and tracts by the million in nearly all the languages of this babbling earth—that she should at the mouth of the cannon and at the point of the sword compel the 500,000,000 of immortal souls in China, to receive opium into her territories—that, next to alcohol, greatest curse of the nations—to poison, to madden, to drive to destruction millions upon millions of her unfortunate people, who have not strength of mind to refuse using the accursed thing. For what purpose has this most Christian nation perpetrated this most atrocious crime? To enable the magnates of the East India Company to obtain the price of blood to line their well filled pockets with the gold which they have received for that cruel poison, which has sent millions of China's sons and daughters to death present and eternal death!

An Oppressed Son-in-Law.

They tell a good story of a man in one of the surrounding towns who came home towards midnight decidedly the worse for wear. He might have faced pretty well had he not worn his hat to bed. This gave him away. "John, said the offended wife, "why didn't you take your hat off?" "S'h!" said John. "I'm all right; how'self?" "You are not all right, John. Why didn't you take off your hat?" "Sh'sh! my dear; da'sh all right. I thought first would take it off, but was 'fraid I might wake up your poor mother."

Business Difficulties.

The following assignments are reported Ontario—Almonte, G. S. Chesterman, furniture, etc.; Farmersville, C. Kincaid, grocer; Guelph, W. M. Hepburn & Co., boots and shoes; Kemptville, George Code, woollen manufacturer; Kincardine, Joseph Parr, hotel; Markham, Crawford & Co., tanners (failed); Toronto, Thomas Houston & Co., wholesale woollens and tailors' trimmings; Woodstock, W. G. Boyes, books and fancy goods.

Plainly Inherited

"Papa, said fond mamma, "do you know that Bobby told me a deliberate story to-day?"

"What's that?" said papa, looking sternly at Bobby; "a story? Do you know what becomes of little boys who tell stories?" (Bobby didn't know). "The lions and tigers eat 'em up. You musn't tell stories, Bobby; it's wicked."—Harper's Bazar.

A Good Catch.

Charley (to his pretty cousin)—Do you know, Maud, I understhand that the beautiful girl with Thmith ith baiting her trap for me?

Pretty Cousin—Indeed? What kind of a trap is it, Charley—a mouse trap?

Frances Hodgson Burnett is now 34 years of age, but looks much younger.

A nine-foot coal vein has been struck near the surface at Greeley, Cal.

The death by drowning at Sierra Madre, Cal., of F. W. Gould makes the fifth consecutive case in which the eldest male member of his family has perished by drowning.

It is printed that the highest salary paid Methodist ministers in the New Hampshire Conference is $1,500 and the use of a parsonage, while the average, including house rent, is $600.

In boring a well near Pine Grove, Esmeralda county, Nev., steam of a temperature hot enough to cook potatoes was struck at a depth of sixty feet below the surface.

AT THE Medical Hall!

FLESHERTON

SEEDS!

SEEDS.

TIMOTHY.

CLOVER,

ORCHARD GRASS,

VETCHES!

ONIONS!

POTATO ONIONS,
TOP ONIONS,
YELLOW DUTCH SET,
WHITE DUTCH SET,
ENGLISH MULTIPLIER

GARDEN

—AND—

FIELD SEEDS!

TURNIPS,
CARROTS,
BEANS!

And a Choice Selection of Others

FLOWER SEEDS

Beautiful Assortment.

—FULL STOCK OF—

DRUGS!

—AND—

PATENT MEDICINES!

PARABLE OF AN EDITOR.

BY VALENTINE MUGGINS.

CHAPTER I.

In a certain town there lived an editor named Annanias Scavenger. And it came to pass that he became an editor through the kindness of certain influential townspeople, who furnished him with sufficient filthy lucre to enable him to purchase a printing plant from an honest publisher, who was desirous of retiring from the business. Annanias Scavenger entered upon his duties forthwith and was not long in convincing the public that his name and his character were synonymous terms. Those who befriended him ascertained this fact soon after they had elevated Scavenger to an honorable position. Then they were sorry for having—quite unintentionally—"warmed a serpent" in their bosoms. And well they might, for Annanias Scavenger bombarded these generous men with mud and slime from his office howitzer. Those who did not wish to come in contact with the filthy discharge, subscribed for the Weekly Scavenger, flattered Annanias, and were plentifully whitewashed instead.

And it came to pass that Annanias aspired to a high public position in the gift of the people. Then did he array himself in "purple and fine linen" (and Kid gloves) and travel in the region round about, cajoling and whispering words of flattery in the ears of the sturdy yoomen. He also bowed himself at the shrine of Bacchus and waxed exceedingly merry. But it came to pass that the people grew cold and lukewarm towards him and said one to another, "we will not have this Annanias Scavenger to rule over us nor any of the Scavenger family, for outwardly they are lambs, but inwardly ravenous wolves." And they did choose an honorable and respectable man to lead them on to battle. And when this thing came to the ears of Annanias Scavenger, he waxed wroth, and bringing forth his oft-used howitzer, poured forth a constant and never-ceasing stream of mud and brimstone! And he gnashed his teeth with rage, and thrust his fingers through his fiery red hair (curled with hot irons and carefully plastered with vaseline and bear grease) and smote himself on the breast, exclaiming, "Am I a dog thus to be treated by people far beneath me in station—the latchet of whose shoes they are unworthy to loose! Fools! 'tis I, the clever and great and only Annanias Scavenger, that can successfully lead them on to battle! Have I not said it? And whoever knew Scavenger to do a dishonorable action or tell a lie? Bah!" Thus right boldly spake the valiant Annanias, at the same time charging his "howitzer" to the very muzzle with the filthy material used on such occasions.

And it came to pass that the Weekly Scavenger collected and published "to the world" a series of Annanias-like articles, in which he proclaimed himself the friend and benefactor of the masses, while the other "fellows" were denounced as lacking in that ability so largely possessed by Annanias himself. And the "other fellows" thanked their lucky stars that it was even so—they were quite willing that Annanias Scavenger should have an exclusive monopoly in the particular kind of "ability" he so boastfully claimed to possess.

And it began to be whispered abroad, that Annanias was trying to "raise the wind." And as that is a necessary article to the existence of such clever and windy men, it was generally thought there was some truth in the whispered rumor. Indeed some waxed warm and exclaimed, "Does not this saucy and ill bred Scavenger get his living by a peculiar species of blackmailing? Do not we know that he hath approached even us and said as much as that, it would be ill for us to withhold our support from his Weekly Scavenger?" "And did he not also say," quoth they, "Scavenger is a good friend to those who trade in his shop, and a terror to those who do not? Truly he is an ill-mannered fellow and deserveth not well at the hands of honest people." And these things came to the ears of Annanias. And he communed with himself, yea, verily, he tore his hair and gnashed his teeth with rage. His wrath was hot, but when sanity returned the atmosphere became cooler and smelt less like unto sulphur and brimstone. And Annanias Scavenger became calmer, and, slapping his leg, exclaimed, "Ha! thus will I crush the reptiles that squirm and wriggle around my pathway, frustrating my lofty aspirations and deamping the impetuous ardor of my nature! Revenge! R-r-r-evenge!"

(To be continued.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ANSWERS TO PROBLEMS.

(1)—83.24 feet.
(2)—39 17-24.
(3)—$312.50.
(4)—7½.

Flesherton P. S.

Robt. Keefer sent correct solutions to numbers 1, 2 and 4. Frank VanDusen, Martha Beatty, and Fred. Ayers, solved the first and second. David Mathewson solved No. 1, and Mamie Ayers the first, second and third.

S. S. No. 3, Artemesia.

Annie Akins solved 2nd and 4th. J. J. White and Harry Akins the fourth, and Frank Stewart the fourth.

Questions.

(5)—An agent sold a reaping machine in 1885 for a certain price, and in 1886 he sold another for 10% more than he obtained the previous year. For both machines he got $189. How much did he get for each?

(6)—A street 60 feet wide contains 10 acres, how long is it?

(7)—A farmer has a field 40 rods square. He starts to reap it with a machine that cuts 5 feet wide on the average. After going round the field 20 times he breaks down. What will it cost him at 50 cents an acre to get the rest of the field reaped?

[NOTE TO TEACHERS.—Please bring these questions to the notice of your pupils and work up an interest in this department. We are willing to continue as long as sufficient interest is manifested to justify us in doing so. ED.]

Nineteen Days Without Food.

Dundalk Herald.

Mr. Donald Bell's horses, which ran away from within a short distance of Dundalk, on the 15th of March, were found alive on Sunday last, in a swamp about two miles from this village. Mr. August Ritz, who recently purchased the Mochnke farm, was returning home from church, and taking a short route through the swamp came upon the horses. The ends of the lines were trampled and frozen under the snow and the horses had only about eight feet of space in which they could move. All the bark was peeled off the trees within reach and some of the small cedars were completely gnawed in two. Mr. Ritz immediately went to Mr. Goodfellow, a neighbor, for help, and between them they succeeded in getting the horses to the stable, although the poor brutes were so weak they could scarcely walk, having been nineteen days without food. It will be remembered that we had some of the most severe weather of the season since they were lost and it is miraculous that they were neither frozen nor starved.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

ABSTRACT.

Treasurer's Accounts!

FOR 1886.

Receipts.

To balance from 1885		2277	68
" John Anderson, Roll 1885.		1366	59
" John Wright,	"	160	77
" John Hazard,	"	60	97
" J. B. Sloan,	"	236	43
" John Hazard, Roll 1886		2723	00
" John Wright,	"	3615	00
" John Anderson,	"	2025	00
" J. B. Sloan,	"	1950	00
" Fines		14	00
" Miscellaneous		4487	87
		18917	31

Disbursements.

By Tp. School Equivalent		484	00
" County Rates balance 1885		796	56
" " 1886		3682	44
" Ward No. 1		148	10
" " 2		179	05
" " 3		158	72½
" " 4		138	52
" School Sections		4469	30
" Council Sessions		147	50
" Indigents		189	20
" Debentures & Coupons		528	13
" Salaries		447	50
" Miscellaneous		5442	53
" Balance to 1887		2105	75½
		18917	31

We have much pleasure in certifying that we have gone carefully over the Treasurer's accounts and that we find them correct in every particular, and that the balance in his hands on 1st January, 1887, was $2105.75½.

HENRY MELDRUM, } Auditors.
THOS. BOLAND, }

Treasurer's Office, 3rd Feby., 1887.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf)

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

TENDERS WANTED.

SEALED TENDERS for Repairs of the Township Hall will be received at the Clerk's Office until May 1st next. Specifications to be seen at the Clerk's Office, Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,
Flesherton, April 12th, 1887. Twp. Clerk.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
304-320. Flesherton.

PUBLIC NOTICE!!

To all whom it may Concern.

Know ye all men that I, W. S. CHRISTOE, the Druggist of Flesherton, have the agency for JOHNSON'S celebrated TONIC BITTERS and NERVINE, JOHNSON'S little Pick Tonic Liver Pills and the ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

THE

TONIC BITTERS

are confidently recommended as the VERY BEST in the market for Nervousness, Hysteria, General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Complaints common to the female sex. PALENESS of complexion and for diseases caused by poverty of blood. In conjunction with the Tonic JOHNSON'S Little Liver Pills are the very best for [illegible] the stomach. The All Healing White Ointment is the very best for skin diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Chilblains, &c., &c.

You have only to try these great remedies to be satisfied. Sold by

W. S. CHRISTOE,
The Druggist, Flesherton

FARM for SALE

OR

TO RENT.

BEING Lot 170, Con 1 West T & S Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Well watered. Orchard. About 2½ miles from Flesherton. For full particulars apply to the undersigned

JOHN O'MELIA,
Flesherton.

FARM FOR SALE.

BEING Lot 178, 1st E. T. & S. R., Artemesia, one mile from Flesherton, containing 50 acres, all cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Never-failing stream of water runs across farm, also a never-failing spring of water. New bank barn 36x56, with stone stabling full size of barn, underneath. Log House. Good soil and free from frost. Part payment down, time on balance. For full particulars, apply to

D. L. WHITE, Agt.,
Flesherton.

Mortgage Sale!

OF

VALUABLE VILLAGE PROPERTY.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by D. McCORMICK, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction, at ATKINSON'S HOTEL, in the Village of PRICEVILLE, on

Thursday, May 5th, 1887,

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following Lands and Premises in the Village of Priceville in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot No. 4 on the North side of Kincardine Street in the said Village of Priceville more particularly described as follows: commencing at a point 54 feet West of the south East Corner of said Lot number 4, thence Westerly 46 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 32 feet from the South West corner of said Lot number 4, thence Northerly 153 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 12 feet from rear of said Lot, thence Westerly 32 feet to Princess Street, thence Northerly 12 feet to rear of said Lot, thence Easterly 78 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 54 feet from the Eastern boundary of said Lot, thence Southerly 165 feet, be the same more or less, to the place of commencing. Containing by admeasurement 880 square yards, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a good 2 story frame building, size 30 feet x 40 feet, with cellar underneath used as a store and dwelling, occupying one of the best business stands in the Village, also a frame stable and a good well.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in one month thereafter without interest.

For further particulars apply to D. McCORMICK Esq., Auctioneer, FRANCIS WAITE, Priceville, or to the undersigned.

J. W. FROST,
Vendor's Solicitor.

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887.

Mortgage Sale!

OF

Valuable Village Property.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction at MUNSHAW'S HOTEL in the Village of FLESHERTON, on Thursday, May 5th, 1887.

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following lands and premises in the Village of FLESHERTON in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot number 151 in the 1st Range North East of the Toronto and Sydenham Road in the Township of Artemesia and may be more particularly known as Village Lots numbers 3 and 4 on the South East side of Collingwood Street, in the Village of Flesherton, as laid out in a survey or sub-division of said Lot number 151 made by Wm. Spry, Esq., P.L.S. and re-surveyed and a map or plan thereof made by Thomas B. Gilliland, Esq., P.L.S. which map or plan is registered in the Registry Office of the South Riding of said County of Grey, and dated the 8th day of August, 1879, and containing by admeasurement about ½ an acre, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a blacksmith shop, size 18x36 feet, a frame building used as a sash and door factory, 30x30 feet, and a frame dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in 1 month thereafter without interest.

For further particulars apply to A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, Flesherton; or to the undersigned,

J. W. FROST,
Vendor's Solicitor.

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's.

Dentistry.

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S

DENTIST.

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

ANDREW McGIRR,

Issuer of Marriage Licenses,

FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rate.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

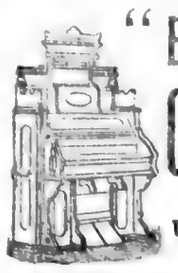
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE.

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 305. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, APRIL 21, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT,

Money Saved!

BY CLOSE BUYING!

Helps Pay Taxes.

FIVE years in Grey Co. this month and a fair paying business established through the generous patronage of the public. From Dundalk to Holland Centre, on the line, also Maxwell, Priceville, Kimberley, Engenia, Traverston, Rocklyn, Berkeley and other points have given me a good support. My thanks are due to all transient and home customers. I have endeavored to deserve patronage extended, by honest representation of ev'ry article sold; and my increasing business warrants me in assuming that my efforts to deal honorably at fair profits, have been appreciated.

I shall continue my business on the line of truthful representation, just exchange in giving value received, and a fair profit to meet obligations incurred. Stock will be kept complete in

Hampden Watches

My name on, WALTHAM Watches, four grades, a few BARTLETT'S at close prices, ELGIN Watches, and the exceptionally fine made full jewelled COLUMBUS movements. Watch warrants 1, 2, and 3 years, "covering breakages." Filled Gold cases Coin Silver cases, 2 to 5 oz., also Silverware 3 & 4 oz.

Ladies Gold Watches and Chains, R. F. Simmons' roll Gold Chains, best made, Draper's fire gilt. Seth Thomas and Ansonia spring & weight Clocks, a beautiful stock of Silverware, hollow and flat, for table use. Engagement Gem Rings, 18k. Wedding Rings, Brooches, Bar Pins & sets, Lockets and Necklets, Cuff & Collar Buttons, Silver Thimbles, Pebble Specks, Lazarus & Morris, Lenses, Boss Specks. I have $100.00 wholesale in Specks and can suit any sight.

Watch Repair book shows this week watches and clocks booked to No. 1233. My work gives satisfaction, is fully warranted & charges moderate. No second or catch charges after watches are left. Any one coming 15 miles and not finding my stock and prices as this advt. represents, I will pay legal mileage one way and expenses here, meals &c. Goods and work Warranted.

W. A. BROWN,

A Reliable Jeweller,

MARKDALE, - - - ONT.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Miss Mittie Fraine on the 28th.

Taffy pulls are all the rage.

Have you paid the printer?

DIED.—The Flesherton Mechanics' Institute. It died young.

And still they go. Those $1.50 plough Boots for $1 at J. G. Anderson's

Division Court in the the Town Hall, Flesherton, to-day.

Don't miss the concert in the Methodist church on the 28th.

TEA, TEA, TEA!—4 lbs 40c. tea for $1, or 3 lbs 30c. tea for $1 at J. G. Anderson's.

East Grey Spring Show will be held on the Society's grounds here to-morrow (Friday).

Band concert to-morrow (Friday) promises to be a great success. Don't miss it.

The farmers in this vicinity have commenced plowing—sod and new land being workable.

Don't fail to drop into Russell's, Flesherton, and look at his fine stock and remember 25 per cent. off for the next 30 days. 3t

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices. R. TREMBLE. (tf.)

Rev. W. Ayers preached able sermons in the Methodist church here Sunday morning and evening last.

See J. G. Anderson's new advertisement in another column, something special.

Young Mare 4 years old for sale at Flesherton Station. See advt. in another column.

For thenext 30 days you can get terrible bargains at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Don't fail to call. 3t

Miss Lever has just received a fine stock of Millinery and Dress Trimmings. Strain's block, Flesherton.

Everything away down in price at J. G. Anderson's. Call and secure some of the bargains.

Clean, tidy girl, between the age of 10 and 15, wanted at once. Apply at The Advance office, Flesherton.

Miss Ella Ayers went to Oshawa last Friday on very interesting business. The happy event takes place this week and Miss Ayers is to be bridesmaid.

We regret exceedingly to learn of the death of the youngest daughter of Thos. Nicholson, Esq., of Artemesia, which sorrowful event occured quite suddenly on Sunday morning last. Mr. Nicholson and his very highly respected family have the sympathy of the entire community.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TREMBLE'S. (tf)

THIRTY DAYS!

POSITIVELY

FOR

30 Days Only

—— THAT THE ——

Great Slaughter!

Of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex, etc., at RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, Flesherton, will continue.

Russell has just returned from the city, where he has secured some bargains never before known in this section of country—in fact it is impossible to compete with Russell.—All his goods are marked in PLAIN FIGURES, at very low prices and, for the next thirty days only, he is actually going to give 25 per cent off on all cash sales over $1 Just imagine the finest grade of American Nickel Alarm Clocks at only $2, sold everywhere at $2.50 and $2.75. The finest grade of Plated Chains, beautiful patterns, for $1.60, sold everywhere at 2.25 and 2.50; the finest make of Clocks, beautiful Walnut Cases, from $2.75 up to $8.50, sold everywhere from 3.50 to 10.00. We are not making enough on these goods to pay your mileage or meals, neither will we give you a meal TO CATCH YOUR CUSTOM, but offer you finer goods at a little over half what you can get them for elsewhere! The finest make of Solid Silver Swiss Watches from $6.90 up; and the genuine American Watches from $9.50 up, bearing Warrants from 2½ to 5 years. ☞ We keep only the genuine goods, which bear long warrants. THIS IS THE CHANCE OF YOUR LIFE!—FOR THIRTY DAYS ONLY!—As we must clear them out before the arrival of our Summer stock at that date.

In REPAIRING, everyone knows that Russell's work always gives satisfaction and his work has already given him the name of the boss watchmaker and jeweller in this section. DONT FAIL TO CALL within the next 30 days and secure some of the GREAT BARGAINS NOW OFFERING.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Before getting your summer supply of tea go to J. G. Anderson.s and get a trial of that Famous 40c. tea, 4 lbs for $1.

Russell's Noted Jewelry Store is the place to get Spex—they keep the famous B. Laurance Spex & can fit any sight. 3t

The best bargains in ready made clothing ever offered in the county at J. G. Anderson's. Come in and see them.

In order to prevent outlawry, the Editor of The Advance will put a number of accounts in Court next month unless they are settled prior to that time. We must do this in order to secure ourself.

The people of this country, for thirty miles around, have come to the conclusion, that Russell is the Boss watchmaker and jeweller. ☞ always take your watch to him. 3t

The Flesherton Advance is now kicking up it heels and rejoicing over its sixth birthday. It is a very creditable local journal and we wish friend Fawcett abundant and increased prosperity. —Ingersoll Sun.

Did you see the fine display in the front window of Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton? Its ahead of that of lots of city Jewelry Stores. And the prices—well, they just down anything.

Now buy your tickets for the great Mittie Fraine entertainment in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Thursday evening next, the 28th inst. Admission 15 cents only. The event of the season.

Remember the grand Band Concert in the Town Hall, Flesherton, to-morrow night (Friday) commencing at 8 o'clock sharp. All should feel in duty bound to assist our good-hearted band boys. Admission 15 cents.

Secure your ticket for the Mittie Fraine entertainment here on the 28th inst. There is going to be a big rush for seats as this will be the last and grandest entertainment of the season. Tickets 15 cents each.

On our editorial page this week (centrally located) every reader of the Advance will not fail to notice that at Richardson's Drug Store, Flesherton, will be found a large and carefully selected stock of the "Purest Field and garden Seeds."

REMOVED!—The undesrigned has removed his Flour and Feed Store to the stand next door to Strain's Tinware and Hardware shop, Flesherton, where he will be pleased to meet with all his old customers and as many new ones as will favor him with their patronage. Satisfaction guaranteed. G. KEEFER.

The man who doesn't advertise generally gets badly left. Of course there are modes and modes of advertising effectually. For example observe J. G. Anderson's bold, attractive and spicy announcement on last page of this week's Advance. Mr. Anderson is offering great bargains and he knows just how to let the people know all about it.

Miss Mittie Fraine, the celebrated elocutionist, comes to Flesherton highly recomended by press and public. Her entertainment here, under the patronage of the Methodist church, next Thursday evening, 28th inst., promises to give unqualified satisfaction. The energetic pastor of the church, Rev. W. Ayers, has been making most commendable efforts to help swell the attendance on that occasion.

Births.

IRWIN.—In Flesherton, on the 9th inst., the wife of Wm. Irwin Esq., of a daughter.

MOORE.—In Flesherton, on the 12th inst., the wife of J. E. Moore, Esq., of a daughter.

Is this spring?

Master George Treadgold paid a brief visit to Thornbury this week.

We are glad to notice the increasing interest taken in our Mathematical Editor's department.

Master Eddie Thompson goes to Thornbury to-morrow to take a position on the Standard.

The Advance till Jan. 1st, 1888, for 65 cents. Cheapest and best local paper in the county.

An advertisement judiciously planted in The Advance is sure to bring forth fruit in abundance. Try it.

The spring poet has not been discovered in Flesherton yet this season. If he does turn up we have a club ready.

Mr. W. A. Milburn's carriage factory, Flesherton, is taking the bun these times—in prices, quality of work and everything else. It leads the gang.

Our Station reporter has not furnished us with an account of the Spring Show at Flesherton Station last Tuesday. Come, come, Jimmie! this won't do. Let's hear from you.

Smart, tidy girl between the age of ten and fifteen years, wanted as Nursemaid. Apply at The Advance office. N. B.—Duties few and light. Must be well recommended.

We had a very pleasant call from Maxwell's genial and popular medical man, Dr. Kerr, yesterday. Of course the worthy Dr. subscribed for The Advance—all sensible people generally do.

A Belleville paper reports that an elopement down there was "nipped in the bud," although the couple had got as far as Shannonville. It is queer that an elopement should bud after the lady leaves.—Toronto World.

It is contrary to law to allow saw dust to get into streams of water, and we understand future offenders are to be severely dealt with by the "Grey and Bruce Fish and Game Protective Society." Snaring hares or other game is also unlawful.

Norman Boyles is dead. He passed quietly away on Tuesday morning last. No one knew of his illness until Monday. Dr. Carter was called in and did all in his power to save the life of poor Norman but without avail. The malady (inflammation of the lungs) had obtained too firm a footing in the poor fellow's system. He was very patient and gentle throughout. Mrs. J. Beecroft sat up with him during the night and did all that mortal could do to alleviate the excruciating pain. The neighbors were very kind. At about 11 o'clock on Tuesday forenoon Norman breathed his last.

Second To None In Grey.

Shelburne Free Press.

"We omitted to state in our last issue that the Flesherton Advance had entered on its sixth year. The editor has our best wishes for his future success, and he may well be proud of the Advance, as it is second to none in the County of Grey."

We feel deeply grateful to all our contemporaries for their kind words and hearty good wishes. Such bright and cheering testimonials aid very materially in lessening the heavy burdens incident to country journalism. Thanks, brother Mortimer! thanks brethren of the press generally.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

MCGREGOR & PARKE'S CARBOLIC CERATE.—Have you an old Sore, Cut, Bruise, Corn, Bunion, Salt Rheum, Pimple, Ringbone, Rough Hands or Face? If so, there is but one cure, namely, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. If you but try it, it will convince you. It costs but 25c. at the Drug Store.

Died.

BOYLES.—In Flesherton, on the 19th inst., Norman Boyles, aged 32 years.

A Voice From Home.

(Song of the rural M. P. P.'s wife, adapted from the New York Herald.)

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,
From Toronto, its cares and harm;
'Tis lonely without you; why do you not come
And see to the things on the farm?
You told me when you were elected last fall
If I would but once let you go,
You surely would come ere the winter was gone;
Of course I believed it was so

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,
I'm sniffing the odor of spring;
You've stayed long enough with the boys away there,
You're much safer under my wing.
The old horse is pawing in the stall like mad,
The colt's in a terrible stew;
The small brindle heifer has got a white calf,
And the cattle are bawling for you.

Husband, dear husband, come home to me now,
I'd like to observe what you're at;
When will you get through with your Bills and resolves,
And speeches by this one and that?
Your mileage is paid by the longest way round,
But take the short cut when you come.

The voice of your Betsy is calling you, dear;
It's nearly the time to make soap;
And some of the women are saying, my love,
I'm giving you quite too much rope.
They say there is desperate flirting up there
With widows and maids not a few.
I haven't been kissed since the morning you left,
But, Nicholas, how is it with you?
Come home! Come home!
You hear me, you rascal? Come home!

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

"Perhaps you are right, my love—you generally are right in the main; but my desire for vengeance upon that man De Talor has been the breath of my nostrils, and behold! I have achieved it. Man, if he only lives long enough, and has strength of will enough, can achieve anything. But man fritters away his powers over a variety of objects; he is led astray in pursuit of the butterfly Pleasure, or the bubble Ambition, or the Destroying Angel Woman; and his purposes fall to the ground between a dozen stools. Most men, too, are not capable of a purpose. Men are weak creatures; and yet what a mighty seed lies hid in every human breast! Think, my children, what man might, nay, may become, when his weakness and follies have fallen from him, when his rudimentary virtues have been developed, and his capacities for physical and mental beauties brought to an undreamed-of perfection! Look at the wild flower and the flower of the hot-house—it is nothing as compared to the possibilities inherent in man, even as we know him. Oh, it is a splendid dream! Will it ever be fulfilled, I wonder? Well, well—

'Whatever there is to know,
That we shall know one day.'

Come, let us turn; it will soon be time to dress for dinner. By-the-way, Dorothy, that reminds me, I don't quite like the way that your respected grandfather is going on. I told him that I had no more deeds for him to copy, that I had done with deeds, and he went and got that confounded stick of his, and showed me that according to his own little calculations his time was up; and then he got his slate and wrote about my being the devil on it, but that I had no more power over him, and that he was bound for heaven. The other day, too, I caught him staring at me through the glass of the door with a very queer look in his eyes."

"Ah, Reginald, so you have noticed it. I quite agree with you; I don't at all like his goings-on. Do you know, I think that he had better be shut up."

"I don't like to shut him up, Dorothy. However, here we are; we will talk about it to-morrow."

Having led Ernest to his room, Dorothy, before beginning to dress herself, went to the office to see if her grandfather was still there. And there, sure enough, she found him, pacing up and down, muttering, and waving his long stick, out of which all the notches had now been cut.

"What are you doing, grandfather?" she asked; "why haven't you gone to dress?"

He snatched up his slate and wrote rapidy upon it:

"Time's up! Time's up! Time's up! I've done with the devil and all his works. I'm off to heaven on the big black horse to find Mary. Who are you? You look like Mary."

"Grandfather," said Dolly, quietly taking the slate out of his hand, "what do you mean by writing such nonsense? Let me hear no more of it. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. Now, mind, I will have no more of it. Put away that stick, and go and wash your hands for dinner."

The old man did as he was bid somewhat sulkily, Dorothy thought—but when he arrived at the dinner-table there was nothing noticeable about his manner.

They dined at a quarter to seven, and dinner did not take them very long. When it was over, old Atterleigh drank some wine, and then, according to his habit, went and sat in the ancient ingle-nook which had presumably been built by the forgotten Dum for his comfort on winter evenings. And on winter evenings, when there was a jolly wood-fire burning on the hearth, it was a pleasant spot enough; but to sit there in the dark on a lovely summer night was an act, well—worthy of old Atterleigh.

After dinner the conversation turned upon that fatal day when Alston's Horse was wiped out at Isandhlwana. It was a painful subject both to Ernest and Jeremy, but the former was gratifying his uncle's curiosity by explaining to him how that last dread struggle with the six Zulus came to determine itself in their favor.

"And how was it," asked Mr. Cardus, "that you managed to get the better of the fellow you rolled down the hill with?"

"Because the assegai broke, and, fortunately enough, the blade was left in my hand. Where is it, Doll (for Jeremy had brought it home with him)?"

Dorothy got up and reached the broken assegai, which had about eight inches of shaft, from its place over the mantelpiece.

"Now then, Jeremy, if you will be so good as to sprawl upon your back on the floor, I will just show my uncle what happened," Jeremy complied, not without grumbling about dirtying his dress-coat.

"Now, Jeremy, my boy, where are you? Oh, there! Well, excuse my taking the liberty of kneeling on your chest, and hollos out if the assegai goes into you. If we are going to have a performance at all, it may as well be a realistic one.—Now, uncle, you see when we finished rolling, which was just as this assegai snapped in two, as luck would have it I was uppermost, and managed to get my knee on my friend's left arm and to hold his right with my left. Then, before he could get loose, I drove this bit of spear through the side of his throat, just there, so that it cut the jugular vein and he died shortly afterward—and now you know all about it."

Here Ernest rose and laid the spear upon the table, and Jeremy, entering into the spirit of the thing, began to die as artistically as a regard for his dress-coat would allow. Just then Dorothy, looking up, saw her grandfather Atterleigh's distorted face peering round the wall of the inglenook, where he was sitting in the dark, and looking at the scene of mimic slaughter with that same curious gaze that he had worn on several occasions lately. He withdrew his head at once.

"Get up, Jeremy!" said his sister, sharply, "and stop writhing about there like a great snake. You look as though you had been murdered; it is horrible!"

Jeremy arose laughing, and, having obtained Dolly's permission, they all lit their pipes, and, sitting there in the fading light, fell to talking about that sad scene of slaughter, which indeed appeared that night to have a strange fascination for Mr. Cardus. He asked Ernest and Jeremy about it again and again—how this man was killed, and that?—did they die at once, and so on.

The subject was always distressing to Ernest, and one to which he rarely alluded, full as it was for him of the most painful recollections, especially those connected with his dear friend Alston and his son.

Dorothy knew this, and knew too that Ernest would be down on his luck for at least a day after the conversation, which she did her best to stop. At last she succeeded, but the melancholy associations connected with the talk had apparently already done their work, for everybody lapsed into the most complete silence, and sat grouped together at the top end of the old oak-table as quiet as though they were cut in stone. Meanwhile, the twilight deepened, and little gusts of wind arose, and gently shook the old-fashioned window-lattices, making a sound as though feeble hands were trying to throw them open. The dull evening light crept from place to place, and threw great shadows about the room, glanced upon the armor on its paneled walls, and at last began to die away into darkness. The whole scene was eerie, and for some unknown reason it oppressed Dorothy. She wondered why everybody was so silent, and yet she herself did not feel equal to breaking the silence; there was a load upon her heart.

Just then a curious thing happened. As the reader may remember, the case containing the wounderful mummied head, found by Eva Ceswick, had years before been placed by Jeremy upon a bracket at the end of the room. Round about this case hung various pieces of armor, and among others, above it, suspended by a piece of string from a projecting hook, was a heavy iron gauntlet. For many years—twenty or more—it had hung from the hook, but now at last the string was worn through, and even as Dorothy was wondering at the silence, it gave. Down came the heavy iron hand with a crash, and, as it passed, it caught the latch of the long air-tight case, and jarred the door wide open.

Everybody in the room sprang to their feet, and, as they did so, a last ray from the setting sun struggled through one of the windows and rested upon the opened case, staining it, and all about it, the hue of blood, and filling the fearful crystal eyes within with a lurid light. How they glowed and shone to be sure, after their long years of sleep!—for the case had scarcely been opened for years—while their tremulous glance, now dull, now intense, according as the light played upon them, appeared to wander round and round the room, as though in search of somebody or something.

It was an awful sight that that ray of sunlight showed, as it played upon the trembling crystal orbs, the scornful, deathly features, and the matchless hair that streamed on either side. Together with the sudden break in the silence caused by the crashing fall of the gauntlet, it proved, as it had done many years before, altogether too much for the beholders' nerves.

"What is that?" asked Ernest, with a start, as the gauntlet fell.

Dorothy glanced up and gave a little cry of horror. "Oh, that dreadful head!—it is looking at us."

They all rose to their feet, and Dorothy, seizing Ernest by one hand, and covering her eyes with the other, retreated, slowly followed by the others, toward the swing-door. Soon they had reached the door, were through it, down the passage, and out in the peaceful stillness of the evening. Then Jeremy spoke, and his language was more forcible than polite.

"Well, I am blowed!" he said, wiping the cold perspiration from his forehead.

"O Reginald, I do wish you would get the horrible thing out of the house; there has been nothing but misfortune ever since it has been here. I cannot bear it, I cannot bear it!" said Dolly, hysterically.

"Nonsense, you superstitious child!" answered Mr. Cardus, who was now recovering from his start. "The gauntlet knocked the door open, that was all. It is nothing but a mummied head; but, if you don't like it, I will send it to the British Museum to-morrow."

Oh, please do, Reginald," answered Dorothy, who appeared quite unhinged.

So hurried had been the retreat from the sitting-room that everybody had forgotten "Hard-riding Atterleigh" sitting in the dark in the inglenook. But the bustle in the room had attracted him, and already, before they had left, he had projected his large head covered with the tangled gray locks and begun to stare about. Presently his eyes fell upon the crystal orbs, and then, to him, the orbs appeared to cease their wanderings and rest upon his eyes. For awhile the two heads stared at each other thus—the golden head without a body in the box, and the gray head that, thrust out as it was from the ingle-wall, seemed to have no body either. They stared and stared, till at last the golden head got the mastery of the gray head, and the old man crept from his corner, crept down the room till he was almost beneath the baleful eyes, and nodded, nodded, nodded at them.

And they too seemed to nod, nod, nod at him. Then he retreated backward as slowly as he had come, nodding all the while, till he came to where the broken assegia lay upon the table, and taking it, thrust it up his sleeve. As he did so, the ray of light faded and the fiery eyes went out. It was as though the thick white lids and long eyelashes had dropped over them.

None of the other four returned to the sitting-room that night.

When he recovered from his fright, Jeremy went into his little room, the same in which he used to stuff birds as a boy, and busied himself with his farm accounts. Mr. Cardus, Dorothy, and Ernest walked about together in the balmy moonlight, for very shortly after the twilight had departed, the great harvest-moon came up and flooded the world with light. Mr. Cardus was in a talkative, excited mood that night. He talked about his affairs which he had now finally wound up, and about Mary Atterleigh, mentioning little tricks of manner and voice which were reproduced in Dorothy. He talked too about Ernest's and Dorothy's marriage, and said what a comfort it was to him. Finally, about 10 o'clock, he said that he was tired and was going to bed

"God bless you, my dears; sleep well! Good-night," he said. "We will settle about that new orchid-house to-morrow. Good-night, good-night."

Shortly afterward Dorothy and Ernest also went to bed, reaching their room by a back entrance, for they neither of them felt inclined to come under the fire of the crystal eyes again, and soon they were asleep in each other's arms.

The minutes stole on one by one through the silence of the dead night, bearing their records with them to the archives of the past. Eleven o'clock came and fled away; midnight came too, and swept on bat-like wings across the world. Everywhere—on land, sky, and sea—there was silence, nothing but silence sleeping in the moonlight.

Hark! O heaven, what was that!

One fearful, heart-rending yell of agony, ringing all through the ancient house, rattling the casements, shaking the armor against the paneled walls, pulsing and throbbing in horrible notes out into the night, echoing and dying far away over the sea!

And then silence again, silence sleeping in the moonlight.

They sprang from their beds, did every living soul beneath the roof, and rushed in their night-gear, men and women together, into the sitting room. The crystal eyes seemed to be awake again, for the moon was up and playing upon them, causing them now and then to flash out in gleams of opalescent light.

Somebody lit a candle, somebody missed Mr. Cardus; surely he could not have slept through that! Yes, he had slept through it. They rushed and tumbled, a confused mass of white into the room where he lay. He was there sure enough, and he slept very sound, with a red gash in his throat, from which the blood fell in heavy drops down, down to the ground.

They stood aghast, and as they stood, from the courtyard outside there came a sound of galloping hoofs. They knew the sound of the galloping—it was that of Ernest's great black stallion!

A mile or more away out on the marshes, just before you come to the well-known quicksands, which have, tradition says, swallowed so many unfortunates, and which shudder palpably at times and are unpleasant to look on, stands a lock-house, inhabited by one solitary man who has charge of the sluice. On this very night it is necessary for him to open his sluice-gates at a particular moment, and now he stands awaiting that propitious time. He is an ancient mariner; his hands are in his pockets, his pipe in his mouth, his eyes are fixed upon the sea. We have met him before. Suddenly he hears the sound of a powerful horse galloping furiously. He turns, and his hair begins to rise upon his head, for this is what he sees in the bright moonlight:

Fast, fast toward him thunders a great coal-black horse, snorting with mingled rage and terror, and on its bare back there sits, with a grip of iron, a man—an old man, for his gray locks stream out behind him, who waves above his head the fragment of a spear.

On they come. Before them is the wide sluice; if they are mortal they will turn or plunge into it. No, the great black horse gathers himself, and springs into the air.

By Heaven, he has cleared it! No horse ever took the leap before, or will again. On at a whirlwind speed toward the shuddering quicksand two hundred yards away!

Splash! horse and man are in it, making the moist mass shake and tremble for twenty yards round. The bright moonlight shows it all. The horse shrieks in fear and agony, as only a horse can; the man on its back waves the spear.

The horse vanishes, the man vanishes, the spear glitters an instant longer in the moonlight, and then vanishes too. They have all vanished forever.

They have all vanished, and again the perfect silence sleeps in the moonlight.

"But me," says the ancient one aloud, and shaking with a mortal dread, "but me, I have stood still and seed many a queer thing, but I never seed a thing like that!" and he turned and fled as fast as his old legs would carry him—forgetful of Dutch cheeses and of sluice-gates, forgetful of everything except that demon horse and man.

Thus ended "Hard-riding Atterleigh's" maddest gallop, and thus too ended the story of Mr. Cardus and his revenge.

CHAPTER XLVI.

DOROTHY'S TRIUMPH.

Many years passed before Eva Plowden returned to Kesterwick, and then she was carried thither. Alive she did not return, nor during all those years did she and Ernest ever meet

They buried her, in obedience to her last wishes, there in the churchyard where lay generation upon generation of her ancient race, and the daisies grew above her head. Twice had they bloomed above her before Sir Ernest Kershaw stood by the spot, hallowed by the presence of what had held the spirit of the woman he had loved.

He was a grizzled man of nearly fifty now, nor were streaks of grey wanting in Dorothy's hair, as they stood that summer evening by Eva's grave. Many things had happened to the pair since Mr. Cardus' tragic death. They had had children some they had lost, some remained—honest English lads and lasses, with their father's eyes. They had enjoyed great wealth, and spent it royally, giving with both hands to all who needed. They had drunk deep of the cup of this world's joys and sorrows. Ernest had gone into Parliament, and made something of a name there. Then impatient for the active life of earlier days, he had accepted a high colonial appointment, for which, notwithstanding his blindness, his wealth and parliamentary reputation eminently fitted him. Now he had just returned from filling the governorship of one of the Australian colonies.

Many years had passed, many things had happened. And yet as he stood by that heap of turf, which he could not see, it seemed but yesterday when—and he sighed.

"Not quite cured yet, Ernest?" said Dorothy, interrogatively.

"Yes, Dorothy," he answered, with a little sigh, "I think I am cured. At any rate," he went on, as she took his hand to lead him away from the grave, "I have learned to accept the decrees of Providence without murmuring. I have done with dreams, and outlived pessimism. Life would, it is true, have been a different thing for me if poor Eva had not deserted me, for she poisoned its waters at the fount, and so they have always tasted rather bitter. But happiness is not the end and object of man's extistence, and if I could I do not think I would undo the past. Take me to the old flat tombstone, Dolly, near the door."

She led him to it, and he sat down.

"Ah," he went on, "how beautiful she was! was there ever woman like her, I wonder? And now her bones lie there; her beauty is all gone, and there lives of her only the unending issues of what she did. I have only to think, Dolly, and I can see her as I saw her a score of times passing in and out of this church-door. Yes, I can see her, and the people round her, and the clothes she wore, and the smile in her beautiful dark eyes—for her eyes seemed to smile, you remember, Dolly. How I worshipped her too with all my heart and soul and strength, as though she were an angel! and that was my mistake, Dolly. She was only a woman—a weak woman."

"You said just now that you were cured, Ernest; one would hardly think it to hear you talk," put in Dorothy, smiling.

"Yes, Doll, I am cured; you have cured me, my dear wife, for you have crept into my life and taken possession of it, so that there is little room for anybody else, and now, Dorothy, I love you with all my heart."

She pressed his hand and smiled again, for she knew that she had triumphed, and that he did love her, truly love her, and that his passion for Eva was a poor thing compared to what it had been twenty years before—more indeed of a tender regret, not unmingled with a starry hope, than a passion at all. Dorothy was a clever little person, and understood something of Ernest and the human heart in general. She had thought long ago that she would win Ernest altogether to her in the end. By what tenderness, by what devotion and nobility of character she accomplished this, the reader who knows her can well imagine, but in the end she did accomplish it, as she deserved to. The contrast between the conduct of the two women who had mainly influenced his life was too marked for Ernest, a man of a just and reasonable mind, to altogether ignore, and when once he came to comparisons the natural results followed. And yet, though he learned to love Dorothy so dearly, it cannot be said that he forgot Eva, because there are some things that a man can never forget, since they are a part of his inner life, and of these first love is unfortunately one.

"Ernest," went on Dorothy, "you remember what you told me when you asked me to marry you in Titheburgh Abbey, about your belief that your affection for Eva would outlast the world, and find a continued expression in the lives to come. Do you still believe that?"

"Yes, Doll, to a great extent."

His wife sat and thought for a minute.

"Ernest," she said, presently.

"Yes, dear."

"I have managed to hold my own against Eva in this world, when she had all the chances and all the beauty on her side, and what I have to say about your theories now is, that when we get to the next, and are all beautiful, it will be very strange if I don't manage to hold it there. She had her chance and she threw it away; now I have got mine, and I don't mean to throw it away either in this world or the next."

Ernest laughed a little. "I must say, my dear, it would be a very poor heaven if you were not there."

"I should think so indeed. Those whom God hath joined together let not man put asunder, or woman either. But what is the good of our stopping here to talk such stuff about things of which we really understand nothing. Come, Ernest, Jeremy and the boys will be waiting for us."

And so hand in hand they went on homeward through the quiet twilight.

THE END.

At Least He Thought So.

Mr. P. Danaviarr consults his dentist. "Excruciating pain in your teeth, you say?" inquired the practitioner.

"Horrible!"

"How often does it come on?"

"Every five minutes!"

"And lasts?"

"Oh! a quarter of an hour at the very least."—Almanach Picttoresque.

He was a Philosopher.

"How ever do you manage to find what you want when you keep your things in such disorder?" asked a man of an editor whose manuscripts were lying around in confusion.

"Easy enough," replied the editor. "Whenever I want a certain article I just take the bottom of the pile."

Unsatisfactory Progress.

Tommy came home from school and handed to his father the teacher's report on his progress during the month.

"This is very unsatisfactory, Tom; you've a very small number of good marks. I'm not at all pleased with it."

"I told the teacher you wouldn't be, but he wouldn't alter it."

The Maritime Provinces and New England were visited on Saturday by the severest storm of the season. Heavy gales prevailed along the coast and the snow fell to a considerable depth. The railways are blocked in New Brunswick. It is feared that the loss of life and property at sea was extensive.

Evening classes, at a penny per week, have proved a great success in Airdrie, Lanarkshire, and it is stated that free education will possibly be tried next year.

CURRENT TOPICS.

When an alarm of fire is sounded in hotel, lodgers cannot be too quick in getting out, if a way is open. In a crowded theatre the danger of being trampled or crushed to death must be taken into consideration and a rush avoided. In either case a cool head will often save a scorched skin or something worse.

Newark Advertiser: "The popular grief is readily assuaged. Money comes much more reluctantly forth than sympathy does. What is everybody's business is nobody's. They who propose a public monument to the dead must be quick about it, must have a specific and comprehensive plan and must close all calls for money very early."

The houses in the olive-growing districts in the north of Italy have constructed beneath them tanks in which the olive oil, the produce of the year's crop, is stored by the respective inhabitants. This peculiar feature has entailed upon the owners financial ruin as the result of the late earthquakes, the whole of the store being spoilt by debris, etc.

M. Fremy has read a paper at the French Academy of Sciences describing the successful researches made by him, with M. Verneuil's assistance, for obtaining artificial rubies. By letting alumina dissolve in fluoride of calcium he obtained crystals of alumina—that is to say, perfect rubies, defying the closest scrutiny, and even higher in value than natural stones. They can be made of large size.

Prof. McGee, of the Geological Survey, in a recent lecture on the Charleston earthquake, said that displacement is now in progress at a rate so astonishingly rapid as to occasion surprise that earthquakes are not more frequent, and the cities of Pittsburg, Richmond, Fredericksburg, Washington, Baltimore, Port Deposit, Wilmington, Philadelphia, Trenton and New York have been located on the very line of displacement.

The Duke of Devonshire, now verging on 80, has resigned the chairmanship of the Barrow Hematite Steel Company and Barrow Shipbuilding Company. He is succeeded in these positions by his son, the Marquis of Hartington, leader of the Liberal Unionists. The Marquis "owns" 100,000 acres of land in the counties of Cork and Waterford, Ireland, obtained by confiscation a couple of centuries ago. He is vehemently opposed to "the Plan of Campaign."

In a recent address to the graduating class of the University of Maryland Faculty f Physic, Col. H. Kyd Douglas said these wise words: "A young physician's first prescription should be for himself—a wife—to be taken immediately. A young preacher ought to get along without a wife. A young lawyer may get along without one, but a young celibate doctor won't do. His marriage will certainly carry more weight than his medical diploma. Doctors must be sober and serious, and there is nothing so likely to make them so as an early marriage."

Quite a number of English saints have just been added to the calendar. The Catholics of Scotland are resolved not to be outdone by their English co-religionists, and have, it is said, taken steps to obtain the canonization of the unfortunate Queen Mary. It is expected that the question will be settled one way or the other at Rome by Easter. In the event of the decision being favorable a Catholic church is to be erected at Linlithgow to the memory of the new saint. Scotland has already two royal saints—Saint Margaret and Saint David. Of the latter it was said by some of his successors on the throne, "He was a sair saunct for the crown."

One of the thoughtless things witnessed every day is that of the most fastidious lady taking a coin from her purse and holding it between the lips until a glove is adjusted or the conductor calls for his fare. The ladies seem to forget that the small coin in daily circulation passes through a variety of hands, all the way from the soap-grease collector to the saloon. People with every form of even loathsome disease not only handle but carry them in their pockets, and there is not a doubt but disease of a contagious character is often conveyed by the contents of the pocketbook. The danger is not, perhaps, sufficient to call for fumigation, but it is enough to make careful people keep money from their mouths. The practice of wetting the finger from the mouth in counting paper money is altogether bad, not only because it is unclean, but because of actual danger from inoculation of disease.

A Fair Exchange.

Gentleman (at table in restaurant)—Excuse me, sir, but you are drinking my wine.

Another Gentleman—Yes, sir; and you will excuse me, sir, but you are reading my paper.

Dakota Weather Indications.

Reuben—I guess, Mirandy, we'll have a cyclone afore mornin'.

Mirandy (inside)—What makes you think so, Reuben?

Reuben—'Cause there goes Deacon Jones' barn over to the southard.—Harper's Weekly.

Improved His Opportunities.

She—What a charming gentleman young Mr. Sampson is, and such a fine Latin scholar! Is he a professional man?

He—No; Sampson clerks in a drug store.

The greatest of American millers is W. D. Washburn, of Minneapolis. He has one mill that turns out 5,000 barrels of flour a day, and is interested in others whose output is enormous. There is probably no man living who is so largely interested in flour.

He was a bridegroom newly made—a wedding tourist he
His bride sat in the waiting-room, as sweet as sweet could be
Yet one would think that he had been a husband half his life,
As on the register he wrote: "J. Percy Newe and wife."
But as he raised his shiny hat, that showed no mark of age,
A shower of rice fell from within upon the open page
"Enough," the jewelled clerk exclaimed, and brushed away the rice;
"John, bridal chamber number 4—we charge him double price."

Steps are being taken to have telephone communication with Harrisburg. The company ask for a bonus of $100.

Method in It.

In all circles of society, wherever you may go,
You will find you can't judge people simply by their outward show.
There are moods and manners suitable in every time and place,
And smiles oftimes to pertidy their origin can trace.
The half-mad poet makes his line show either joy or sadness,
According to the people's will; there's method in his madness.

The statesman, erstwhile so reserved, so dignified and grand,
Surprises his poor neighbor as he grasps him by the hand
And wishes him good day and asks in sympathetic mood
How business is, and if his own and family's health is good.
He seems insane, but then election time, which grief or sadness
Will bring to him, is close at hand; there's method in his madness.

When your wife employs a cross-eyed girl whose talent is to shirk;
Who takes four afternoons a week and never does her work;
Who talks back constantly, and her dire clatter will not cease;
Who wears an apron spotted o'er with stains of dirt and grease;
Whose grammar is distinguished by the most surprising badness,
You may think your wife is crazy, but there's method in her madness.

Courage and Fortitude.

I heard of an example of courage and fortitude exhibited by a workingman a few days ago which made me feel that we are apt not to give credit to persons of his walk for the possession of qualities which are in the highest degree chivalrous. This man, while working a machine, cut off four of his fingers, but instead of complaining of the pain, at once declared that he wanted them re-united. On being told that there was little or no chance of such an operation being successful when the patient was over 50 years old, he said: "My family are dependent on me for support and I must have those fingers back in the old place." When the doctor, who was willing to try the experiment of replacing them, proposed to give him ether, he refused to take it and submitted calmly to the painful operation of sewing on the fingers, which lasted two hours.

Something like this happened in Buffalo a few years ago to a skilled artisan in a furniture factory working at machinery for dressing mahogany, which is particularly dangerous. He was having his injury attended to by a surgeon, when the foreman of his department hurried to him and said: "Sam, what time was it when you got hurt?" Sam replied, "About 4 o'clock. Why do you ask?" "So that I may know when to dock you," returned the foreman, and hastened off.

A Faithful Collie.

One afternoon recently Mr. John Millar, farmer, Balgove, formerly of Luthrie, near Cupar, left his house for St. Andrews, Fifeshire, and was seen in the course of the evening on the Crail Road, near Brownhills. Mr. Millar was accompanied by a collie dog, and as he did not return home at night fears were entertained that he had met with some mischance. During the whole of the next day search parties were busy looking for him, but unsuccessfully. During the evening a gamekeeper at Gilston, near Largo, was attracted by the appearance of a dog in a field. He endeavored to entice it with him, but it would not come, and on following the animal he came upon a man lying among the snow in an unconscious condition, and evidently benumbed with cold and exposure. The gamekeeper went to procure assistance, but on returning the faithful dog would allow no one to touch the man. It was at first coaxed, and then threatened and beaten with a stick, with the result that it became more savage, and at last the gamekeeper had to disable the animal by shooting it in the back. The man was taken to a house near at hand, and he proved to be the missing farmer. He was in a very weak condition, and must have succumbed during the night had his whereabouts not been revealed by the dog, which unfortunately died from the gun-shot.

Can You Solve This?

HOTEL-KEEPER

There were twenty-one students at an oyster table, and, after each of them had had enough, they resolved that the expense should be the hotel-keeper's. They all agreed to commence at one side of the table and count around; every time seven was counted, one—the seventh—to go out, the man left last inside to settle. From which man must they have commenced to count in order to leave the hotel-keeper to pay the bill?

A Father's But Not a Preacher's Privileges.

May a clergyman wheel his own baby in a perambulator? One would suppose that he might. But not so think the people of Edinburgh. There a clergyman was seen carrying his baby and his horrified congregation presented him with a perambulator. But his last state was worse than his first. for he wheeled this vehicle along the streets with his baby in it. This insult to the genteel susceptibilities of his congregation was too much. He received a letter politely informing him that, while his abilities gave satisfaction, his pastoral services would no longer be needed.

How to Find Easter.

The rule for finding Easter is to take the Sunday next following the date of the first full moon after March 21st. If that full moon falls on a Sunday, then Easter is the next Sunday after it. As there are twelve lunations in eleven days less than a year the date of Easter may be said to jump about irregularly within a range of thirty-five days. The full moon of last year happened April 18th, which was Sunday, and Easter Sunday was April 25th, the latest date possible under the present arrangement. The Easter full moon of this year fell on Thursday last, April 7th, which is eleven days earlier than last year, and April 10th will be Easter Sunday.

Women doctors are appreciated in India. At the medical school at Agra, at which Miss Fairweather, of Chicago, has been offered the post of physician, there are sixty female pupils.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

A Chance for a Maid.

How a lady lost her maid is disclosed by one of "Clara Belle's" letters:

Speaking of humbug, a Fifth avenue belle's maid, a trim, pretty creature, suddenly disappeared recently; and it was a wonder, because the girl was well paid in proportion to her good looks—for it is deliciously swell now to have a pretty body servant. She had not seemingly been dissatisfied with her work or wages. Her employer feared that some sentimental harm had come to her, and charitably went so far as to hire a private detective to hunt her up. Where do you think he found her? She was an advertising exhibit in a hair-wash establishment. There is a boom on in that industry. Phenomenally long-haired women are posed in the window of stores where hair tonics are on sale, and competition is hot. The comely maid had luxuriant tresses, which grew so heavily and rapidly that she went periodically to a hair-dresser to have them cut short.

"How much wages do you get?" he asked her.

"Twenty-four dollars a month," she replied.

"I can get you double that," he said, "and nothing at all to do except to be admired. Oh, don't be alarmed—there's no harm in it. Messrs. Blank & Co., the well-known makers of Cerulian Glory, want to boom their stuff. You are just the girl they desire. You will have your head shaved close. Then they will show you freely to their customers, telling them that you lost your hair years ago by fever, and have given up all hope of regaining it; you have tried many preparations in vain; they are going to experiment on you. Your hair grows fast and fine—it becomes a marvel—the fame of it spreads by word of mouth, and by the time your head has regained its usual beauty they have sold 1,000 extra bottles of Cerulian, and you have received three months' extra wages. See?"

She saw; and that is how the Fifth avenue belle lost her pretty maid.

The Week's Fashion Notes.

The handsomest fans of the season consist of sixteen white feathers mounted on tortoise-shell sticks.

Pretty bonnet-string pins are of pearls in the shape of a key, with a miniature gold padlock in the centre.

Heliotrope and white striped, figured or plaided cotton goods are the most pronounced favorites for the coming season.

Sateen dresses are finished with velvet collars and cuffs, while gingham suits have accessories of Hamburg embroideries or the woven border of the material.

Braiding is the favorite trimming for young girls' street dresses this season, and is usually done by hand with narrow flat braid after the pattern has been stamped. Black is preferred upon any color rather than shades to match the dress.

A pointed basque, long apron and full drapery of blue foule, is handsome braided across the lower part of the front and sides of the skirt, down the front of the basque and around the lower edge to the postillion pleats. The braiding is black, while the vest, collar and cuffs are of blue velvet.

A new and charming use for white Chinese crape is to make bridal dresses of it, draped over white satin. The sleeves are fulled a good deal in the arm holes, but are tight below the elbow. The front of the basque is made in handkerchief shape, folded across, gathered on the shoulders, and caught at the waist by a satin belt. The nature of the material perfectly suits the present styles in drapery and exquisite ball dresses are made of this white crape, embroidered with silver.

Swing backs are put on dresses for girls above 12 years of age. A dancing-school dress of cream surah is laid in box pleats all around with draperies of tulle. The pointed basque of surah has puffed sleeves and bretelles of tulle. Sashes of ribbon about four inches wide are worn on one side in two long ends and a number of loops. These dresses do not quite reach the ankles.

Chenille spotted net is greatly worn in black, silver gray, red or brown, for veils that reach to the chin or only cover the eyebrows. Very small tinsel spots on red forms a becoming veil. A new net has a cross-barred surface, like the ground of some old laces, and is thicker than the spotted nets. Large meshed net with scalloped edges is also fancied.

The masculine collars and chemisettes with white ties, that were so popular last season, are to be worn again as soon as the weather get warmer. At present ribbons are the popular neckwear, the prettiest being rich, wide, white moire ribbon, showing a little edge at the collar and sleeve and tied in a small bow under the chin and on top of the wrist. Colored ribbons are used, but are only becoming to very dark brunettes.

The faucy for ribbon trimmings is so great that they are no longer confined to bonnets, but are used on dresses, serving in narrow widths for bayadere stripes on plaiting at the foot and sides of the skirts, and in broader widths for making stripes lengthwise on draperies, on wraps, and even on the coats of children. Entire fronts of evening and house dresses are covered with loops of ribbon finished with beads or swallow-forked. There are sleeves and bodices made up set on net or gauze, and to be worn with full dress.

The variety of colored beads was never so great. Pink, amber, pearl, pale blue, green and white beads are shown, and are used to form whole bonnets in the same manner that jet has been hitherto used. The head-trellis bonnets, on wire foundations, are shown trimmed with a scarf of crepe or of lisse, put almost flat on the top and falling down the sides, and in very wide strings, making a low capote, that will commend itself to theatre goers and those who sit near them.

Hints to Housekeepers.

Grained woods should be washed with cold tea, and then, after being wiped dry, rubbed with linseed oil.

Cloths dipped into hot potato water are recommended for immediate and complete relief in the severest cases of rheumatism.

A piece of charcoal laid upon a burn will ease it almost immediately, and if kept there about an hour, it is said, the wound will be entirely healed.

If roses become wilted before they can be put in water, immerse the ends of the stalks in very hot water for a minute or two, and they will regain their pristine freshness.

For those suffering from weak lungs or a hacking cough, a few drops of tar taken on a lump of sugar will give relief; five or six drops should be sufficient for a grown person.

Oilcloths should never be washed in hot soap suds; they should first be washed clean with cold water, then rubbed dry with a cloth wet in milk. The same treatment applies to a stone or slate hearth.

When attacked by palpitation of the heart let the patient lie down as soon as possible on the right side, partially on the face. In this position the heart will resume its action almost immediately.

Lime water may be made cheaply by taking a fresh piece of lime as large as an egg, pouring two quarts of soft water on it and allowing it to stand two or three hours, shaking it occasionally. Bottle and keep for use.

To preserve goods from moths, do not use camphor in any form. Pieces of tar paper laid in fur boxes and in closets are a better protection. Five cents will buy enough to equip all the packing boxes and closets of a large house for a year.

To cure a felon, saturate a bit of grated wild turnip the size of a bean with spirits of turpentine, and apply to the affected part. It relieves the pain at once, and in twelve hours or less there will be a hole to the bone. Dress with sticking salve, and the finger will get well.

Lace may be washed by winding it round bottles or sewing it on muslin and boiling it in soft water with white castile soap. It should be rinsed in soft water after removing it from the suds.

Salt, in doses of one to four teaspoonfuls in half a pint to a pint of tepid water, is an emetic always on hand. This is also an antidote to be used after poisoning from nitrate of silver while waiting for the doctor to come.

A good knowledge of watering is at the bottom of success with the window flowers. Water must run in readily and run out readily. When a plant is well watered, it is a good sign to see the water rush out at once into the saucer through the bottom of the pot. If it does not do that, something is wrong.

Never place fresh eggs near lard, fruit, cheese, fish or other articles from which any odor arises. The eggs are extremely active in absorbing power, and in a very short time they will be contaminated by the particles of objects in their neighborhood, by which the peculiar and exquisite taste of a new-laid egg will be destroyed.

A bottle of turpentine should be kept in every house, for its uses are numerous. A few drops sprinkled where cockroaches congregate will exterminate them at once, also ants, red or black. Moths will flee from the odor of it. Besides, it is an excellent application for a burn or cut. It will take ink stains out of white muslin, when added to soap, and will help to whiten clothes if added to them while boiling.

If the feet are painful after long walking or standing, great relief can be had by bathing them in salt and water. A handful of salt to a gallon of water is the right proportion. Have the water as hot as can comfortably be borne. Immerse the feet and throw the water over the legs as far as the knees with the hands. When the water becomes too cool, rub briskly with a fresh towel. This method, if used night and morning, will cure neuralgia of the feet.

Scenes in Southern Russia.

One might travel the world over, outside of Turkey, and nowhere find wheat so white, bread so black, ignorance so dense, and houses so wretched as among the peasant farmers of southern Russia. So many men had gone to the war that women were employed to display the railway signal flags at every verst along the lines for 1,000 miles. Had those little signal flags and the women who held them been cast in bronze they would not have appeared more lifeless than they did when our train thundered by them. In every instance the little flag-staff was held in "regulation position," as if it were a soldier's gun under the scrutiny of a General in personal command. "I will see if the woman at the next post is alive," said an American, tying a smoked herring to a fishing-tackle. As the train approached her he suspended the line from the car window and dangled it in her face. She simply looked at the herring, but still kept the signal flag in position, and as long as we could see her she was maintaining the discipline of Russia's extensive railway service.—Harper's Magazine.

Listening with his Eyes.

Young Kenneth, 6 years old, sat on an ottoman in a Beacon street window the other day, with his hands clasped behind his head, gazing aimlessly out upon the street and the public garden. There were people moving up and down upon the street, and on the garden there was an expanse of snow, and people who looked at once as if they were waiting for it to go. Kenneth's gaze continued, quiet but intent.

"What are you looking at, my boy?" asked his mother, by and by.

"Oh! nothing, mamma—only listening with my eyes!"—Boston Transcript.

Cause for Absence.

Layman (to minister)—The bad weather keeps a good many people away from church, I suppose, Mr. Goodman?

Minister—Ye-es; but bad weather doesn't keep as many away from church as the contribution box does, my brother.

Not Very Much Snow.

New Yorker (to Dakota man)—You have a good deal of snow in Dakota, I suppose?

Dakota—Oh, no; it never gets so deep that we can't tell what kind of a day it is by looking out of the chimney tops.

The sewage of London, amounting to nearly 200,000,000 gallons a day, is carried by the great sewers twelve miles to huge storage reservoirs at Barking and Crossness, on opposite sides of the Thames, where it is treated with one grain per gallon of sodium manganate and a few grains of chloride of lime. After precipitation of the solid matter, the effluent is discharged into the river at ebb tide, in a clean and odorless—yet far from wholesome—condition.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

Canada to be Represented at the Liverpool Exhibition—Our Great Agricultural Trophy.

An Ottawa despatch says: Among the many projects suggested for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee in the old country, the Imperial Jubilee Exhibition at Liverpool promises to take front rank. It will be opened next month and is intended to portray in a practical manner to the public the victories of peace and war during Her Majesty's reign. It will thus display those achievements which have done so much to promote the progress of the Empire. The victories of peace and war during the past fifty years will be illustrated (1) by courts in which the immense progress of the Colonies and India will be typically shown; (2) by courts illustrating the victories of war, arranged chronologically; (3) by courts in which the results of explorations are shown, with special reference to the countries and the people; (4) by courts devoted to life-saving apparatus on land and sea, both in times of peace and war; (5) by courts illustrating the advances made in machinery, mechanical engineering and agricultural implements; (6) by courts in which will be exhibited trades, manufactures and industries from Liverpool only. The Colonial and Indian courts will exemplify: a. The flora and fauna of the several colonies and India; b. their cereal and mineral products; c. literature having reference to each particular colony. By thus concentrating the principal features of each dependency of Her Majesty's Empire, the people will be enabled not only to acquire a good general knowledge of British possessions as a whole, but also to see and study for themselves those products characteristic of any particular colony. Canada will be worthily represented under the second sub-section. The magnificent agricultural trophy which attracted universal attention at the Colonial Exhibition last year is still in splendid condition, and the Liverpool commissioners have asked the Dominion Government for the loan of it, which permission, it is understood, has been given. The Liverpudlians offer to pay the cost of freight, etc., and will also erect the trophy at their own expense, so that Canada will have a magnificent standing advertisement for six months in the second city in England, which will undoubtedly favorably impress thousands with the agricultural resources of the Dominion. Besides the courts specified there will be others devoted to war trophies, exploration, life-saving and ambulance, machinery and implements, etc. Magnificent buildings have been erected, and although other exhibitions to be held this year will undoubtedly be full of interest and instruction, none seem to have put forward a scheme more illustrative of the various achievements of Victoria's reign than the Liverpool people.

THE MARQUIS AND THE PRINCESS.

The Alleged Cause of the Trouble Between Princess Louise and Her Husband.

A Berlin cable says: A book has just appeared here entitled the "Courts of Europe." The author's name is not on the title page. It gives a formal history of all the royal families, with much interesting information concerning them. The article relating to the English court gives an entirely new version of the differences which are generally reported to exist between the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise. Hitherto it has always been said that the Princess was fond of flirting, and that it was the Marquis who was jealous. According to the publication in question, however, it appears that it is the Princess who suffers from tortures of jealousy. It is stated that she carries her conjugal suspicions to such an extent that she is happy nowhere. She is reported to have said one day to the Duchess of Albany, "Oh! if I only knew of some place where I could conceal my husband so as to be sure of him. I am so unfortunate." Some time subsequently the Princess went with her sister-in-law to pray at the tomb of the Duke of Albany. According to this book the Princess said to the Duchess, "The woman whose husband lies buried there is happier than I am."

Witty English Judges.

Sir Henry Hawkins is getting a reputation in England as a witty judge. Recently a prisoner pleaded guilty of larceny and then withdrew the plea and declared himself to be innocent. The case was tried and the jury acquitted him. Then said Sir Henry Hawkins: "Prisoner, a few minutes ago you said you were a thief. Now the jury says you are a liar. Consequently you are discharged."

Justice Chitty, of London, recently heard a case concerning some agricultural implements and household furniture. One of the lawyers was very prosy, and after talking about the implements until the court was nearly asleep, said: "And now, my lord, I will address myself to the furniture." "You have been doing that for an hour already," replied Justice Chitty.

He Who Kisses Must Pay.

Mr. Edward Nelson, of the Priory, Lewisham, was on Saturday fined at the Greenwich Police Court £4 and £1 costs for kissing his governess. It was stated in evidence that on the night of January 21st, after the complainant had retired to rest, the defendent came to her room, dragged the bed-clothes from her face, and kissed her twice. She threatened to alarm the household if he did not leave the room at once. He left, but the following day he twice attempted to kiss her in the schoolroom. For the defence it was urged that the case was entirely trumped up. Notice of appeal was given.—Pall Mall Budget.

The Wrong Days.

Kenneth, age 6, and Philip, his brother, two years older, asked permission of their mother to go out for a little walk on Sunday afternoon.

"Yes, you may go," she said, "if you will not forget that it is Sunday, and walk quietly, as you should."

The boys went out and returned soon.

"O mamma," said Kenneth, running to his mother, "Philip didn't do at all as you said. He acted just like Monday and Tuesday all the time."—Youth's Companion.

Sol Smith Russel is going to settle in Minneapolis with his father-in-law, Wm. T. Adams. The latter, best known as Oliver Optic, is now nearly 65 years old and has begun to lose health.

GIRLS FOR SALE.

Where They Are Worth Twelve Woodpeckers Apiece.

"Among the Klamath Indians of Northern California," said a missionary to a reporter of the San Francisco Examiner, "the squaws are vendible commodities, and are put upon the market at a price supposed to correspond with their charms. The young woman's choice is not consulted, and if a rivalry exists between bidders for her possession she is knocked down to the most liberal offer.

"A maiden of comely appearance, and having a talent for plaiting hats, baskets and other ornamental wicker ware, is of course a more merchantable article than her sister without accomplishments and without beauty.

"The price paid for a girl of the desirable kind is in the neighborhood of twelve red-headed woodpeckers, a broncho and a breech-loading rifle—the woodpecker heads being valued at $2.50 apiece, and the pony and gun at about $20 each, making the price of the girl $70. This amount varies, of course, according to the financial standing of the purchaser and the avarice of the parents. It occurs occasionally that as much as $150 is given for a girl, but she would be possessed of unusual allurements, and the purchaser a nabob.

"The lazy and oleaginous bucks, when they have purchased a nominal wife—they do not consult the laws in respect to marriage—at once require their lady love to enter upon all the hard work obtainable. She, in fact, is required to neglect nothing which might contribute to the comfort of her lord, who confines himself to an occasional hunting or fishing expedition with the otium cum dignitate for which the aboriginal American is celebrated. The women pack wood from the forests in baskets, which are carried on the back and supported by a band which encircles the forehead. They also collect gold dust from the exposed bedrock in abandoned mines, which is handed over to their consorts with religious regularity. It is a fact that the Indian women on the Klamath are absolute slaves, but they are faithful and loving, no matter how harshly treated. You can readily imagine, however, that, on account of the hard life they lead, by the time middle age is reached they lose all feminine charms and become hags. I suppose it is generally known that white men here purchased squaws for matrimonial purposes, but it is not generally known how happy such unions are. White men who have espoused squaws almost invariably cling to them through every vicissitude of life. Divorces are unknown among them, and 'squaw men' take a pride in boasting of the good qualities of their purchases.

When an injury is supposed to have been committed, the perpetrator is by common consent considered the proper prey of the party injured, including his relations, and ambuscades and assassinations naturally ensue. Dead men tell no tales, and the live ones won't, so that investigation never amounts to anything.

THE METHODIST CHURCH.

Transfers Made by the General Conference Committee Yesterday.

The General Conference Transfer Committee of the Methodist Church, which is composed of the General Superintendents and the Presidents of Conferences, met Thursday in the Metropolitan Church, Toronto, for the purpose of assigning charges on the several circuits. Rev Dr. Williams, General Superintendent, presided.

The following transfers were made:

To the Toronto Conference, Revs. W. R. Parker, D.D., D. G. Sutherland, LL.D., from London Conference; James Gray, from Guelph Conference; Charles Fish and S. G. Stone, from Bay of Quinte Conference; Henry Harris, from Niagara Conference, and Coverdale Watson, from British Columbia Conference.

To Guelph Conference.—Revs. J. F. Smith and Wm. Newton, from Niagara Conference, R. H. Waddell, from London Conference.

To Niagara Conference.—Revs. George Miller, from Toronto Conference, E. L. Clement and W. G. Brown, from London Conference; A. A. Bowes, from Guelph Conference.

To London Conference.—Revs. Alex. Langford and C. Creighton, from Manitoba Conference; J. B. Aylesworth, from Guelph Conference; Hugh McClean, from Niagara Conference; Wm. McMullen, from Montreal Conference.

To Montreal Conference.—Revs. R. A. Hammond, R. L. Ockley, P. H. Allin and R. J. Irwin, from Bay of Quinte Conference; Chas. S. Deeprose, from Toronto Conference.

To New Brunswick Conference.—Rev. Ralph Brecken, M.A., from Nova Scotia Conference.

To Nova Scotia Conference.—Rev. W. H. Edyvean, from Newfoundland Conference.

To Manitoba Conference.—Revs. W. C. Bunt, Samuel O. Irvine, from London Conference; F. A. August, Joshua H. Burrows, James F. Davis and J. P. Wilson, B.A., from Bay of Quinte Conference.

To British Columbia Conference.—Revs. Mr. Wadman, B.A., from New Brunswick Conference; J. E. Starr, from Toronto Conference; James Calvert, from Bay of Quinte Conference, and James Turner from London Conference.

Personalities in the British Commons.

Mr. Bartley, rising to a point of order, asked the Chairman if it was in order for an hon. member to say to him that if he got him outside he would black his eyes.

The Chairman said any such remark would certainly not be in order.

Mr. J. O'Connor (Tipperary) said he rose to make a personal explanation. He did not use those words. (Cries of "Oh.")

The Chairman—No name was mentioned. (Loud laughter.)

It is reported that owing to Archbishop Tache's continued illness a coadjutor-bishop of St. Boniface will be appointed, with the right of succession to the archbishop.

Rev. James Brodie, of Ormiston, Scotland, who died recently, was totally blind from the time he was three months old. He was ordained in 1875. He had nearly the whole Bible by heart, having a most retentive memory. He was a good singer and musician, playing skilfully on the piano and violin. His ministry was earnest and faithful, and he passed away after only a few hours' serious illness.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, APRIL. 21, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We understand a great effort is being made to induce the Ontario Government to move the Division Court from Flesherton to Markdale. Thanks, awfully. Suppose we remove Markdale and stick it on one of our corner lots?

Clean up your back-yards. Get a garden rake, roll up your sleeves, limber up your spinal column and wade into the mire and refuse of last winter. You won't require to wear your plug hat or those dandy kid gloves. And you needn't swear at us because we make these little suggestions. We mean well.

The Mechanics' Institute scheme has gone up stream. The people are of the opinion that they are already taxed quite beyond their means or necessities. Another straw would break the camel's back. And yet we'll bet a pair of suspenders they'd spend half the amount requisite in organizing a bran new secret society. At the same time we really do believe they're overtaxed.

The Dominion Parliament has got fairly down to business. Black Rod has made his three historical double-and twisted bows. The strain on his elastic vertebrae has been great, but as he gets $1000 for the first bow, $1000 for the second, and $500 for the third we may safely conclude that he will recover before the next session of the assembled wisdom of Canada takes place.

Markdale gobbles the roller flour trade while Flesherton meekly folds its arms and, like poor Micawber, "waits for something to turn up." Of course something will turn up—it always does. Markdale appropriated a position in the Methodist church to which she was clearly not entitled, and Flesherton meekly bore it all. And now an attempt is to be made to remove the Division Court. Of course Flesherton will also permit this with its usual indifference.

Our Township assessment is all out of joint. It wants overhauling badly and if there is not a pretty lively shaking "among the dry bones" on Court of Revision day we're wearing the wrong spectacles-sure. What justice is there in assessing one man's property at two-thirds its value and another's at its full cash value? Some property is not assessed at half what it is worth and some at more than it would actually fetch under the auctioneer's hammer. Somebody pays a disproportionate share of the taxes! A storm clears the air. Let it come—the sooner the better.

Assessor Myles has raised the valuation of property in Euphrasia about forty per cent. Mr. Myles' idea is to assess property at its full cash value. He is right. Until property is so assessed there will be no end to the trouble, under the loose system which prevails so largely. We don't wonder that Mr. Myles has a lively time of it. People never seem to be in a hurry to get out of old ruts, even if they are bettered by so doing. It isn't just because they can't see the benefit to be derived from the equalization of the assessment, but oftener because they won't. "There are none so blind as those who will not see." Mr. Myles should be thankful to escape with his scalp, under the circumstances.

The Editor of this great all-wool-36-inches-to-the-yard newspaper riled an esteemed subscriber real bad last week. He often does. Can't choke him off. Sure to go and tell the truth about somebody and lose a good paying subscriber, when a crooked report would have put a hundred cents more in his pocket and answered just about as well—with some people. Still The Advance seems to jog along pretty much the same as before, and its esteemed contemporaries always have a kind word to say about the sturdy youngster.

The general unreliability of the telegraphic news furnished our daily papers by excitable operators was never better exemplified than in the case of the Flesherton Station fracas. One report had it that Carson was not expected to recover; another, that Carson's jaw was broken by Hannah; while a third gravely intimated that "Carson's injuries were at first feared to be fatal, but there is now hope for his recovery!" Another report had it that Hannah had "dug out" and left the country. Of course flying rumors had something to do with changing the report as it appeared in the daily papers, but none of them were correct. As a matter of fact Mr. Carson is able to move around—indeed he called at our office last Friday and appeared to be almost as lively and energetic as of old; while Mr. Hannah attends to his business as usual.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS GIVEN LAST WEEK.

(5)—$90. $99.
(6)—7260 feet.
(7)—$2.42+

The following sent correct answers to the three questions:—

Flesherton P. S.

Bert Armstrong, Frank VanDusen, Lou Armstrong, Lewis Ludlow, Lizzie Swanton, Mamie Ayers, Mary Strain, Martha Beatty, Wesley Smith and W. Dinwoody. David Matthewson sent answers but no solutions and a number of others answered one or two each.

S. S. No. 9, Artemesia.

Alexander Cameron answered one and Elizabeth A. Cameron and Margaret J. Cameron answered two each.

S. S. No. 3, Artemesia.

W. J. Moore sent neat solutions to the three, Annie Akins solved No. 6, and J. W. Caswell Nos. 5 and 6.

Questions for Next Week.

(8)—An agent received $117 for selling 800 barrels of flour at $6.50 per barrel. Find his rate per cent. of commission.

(9)—Find the simple interest on $600 for 6½ years at 5½%.

(10)—At 6% for 5 years, 8 mos., what part of the principal equals the interest?

(11)—What is the amount of $73 for 50 days at 6%?

(12)—A and B wish to divide the amount of $800 for 8 years at 5%, so that A's part shall be six times B's. Find each man's share.

[Some of the solutions were very neat and others—well, I won't say.—M. E.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

SEEDS, SEEDS!

THE PUREST

Field-and-Garden

SEEDS!

That can be Bought are Now for Sale at

RICHARDSONS' DRUG STORE, FLESHERTON.

Mr William will Attend.

A Scene From Life.

A young man entered the bar of a village tavern, and called for a drink. "No," said the landlord; "you have had too much already. You have had delirium tremens once, and I cannot sell you any more." He stepped aside to make room for a couple of young men who had just entered, and the landlord waited on them very politely. The other had stood by silent and sullen, and when they had finished he walked up to the landlord and addressed him: "Six years ago, at their age, I stood where those young men now are. I was a man with fair prospects. Now, at the age of twenty-eight, I am a wreck, body and mind. You led me to drink. In this place I formed the habit that has been my ruin. Now sell me a few glasses more, and your work will be done! I shall soon be out of the way; there is no hope for me. But they can be saved; they may be men again. Do not sell it to them. Sell to me, and let me die, and the world will be rid of me; but for Heaven's sake sell no more to them!" The landlord listened, pale and trembling. Setting down his decanter, he exclaimed, "God helping me, that is the last drop I will ever sell to any one." And he kept his word.—Christian Words.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

Temperance Sermon.

Meaford Mirror.

Last Sabbath evening, in Erskine church, Rev. A. T. Colter preached a sermon on "Temperance" to an exceedingly large congregation. The Rev. gentleman appeared to be in his best form, and boldly depicted the evils and vices attendant upon the use of intoxicants; giving facts and figures which must have been startling to those who have not taken the trouble to investigate the matter: sounding many notes of warning to those who have already entered within the dangerous circle and are being lured on by false lights shown by this demon of destruction, and cautioning those who have not taken the first glass to refrain from it—to cast aside the temptation as they would a slimy serpent from their path. The sermon or address was a powerful, realistic and practical effort; it showed careful thought and study of the subject, and no doubt created an impression on the minds of many that will yet be the means of good.

Received His Medal.

Meaford Mirror.

Mr. James Stewart received his bronze medal last week from the Colonial and Indian exhibition, which is intended to accompany the diploma spoken of in a recent issue of the Mirror. The medal is about the size of a $20 gold piece, has a fac simile of the Prince of Wales on one side while on the other stands out in a bold relief, the inscription, "Indian and Colonial Exhibition." The medal came in a neat little case especially prepared for it. Mr. Stewart feels justly proud of his trophies.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

LEITCHS

Tailoring Establishment

FLESHERTON!

Is the place to get your Suits made in future.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$2 09	to 2 10
Fall Wheat	$0 75	to 0 78
Spring Wheat	0 76	0 78
Barley	0 35	0 48
Oats	0 26	0 27
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 14	0 14
Eggs, fresh	0 11	0 11
Potatoes	0 40	0 40
Pork	5 65	5 65
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16	16
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 08	0 08
Chickens per pair	0 30	0 20
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp-Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvestor.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON.
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER.

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED Dr CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood.

500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

New Goods!

I have received a large assortment of Spring Goods, consisting of Gents, Ladies, Misses, Boys and Childrens Boots and Shoes.

I am offering them at prices that for quality cannot be beat. CALL AND EXAMINE THEM.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department

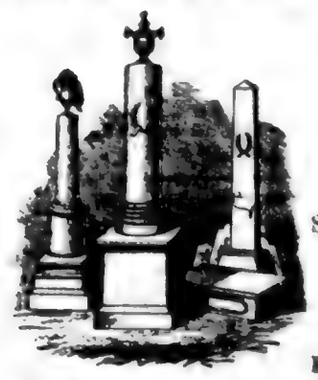
STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

TO RENT or FOR SALE CHEAP.

50 acre farm, 14 acres cleared. Apply to

M. RICHARDSON.

LOST NOTES.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating for two notes—one for $8.50, drawn in my favor by Mr Hillock, and the other for $20, drawn in my favor by Henry Down, both now due, as the same have been lost or misplaced by me. J. W. HODGSON.

CAUTION.—The Down note is not due until 1st March, 1888, the Hillock note is now due.

Horning's Mills, March 21st, 1887.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

CAUTION.

I hereby caution any person against negotiating for a note for $15, in favor of Samuel Martin, which fell due about 1st Nov., 1886, as I have not received value for the same.

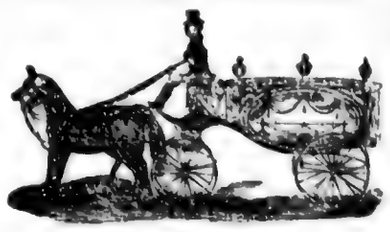
JOHN SHERWOOD,

Eugenia P.O.

To Farmers' & Millers'.

FOR SALE.

WEST ½ of 33, Con. 9, Artemesia. Also TWO GRAND WATER POWERS in Eugenia, and a number of Town Lots. Write to DR. PURDY, P M at East Selkirk, Man., or to R. McP. PURDY, Esq., Eugenia, and answer will be made at once.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holloy's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Drowning Case At Dunedin.

Mr. James Plewis Drowned.

A sad accident occured at Dunedin on Sunday last, by which Mr. James Plewis, sr., lost his life. The dam at the Dunedin mill, lately rented by the deceased, was in danger, on account of the river rising so rapidly, and Mr. Plewis was engaged with a pike pole, trying to prevent some logs from injuring the dam. A man named Bloomer and two boys, Weatherall and Stone, were out with Mr. Plewis. The deceased, aided by young Weatherall, was trying to turn a log around, so as to send it down stream, when Mr. Plewis slipped and fell forward into the dam and was instantly swept through below the stringers down into the foaming waters below. Young Weatherall sprang off the breastwork of the dam and ran down the stream about 20 yards, when he saw the body of deceased. He instantly sprang into the water and after a hard battle with the raging stream, he caught the drowning man by the shoulder, but the weight was too much for him, with the force of the stream, and they were swiftly carried down the stream together. During this time young Stone bravely sprang into the river, but not being accustomed to water, he was carried helplessly down the stream and was rescued by Mr. Peter McHaffie Mr. McHaffie then went to the assistance of the boy Weatherall who still held on to Mr. Plewis, and started for the shore with them and was assisted by Mr. Howard, who had just arrived on the scene. No one received any injuries except Mr. Plewis, who was unconscious. He was restored to consciousness, but died in five hours after. During this time the heroic Bloomer was standing quietly on the shore with his hands in his pockets, watching the brave boys struggling with the current, and stated that he would not go in the water for $200. He also told Mrs. Plewis that he was not there at all, which was false, as he was at Weatherall's side when he sprang into the water Dr. Dack, of Creemore, was sent for at once and promised to go in an hour. The hour passed and he did not arrive and was sent for again. When the messenger arrived the second time at Creemore, the Dr. was in bed, and when asked why he did not go, he said "it was too dark." We are happy to state that medical men of that description are very scarce, as they should be. The deceased was the father of the late J. S. Plewis, of Shelburne, and was well-known here. The remains of deceased were taken to Barrie on Wednesday for interment.—Shelburne Free Press.

Have you ever tried McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate for sores of any kind? It is beyond doubt the very best preparation in the market for healing and curing Sores, Burns, Cuts, Pimples, Blotches, and is the only proper method of applying Carbolic Acid. Sold at the Drug Store for 25c. per box.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Manitoba.

Post Card Items.

Editor Advance: On the 3rd March, I sent you what I supposed to be interesting news concerning the country. My letter I fear has been "tampered" with or gone astray. If you ever receive it please publish. I know your readers would be glad of some of the items, if not all which every cor. does not tell, "in the paper." My m.s. was sent in a sealed env. paid—letter postage. To-day Apl. 12th, the ground is again covered with snow for the third time since the latter end of March when "everybody and his wife," believed spring had "come to stay." Wheels had taken the place of runners, overcoats, and ladies muffs were laid aside:—

"The farmer was speeding the plow."
Fowls, cattle enjoying the sun,
Children out doors in a row,
No, only having great fun."

But its winter again. Three young blizzards within three weeks, numerous winds—high and low. If any wish to feel the constant unobstructed force of wind, let them remove to a prairie country. However, it does not blow quite all the time, but when it really does blow—blizzard, or snow, it "makes a meal of it." Western affairs are not done by halves, in Manitoba, yesterday, rain, hail, snow and wind, was a sample.

"The loud wind roared, the rain fell fast,
The white man yielded to the blast."

And red men too, I guess. However, I've seen as bad in Ontario at this time of year and can't help but like the North West, altho' I again advise all who are middling comfortable to stay there. If you must move, come this way, don't leave Canada. Never. WM. PURDY.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Death has again visited our neighborhood. Miss Ida Jimby who has been ailing for most of the winter passed away to her heavenly home last Friday morning. Her remains were taken by train to Owen Sound for interment in the family burying ground.

Mr. W. J. Holly has gone to Wiarton to work for the summer. He reports business booming.

Real spring weather is very slow in putting in an appearance. The fall wheat looks well at present and only wants warm weather to insure a good crop.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills are suited to every age. They are mild and pleasant in action, thorough and searching in effect and, being sugar-coated, are easy to take. These pills never fail to give satisfaction.

"Seriously Marred."

Markdale Standard.

The usual peace and good order of our village has recently been seriously marred by profanity and indecent language by roughs on our streets: This should be stopped by making an example of individuals who thus wantonly violate the laws of order and decency.

Written for the Detroit Commercial Advertiser,

BY CARRIE.

The Singer.

His voice is soft and tender,
His eyes are full of light,
And shine like a star of safety
Through the darkness of the night.
He comes when the bright day slowly fades
And sits by my bright door, and sings;
And I seem to hear, as I list entranced,
The rustle of angels' wings.

His voice with emotion trembles and thrills,
He strives for the words he fain would say,
But I hear the love he tries to tell
In his song as it softly dies away.
Who is this wonderous singer,
You ask of whom I chat,
Why, it is our only darling,
Our beloved tommy cat.

A perfectly sound body and a mind unimpaired are possible only with pure blood. Leading medical authorities indorse Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the best blood purifying medicine in existence. It vastly increases the working and productive of both hand and brain.

It Was The Old Woman.

Every drunken man thinks all the rest are drunk, and he is the only sober one. Lazy men may be more intelligent, but they are just about as mean.

An Eastern drummer listened to the complaints of a Southern mountaineer about hard times, for 10 or 15 minutes, and then observed: "Why, man, you ought to get rich shipping green corn to the Northern market." "Yes, I orter," was the repiy. "You have the land and can get the seed, I suppose?" "Yes." "Than why don't you go into the speculation?" "No use, stranger," sadly replied the native; "the old woman is too darned lazy to do the plowing and planting."

Ever since Adam blamed his sin upon Eve there have been husbands enough ready to charge their wives with the result of their own shiftlessness.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

A Pathetic Incident.

The following incident, so full of pathos and simplicity, teaches its own lesson of kindness and love for the little ones left fatherless and motherless on the charities of the world. It happened a few weeks ago in a Western city, where a poor widow had died leaving one child, a lame boy, to the cold charities of the world. After his mother's funeral, the little fellow was taken ill from the combined results of grief and neglect, and it was then evident that he would soon be united to his only friend.

He was left alone much of the day there being no one who could spare the time to stay with him. It was often noticed that the voices of two persons could be heard in his little room. But when those who in charge entered he would be alone and apparently asleep.

One day they listened, being quite sure that no one was with the child, and they overheard this strange monologue:

"Is you right there mamma?"

"Yes, my little boy, I is right here

"Was you went away yet?"

"I wented back to Heaven to tell God about my little boy."

"Did you was afraid, mamma?"

"No, my own little boy, 'cause God is nicer'n peoples."

"Did you told him about me, mamma?"

"I told him I had a little boy named Harry,—an' -an' "—

There was a loud noise of sobbing then and the listener outside cried, too. Presently the child's voice resumed:

"Did you told God to let me come up there, mamma?"

"Yes my boy; an' He said, 'Bimeby bimeby.'"

"Mamma, I'se—so—tired—an'—an' sleepy—an' I want to come an' stay with—you—an'—God."

There was a long silence then, broken by sobs. The listeners went in, after resolving in their hearts to be thereafter very patient with the motherless one.

But the next day he went home to his mother. "Bimeby" had come.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

Ladies troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough hands or face, or Sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It will leave the skin in perfect health, smooth, clean and good color. Be sure and get the genuine, made by McGregor & Parke. Price 25c. Sold at the Drug Store

SALT RHEUM CURED.—McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face or hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any Sore that nothing else will heal. Try McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. 25c per box at the Drug Store.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family. Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

The Best Remedy

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

The following Bills were read a third time and passed:

Respecting a certain railway debenture debt of the township of Eldon—Mr. Cruess.

Respecting the Ontario Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company—Mr. Leys.

The following Bills were passed through committee:

To amend the Act incorporating the trustees of the Toronto House of Industry—Mr. Leys.

Relating to the Municipality of Rat Portage—Mr. Gibson (Hamilton).

The following Bills were read the second time:

To consolidate the floating debt of the town of Trenton—Mr. Ostrom.

To amend the Act incorporating the Brockville, Westport & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company—Mr. Fraser.

Mr. H. E. Clarke asked whether, under the Public School Act, pupils of from 15 to 20 years of age, who may have been found guilty of gross immoralities, or who may have been more than once convicted of crime, have the right, notwithstanding such conviction, to take their places thereafter in the public schools. If so, whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce any amendment to remedy this evil during the present session of the Legislature.

Hon. G. W. Ross The provision of the School Act in regard to the power of trustees is as follows: "To dismiss from the school any pupil who shall be adjudged so refractory by the trustees (or a majority of them) and the teacher that his presence in school is deemed injurious to the other pupils, and where practicable, to remove such pupil to an industrial school." The term "refractory" has not been considered so far to apply to cases of gross immorality; so that whatever power the trustees may require in order to expel a pupil for gross immorality, they do not seem to be provided for in any statute. I can only say that I am now considering whether any increased power should be extended to the trustees in regard to the matter referred to in the question.

Mr. McMahon's Bill relating to Mutual Fire Insurance Companies was withdrawn.

Mr. Chisholm moved for certain information in regard to the Ontario Grain & Seed Company. Their mode of operation was to sell a farmer seed grain for $15 a bushel, giving in return a bond to buy back two bushels for every one sold at $10 a bushel. The bonds will turn out to be worthless. He thought the charter given to the company was not intended to be so used, and that it ought to be cancelled at once in order to stop future operations of the kind.

Mr. Leys said that the plan adopted by these companies was to fulfil the condition of the bond for the first year, and then get some farmer to go and tell his neighbors that it was all right. He had had reason to examine a bond given by a seed company chartered by the State of Ohio, and had found the company worthless. The Legislature of Ohio had made the formation of such companies criminal. The farmers had been swindled to a great extent by what was called the Egyptian Seed Oats Company.

Hon. A. Ross said that the discussion would serve as a warning. It seemed almost impossible to frame a law which would not be taken advantage of by rogues and swindlers. If the charters were taken away from such companies as were shown to have abused them it might protect the public to some extent. In reply to a question put by Mr. Meredith, Mr. Ross said that the company in question had no deposit with the Ontario Government.

Mr. McKay moved the second reading of the Bill relating to fires in hotels and other public buildings.

Hon. C. F. Fraser said that the matter was a most important one, but some of the provisions of his hon. friend's Bill were, perhaps, not the best that could be devised. There was one provision to which landlords might object, as it would afford means for a transit boarder to skip out without paying his bill, or to a confederate to admit a thief into the hotel. He thought the Bill should go to a committee.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to a special committee consisting of Hon. Mr. Pardee, Messrs. H. E. Clarke, McKay, Gibson (Hamilton), Leys, Meredith, Chisholm and Craig.

Mr. Ostrom, moving the second reading of the Bill to amend the Joint Stock Companies Act for supplying cities, towns and villages with gas and water, pointed out that the law at present restricted the borrowing power raised by these municipalities for providing means of supply of gas and water through companies. This Bill would enlarge that power, as he saw no good reason for the restriction. He understood the Attorney-General was considering this question, and he (Mr. Ostrom) would be glad to have the matter referred to the Municipal Committee in order to perfect the measure.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said it seemed to him wise not to change the general Act. This law was a very important protection to municipalities. But if there were special cases those interested should come before the Legislature and show the necessity for the extension, and doubtless it would be granted. He objected to this extension of the general Act.

Mr. Meredith suggested that as the policy of the Legislature was to provide general Acts and so do away with the necessity of special legislation, it might be that the object of the Bill might be reached in another way. The added power to borrow might be dependent upon the consent of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. In a matter of this kind he had sufficient confidence even in the present Government to leave that power in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Mr. Mack suggested the reference of the matter to a special committee.

Mr. Fraser said the Attorney-General's statement showed that the Government had fully considered the matter and had reached a definite decision upon it. Under the circumstances he thought the Bill should be withdrawn.

The Bill was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. Conmee, in moving the second reading of his Bill to amend the Municipal Act, explained it was to provide for cases in which the Councils of municipalities refused to initiate the necessary means for the providing of waterworks even where the majority of electors were in favor of it. The Bill provided for a declaration of the popular will on the subject when called for by 200 electors. If the vote was favorable the Council was obliged, under the Bill, to proceed with the necessary means of providing waterworks.

Mr. Meredith said this Bill was introduced last session, but generally opposed. He thought it would be a dangerous thing to make such a change as this in the general law. The hon. gentleman doubtless proposed to provide for the case of Port Arthur.

After some further discussion the Bill was read the second time and referred to the Municipal Committee.

Mr. Bronson moved the second reading of his Bill to amend the Municipal Act. He explained that it provided, among other things, that votes for mayor should be cast only in the sub-division in which the voter resided, the vote to be marked in on the list, and that mark to be prima facie evidence that the vote had been cast.

Hon. A. M. Ross, in moving that the House go into committee on the resolution regarding drainage, said that the advantage of drainage was universally conceded, and the only question was as to providing for the means. The policy of the Government in the past had been to supply the money at the cheapest rate of interest compatible with justice to all. At the time when the rate of interest was fixed the mortgage rate of interest was 8 per cent. The rate was now only about 6 per cent. The Government obtained only 3½ per cent. on their own bank deposits, and they could borrow money at about 4 per cent. It therefore seemed reasonable that the interest on the drainage loans should be reduced. It was proposed to reduce the rate for loans both under municipal schemes and the tile drainage; all should be 4 per cent. It was proposed that this should apply to loans already made, so far as related to interest falling due after January 1st, 1887. The payments made yearly included both principal and interest; and as the rate of interest would be reduced a larger proportion of the yearly fund would go to the payment of principal, consequently the loans would be paid off in a shorter time and arrangements would be made accordingly.

Mr. Clancy said he was glad so much had been done, but he thought the Government should have increased the amount of the appropriation for loans by half a million dollars.

Hon. A. M. Ross said they had increased the amount by $100,000, and a further increase would be made if necessary.

The resolutions were adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. A. S. Hardy, in moving that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill regarding distress for rent, said that he purposed to propose certain amendments to the Bill in Committee. It was proposed that the exemption of goods of third parties should not apply to goods on the premises in the possession of the tenant under a contract for purchase. This would cover a class of cases where goods were held under a sale or hire receipt. It was proposed to have these goods liable to distraint, as they are now. Then it was alleged by some landlords that tenants living close together would exchange goods, and so, under the provisions of the Bill, evade distress altogether. It was therefore proposed that the exemption should not apply "where goods have been exchanged between two tenants or persons by the one borrowing or hiring from the other for the purpose of defeating the claim of or the right of distress by the landlord." Another amendment was provided that when the goods of a sub tenant were substituted for those of the tenant, they should be distrainable. It had been suggested that if a landlord were obliged to give forty-eight hours' notice of his intention to seize exempted goods the tenant might take advantage of the time to remove the goods. It was therefore proposed that he should have the right to seize the goods at once, giving notice of his intention to sell. It was also proposed to dispense with the reading of the notice, which might be a serious operation in the case of a refractory tenant.

The House went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. Meredith said one of the most serious defects of the present system was the right now held by the landlord of appointing his own instrument of seizure. Men were employed who did not understand their duties and performed them in a most unsatisfactory way.

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton) said that under the Bill there was nothing to prevent the parties from contracting themselves out of it. It was worth while to consider how far it was wise to allow such contracts to be made.

Hon. Mr. Hardy, in the course of a discussion on this point, said that he was not without fear that until the people accustomed themselves to this system poor tenants would be unable to secure houses, and at some inclement seasons of the year some serious hardships would occur.

Mr. Gibson (Huron) said that he had two letters pointing out this very difficulty. He thought they should hasten slowly.

Mr. Meredith said he was satisfied that these arguments on behalf of the tenants were made by landlords. Such arguments from such a quarter were open to suspicion. He feared that this Bill would breed a system of agreements which would deprive the tenants of the advantages of the law.

Hon. Mr. Fraser said that the hon. gentleman surely did not propose to deprive the landlord of the right to take security for the payment of rent. Suppose instead of a small house the building rented was a valuable store, it would not be right to prevent a chattel mortgage or some other security.

Mr. Meredith contended that men were often defrauded into signing wavers of their rights. A chattel mortgage could not be prevented, and so formal an instrument would probably not be signed so readily as the small slips which might readily be provided, and he was satisfied would be in the hands of every landlord.

Mr. O'Connor said that if a few lines in the lease or a small agreement could suspend the operation in any particular case it would be much better not to have the Act at all.

Mr. Wood (Hastings) said that the tenant would in some cases be injured by the necessity put upon landlords to demand rent in advance, and could see no reason why the tenant should not give security by agreement.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said the objection last raised was one which affected the principle of the Bill. But this point, respecting persons contracting themselves out of the advantages of the Act, was a very important one, and one which he thought had not been fully considered. He suggested that the Bill should not be passed by the committee until there had been further opportunity to consider it.

The committee rose, reported progress and asked leave to sit again.

Hon G. W. Ross, in moving the second reading of the Bill respecting the Education Department, explained that the measure, though really short, dealt with three very important subjects. Although the people of the Province were generally engaged in agriculture and universally interested in the success of that pursuit, no adequate means had ever been provided for a general diffusion of knowledge on the subject. Under regulations passed some instructions in the shape of lectures on Friday afternoons on subjects relating to time ago the teacher was authorized to give agriculture. Taking a step forward, a text book was being prepared so that those teachers in the Normal Schools might have the advantage of instruction in it and the benefit of systematized and correct information on the question. In future the students in the Normal Schools would be taught agriculture on much the same basis as the instruction in the Agricultural College was now carried on. The people of Ontario had every interest in promoting a love of farm life and in instilling in the minds of the young a knowledge of the conditions under which the best results to the agriculturist can be achieved. It was hoped that the book would fully cover the points which could be most advantageously dealt with, and the use of it, he was satisfied, would do good and meet with the approval of the people at large. Another point of the Bill was that it made preparation for the systematic instruction of the pupils attending the Common Schools in the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human system. Under a regulation of 1885 the teacher was authorized to call the attention of the pupils to this subject—the desirability of cleanliness and attention to the laws of health. A text book on this subject had been prepared under the direction of the Board of Health, at the desire of the department, which had proven of great benefit, giving the teachers systematised information. Another provision of the Bill was to establish the Kindergarten school system of the Province. It would provide against any person not authorized to do so setting himself or herself up as a kindergartener and receiving public moneys for instruction of that kind. If the system was worth trying it should be tested under the auspices of the Education Department of the Province, for only in that way could the advantages of it be fully brought out and a fair test given. He looked for the best results from the establishment of the kindergarten education as part of the system of the Province.

Mr. Nairn, moving the second reading of the Bill respecting conditional sales of personal property, said the Bill followed the admitted tendency of the law of the present day to place personal property and real property on the same basis. The conditional seller of an article, such as a sewing machine, might come in and take the article back after a large part of the purchase money had been paid because of failure to pay one instalment. This worked especial hardship in the case of the poorest persons and those least versed in the law. A poor widow in his locality supported herself and children by her earnings with her sewing machine bought on the instalment plan. But because she failed to pay an instalment after she had paid three-quarters of the agreed price, the machine was taken away and she was left without a means of livelihood. The Bill provided that if the article in such a case were taken back, all but 25 per cent. of the price and fair allowance for breakage must be returned to the purchaser.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said there were doubtless great hardships under the law as it existed at present. The law at present did not assume that possession of a chattel was proof of ownership. But the House had dealt with the matter in relation to chattel mortgages which had to be registered. A deputation of manufacturers had waited upon him recently with reference to this Bill. But, while opposing the changes proposed, they themselves suggested that the difficulty might be met by providing in the law that every article conditionally sold should bear the name of the owner printed or stamped upon it, and a record kept of these articles. This, of course, could not apply to some chattels, as, for instance, a horse. It seemed to him impossible to legislate on the subject this session. But where there was a hardship—as there seemed to be in this matter—it was the duty of the House, if possible, to find a remedy. He believed the Bill might be read the second time and referred to a committee to make as perfect a Bill as possible, distribute it and let it be discussed and an effort made to frame for next session a measure which would remedy the grievances existing without creating greater

The Bill was read the second time and referred to a special committee composed as follows: Hon. Mr. Fraser, Hon. Mr. Hardy, Messrs. Gibson (Huron), Meredith Drury, French, Chamberlain, Harcourt, Gibson (Hamilton), Garson, Clancy, Hudson, Leys, Nairn and Ostrom.

Mr. Tooley moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Franchise and Representation Act by placing non-resident voters in the position they occupied before the Franchise Act of 1885. He said he would probably be met by the argument of "one man one vote," but he did not think that the principle of one man one vote prevailed now. He mentioned the case of a man who boarded in one constituency, earned his wages in another and had a vote in neither.

Hon. C. F. Fraser said he would be very much surprised if any considerable number of members voted against the principle which was adopted when the Bill was passed, that residence should be essential to the exercise of the franchise. Under the old law great trouble was experienced by both parties in getting in the outside vote, and there were constant attempts to violate the law forbidding the payment of travelling expenses of voters. Besides, there would be no object in interfering with the franchise at present, as the Attorney-General had promised to bring in a Bill dealing with the franchise before the present Parliament was closed.

The Bill was withdrawn.

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton) moved the second reading of a Bill to amend the Mechanics' Lien Act, by providing that a lien shall have the same effect for all purposes before as after registration.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to the committee on the Bill relating to exemptions from seizure under execution.

Hon. G. W. Ross moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole upon the Bill to amend the Act respecting the Education Department. This Bill provides for instruction in the effect of alcohol upon the human system and agriculture in the public schools.

In the committee,

Mr. Meredith asked whether any subjects now taught were to be dropped. The complaint was made, and, he feared, justly, that the children were expected to study too much.

Hon. G. W. Ross said the curriculum was simpler and less extensive now than it was two years ago, and he did not know of anything that could be dropped. He thought that these new subjects were so important that they should be added.

Mr. Creighton said while he approved of instruction in the schools on the subject of alcohol upon the human system, he thought it unfortunate that it should be done in a way which entailed the purchase of more text books by parents. He thought it would have been better had lessons on this subject been included in the new Readers.

Hon. G. W. Ross explained that the text book would only cost 25c, and said he thought the instruction would be worth it.

Mr. Meredith asked if the instruction respecting narcotics would include tobacco. If so it would be well to have, as a frontispiece, a picture of the Minister of Education with his pipe in his mouth.

Mr. McLaughlin thought that instruction should be given as to the effects of tobacco which he held was very injurious. He had observed again and again that after a man had been smoking for fifteen minutes his pulse would rise from 69 to 96. Any narcotic which had such an effect upon the heart's action could not but be injurious. In Germany, where there was more smoking than anywhere else, except Turkey, they had recognised this evil and had enacted that any youth under 21 appearing upon the public street smoking should be punished. A similar law had passed in New Jersey. Opium also was very injurious, and was more generally used than many people thought and he thought that the instruction should cover the effects of this drug also.

Hon. O. Mowat introduced a Bill respecting the formation of new counties, which was read the first time.

Hon. O. Mowat introduced a Bill to extend the Land Titles Act to the outlying districts of the Province, which was read the first time.

Hon. C. F. Fraser introduced a Bill to amend the Ontario Factories Act, 1884, which was read the first time.

Hon. G. W. Ross introduced a Bill respecting Separate School debentures, which was read the first time.

Hon. G. W. Ross introduced a Bill to amend the High Schools Act, which was read the first time.

The Attorney-General's Bill to give early effect to certain amendments of the law recommended by the Statute Commissioners was referred back to Committee of the Whole, where some amendments were made to it. The Bill was then reported from the committee.

The House went into committee on the Attorney-General's Bill respecting the appointment and proceedings of police magistrates.

Hon. O. Mowat moved to add the following section to the Bill: A police magistrate appointed under this Act, or the Act respecting Police Magistrates for Counties, shall, in addition to his salary, be entitled to receive to his own use the same fees and emoluments as are paid to Justices of the Peace.

Mr. Meredith said that $600 would be sufficient for the amount of work these magistrates were called upon to perform, and, besides, the practice of paying judges and magistrates was a vicious one, and one which the Government itself had decided to abolish in the case of the Surrogate Courts.

Hon. A. S. Hardy said that the salary of $600 would be far too small in places where the work took up the whole time of the magistrate.

Mr. Lees protested against the Government taking the power to appoint police magistrates, and contended that the County Councils should make the appointments.

Hon. O. Mowat said that the Government had taken the power very reluctantly, under representations that such a step was absolutely necessary.

Mr. Clancy asked if there was any limitation as to the salary to be paid to the constable.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said the constable would be paid by fees.

On the clause to protect magistrates under legal process for his action where he acted in good faith,

Mr. Meredith called attention to a case in which, as alleged, a magistrate, under warrant issued while conviction was under appeal, took possession of some beer and a valuable horse. The horse was damaged while in the custody of the law, and the owner was now suing to recover damages. This clause would cover that case and prevent the man recovering damages, though under the existing law his case might be a good one.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said they must all agree that any law so long as it stood on the statute book should be enforced. The magistrates had to perform this duty, and though on technical grounds the defendant might quash conviction, the magistrates should not be liable when they acted in good faith. They could hardly expect the law to be enforced if this protection was not given.

After some further discussion, this and the subsequent clauses were passed and the Bill reported with amendments.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Mowat, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill to make further provisions respecting assignments for the benefit of creditors.

On the section making the sheriff, if the assignee, liable to the penalties of the original Act in such cases unless he has been tendered the cost of advertising and providing that he shall not be compelled to act under assignments until his costs are tendered him,

Mr. Meredith expressed the opinion that this would leave the sheriff to make a practically unlimited demand, and would in many cases lead to large bills of expense being made up.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said that the costs would be taxed, of course.

Mr. Meredith said this was not a practical remedy. Costs to be tendered should be limited to advertising and registering the assignment. Where there was a large estate the sheriff would be assured of his remuneration, and where there was little or none, more was not necessary.

Hon. Mr. Mowat said cases had arisen in which the sheriffs had received little or nothing, and he did not see any practical way of reaching the difficulty except that embodied in the Bill.

This clause and the remaining clauses of the Bill were passed and the Bill reported.

A New Domestic Telephone.

(Paris Letter to London Times.)

"I was invited to be present to-day at some telephonic experiments between Paris and Brussels with a new apparatus known as the 'micro-telephone push-button.'

"What makes this apparatus the most successful of telephonic instruments is, that it can be made for half-a-crown—that is to say, for not more than the price of the ordinary push-button. At front doors, in the interior rooms of houses, everywhere, in short, where the ordinary electric buttons are used, the telephonic button may be introduced. It will by this means be possible to give or receive instructions, to know who is knocking at the door, to communicate, in short, by speaking as well as by ringing. The railway companies are making experiments with this apparatus as a means of communication between compartments of carriages. It is being fitted up on trial in hotels. I have seen it at work at the door of a private house where I was replied to by those within without their having stirred from their places, and without the door being opened. Between Paris and Brussels this instrument, costing half-a-crown, worked with admirable precision, and it was not altogether without an eerie feeling that I listened to a voice with a slight Belgian accent coming to me from a distance of more than two hundred miles.

"The inventor is Dr. Cornelius Herz, one day nominated Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, next day described as an emissary of Germany, and lastly as the friend, adviser and confidant of Gen. Boulanger. He is in reality an electrician whose inventive talent has been stimulated by his residence in America, where there is a boundless demand for improvements in electrical apparatus and in all mechanical contrivances."

Latest Northwest News.

A Winnipeg despatch says: Mr. Gigot, the Hudson's Bay factor at McLeod, says that in that district the loss among Pilgrim cattle will be from 20 to 35 per cent., but it will be slight among the old range cattle.

The C. P. R. agent at Balgonie, named Lewis, has been arrested for tampering with the mails.

Mr. Kerr, traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, says through rates to the coast are to be increased as the result of the Inter-State Commerce Bill.

During the first quarter of 1887 there were nine failures in Manitoba, against fourteen failures during the corresponding period of 1886 and twenty-two failures in 1885. An aggregate increase of seventy nine is reported in the number of business houses during the same period.

The Alberta Live Stock Journal is authority for the statement that the losses to cattle in the West will be considerably less than expected, and will not exceed twelve per cent.

An agitation has been started in this city in favor of running the street cars on Sunday.

In Defence of Pa.

"Say, mother, the Smiths are putting on a terrible lot of style over me."

"Never mind, my daughter, maybe we can afford to let them."

"I know, but they are always throwing up their new parlor set to me, and Minnie Smith had the impudence to say to me yesterday that my father didn't have any brains."

"What did you say?"

"I asked her what she meant, and she said her father told her mother at the breakfast table that if old man Brown had any brains he would have gotten some boodle out of the county when he furnished the county infirmary with nightshirts for the patients."

"And then what did you say?"

"I said: 'Never you mind, Minnie Smith; papa didn't make anything on the nightshirts, but he just socked it to 'em on the bed sheets, and we're going to move into a two-story and basement brick, all newly furnished, in the spring.'"

"That's a sweet child—now run along and play."

Wisdom Always Appreciated.

The sage advice comes from the New York World, and comes just at the proper time, when the papers are filled with the horrors of fire-destroyed hotels:

When an alarm of fire is sounded in a hotel lodgers cannot be too quick in getting out, if a way is open.

Gentlemen who have heretofore arisen and commenced to shave when a fire alarm is sounded in a hotel, and ladies who, on like occasions, have taken to embroidering, will cut out the World's suggestions and paste them on their pillows.—Galveston News.

A Logical Lad.

Charlie: "I say, ma, what relation is Clara to us?" Mrs. Blooblud: "Clara? Oh, Clara is my maid, dear!" Charlie: "Oh, because you said one ought only to kiss one's relations, and brother Tom was kissing her like mad on the stairs just now!"

A hearing was had in London on Wednesday in an action for libel brought by Mr. De Bensaude, the husband of Violet Cameron, against the Evening News for republishing an interview which appeared in a New York paper, and which imputed to De Bensaude certain frauds perpetrated in Egypt. The case was concluded late in the afternoon, and De Bensaude was awarded $1,000.

THE STORY OF A CRIME.

I was asked the other day how many cases I had known, in my long experience as a detective, of innocent people being convicted and punished for the crimes of others? My answer was: "Only one," and the case is well worth relating and reading.

I began my detective career in Canada, and in a locality where justice made swift work of evil-doers. I had been three years in the business, and had done some very fair work, when a very sensational case was put into my hands. Three miles from the city of B—— lived a retired merchant named Grafton. He had a fine mansion, elegant grounds and plenty of money, but his wife was an insane patient in his own house, and the only child, a boy of 19, was half idiot. Grafton was a silent partner in several concerns in the city, but spent four-fifths of his time at home. His wife was never seen, while the young man lived more like a wild animal than a human being, the greater part of his time being spent in the woods and fields, no matter what the weather. Grafton had as coachman, gardener and hired man a German about 35 years of age, who had been in the country about five years when I first saw him at the house. There were three female servants, and one of them was a girl 18 years of age, named Jennie Price, whose mother was a very respectable widow in the city. The girl was allowed to go home every other Saturday and always rode in with Fritz, the coachman, as he went to market, ran home for an hour or two, and then returned by the same vehicle. It was reported that Fritz was in love with and jealous of her Will Grafton, the half idiot, had also taken a "shine" to her, but his attentions were laughed to scorn by the pretty Jennie and her companions.

Now, then, in the afternoon of a certain 14th of July several weighty incidents occurred. Fritz received a letter with a foreign postmark, and was very much excited. He was seen running to the barn with the letter in his hand, and, ten minutes later, was heard shouting and storming to himself as if greatly enraged and excited. The servants said to each other that he must have received bad news, but none of them went to investigate and console him.

It was Jennie's day to go home, but Grafton was indisposed. Fritz suddenly disappeared, and Will was not allowed to drive the horses. The girl, therefore, decided to set out on foot, and take her chances of getting a lift on the road. She left at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and was to return by noon next day. Saturday night it was discovered that Fritz had left the house and locality, not even asking for his wages, while Will had set off on one of his erratic excursions, having been seen by the cook to pack up some provisions.

Jennie did not return on Sunday or Monday or Tuesday, and Grafton drove into town on Wednesday and sent a message to her house. She had not been home, and an investigation revealed the fact that none of her friends had seen her for two weeks. It was a case of "mysterious disappearance," and I came into it having little doubt that it would turn out like the majority of such cases. However, when I had learned that the girl was steady as well as handsome, and that everybody had perfect confidence in her principles, I went to the Grafton mansion to begin my search there. This was on Thursday morning, and it now seemed pretty plain that some calamity had befallen the girl. In an hour I learned all the incidents related above. Grafton was very anxious in the matter, telling me to spare no expense, but when I began to question Will, the young man turned on his heel and walked off, as if deaf and dumb. I, however, had a chance to look over him for a couple of minutes, and I made a note of several things. A button had been torn off his coat with such force as to tear the cloth. He had two scratches on the right cheek and one on the right hand. One finger of the left hand was tied up in a rag, and the cook, who tied it up for him, told me that something had bitten him severely.

It was a quarter of a mile from the house to the highway, with a carriage road running straight from the front door. The road was taken by any of the servants who were going to town on foot. By making a cut through a wood they saved at least half a mile in distance. The girl Jennie had been seen to take this path on that Saturday, and my search lay in that direction. The woods covered about ten acres, and were not underbrushed. The path was well defined, and was a romantic walk for a summer's day, the forest being alive with hares, squarrels and birds.

Half way through the woods the path traversed a dell about half an acre in extent. It was while crossing this that I got my first clew. Several feet to the right of the path was Jennie's parasol, and as I picked it up I found that it had been badly broken. While it was closed, as she would be likely to carry it through the woods, four ribs were broken and the handle loosened, and I felt certain that she had used it as a weapon of defence. Fifty feet further on, and right of the path, I found her handbag. Across the dell, in the thick woods again, I found a bow from her throat on a bush, and here the earth had been torn up and the bushes broken down to prove a struggle. It was one which must have lasted for some time and been fiercely contested, and I had no sooner looked over the ground than I knew that Jennie's dead body would be found somewhere in the woods. As to the locality, I soon found broken twigs—a bit of dress on a bush—heavy footprints in the rich soil, and other plain evidences of her being dragged or carried along through the undergrowth to a point twenty rods from the path. There, in an open space not more than twenty feet square, with a thicket on three sides, I found the body. Decomposition had set in, of course, and the odor greeted my nostrils before my eyes made the discovery.

That a murder had been committed there could be no doubt. The girl lay on her back, her feet drawn up, her clothing badly torn and in disorder, and while one hand clinched a stout stick, the other had a dying clutch on a coat button—just a match for those left on Will Grafton's coat. She had been choked to death, and was a horrible sight, her eyes stood wide open, her tongue out and a look of agony on her bloated face. I examined the finger nails and found blood and flesh under them, left there as she clawed the half-idiot's face and hand. On the ground was a tobacco-box, which he afterward identified and boldly claimed. A murder had been committed, and I had discovered the murderer; but I was not as enthusiastic over it as you may have imagined. He was the son of a millionaire and the father would spend his last dollar to save him. Riches control public opinion, and, in some instances, the verdict of juries.

After an examination lasting a quarter of an hour and having carefully gathered and preserved all possible proofs, I set out to bring the coroner and a jury. I had evidence enough to warrant me in arresting Will Grafton at once, but I felt that it would be safer to go slow and wait for the opinion of the jury. It was a matter of two hours before the officer and his jury arrived, and all had not viewed the body when Mr. Grafton and two or three others arrived in an excited state of mind and announced that Fritz, the coachman, had been captured, and had partially confessed to the deed. This news was, as you may imagine, a shock to me. I had not, in the first place, heard that the coachman was suspected, although he had gone off so hurriedly. Mr. Grafton had utterly refused to point the finger of suspicion that way during our talk in the morning, but had held to the theory that the girl had run off with some giddy companions to lead a less respectable career. His statement that Fritz was probably guilty so upset me that I kept my proofs in my pocket and gave the jury no hint. The inquest was adjourned until evening, and was then resumed at the house, while Fritz was present in charge of an officer. He had been arrested at a town thirty miles away, and attention had been first called to him by his attempt to commit suicide by drowning. When charged with the murder he did not deny it. When pressed to make a confession he uttered a groan of despair and replied:

"Maybe I did, for I have been crazy for four or five days. Let me go and kill myself."

When searched a few shillings in money and a pocket-knife and other articles were found on his person. He was free of wounds or bruises of any sort, and no buttons were missing from his garments. Before he was called to face the jury I began to grope for the cause of his plight. It could not be for the murder of the girl, for he was innocent. It must be on account of information received in that foreign letter. I went at once to his room in the barn, which no one had yet examined, and there I found the envelope intact, but the letter torn into twenty fragments and flung on the floor. I gathered up the pieces and pasted them together, and then had the clew to his actions. It was a letter from his mother in Germany, and it contained two pieces of important news. First, the mother, who was a widow, had been robbed of her every dollar by investing in some wildcat speculation on the advice of friends, and, secondly, the girl whom Fritz expected to return home and marry in a year had been wedded to another.

Fritz was made half crazy by the news, and his sole desire seemed to be to get out of the neighborhood as fast as possible. The coroner, Mr. Grafton and myself held an interview with him in private. The coroner was an ignoramus, and he was only too glad to surrender his official privileges to Grafton, who eagerly accepted them. It was plain from the start that he meant to catch poor Fritz in the toils.

"How could you do such a horrible thing?" he asked, as we were ready to proceed. "Tell us all about it."

Fritz began weeping.

"Did you kill Jennie because she refused to marry you? Yes, that was the reason. You lay in wait for her in the woods."

Fritz kept up a sobbing and moaning.

"I am sorry for you, and will do all I can for you, but the law must take its course. Perhaps the jury will say that you were crazy, and that you should not be punished. I hope it will, for you are a good man, and I don't believe you knew what you were doing. Well, coroner, have you any doubts of the prisoner's guilt?"

"None, sir."

"And you, Mr. ——?"

"I have very serious doubts," I replied.

"What? Haven't you been listening to the examination?"

"But he has admitted nothing."

"His actions bespeak his guilt as plain as day, and we shall now take him before the jury and press him until he admits the murder."

Before Fritz was taken into the room where the jury was sitting and many spectators were assembled, Grafton was permitted to interview him in private for half an hour. When questioned before the jury he said:

"I may be the one. I had a great trouble come upon me, and I don't know what I did or where I went. If it was me I am sorry."

On the strength of this the coroner's jury rendered a verdict that the girl Jennie came to her death at the hands of Fritz, and he was taken off to jail and a warrant sworn out. I felt certain that Will Grafton had killed the girl, and I expected to exhibit my proofs before the jury, but when I saw Grafton take the matter into his hands I realized that he suspected and was prepared to defeat me. The son Will was present during all the proceedings, and he wore the identical coat from which the button had been torn. Two of the servants informed me that he had worn the garment right along every day for six months. When I saw that the verdict of the coroner's jury was a foregone conclusion, and that Fritz would be held, I determined to hold my hand until a proper time. In my report of the case to my superior I simply mentioned that Fritz had confessed and been placed under arrest.

On the second day after Fritz had been sent to jail Grafton secured an interview with him on the excuse of providing him with a lawyer. In that interview he secured the following written confession:

I am now quite sure that I killed the girl. I got news in a letter which made me lose my head, and I remember meeting Jennie in the woods and thinking she was to blame for all my troubles. I don't want to live, and I shall plead guilty and ask them to hang me.

Three days later, when I guessed that the prisoner's despondency had vanished, and that the thought of the gallows would nerve him up to begin a struggle for life, I paid him a visit. I had been doing some good work in his favor.

"Fritz," I said, "you read your letter in the barn, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"You tore it up after reading."

"Yes; I remember."

"You were about to go for one of the horses down in the pasture. When you left the barn you took a halter with you."

"I remember."

"You reached the lot, threw the halter into a fence-corner, and then started off by the old path leading to the cider-mill. When you passed the school-house you were bareheaded, and you had not been from home twenty minutes."

"I remember children shouting after me."

"I have followed you down that high way for twelve miles. Then you turned east by a red school-house, and I have traced you six miles further. I can show by the servants at the house that you were under their eyes when the girl left, and for an hour after. Then your letter came, and you ran to the barn to read it. Now, then, how could you have killed the girl?

"I don't know; but, if I didn't, who did?"

"Whose knife is this?"

"That's William's."

"And this button?"

"Is off his coat."

I had all the proofs any lawyer would want to clear Fritz. I could prove that when he left the house he went to the barn, and from the barn he went in an opposite direction from the route the girl took. I had twenty witnesses who met him here or there on the highway for a distance of eighteen miles. Before leaving the jail I convinced him of his innocence, and in a moment life seemed precious to him, and he was ready to fight for his liberty. I left him to return to police headquarters, but had not traversed a square when a runaway horse struck me down, breaking an arm, three ribs, and fracturing my skull. For the next four weeks I was delirious off and on, and my head was just coming back to me when I heard that Fritz had been tried for the murder and found guilty. The news came to me through the cries of the newsboys on the street, and I at once suffered a relapse, and this time was on the threshold of death's door for many weeks. When I came back to myself I was weak and helpless, and my memory would not serve me. It was one day when I felt a desire to sit up, and when the details of the past came crowding into my brain, that I asked about Fritz. He had been hanged the day before!—New York Sun.

Old Clothes.

The old clothes of the great people of history, what an air of dignity they have, even in their decay. Nelson's old uniform, shot-torn and blood-stained; the hodden-gray coat in the library at Abbotsford; what associations they suggest! In what limbo, I wonder, is that yeomanry uniform of Sir Walter's about which his friend Pringle, of Whytband, used to tell so good a story? How they were in Paris together soon after Waterloo. Paris was very gay and crowded, the Emperor Alexander I. and a number of fire-eating Russians being there. The two Scotchmen were asked to some ball given in honor of the Czar, where uniform was de rigueur, and Scott was rather in difficulties, till he bethought him of his old yeomanry uniform, in which he appeared. Being in the course of the evening presented to the Czar of all the Russias, who had no idea as to who he was, that great potentate asked Mr. Scott, with some interest, in what engagements he had taken part. He replied with ready wit: "La bataille de Cross-causeway, et l'affaire de Tranent." The Czar, too polite, or too proud to show his ignorance of these battles, bowed with a grave courtesy, and said no more.—Chambers' Journal.

A Lesson in Botany.

"Say, I was in a predicament the other evening," remarked a middle-aged professional man this morning; "and all because I wanted to turn school teacher; you see I was endeavoring to impress upon my little girl the difference between the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdoms; well, I was proceeding very nicely, as I thought, but I was treading on a pitfall. 'To what kingdom does the orange belong?' 'To the vegetable kingdom,' was the prompt answer. 'Now, to what kingdom does our hired girl belong?' 'To the vegetable kingdom.' 'Oh, no!' said I, 'that is not right.' 'Yes it is, pa; I heard you tell her she was a daisy, and they belong to the vegetable kingdom.' The very worst part of it was," said the fond parent, "that the little thing looked so mischievous I knew her answer was not nearly so innocent as it might appear."—Elmira Gazette

Siamese Definitions.

An old Siamese teacher, in trying to master English, wrote a list of definitions, from which we select for the entertainment of our young readers the following: Wig: hypocrite hair. Flattery: a good kind of curse word. Whiskey: sin water. Gold: a very good thing. Blew: a wind verb. Kick: a foot verb. Bow: a salute verb. Hop: a frog verb. Liar: a bad adjective of boy. Modesty: a good adjective of girl. Vine: a string tree. Cunning: a good word of philosophy man. Daughter: a girl-son. Bullet: a son of a gun. Sponge: water foam. Angel: God's boy. Large: an adjective of preacher. Preach: a missionary verb. Comfort: word of mother to crying child. Adulterate: a bad adjective of lying man. Admonition: word of Bible.—Syracuse Christian Advocate.

Good Advice.

"My son," said the old man, "do you remember what Polonius said in his parting advice to Laertes—'neither a borrower nor a lender be?'"

"Yes, father," replied the young man thoughtfully, "and I think Polonius was just about half right."

Omaha Man: "Well, how is Dakota getting along?" Dakota man: "I haven't seen any figures, but there must have been a big boom in immigration last summer." "You think so?" "Yes, indeed. The papers state that more people have been frozen to death this winter than ever before."

Sugar is put into cement to increase its strength.

STARVING THE TEETH.

What Foods Make Them Strong—Keeping Them in Order.

Teeth are just as easily starved to death as the stomach, said a lecturer before a Brooklyn audience the other night. The fact is that you and your fathers have from generation to generation been industriously starving your teeth. In one way it is a blessing to have been born of poor parents. What food the poor give their children is of a variety that goes to make strong bones and teeth. It is the outside of all the grains of all cereal foods that contains the carbonate and phosphate of lime, and traces of other earthy salts, which nourish the bony tissues and build the frame up. If we do not furnish to the teeth of the young that pabulum they require, they cannot possibly be built up. It is the outside of corn, oats, wheat, barley and the like, or the bran, so-called, that we sift away and feed to the swine, that the teeth actually require for their proper nourishment. The wisdom of man has proven his folly, shown in every succeeding generation of teeth, which become more and more fragile and weak. These flouring mills in Minneapolis are working destruction upon the teeth of every man, woman and child who partakes of their fine bolted flour. They sift out the carbonates and the phosphates of lime in order that they may provide that fine white flour, which is proving a whitened sepulchre to the teeth. Oatmeal is one of the best foods for supplying the teeth with nourishment. It makes the dentine, cementum and enamel strong, flint like and able to resist all forms of decay. If you have children, never allow any white bread upon your table. Graham bread is made of whole wheat ground, not bolted, so that the bran, which contains the minute quantities of lime, is present. To make a good, wholesome, nourishing bread, take two bowls of wheat meal and one bowl of white or bolted flour, and make by the usual process. Nothing is superior to Boston brown bread for bone and tooth building. This is made out of rye meal and corn meal. Baked beans, too, have a considerable supply of these lime salts and should be on your tables, hot or cold, at least three times a week. The teeth should be cleansed at least five times a day. Without this, the particles of food, which contain acids and adhere, eat gradually into the enamel. Use castile or other good soap on the brush. Powdered chalk and castile soap make the best dentifrice. In brushing the teeth always brush up and down from the gum instead of across, or, close the lecture in the actual words of the lecturer, "Brush away from the gum and on the grinding surfaces of your teeth.

Great Deeds in Old Age.

(New York Home Journal.

Suppose, then, we agree to call no man old till he is past 63. Let us set down the names of some of the illustrious people of the world who have prolonged their days of usefulness after that age. We shall make a table of them, and begin it with those who have died at 70—that is to say, with those in whom the springs of life have not stood still till they have had at least seven years of old age. It will be found, however, to be far from exhaustive, and every reader may find pleasure in adding to it from his own stock of information:

Age at Death.		Age at Death.
70—	Columbus, Lord Chatham, Petrarch, Copernicus, Spallanzani, Boerhaave, Gall.	80—	Plato, Wordsworth, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Kant, Thiers, Wm. Cullen
71	Linnæus.	81	Buffon, Edward Young, Sir Edward Coke, Lord Palmerston
72	Charlemagne, Samuel Richardson, Allan Ramsay, John Locke, Necker	82	Arnauld.
		85	Wellington, Goethe, Victor Hugo.
73	Charles Darwin, Thorwaldsen	84	Voltaire, Talleyrand, Sir Wm. Herschel.
74	Handel, Frederick the Great, Dr Jenner.	85	Cato the Wise, Newton, Benj. Franklin, Jeremy Bentham.
75	Haydn, Dugald Stewart	86	Earl Russell, Edmund Halley, Carlisle.
76	Bossuet	88	John Wesley
77	Thomas Telford, Sir Joseph Banks, Lord Beaconsfield.	89	Michael Angelo.
		90	Sophocles,
78	Galileo, Corneille.	98	Titian.
79	Wm Harvey, Robert Stevenson, Henry Cavendish.	100	Fontenelle.

The wisest men and the best have been conspicuous for working to the end.

Some Good She Has Done.

Miss Faithful remarked the other day that the position of women had much altered for the better since the Queen came to the throne. Men are no longer allowed to beat their wives—that is to say, not with too large a stick—nor does everything belonging to a wife now become her husband's property; and the lecturer related how her friend, Sir John Bowring, used to say of the marriage service:

"With this ring I thee wed—that's sorcery; with my body I thee worship—that's idolatry; with all my worldly goods I thee endow—that's a falsehood."

And, indeed it seems to her marvellous that a man could keep his countenance while making such an assertion when he knew that at the close of the ceremony he could not only keep his own but take possession of all hers. Fifty years ago, she said, it was thought hardly seemly for a woman to write a book.—London Truth.

Centenarians in Ontario.

An interesting table in the report of vital statistics for Ontario just issued respecting the centenarians who died in 1885, shows that, of the whole number of 23, eleven, or nearly one-half, were of Irish nationality. One of these had reached the extraordinary age of 112. The next numerous class are the Scotch, five in number. The traditional longevity of the African race is confirmed by the fact that two out of the three American centenarians on the list were colored.

A Pointer for Young Men.

"Electrical engineering is the most promising field for a young man," remarked Dr. Ford, of the college, the other day. "I believe that in ten years the work now being done by steam will be done by electricity."—Elmira Gazette.

Two thousand one hundred and twenty-eight feet per second was the initial velocity of the 1,800-pound projectile fired twice with 1,000 pounds of powder from the new 100-ton gun intended for the British ship Ben Bow. The gun survived.

A TYPICAL CASE.

Small Wonder that the Young Woman Had St. Vitus' Dance.

(Dr. Wm. A. Hammond in the Popular Science Monthly.

Not very long ago a lady of this city brought her little daughter, 12 years of age, to see me professionally. The child was on her way to school, and had with her a large satchel full of books. She was pale, tall and thin. The muscles of her face twitched convulsively, and she could not keep her hands and feet still. She was suffering from chorea, or St. Vitus' dance, and, in addition, had almost constant headache and other symptoms of nervous derangement. In the course of my examination I asked her to empty her satchel of the books it contained, and which, as she informed me, she had been studying that morning and the night before. This is the list:

1. An English grammar. 2. A scholars' companion. 3. An arithmetic. 4. A geography. 5. A history of the United States. 6. An elementary guide to astronomy. 7. A temperance physiology and hygiene (whatever that may be). 8. A method of learning French. 9. A French reading book.

Nine in all—nine different subjects of knowledge which that poor child was required to study between the hours of 3 in the afternoon of one day and 9 in the morning of the following day! Allowing one hour for dinner, half an hour for breakfast, an hour for undressing at night and dressing in the morning, an hour for going home and returning to school and eight hours for sleep (and less than this will not suffice for a growing boy or girl—it had better be nine or ten), and we have six hours and a half left in which to study nine different branches of learning. Now suppose either one of you ladies and gentlemen should retire to some quiet nook, and, with your well-developed and trained brains and experienced minds, should try to study nine unfamiliar subjects of knowledge in six hours and a half, would you think it strange if at the end of that time you should somewhat mix matters, and imagine that Hong Kong is the name of a lunar volcano, that the continental congress is one of the parts of speech, and that the ductus communis choledechus is situated on Passamaquoddy Bay? She showed no such confusion of ideas. She had studied her lessons well, but she had done so at the expense of her brain substance. In a little while, and English grammar, geographies and temperance physiologies would have been like the "subsequent proceedings" in Bill Nye's poem, they would have "interested her no more." I say that she had learned her lessons at the expense of her brain substance. This is no flower of speech, but a sober fact. A very simple examination enabled me to satisfy myself that she was living on her brain capital instead of her brain income. Her expenditures were greater than her receipts, and brain bankruptcy was staring her in the face.

Have You Thought About It?

Why suffer a single moment when you can get immediate relief from all internal or external pains by the use of Polson's Nerviline, the great pain cure. Nerviline has never been known to fail in a single case; it cannot fail, for it is a combination of the most powerful pain subduing remedies known. Try a 10 cent sample bottle of Nerviline. You will find Nerviline a sure cure for neuralgia, toothache, headache. Buy and try. Large bottles 25 cents, by druggists.

Virtuous Indignation.

"Shocking unprincipled lot, those 'bus conductors! One of them passed a bad sixpence on me a fortnight ago, confound him! I've not been able to get rid of it yet!"—Punch.

The Russian Empire is composed of fifty governments and provinces.

Whether times are good or bad and prices of produce high or low, rheumatism is almost sure to come with advancing years. McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant is the most absolute cure known. Sold by druggists generally.

Philadelphia Herald: "If the weather doesn't soon put on a little more caloric steam heaters will have to be introduced into the baseball grounds."

Important to All who are willing to work for the reward of success. Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, will mail you free, full particulars about work that either sex, young or old, can do, at a profit of from $5 to $25 per day, and upwards, and live at home, wherever they are located. All can do the work. Capital not required. Hallett & Co. will start you. Grand success absolutely sure. Write at once and see.

The latest craze in St. Louis is decollete photographs. Two years ago the young ladies would have thought it "loud" to be taken in a low-neck dress or bust drapery. Somehow they all began to ask for that style this winter, and lately, says the Globe-Democrat, they have been taken in no other way.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

D C N L, 16, 87.

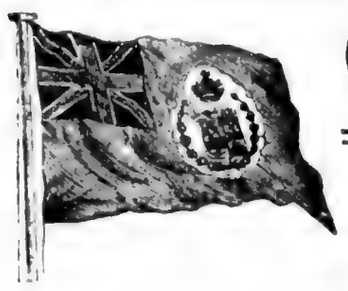
DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.



GREATEST BARGAINS

YOU EVER HEARD OF!

—Will be Offered by—

J. G. ANDERSON

FOR THE NEXT 30 DAYS!

The Goods must be all Sold by the 15th of May, and in order to do this the prices will be Cut Still Lower than Before! No use quoting prices, come in and we will astonish you. No trouble to show goods.

J. G. ANDERSON. — — — Wright's Old Stand.

PARABLE OF AN EDITOR.

BY VALENTINE MUGGINS.

CHAPTER II.

"So over-violent, or over-civil,
That every man with him was God or Devil."
—DRYDEN.

When Annanias Scavenger swore to be revenged, he generally filled the contract to the letter—throwing in an extra dose occasionally. When he swore eternal friendship—well, you couldn't most generally always tell. Keep good time to his fiddle and soft sawder him liberally, and you might manage to worry along without having Annanias running after your scalp. Keep him in good humor and "soft soap" from the "howitzer" would be administered ad nauseum. Try the independent racket, and before many moons you would be ready to quote the lines from Dryden at the head of this chapter.

Well, it came to pass that the Weakly Scavenger moderated its tone and Annanias began to beslobber his late opponents and kiss the hem of their garments. After boxing all points of the compass he had at length got back to the starting point, where he seemed to be permanently anchored. And many were deceived thereby and communed among themselves and whispered one to another, saying:

"Yea, verily, let us kill the fatted calf and be merry; for this our brother, who strayed into the camp of the Philistines, hath returned to his own vine and fig tree."

And they did even so.

Now these things came to the ears of Scavenger and a smile drew the corners of his mouth into the adjacent neighborhood of his extensive crop of ears. Yea, even his nose partook of the merriment of the occasion and seemed likely to court a close acquaintance with his forehead.

"Ha, ha, ha,! By Jove! They think they've got me sure—of cawse. Just like 'em. Fools! Do they think a little turtle soup and some cheap flattery will recompense me—ME—for losing the honor of leading them in battle against that arch Philistine, Georgius Lanricus? Blank me for a blankety blanked ass if they come it over a gentleman of my superior intellectual attainments. Bah! I'll get even with 'em if the blanked Weakly Scavenger has to go to the wall for it hanged if I won't!" And they think I'm sincere—ha, ha, ha! By Jove! so I am, but the boot is on the wrong foot for my reconciled doves!"

And it came to pass that Annanias Scavenger grew somewhat in public favor by the apparent sincerity of his conversion and some friendly politicians tapped him on the back and cried, "Bravo, Annanias! thou'rt a good fellow after all and mayhap thou'lt lead us yet against the camp of the Philistines." But Annanias clenched his teeth and exclaimed (sotto voce):—

"Blank the blankety blanked fools! they'll be glad to have me for leader some day. But they fooled me, an' haven't I always told 'em nobody had as strong a claim upon their franchise as myself, and that there was nobody but myself could lead them to victory? Often has my voice been raised in mine own behalf nor has my pen forgotten the tremendous functions of its office. By Jove! so sweet is revenge that I will sacrifice the interests of our faction and by a certain cunningly devised line of action will, for once, willingly give the spoils of victory into the hands of Georgius Lanricus!"

And Annanias Scavenger one day paid a visit to a neighboring town. He was arrayed in gorgeous apparel and wore lemon-colored kid gloves. A perpetual beam hovered over his ermine countenance. He held about half an inch of a cigar between his teeth as he passed majestically down one of the principal streets in company with a quondam friend Only that his nose had an upward turn and was usually engaged in studying the heavens—something after the manner of an amateur astronomer with a very condens'd telescope—that nasal protuberance would have been scorched by the hot end of the cigar. But Annanias knew the astronomical propensities of his nose, and smoked his cigar until it threatened to suggest a burning mountain with the mouth as a sort of crater. He had just expanded his mouth for a smile when an enemy hove in sight, looking fierce and warlike. Annanias continued to smile. The "crater" yawned terrifically and fire blazed forth from the "mountain."

"Oh, how are you, old fellow—dahned glad to—"

There was an interruption. It came from the enemy. He said:

"Scavenger, you're a jackass!"

Annanias did not like such coarse familiarity, and in suddenly choking off his feelings narrowly escaped swallowing his cigar stub. Fortunately the latter fell on the sidewalk and rolled off into the gutter. As a matter of course he was not in an amiable frame of mind—he hardly ever was—latterly. People chaffered him unmercifully behind his back, and a good many had the audacity to do so in his very teeth. They called him "awfully cawse names, down't y'now, by Jove!" Some hinted at shady transactions in his early life. Some boldly accused him of crime. Indeed, if I mistake not, an esteemed confrere of the press, aggravated by the insolent taunts of Mr. Annanias Scavenger, put the affair in plain black and white! which bold accusation completely flattened the latter out for some weeks.

Although Annanias Scavenger ever took an almost insane delight in stabbing people "under the fifth rib"—whether they deserved it or not—it made him perfectly wild if the assailed in turn became assailant. He writhed and wriggled under the severe but deserved castigations sometimes administered to him with no gentle hand. People grew more and more disgusted as they became better acquainted with this remarkable specimen of mankind. Careful analysis proved him to be almost utterly devoid of principle; that he was little better than a drunken profligate; that he had no depth; and that, to a limited extent, he was a dangerous person. Who does not know how he wrecked the chances of his "faction?" Who does not know that he has always been willing to sell himself and his Weekly Scavenger to the highest bidder? Did he not act the sneak and traitor with both "factions?" Did he not receive bribe money? Did he not angle to get the same? Doth not he make his living by falsehood, misrepresentation—blackmailing! What is he? What are his antecedents? What sort of a character had he in his native land? Was it a good one? Deponent answereth these questions very strongly, but I will not repeat them in The Advance. Besides it is not necessary.

Annanias Scavenger had his revenge, but what good has it done him? His former friends have absolutely lostall faith in him, and thoroughly despise him. True, they tolerate him, but it is simply because they cannot very well help themselves—at present. His old enemies hate him most heartily. The position he coveted—and covets yet—will never be his, just so surely as that there is a God in heaven. His treason, his corruption, his falsehoods, and his malicious persecution of friend and foe have swept away every vestige of whatever little popularity he may have possessed. Ah, Annanias Scavenger—

"I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman."

So endeth the reading of this chapter.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

ABSTRACT.

Treasurer's Accounts!

Township of Artemesia,
FOR 1886.

Receipts.

To balance from 1885		2277 68
" John Anderson, Roll 1885		1366 59
" John Wright, "		160 77
" John Hazard, "		60 97
" J. B. Sloan, "		236 43
" John Hazard, Roll 1886		2723 00
" John Wright, "		3615 00
" John Anderson, "		2025 00
" J. B. Sloan, "		1950 00
" Fines		14 00
" Miscellaneous		4487 87
		18917 31

Disbursements.

By Tp. School Equivalent		484 00
" County Rates balance 1885		796 56
" " 1886		3682 44
" Ward No. 1		148 10
" " 2		179 05
" " 3		158 72½
" " 4		138 52
" School Sections		4469 30
" Council Sessions		147 50
" Indigents		189 20
" Debentures & Coupons		528 13
" Salaries		447 50
" Miscellaneous		5442 53
" Balance to 1887		2105 75½
		18917 31

We have much pleasure in certifying that we have gone carefully over the Treasurer's accounts and that we find them correct in every particular, and that the balance in his hands on 1st January, 1887, was 82105.75½.

HENRY MELDRUM, } Auditors.
THOS. BOLAND, }

Treasurer's Office, 3rd Feby., 1887.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. — THORNBURY

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR SALE!

YOUNG MARE, 4 years old, sound, good worker either double or single. Will be sold cheap for cash or on time. Apply to
R. COOK, Flesherton Station.

TENDERS WANTED.

SEALED TENDERS for Repairs of the Township Hall will be received at the Clerk's Office until May 1st next. Specifications to be seen at the Clerk's Office, Flesherton.
W. J. BELLAMY,
Flesherton, April 12th, 1887. Twp. Clerk.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.
JOS. McCORMICK,
304-320, Flesherton.

PUBLIC NOTICE!!

To all whom it may Concern.

Know ye all men that I, W. S. CHRISTOE, the Druggist of Flesherton, have the agency for JOHNSON'S celebrated TONIC BITTERS and NERVINE, JOHNSON'S little Pink Tonic Liver Pills and the ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

—THE—

TONIC BITTERS

are confidently recommended as the VERY BEST in the market for Nervousness, Hysteria, General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Complaints common to the female sex. PALENESS of complexion and for diseases caused by poverty of blood. In conjunction with the Tonic JOHNSON'S Little Liver Pills are the very best for liver complaint and general derarrangements of the stomach. The All Healing White Ointment is the very best for skin diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Chilblains, &c., &c.

You have only to try these great remedies to be satisfied. Sold oy

W. S. CHRISTOE,
The Druggist, Flesherton.

FARM for SALE

—OR—

TO RENT.

BEING Lot 170, Con. 1 West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Well watered. Orchard. About 2½ miles from Flesherton. For full particulars apply to the undersigned,
JOHN O'MELIA,
Flesherton.

FARM FOR SALE.

BEING Lot 158, 1st E.T. & S.R., Artemesia, one mile from Flesherton, containing 50 acres, all cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Never-failing stream of water runs across farm; also a never-failing spring of water. New bank barn 36x56, with stone stabling full size of barn, underneath. Log House. Good soil and free from frost. Part payment down, time on balance. For full particulars, apply to
D. L. WHITE, Agt.,
Flesherton.

Mortgage Sale!

—OF—

VALUABLE VILLAGE PROPERTY.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by D. McCORMICK, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction, at ATKINSON'S HOTEL, in the Village of PRICEVILLE, on

Thursday, May 5th, 1887,

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following Lands and Premises in the Village of Priceville in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot No. 4 on the North side of Kincardine Street in the said Village of Priceville more particularly described as follows: commencing at a point 54 feet West of the South East Corner of said Lot number 4, thence Westerly 46 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 32 feet from the South West corner of said Lot number 4, thence Northerly 165 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 12 feet from rear of said Lot, thence Westerly 32 feet to Princess Street, thence Northerly 12 feet to rear of said Lot, thence Easterly 78 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 54 feet from the Eastern boundary of said Lot, thence Southerly 165 feet, be the same more or less, to the place of commencing Containing by admeasurement 486 square yards, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a good 2 story frame building, size 30 feet x 40 feet, with cellar underneath used as a store and dwelling, occupying one of the best business stands in the Village; also a frame stable and a good well.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in one month thereafter without interest

For further particulars apply to D. McCORMICK, Esq., Auctioneer; FRANCIS WAITE, Priceville; or to the undersigned.
J. W. FROST.
Vendor's Solicitor.

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887

Mortgage Sale!

—OF—

Valuable Village Property.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction at MUNSHAW'S HOTEL in the Village of FLESHERTON, on Thursday, May 5th, 1887.

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following lands and premises in the Village of FLESHERTON in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot number 151 in the 1st Range North-East of the Toronto and Sydenham Road in the Township of Artemesia and may be more particulary known as Village Lots numbers 3 and 4 on the South-East side of Collingwood Street, in the Village of Flesherton, as laid out in a survey or sub-division of said Lot number 151 made by Wm. Spry, Esq., P.L.S. and re-surveyed and a map or plan thereof made by Thomas B. Gilliland, Esq., P.L.S. which map or plan is registered in the Registry Office of the South Riding of said County of Grey, and dated the 8th day of August, 1870, and containing by admeasurement about ½ an acre, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a blacksmith shop, size 18x36 feet, a frame building used as a sash and door factory, 30x30 feet, and a frame dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in 1 month thereafter without interest.

For further particulars apply to A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, Flesherton; or to the undersigned,
J. W. FROST,
Vendor's Solicitor.

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S
DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer,
Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton

ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY,
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

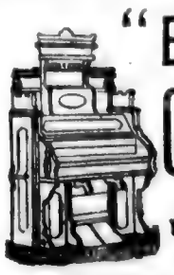
—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices Try me and be convinced.
Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 306. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO. APRIL 28, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

Money Saved!

BY CLOSE BUYING!

Helps Pay Taxes.

FIVE years in Grey Co. this month and a fair paying business established through the generous patronage of the public. From Dundalk to Holland Centre, on the line, also Maxwell, Priceville, Kimberley, Engenia, Traverston, Rocklyn, Berkeley and other points have given me a good support. My thanks are due to all transient and home customers. I have endeavored to deserve patronage extended, by honest representation of ev'ry article sold; and my increasing business warrants me in assuming that my efforts to deal honorably at fair profits, have been appreciated.

I shall continue my business on the line of truthful representation, just exchange in giving value received, and a fair profit to meet obligations incurred. Stock will be kept complete in

Hampden Watches

My name on, WALTHAM Watches, four grades, a few BARTLETT'S at close prices, ELGIN Watches, and the exceptionally fine made full jewelled COLUMBUS movements. Watch warrants 1, 2, and 3 years, "covering breakages." Filled Gold cases Coin Silver cases, 2 to 5 oz., also Silverware 3 & 4 oz.

Ladies Gold Watches and Chains, R. F. Simmons' roll Gold Chains, best made, Draper's fire gilt. Seth Thomas and Ansonia spring & weight Clocks, a beautiful stock of Silverware, hollow and flat, for table use. Engagement Gem Rings, 18k. Wedding Rings, Brooches, Bar Pins & sets, Lockets and Necklets, Cuff & Collar Buttons, Silver Thimbles, Pebble Specks, Lazarus & Morris, Lenses, Boss Specks. I have $100.00 wholesale in Specks and can suit any sight.

Watch Repair book shows this week watches and clocks booked to No. 1233. My work gives satisfaction, is fully warranted & charges moderate. No second or catch charges after watches are left. Any one coming 15 miles and not finding my stock and prices as this advt. represents, I will pay legal mileage one way and expenses here, meals &c. Goods and work Warranted.

W. A. BROWN,

A Reliable Jeweller,

MARKDALE, - - - ONT.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

There will be no baseball club this year in Flesherton.

Mittie Fraine concert to-night. Be sure to go.

Lieut. Field gives lessons in drilling every Saturday night at the drill shed.

All kinds of garden tools, Rakes, Spades, Hoes, &c., at Richardson & Co's

Get your horse bills printed at The Advance office.

There were quite a few cases tried in Division Court on Thursday last.

A few private dwellings going up in Flesherton and more to follow.

Every young man should see Richardson & Co's spring suiting the finest stock in the country.

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's Block. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

The Greatest Bargains in Ready Made Clothing ever offered in the county at J. G. Anderson's.

Don't miss the Mittie Fraine concert in the Methodist church, to-night. Admission 15 cents.

An interesting debate took place in the Division Sons of Temperance hall last week on, "Resolved that we can gain more information from Observation than from Reading." It was decided in favor of the affirmative.

An immense stock of spring Dress-goods, Prints, Ginghams, Muslins, at Richardson & Co's.

The Hanover Post is becoming truthful again. Last week it said the Editor of this paper was a gentleman.

"Miss Fraine certainly deserves the high reputation she has won as a public reciter."—Strathroy Age.

Nails, Glass, Hinges, Locks, &c., all kinds of building hardware at lowest prices at Richardson & Co's.

It seems Markdale has no desire to remove the Division Court from Flesherton—she is aiming to establish an independent concern for herself.

Miss Fraine read under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Victorio Hall. Her selections were well and pleasingly given."—London Free Press.

The Advance is a boss paper, but it cannot give you 4 lbs of 40c. tea for $1. So go to J. G. Anderson's and leave that $ there, he will give you the tea.

Mr. J. Lamon, barrister, Mr. E. G. Lucas, banker, and Mr. A. G. Hunter, real estate agent, all of Dundalk, called on us last Thursday.

"We were delighted with the Readings given by Miss Fraine. She is a perfect mistress of her art."—Sarnia Observer.

BABIES AND CHILDREN.—They are always catching cold in the head. Place a small particle of Nasal Balm in each nostril at night, also rub well over the bridge of the nose, and let us know how they are in the morning.

THIRTY DAYS!

POSITIVELY

FOR

30 Days Only

THAT THE

Great Slaughter!

Of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex, etc., at RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, Flesherton, will continue.

Russell has just returned from the city, where he has secured some bargains never before known in this section of country—in fact it is impossible to compete with Russell.—All his goods are marked in PLAIN FIGURES, at very low prices and, for the next thirty days only, he is actually going to give 25 per cent off on all cash sales over $1. Just imagine the finest grade of American Nickel Alarm Clocks at only $2, sold everywhere at $2.50 and $2.75. The finest grade of Plated Chains, beautiful patterns, for $1.60, sold everywhere at 2.25 and 2.50; the finest make of Clocks, beautiful Walnut Cases, from $2.75 up to $8.50, sold everywhere from 3.50 to 10.00. We are not making enough on these goods to pay your mileage or meals, neither will we give you a meal TO CATCH YOUR CUSTOM, but offer you finer goods at a little over half what you can get them for elsewhere! The finest make of Solid Silver Swiss Watches from $6.00 up; and the genuine American Watches from $0.50 up, bearing Warrants from 2½ to 5 years. ☞We keep only the genuine goods, which bear long warrants. THIS IS THE CHANCE OF YOUR LIFE!—FOR THIRTY DAYS ONLY! As we must clear them out before the arrival of our Summer stock at that date.

In REPAIRING, everyone knows that Russell's work always gives satisfaction and his work has already given him the name of the boss watchmaker and jeweller in this section. DON'T FAIL TO CALL within the next 30 days and secure some of the GREAT BARGAINS NOW OFFERING.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

Get your summer supply of tea at J. G. Anderson's. Best value in the county.

CATTLE FOR SALE.—Two steers two years old, two heifers two years old one cow in calf, cheap for cash. R. TRIMBLE.

Don't forget the great bargains now offered at J. G. Anderson's. Remember the goods must all be sold by 15th May.

TAMARAC.—Is not an ordinary mixture. In fact its properties are entirely different from any preparation used for Coughs, Colds, Throat and Lung troubles.

FOR SALE.—One top buggy nearly new, one Express Wagon, one sett steel Bobsleighs. Will be sold cheap for cash or on time on approved paper. W. W. TRIMBLE.

"Miss Fraine kept the audience in perfect roars of laughter. Her manner is very pleasing, should she again read in Ottawa there will be no difficulty in filling the largest hall."—Ottawa citizen.

A Fleshertonian traded horses with a neighboring farmer on Court Day, and on Sunday last he found his horse taken from the stable while the one he had traded was standing outside. They had been quietly exchanged during the night.

Mr. W. P. Crossley, of this town, has one of the best drivers we ever rode behind. We had occasion to go to Thornbury last week with this staunch animal and can safely say we never enjoyed a drive more than on that occasion.

Quarterly meeting services in connection with the Methodist church, Flesherton, will be held Sunday next. Public service commences at 10:30 o'clock a. m., lovefeast and sacrament afterwards. Rev. W. Ayers, pastor.

Goods must be sold at J. G. Anderson's at whatever they will bring in order to have all sold out by 15th May.

NOTICE TO SPORTSMEN.—We have been requested by the Brewster Fishing Club to warn sportsmen and others that no person other than members of the Club will be allowed in future to fish at what has been known as Brewster's Lake, Osprey.

The barn of Mr. George Ingalls, Badjeros, was struck by lightning on Friday last, and burned to the ground. It contained a two years' crop of grain, all of which was consumed. We have not received particulars as to insurance.—[Dundalk Herald.

It cannot be denied that Dr. Landerkin is and always has been a warm and active friend of the country press as a whole—irrespective of party or creed. We regret that many Conservative M. P's are not equally as zealous in this particular.

Remember and get a pair of those $1.50 plow boots at J. G. Anderson's for $1.

Remember the grand entertainment in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, to-night (Thursday). Miss Mittie Fraine, the great elocutionist will entertain the audience right royally. Be sure and go early to avoid the rush. Tickets 15 cents each.

An esteemed Dundalk clergyman got married recently. The newly wedded pair left the railway depot on their wedding amid the congratulations of a host of admiring friends. Unfortunately, in the hurry of getting aboard the train a number of parcels failed to make connection and were left behind.

REMOVED!—The undersigned has removed his Flour and Feed Store to the stand next door to Strain's Tinware and Hardware shop, Flesherton, where he will be pleased to meet with all his old customers and as many new ones as will favor him with their patronage. Satisfaction guaranteed. G. KEEFER.

Miss Maud Richardson and assistants are kept busy supplying wants of customers with spring Bonnets. They show a very fine stock of millinery.

Our old friend, Mr. G. J. Blyth—Editor of the Chatsworth News—gave us a call on Thursday. Friend Blyth never looked better.

An Artemesia farmer had rather an unpleasant plunge bath in one of the vats in the Flesherton tannery on Monday last. He was talking with one of the employees when he accidently walked into the vat, which chanced to be "chock" full of liquid at the time. When last seen he was making swift progress across a field in the direction of home.

One night last week, some young people went to a neighboring farmer's sugar bush where there were two sugar camps belonging to separate families. At one camp a barrel of sap had been left, together with a quantity of wood. They carried the sap from this camp to the other, which was more secluded, and boiled the liquid (without straining it) down to taffy. The farmers are on the war path to find out the depredators.

The Band concert last Friday evening came off but with very poor attendance. The hall was hardly half full although the program was excellent. Before the entertainment the band boys played some lively airs on the streets. The program was well sustained by Messrs. E. Vanzant, Parks Bros., W. Campbell, Barnhouse, & Russell, and Misses Richardson, Damude, Fawcett and others. Why is it that our band, which is second to none in the county, is not better appreciated? They would hardly have cleared expenses had not some private citizens subscribed sums independent of the concert. Receipts $12.

Born.

ATKINSON.—In Artemesia, on the 22nd inst., the wife of Mr. W. J. Atkinson, of twin boys.

Died.

STEWART.—In Artemesia, on the 26th inst., Mrs. John Stewart, aged— years.

After Forty Years.

Mrs. M. A. Curry and Mr. J. B. Winters, of Euphrasia, Mr. T. Winters, of London, and Mrs. K. E. Brown, of Toronto Township, had supper together at the residence of Mr. Joseph Brown, Toronto Township, on the 16th March last. The four first named are brothers and sisters and on the occasion alluded to they all met together for the first time in forty years.

"Northern Wonder."

This beautiful draught stallion is the property of that enterprising stockman, Mr. Robert Paton, Proton, will travel through this section during the coming season, and is undoubtedly one of the most magnificent specimens of his class in the county of Grey at the present time. He weighs 1720 lbs., and is in every way a most desirable animal. Agriculturists who are wide-awake to their best interests will do well to see this beautiful stallion for themselves. For fuller particulars, see posters just issued. Route will be published in these columns next week.

Not Invested.

He had been courting her for six months without coming to the point, when she turned on him one evening with "Charles, isn't it awful for a girl like me to have to worry over how I shall invest $75,000?" He thought it was, and three months later they were married. "I'll invest that $75,000 for you my dear," he observed a day or two after marriage. "Oh, I was afraid someone might love me for my money, and I gave it to papa," was the artless reply.

MCGREGOR & PARKE'S CARBOLIC CERATE Have you an old Sore, Cut, Bruise, Corn, Bunion, Salt Rheum, Pimple, Blotches, Rough Hands or Face? If so, there is but one cure, namely, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. If you but try it, it will convince you. It costs but 25c. at the Drug Store.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

OTTAWA, April 13.—The First Session of the Sixth Parliament of Canada was opened to-day in the usual manner. The members of the House of Commons were sworn in and were assembled in the House, when at 3 o'clock the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod entered and announced that Sir William Ritchie, the Deputy-Governor, desired their attendance in the Senate Chamber. The members proceeded to the Senate, where Sir William Ritchie announced that it was the pleasure of the Governor-General not to state the reasons for calling Parliament, but that after they had elected a Speaker the Governor-General would announce the cause for which Parliament had been summoned. The members of the Commons then returned to their own Chamber.

Sir John Macdonald, addressing the Clerk, said—Mr. Bourinot, I rise to move that Joseph Alderic Ouimet do take the chair of this House as Speaker. To the older members in Parliament I need say nothing in support of the selection of Col. Ouimet. To those who have not met him, I would say that he has represented his county without interruption since he was first elected. His constituents have shown their confidence in him on five separate occasions. He is, therefore, a parliamentarian of experience. He is an advocate of high standing, one of Her Majesty's counsellors. I believe the House will have great pleasure in accepting the motion which I now make.

Sir Hector Langevin—I second the motion.

The resolution was put and carried unanimously. The new Speaker was conducted to the chair amidst cheers. Before taking his seat he returned thanks briefly for the honor done him, and assured the members that he would do all in his power to maintain the dignity and privileges of the House and the fairness of debates. He spoke both in English and in French, saying in each language substantially the same.

OTTAWA, April 14.—At 3 o'clock this afternoon the Governor-General came down to the Senate Chamber, escorted by a troop of Princess Louise Dragoon Guards, and formally opened Parliament with the following Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate

Gentlemen of the House of Commons

It is my pleasing duty on the opening of a new Parliament to congratulate you on the general prosperity of the country, and on the prospect of a coming season of peace and progress

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

You will, I am sure, gladly join with the rest of the loyal subjects of the Queen in offering Her Majesty your sincere congratulations on her having reached the fiftieth anniversary of her accession to the throne, and in giving expression to an earnest hope that she may be long spared to reign over her vast Dominions

CANADA AT THE COLONIAL EXHIBITION.

The prominent position taken by Canada at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition recently held in London has made the Dominion more widely and favorably known than before, and will, I have no doubt, contribute largely to its material progress by calling attention to the advantages offered by our country to the agriculturist, and by attracting the capital necessary for the development of its great natural resources

THE FISHERY NEGOTIATIONS.

Negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States on the fishery question, with respect to which my Government has been fully informed and consulted, are still in progress and will, we may be permitted to hope, result in an arrangement honorable and satisfactory to both nations. Meanwhile the necessary provision has been made for the protection of our inshore fisheries. The papers on this subject will be laid before you

A NEW DEPARTMENT.

Your attention will be invited to the expediency of establishing a Department of Trade and Commerce under the supervision of a responsible Minister. You will also be asked to consider the propriety of making such improvements in the organization of the Departments of Justice, Customs and Inland Revenue as will provide greater facilities for the despatch of the large and increasing volume of business with which those departments are charged.

MORE SENATORS TO BE APPOINTED

A measure will be submitted to you giving representation in the Senate to the Northwest Territories in addition to that they now possess in the House of Commons

OTHER PUBLIC MEASURES.

Other measures will be laid before you, and among them will be found Bills for the amendment of the Acts relating to Government railways; for providing a better mode of trial of claims against the Crown; for the improvement of the procedure in criminal cases, and for the further amendment of the Chinese Immigration Act.

READING OFF RETALIATION

Gentlemen of the House of Commons

You will be asked, in order to provide against the possible interruption of the navigation of our great inland waters, for an appropriation in aid of the construction of a canal to connect the waters of Lakes Huron and Superior at Sault Ste. Marie.

The accounts for the past year will be laid before you, as well as the estimates for the ensuing year. They have been prepared with due regard to economy and the requirements of the public service.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I commend these important subjects and the others which may be laid before you to your best consideration, with full confidence in your earnest desire to promote the development and well-being of Canada.

Mr. Bowell moved that a committee to supervise the official report of the debates of the House be appointed as follows: Baker, Bechard, Charlton, Colby, Davin, Desjardins, Ellis, Innes, McIntyre, Royal, Taylor, Tupper (Pictou), and Weldon (Albert). This, he said, would make a committee of thirteen, and in accordance with a principle which he believed a good one, would give each Province representation, and the more important Provinces two or more representatives.

Mr. Blake expressed regret that another attempt was made in the direction to which he had objected last year. This was a very special committee, and the possibility of maintaining Hansard depended largely upon the recognition of the equal rights of both sides. Up to 1885 this was recognized. The committee was made up of nine, the Government side, as was fair and proper, having one majority. In 1885, when the Government had two to one in the House, it was proposed to put seven Government supporters on the committee, and on objection being made the Opposition was allowed one additional member, making five to seven. He (Blake) could see no circumstances now indicating that the Ministerial majority on the committee should be increased, and yet it was now proposed the committee should stand eight Ministerialists to five Opposition. He regretted to observe, also, that some members of the committee who had acted efficiently on the commiltee in former sessions were left off in this motion. He believed that in a committee where efficiency depended so much upon knowledge of the work and duties of the staff that the members who had done good service before should be retained on the committee. It was a painful confession to make that after twenty years of Confederation it was necessary to have every Province represented even on a committee of this kind. He believed in a smaller rather than a larger committee. He was sure that his friend from Prince Edward (Mr. McIntyre) would be the first to declare, were he present, that no former member of the committee should be displaced. He suggested a reconsideration of this motion, and would propose, if this were agreed to, to place Mr. Scriver's name for Mr. McIntyre's, and add Mr. Somerville (Brant).

Mr. Bowell said those members of the committee on the Conservative side who were displaced were not displaced because the Government had not confidence in them. He believed that representation of each Province was a good principle. He agreed to the amendment.

The motion as amended was carried.

The Relics of Calvary.

A French writer distributes the relics of the cross and the crucifixion as follows:

The Wood of the Cross—The largest portions are in the basilica of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, at Rome, and in the Cathedral of Paris.

The Title of the Cross—The tablet on which is the well-known inscription, I. N. R. I. (Jesus Nazarenus, Rex Judæorum—Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews), is preserved in the basilica of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, at Rome.

The Crown of Thorns—It forms part of the treasure of Our Lady of Paris, but is devoid of thorns, which have been granted to a great many churches. This relic, with the fragments of the cross, is borne in triumph by twelve canons or cures of Paris in the solemn procession which is held at 8 o'clock Good Friday night in Notre Dame.

The Church of St. Sernin, in Toulouse, has a fragment of the crown, which was given it by St. Louis, through his brother Alphonse, Count of Poitiers and Toulouse.

The Nails—One, history relates, was thrown by St. Helena into the Adriatic to calm a storm; the second is in the famous iron crown of the ancient Lombard kings (used by Napoleon I. in his coronation); the third is in the church of Notre Dame, in Paris. At Monza, near Milan, is a nail whose authenticity Benedict XIV. is said to have established.

The Sponge—Is at Rome, in the basilica of St. John Lateran.

The Lance—The point is at Paris and the rest at Rome.

The Robe—It was given to the Church of Treves by St. Helena. (It is known as the Holy Coat.)

The Tunic—Charlemagne gave it to the monastery of Argenteuil, near Paris, where his sister was a nun. The Church of Argenteuil has the relic to this day.

The Different Pieces of the Winding Sheet—The largest is at Turin. The Church of Cadouin, department of Dordogne (France), has the cloth in which the head was wrapped.

Rome has the linen with which Veronica wiped Christ's face.

The upper part of the pillar of the scourging is at Rome in the Church of St. Praxedes since 1223. The other part is at Jerusalem, in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher

Interesting Bible Statistics.

The Apocrypha has verses, 7,081.
The Apocrypha has chapters, 183.
The books of the Old Testament, 39.
The Apocrypha has words, 152,185.
Verses in the Old Testament, 23,241.
The books in the New Testament, 27.
Verses in the New Testament, 7,959.
Words in the Old Testament, 592,480.
Words in the New Testament, 181,253.
The chapters in the Old Testament, 929.
Letters in the New Testament, 838,380.
Letters in the Old Testament, 2,728,100.
The chapters in the New Testament, 260.

The word "Jehovah" occurs 6,865 times.

The middle book of the Old Testament is Proverbs.

The middle chapter of the Old Testament is Job 29.

The middle verse of the New Testament is Acts xvii. 17.

The shortest verse in the New Testament is John xi. 35.

Chapter xix. of II. Kings and chapter xxxvii. of Isaiah are alike.

The longest verse in the Old Testament is Esther viii. 9.

The middle book of the New Testament is II. Thessalonians.

The word "and" occurs in the New Testament 10,604 times.

The middle chapter and shortest in the Bible is Psalm cxvii.

The word "and" occurs in the Old Testament 36,543 times.

The shortest verse of the Old Testament is I. Chronicles i. 25.

The middle verse of the Old Testament is II. Chronicles xxi. 17.

The middle chapters of the New Testament are Romans xiii. and xiv.

Verse 22, chapter vii. of Ezra, has all the letters of the alphabet except "j."

Sharp Girl.

"Oh, Ella," said Clara, "I think Lily and her beau have quarrelled."

"Why," replied Ella, "what makes you think so?"

"Well, her parlor has been brilliantly lit every evening lately."

Educational Matters.

Little Scholar—"Why is 'man' called a noun?"

Elderly Schoolmistress (with acidity)—"Because it's the name of a 'thing.'"—New York Sun.

A well-known mathematician who lives in Macon, Ga., and who has published a series of arithmetics, recently received a letter from a teacher asking him to send him a key to the Third Grade Arithmetic. The mathematician wrote back: "Dear sir: It has no key. It is a stem winder."

The News of Neoga, Ill., publishes the fac simile of a letter written to its editor by Mrs. Susan Johnson, of that town, who will be 70 years old in June, who never went to school in her life, and who first began to learn to write three months ago. The writing is very plain, and better than that of the majority of women of her age; the spelling is correct, and the only noticeable errors are in capitalization and punctuation.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMAYR.

A society for the prevention of cruelty to animals has been organized in Kingston.

The New Zealand post-office authorities refuse to send the mails by the Canadian Pacific route.

Thos. Kelly's eldest boy, aged about 6, while playing in the steam grist mill at Elmvale on Friday morning missed his footing and fell into the machinery. He was terribly mangled and died instantly.

Another dividend of 5 per cent. is to be declared by the liquidators of the Exchange Bank, making a total dividend of 65 cents paid to the creditors. It is expected that the estate will be closed as soon as some cases now pending before the courts are finally settled.

Prospects for the building trade in Montreal this season are of the most promising character. Public buildings, including two new railway stations, involving an expenditure of about $2,000,000, will be erected, besides a large number of business premises and private residences.

About 10 o'clock on Saturday forenoon Mrs. Armstrong, wife of Mr. Wm. Armstrong, a retired farmer who lives on Queen street, St. Thomas, dropped dead from heart disease. Deceased, who was in her 58th year, was the daughter of the late Thomas Weldon, one of the pioneers of Elgin.

Mrs. J. L. White, of London, who recently ran away to Rochester with Alfred Luscombe and subsequently returned to her home, went back again a short time since. Mr. White followed his wife to Rochester and the two have agreed to the institution of proceedings for a divorce. Mrs. Luscombe, it is understood, also contemplates taking steps for a legal separation from her truant husband.

The Prince of Wales has consented to act as Honorary President of the Melbourne International Exhibition.

The Sultan of Morocco has just promulgated a decree prohibiting the importation of American tobacco under any form into his territory.

The fire which threatened to destroy the Salvation Army's headquarters at London on Saturday was extinguished before it had done serious damage.

The Candahar troops sent to suppress the Ghilzai rising have found the rebels so numerous that they have been compelled to entrench themselves.

The former native ruler of Tongo recently attacked the Portuguese garrison there. His force was repulsed. He then went to Zanzibar and the Sultan ordered his arrest.

A large dynamite bomb with a burning fuse attached was found Saturday night in a room near the private office of the Spanish Minister of Public Works. An employee pluckily quenched the fuse and there was no explosion.

Heavy snow storms and bitterly cold weather are prevailing in the northern and eastern portions of France. The farmers are despairing on account of the unprecedented severity of the weather.

Mr. Rider Haggard meets the charge of plagiarizing "She" from Moore's "Epicurean" by the statement that he never read nor directly or indirectly became acquainted with a single line of "The Epicurean" before writing "She."

The Pope has instructed the bishops of Strasburg and Metz to direct the clergy of their dioceses to take no part in the anti-German agitation and to abstain from fostering the sentiments displayed during the recent election for members of the Reichstag.

The extra military credits asked by the German Government amount to 134,000,000 marks. Of this sum 40,000,000 marks is for the increase of the army, 12,000,000 for new equipments, and the remainder for strategic railways and improvements in fortresses.

Half the town of Pegu, fifty-eight miles northeast of Rangoon, has been destroyed by fire, presumably of incendiary origin. An extensive plot among the inhabitants of Upper Burmah and the Dacoits to burn the towns of that section of the country, massacre the Europeans and proclaim a new king, has been frustrated by the police and loyal Burmese, who, after three days' fighting, captured the leaders in the conspiracy.

Successful experiments have been made at Metz with a navigable balloon propelled by an electric motor. The Augsburg Allgemaine Zeitung says the balloon is the invention of a German engineer named Welker, who for some time was employed in America, where he perfected his discovery. The German Government, the paper says, has bought the invention, paying for it 1,000,000 marks down, and another 1,000,000 which is to be paid in instalments. The speed of the balloon exceeds that of a railway train, and it may be stopped and directed at will, moving against the wind. Whatever truth there may be in the report it is certain that the residents of Metz are now nightly startled by an electric illumination hovering at a great height over their houses.

The President has appointed Mr. Alexander R. Lawton, of Georgia, to be Minister to Austria-Hungary.

A letter from Mr. Gladstone was received in New York on Saturday in which the ex-Premier passes a high eulogy on Mr. Beecher.

The jury in the case of John Arensdorf, charged with the murder of Rev. Geo. C. Haddock, at Sioux City, Iowa, disagreed and were finally discharged by the court at noon on Saturday. The jury stood eleven for acquittal and one for conviction.

Yesterday morning one of the strangest accidents occurred at New Rochelle, N. J., that have ever been witnessed by railroad men. An unknown man while walking along the track was struck by a freight train and his body was thrown upon the pilot of the engine, where it lay until Larchmont was reached. There it fell to the roadbed and both feet were cut off. Another train on the opposite track struck the unfortunate man and once more he was hoisted upon the pilot and lay there until New Rochelle was reached, when the body rolled off and the trunk fell under the wheels a second time. When the train moved off it was seen that only the headless trunk remained.

While viewing the wreck of a freight train on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway near Palatine, Ill., yesterday, six persons were killed by the bursting of a large water tank. The accident occurred at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and it is supposed that the collision of the freight trains in the immediate vicinity in the morning had jarred the immense tank, containing one hundred thousand gallons of water, and loosened or cracked the hoops, which gave way while a large crowd of country people were standing immediately under the structure. When it collapsed and fell it buried the people under the wreckage and water. Two boys and four men were killed outright, two other men were fatally and a number seriously injured.

DEVIL WORSHIPPERS.

Singular Story of Some Who Dwell in Mesopotamia.

Not far from Mosul, in Mesopotamia, there are a few Kurdish villages where one finds neither mosque nor minaret, synagogue nor medrash, church nor meeting house. Moslems—saving an occasional government official—are rarely seen there, travellers not at all. Ordinarily, says a writer in the St. James Gazette, there is nothing in the appearance of these places or the people to attract the attention of wayfarers, apart from the white dresses of the women and the vests of the men. But one day in the year the villages assume quite a holiday aspect in preparation for a strange ceremony annually enacted there. The houses are plentifully decked with garlands of yellow flowers, and the people take up positions outside—the women in spotless gowns, the men with a twisted black cord round their necks. Then a procession of some thirty persons emerges from the residence of the "pir" or priest, and begins slowly to perambulate the village. In front march half a dozen weird-looking personages in long black robes and strange black headgear; then come half a score of "kawals," in yellow mantles and white turbans, chanting religious hymns in an outlandish tongue; and behind them as many more playing an accompaniment to the singers on reedy flutes and tamborines. Following these is the white-robed priest, bearing upon his shoulders a kind of epaulette, and holding aloft the bronze figure of a bird, guarded on either side by a fierce-looking Kurd, with a perfect arsenal of small arms about his person. In the rear rides the white-turbaned sheikh of the district, with a second batch of "black heads" to wind up the procession. The party makes the round of the village, the people raising their hands toward the brazen bird as it passes, and then halts in front of the priest's house. Here a sheep is in readiness; it is cut open, and the heart is torn from it and thrown down at the feet of the black-robed figure. The procession then re-enters the dwelling while the sheep is made ready for the pot; and in honor of the day, the residents afterward dine together as soon as their "stew" is ready. These Kurdish villagers are the "Yezidis" or "devil worshippers" of Mesopotamia; and their annual procession—known as the "Showing of the King Bird," the Melik Taous or "Peacock King"—is the only ceremonial of their mystic cult. * * * The devil worshippers accept no proselytes: "A Yezidi," they say, "must be born a Yezidi; he cannot be made." They have no ceremonial ablutions, or attach no importance to them, and are allowed to use nothing colored blue. They will not sit down on a sofa having a blue tassel, or enter a room containing an article covered with blue cloth. Their religion prohibits them from serving as soldiers, though there appears to be nothing to prevent them from cutting throats on their own account. They baptise boys and girls; and, when old enough, every member has to make choice of a sister or brother who is to be his or her companion for eternity. Adultery, where consent is given, is lawful, and intercourse between the sexes is regulated by no conventional restraints. The sheikhs and their families, as well as the subordinate priests known as "pers," are entirely supported by the voluntary gifts of the villagers, whom they visit regularly three times a year; such gifts being regarded in the light of offering to the semi-divine prophet from whom their rulers claim descent. The Yezidis may everywhere be distinguished from the Moslem inhabitants of the country by the vests they wear closed up in the neck. They certainly bear a secret mark upon their persons, like some Indian sectaries, for they will never bare their breasts, and under no circumstances will a Yezidi ever utter the word "sheltan"—that is "devil" or in any way refer to the central object of his secret adoration.

The French Giving Up Smoking.

The growing virtue of the French in the matter of tobacco smoking bids fair to create yet another difficulty in the arduous task of balancing the budget of the republic. It appears that the tax on this pleasant vice produced last year 6,000,000 francs less than in the year 1885. The theory has been broached that as men got on in life they smoke less, for the reason that they gradually become so saturated with nicotine that they cannot hold any more. This would not, however, explain the diminution, seeing that the place of old men is taken by the rising generation. So the theory is pushed still further, and it is argued that, as the process of absorption of nicotine goes on from generation to generation, the sons of smokers are not able to consume so much tobacco as the children of non-smokers. Oddly enough, the diminution of consumption is only in smoking tobacco, while as much snuff is sold as formerly. The enormous sum of 80,000,000 francs is annually spent in snuff. Where the snuff takers live is an enigma. In Paris, at all events, the habit, if one may judge from one's own experience, is unknown.—London Telegraph.

Mr. Beecher's farm at Peekskill is advertised for sale. This was the favorite residence of the great preacher, and beside its regular crops, it furnished him many incidents with which he embellished his public addresses. Somebody once asked Mr. Beecher why he deemed it necessary to impose upon himself the task of going about the country lecturing so long as he had his salary of $20,000 as pastor of the Plymouth Church. "Ah," was Mr. Beecher's response, "don't you know that I was farming it up in Peekskill? That costs money." Fancy farmers will appreciate the joke.

CURRENT TOPICS.

IN the Presbyterian Review Principal D. H. MacVicar, discussing "Social Discontent," boldly arraigns the Christian Church for its failure to do its duty by society. Wealthy saints and sinners are cared for to excess, he says, and the poor left to shift for themselves until they become vicious and often turbulent.

MRS. BERRY was hanged, not long ago, in Oldham, England, for the murder of her daughter. Recently an auction sale of her effects was held. The result was great financial success. The weird interest attaching to a murderer's relics added an unwonted value to her belongings. A ball dress brought £18. Dancing in a garment once owned by an executed criminal is an experience denied to most people, but, apparently, worth a good round sum.

BEFORE the war the term "negro" was highly offensive to the colored people in the Southern States, and their prejudice against it has not wholly died out, though it is yielding to the influence of time and enlightenment. A few years ago a national convention of colored editors was held in St. Louis, and it was agreed, by passing a resolution, that the word negro was the proper ethnological term to designate the colored race. The once offensive term is also used in issuing the call for a national convention of negroes to be held this year in Indianapolis, on the 2nd of June.

THE manufacture of carbons for electric lights has become an important business, and of the 150,000 burned daily in the United States 100,000 are manufactured in Cleveland, where there are 20 furnaces. The carbons are made chiefly of the residuum of oil after it has been refined, but the deposit about natural gas wells is also coming into use. The material is ground to powder, a little pitch is added, and the substance is then placed in moulds. These are packed in boxes, and the latter placed in a furnace, where they are subjected to intense heat. The carbons are thoroughly burned in five days, and the cooling process continues only 24 hours.

IN some parts of England a practice prevails of paying the wages of agricultural laborers partly in cider. This (remarks Mr. Charles Acland in the preamble to his Agricultural Laborers Bill) "is an encitement to intemperance to the great detriment of their families, and it is expedient to prohibit such practice by law." Accordingly his Bill proposes to declare that every English or Irish farmer, or other employer of labor, who pays to any farm laborer or servant in husbandry wages or portions of wages in beer, cider or other intoxicating liquors, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20 shillings for the first offence, and not exceeding 40 shillings for the second and subsequent offences. The restriction would not, however, extend to laborers who reside or board with their employer. The penalties would be recoverable before any bench of magistrates on the information of any police constable or any other person.

THE capability of sea water as a preservative is shown by the fact that among the articles recovered from vessels sunk in the harbor of Vigo, Spain, in 1702, there have been recovered specimens of logwood and mahogany that, notwithstanding their 184 years' submersion, are in the most perfect state of preservation. Dyers who have experimented with the logwood state that it is even better for dyeing purposes than the wood now imported. The mahogany, too, is very fine and solid, one log twelve feet long and twenty-two by thirty-two inches square being subsequently worked up in the shape of furniture and walking sticks as mementoes. The chief object of interest, however, is an ancient pulley block four and one-half feet high and three feet broad, with four solid copper sheaves eighteen inches in diameter. It is of solid oak, and was probably used in hoisting heavy articles of merchandise or the anchors. The wood is perfectly preserved, but an iron band is completely corroded away, while the copper wheels are but slightly oxidized.

UNDER the Hindoo marriage law, which has prevailed for 30 centuries, every Hindoo girl must be married. The parent who has an unmarried daughter of full age in his house is not only an offender against social usage, but is guilty of a religious crime, threatened with punishment in a future state, and one which his neighbors will not be satisfied to leave to its deferred theological sanction. The daughter must, therefore, be married to some one, and if no fit person is forthcoming, she must be joined to some unfit person, and this at the earliest stage possible, so as to settle the matter, and make things safe for her father. Many Hindoo girls are married in their 7th or 8th year, and, once married, there is no escape possible for them. Wifedom may be a revolting servitude, but widowhood is a living death. The widow is an outcast, with no civil rights and no social standing. Her place formerly would have been on her husband's funeral pile, but, since suttee has been forbidden, a fate more cruel, an agony more prolonged, has been the appointed lot of the woman who survives her lord.

IN 1883 a commission was appointed in Germany to consider and report on the advantages and disadvantages of vaccination, and the following are among the conclusions just reported: The length of time for which vaccination protects against smallpox varies greatly in different persons, but in the mean it is 10 years. Revaccination is necessary 10 years after the primary operation. Two well-marked vesicles are necessary to insure a successful protective vaccination. There is no evidence as to any increasing special disease, or of general mortality which can be considered as due to the introduction of vaccination. The use of animal vaccine is preferable. Vaccination should not be performed while scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria, whooping cough, typhus or erysipelas are epidemic or unusually prevalent in the neighborhood. Infants should not be vaccinated before they are three months old unless smallpox is prevalent in the vicinity. The greatest care as to cleanliness and disinfection of the instruments used for vaccination should be insisted on.

SENSATIONAL POISONING CASE.

An Ontario Woman Charged With Killing Her Daughter-in-Law.

EXTRAORDINARY CHARGES MADE.

Martha Jane Ryckman, of Arkona, accused of causing the death of Rebecca Hendricks, has been lodged in Sarnia jail. The prisoner is concerned in the Ryckman poisoning case which has created quite a stir at Bosanquet township. When arrested the old lady exhibited but very little surprise. According to the expert analysis, enough arsenic was found in the stomach to have caused death, and a verdict was found accordingly and the arrest followed. The poisoning is alleged to have been committed in Virginia, from where the body was sent to Ontario for burial.

Mrs. Rebecca Hendricks, a sister-in-law of Mrs. Ryckman, was visiting at the latter's residence, in Thedford, between Christmas and New Year's Day last. On the evening previous to New Year's Day, about 8 o'clock, and two hours after having had a hearty supper, she was taken violently sick and complained of intense pains in the region of her heart and across her stomach. Medical aid was summoned, but nothing could be done to save her life. She died on the afternoon of New Year's Day. With the object in view of clearing up other suspicions against Mrs. Ryckman while in Canada, Dr. W. Cornell, of Thedford, coroner, empannelled a new jury, and the remains of Mr. Hendricks were taken from the grave in the Arkona cemetery and a post-mortem held. The testimony given was strongly suspicious. The inquest then adjourned. The case as it stands at present is simply this: If no poison is found in the viscera of Mrs. Hendricks, Maria Jane Ryckman will be extracited and taken to Virginia; but, on the other hand, if the jury in this case find sufficient evidence to convict, she will appear at the Lambton Fall Assizes.

Several members of the Ryckman family have died under suspicious circumstances. In 1876 the prisoner's husband was taken suddenly ill and died. He was not in bed a day during the sickness which caused his death. About three years later a son-in-law of Mrs. Martha Ryckman also died under suspicious circumstances. His name was John Haskett. By his death, his wife, who was consumptive, and did not long survive her husband, came into considerable property. Mrs. Haskett, when she died, left the property to the prisoner to use for the benefit of an 18-months-old girl she (Mrs. Haskett) left. The child died about 18 months after its mother, and Mrs. Martha Ryckman came into the property. A gentleman in Arkona said to a correspondent to-day: "There are eight bodies, members or connections of the Ryckman family, buried in that little graveyard on the hill, and it is a significant fact that by the death of each of them Mrs. Martha Ryckman derived some financial benefit."

How to Stop the Paper.

A number of superexcited citizens and citizenesses in different parts of the State have been writing indignant letters "To the Editor of the News" regarding the course of the News on the subject of prohibition. Some of them do not show that degree of charitable tolerance for other people's opinions on a great public question which their professions of true godliness would seem to require of them. There is more epithet than argument in their esteemed communications, and some of them end up with "stop my paper." We have no sort of objection to the epithets. They do us no harm, and they seem to relieve the pent up feelings of the writers. But it is proper that we should convey a little useful information to the good people who are thus wasting their energies. First, they are not, as they seem to think, exceptional in their action. The News has so large a circulation that it embraces all sorts of people of all sorts of opinions. The News also has opinions of its own on pretty nearly all subjects of public interest, and it has a fashion of expressing them with a freedom and plainness of speech that must necessarily give offence to those who imagine no one has a right to entertain any opinion but their own. As an inevitable consequence we are constantly receiving communications from indignant people who want their paper to agree with all their eccentricities. This goes on all the year round. But it is idle work to write "to the editor" when you reach the "stop-my-paper" stage of indignation. The editor couldn't stop your paper if he wanted to. He has nothing to do with it. You can't get your paper stopped in that way. The agent who delivers it in your town is the party to speak to, and the quickest way to get it stopped is to tell him to stop it. Besides, this course will save postage, stationery and trouble.—Detroit News

Niagara vs. Vesuvius.

The average American at home or abroad does not take kindly to anything that would seem to cast the shadow of a shade upon his native land. A story told the other evening at the Richmond Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church by the Rev. George W. Peck might be cited in illustration. An Englishman was travelling through Italy with an American friend, and in the course of their sojournings each maintained the superiority of his own country. Finally the grand spectacle of Mount Vesuvius in eruption, throwing its brilliant rays across the bay of Naples, burst upon their astonished gaze. "Now, look at that," chuckled the Englishman, "you haven't got anything in America that can come anywhere near that." "No," moodily replied the Yankee, "it is true we have not got a Vesuvius, but we have got a waterfall that could put that thing out in less than five minutes."—Buffalo Courier.

Close Competition.

"I've got the most money!" he shouted across the street, as he held up a nickel.

"I don't keer fur that. My father has been arrested."

"So's mine."

"But they took mine down in the patrol waggon and yours had to walk."—Detroit Free Press.

The H's Floor Her.

England may be "mistress of the C's," but she has never yet been able to fairly master the H's.—Boston Gazette.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

The following Bills were considered in committee of the whole and reported:

To incorporate the International Ferry Railway Company.—Mr. Morin.

To provide for the erection of a court house in the city of Toronto.—Mr. Widdifield.

Respecting the city of Toronto.—Mr. Leys.

The following Bills were read the second time:

To further extend the powers of the Consumers' Gas Company of Toronto.—Mr. Widdifield.

To amend the Act incorporating the Girls' Home and Public Nursery, of Toronto.—Mr. Leys.

Mr. Craig introduced a Bill to amend the Ontario Medical Act, which was read the first time.

Hon. O. Mowat then rose and said—Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that we should send an address to Her Majesty on the occasion of her attaining the fiftieth year of her reign. I need make no observations in proposing that such an address be sent. Our Province has been always noted for its loyalty to the Crown of England. Our early settlers were Loyalists who had shown their loyalty by sacrificing their interests and homes and property in order that they might continue to live under the British flag. There have been attempts made since that time to do away with the British flag, but these have always been unsuccessful. This is one of the matters, I am happy to say, upon which hon. gentlemen of all parties can agree. We all love British connection, and we are all proud and glad of forming a part of the British Empire. We all love the Queen and appreciate her virtues and her queenly excellencies; and it is with great satisfaction, I am sure, that we shall all join in expressing those sentiments to her. I move, therefore, Resolved, that an humble address be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, expressing the heartfelt congratulations of this House on the occasion of Her Majesty's having attained the fiftieth year of her reign.

Mr. Meredith seconded the adoption of the address, which was read a second time and agreed to, upon which every member of the House rose to his feet and joined in the singing of "God Save the Queen." It was then ordered that the address be engrossed.

On motion of the Attorney-General, seconded by Mr. Meredith, it was resolved: That an humble address be presented to His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, praying that His Honor will be pleased to transmit to His Excellency the Governor-General the address adopted by this House to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, expressing the heartfelt congratulations of this House on the occasion of Her Majesty's having attained the 50th year of her reign, in order that the same may be laid at the foot of the Throne in such manner as His Excellency may see fit.

The address, having been read the second time, was agreed to, and it was ordered: That the address be engrossed, and presented to His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor by such members of this House as are of the Executive Council.

Horse Trading in Ireland.

The following story was told to a clerical friend in the West of Cork by a countryman named Dinny Cooley; "Good morrow, Dinny; where did you get the horse?" "Well, I'll tell your reverence. Sime time ago I went to the fair of Ross, not with this horse, but another horse. Well, sorra a wan said to me, 'Dinny, do you come from the Aist, or do you come from the Wesht?' and when I left the fair there wasn't wan to say, 'Dinny, are you going to the Aist, or are you going to the Wesht?' Well, your reverence, I rode home, and was near Kilnagross, when I met a man riding along the road forninst me. 'Good evening, friend,' said he. 'Good evening, friend,' said I. 'Were you at the fair of Ross?' says he. 'I was,' sez I. 'Did you sell?" sez he. 'No,' sez I. 'Would you sell?' sez he. 'Would you buy?' sez I. 'Would you make a clane swop?' sez he, 'horse, bridle and saddle and all?' sez he. 'Done!' sez I. Well, your reverence, I got down off av me horse, not this horse, but the other horse, and the man got down aff av his horse, that's this horse, not the other horse, and we swopped and rode away. But when he had gone about twenty yards, he turned round and called after me. 'There niver was a man from Ross,' sez he, 'but could put his finger in the eye of a man from Kilnagross,' sez he, 'and that horse,' sez he, 'that I swopped with you,' sez he, 'is blind of an eye,' sez he. Well, then, your reverence, I turned upon him and I called out to him: 'There niver was a man from Kilnagross,' sez I, 'but could put his two fingers in both the eyes av a man from Ross,' sez I, 'and that horse that I swopped with you,' sez I, 'is blind av both his eyes,' sez I."

Uncle Esek's Wisdom.

We stand n our sunshine oftener than others do.

It is the little things that are the most wonderful and difficult; it is possible for human enterprise to make a mountain, but impossible for it to make an oyster.

There is nothing so necessary as necessity; without it mankind would have ceased to exist ages ago.

The heart gets weary, but never gets old.

If a man is right he can't be too radical; if wrong he can't be too conservative.

The silent man may be overlooked now, but he will get a hearing by and by.

Method and despatch govern the world.

You can outlive a slander in half the time you can out argue it.—Century.

He Knew What He Wanted.

Old Party (in restaurant)—"'Bout ten years ago, waiter, I was in here and got a piece of steak that was as good as enny I ever eat." Waiter—"Yes, sah." Old Party—"Now, you can bring me another jest like it, only don't have it quite so well done."—Harper's Bazar.

Forty years ago an old lady in Baldwin, Fla., about to die, made her children promise not to bury her body. She threatened to haunt them if they did, and so when she was dead they placed the body in a stout coffin of Florida pine, placed it on the surface of the ground in the graveyard, and built a strong log pen around it. The log house is in good condition now, and so is the coffin within it.

THE FARMERS' COLUMN.

In sowing clover for pasture it is desirable to mix the alsike, red and white clovers, and the kind best adapted to the land will probably take possession in a few years. A variety of grasses is always desirable in a pasture. Some farmers who have plenty of pasture land are adapting the plan of sowing the seeds of timothy, blue grass, orchard grass and the different clovers separately, giving each kind its own space, so as to permit the cows to select the grasses preferred. It has been demonstrated that each individual will prefer certain grasses, and that the herd will separate over the entire pasture.

Heretofore it was supposed that the Dorking fowl was very tender when young, and not easily raised. Recent experiments show that the Dorking feathers rapidly, the same as the Leghorn, and if the chicks be allowed a small quantity of meat once a day they will prove as hardy as other kinds. This difficulty overcome, the Dorking will hold the highest place among poultry as a market fowl. It is to the barnyard fowls what the Shorthorn is among cattle.

The first pound, or the first 100 pounds, of beef, mutton or pork is the most costly. The greater the weight an animal can be made to attain in the shortest period of time the smaller the cost per pound proportionately. It requires no more labor to feed a steer weighing 2,000 pounds than it does to feed a steer weighing 1,000. The cost of production does not depend solely upon the amount of food consumed, but upon the food, shelter and labor.

One advantage overlooked when manure is applied on the soil, as compared with the use of commercial fertilizers, is that with the decomposition of manure is a liberation of carbonic acid gas, which acts upon the soil chemically and assists in providing a greater amount of plant food by rendering inert matter soluble. The value of manure, therefore, does not depend solely on the amount of material added to the soil, but partly to its chemical effect.

If, by the ensilage system, a greater number of cows can be kept, as compared with pasturing, the farmer will not only secure a gain by the saving of food but also by having a larger area of land to be cultivated. Every acre of the pasture that can be cultivated and made to yield a crop is a gain.

Where only one cow is kept on a small farm a space should be devoted to a crop of oats and peas, as a supply of early green food. Sow the oats and peas together, and begin feeding as soon as the crop shall be high enough to cut. It may be followed by late fodder corn.

Aged animals should be fed ground food, as they cannot grind whole grains, the consequence being a waste of food unless the food be ground. By so doing a smaller proportion of food will be required, while the animals will keep in better condition.

For home use lettuce is more easily raised than any other table vegetable. Sow the seed on a finely-prepared bed that has been made rich, and use the largest plants as they grow, which will avoid the necessity of transplanting.

All the best butter comes from what are styled "fancy farms," which indicates that the so-called "fancy" farmers are those who adopt the most improved methods and use only the choicest stock.

The schools should join in celebrating Abor day, and every farmer is interested in impressing on the young the importance of its observance and the future benefits to be derived therefrom.

If you wish to prevent weeds and grasses from growing on the walk ways sprinkle kerosene oil freely, but be careful not to get it on the plants you wish to grow along the borders.

White clover is the best grass that can be grown for sheep. Sheep are not partial to tall grass, and the white clover will always be selected by them in preference to other kinds.

Sow early beets as soon as the ground shall be warm. Use plenty of well-rotted stable manure, and also about three pounds of nitrate of soda on each square rod of ground.

Do all you can to encourage the birds. They are your best friends. Protect them and their nests, and keep a watch on the family cats, which do the birds much damage.

Ashes, or potash salts, will be found excellent for the fruit trees, now that they are throwing out leaves. Later on an application of superphosphate will be of advantage.

Sheep graze very closely, and should not be allowed on grass that is backward in growth, or where the field is not well covered, unless such grass is undesirable.

As the young grass is beginning to shoot keep a close watch on the onion crop. Of all crops the onion soonest succumbs to the intrusion of grass and weeds.

Don't be in a hurry to get out the egg-plants, tomatoes, string beans, lima beans and squash. A slight frost will destroy all your work.

The best disposal to make of lawn grass when mowed closely is to feed it to hens, as it will be about the proper length for that purpose.

At this season fowls and chicks are high in price, while eggs are cheap. In the fall and winter the reverse is the case.

For shade in the poultry yard this summer, and as a protection to the chicks against hawks plant squashes.

Force of Habit.

"Do you think," said a lady to her friend, Mrs. S., "that if you were to be taken away your husband would ever marry again?"

"Oh, I suppose he would," Mrs. S. replied; "I am his fourth wife, you know."

The electric light, which was introduced some time back into several of the State departments at Windsor Castle, has now been extended into the residential portion, and the grand corridor, the three drawing-rooms (the white, the green, and the crimson), the great dining-room, and the oak-room are all fitted with it.

Patti's hotel bill in New York is $110 a day.

QUEEN VICTORIA AND HER JAUNT.

The French Said to Be Tickled because of Her Presence.

(Smalley's Cable in the N. Y. Tribune.)

The Queen's absence passes with if anything less remark than usual. Her Majesty's visit to Aix-les-Bains excites more notice in France than here. The English do not half like the Queen's residence abroad, but the French are flattered and delighted because she chooses to spend her vacation beneath the tricolor. Figaro, of Paris, devotes a column and a half to details of the Queen's arrival and installation at the Villa Mottet, which for all its fine name is only a dependence of a hotel. This august female traveller, says the awed Frenchman, always takes her cook and all her servants with her, and she found her breakfast ready for her on her arrival. The Queen's habits, we learn on the same authority, are correct. She rises at 7; breakfasts at 9 with the Prince and Princess of Battenberg, nobody else being admitted, and walks at 10, the Princess accompanying her. Sometimes she drives, and Her Majesty is to be seen on occasion in a donkey cart. She sketches: lunches at 3 with an excellent appetite; takes another promenade at 4, the Princess still with her; goes sight-seeing like less august tourists; dines at 8.30; talks; then retires to her private room, reads, draws and writes letters till 1.30 next morning, the hour at which apparently the Queen parted with this reporter. No English paper has the news.

The Queen returns on April 29th. Meantime Windsor Castle is being furnished up for the reception of the royalties expected for the jubilee. So is Buckingham Palace, which for once is to wear an air of hospitality. The castle and palace together are not equal to the demands likely to be made on them for the accommodation of the Queen's guests from abroad, so a hotel hard by the palace has been engaged for the minor kings.

Cured by Faith.

Mrs. Herman, of Kokoma, Ind., who had been paralyzed for several years, became interested in a series of revival meetings and induced her son to carry her to the church in which they were conducted. While she was there the congregation prayed for her, and, to the great surprise of all she arose and walked from her seat to the pulpit. She is now said to be able to walk as well as she ever could.

Mrs. Louisa Scribner, an advocate of the Christian science of faith healing, is said to have effected some remarkable cures in different parts of Missouri. The most noteworthy case is that of James Donovan, an aged resident of Missouri City. Inflammatory rheumatism has kept him in bed for more than a score of years, but he is now as active as a man of 40. Mrs. Scribner cures her patients by simply reading the Bible to them and praying for their recovery.

R. W. Prendergast, a well-known merchant of Bellevue, Ky., was given up by his physicians a month ago and left to die. He had been afflicted with an unknown disease which baffled their keenest diagnosis, and the medicine administered to him seemed to make his condition worse. After the physicians had left him three ladies went to his bedside and prayed that he might be healed. The sick man grew better at once, the visits and prayers were continued, with increasing success, and to-day he is well. Before his recovery Mr. Prendergast had not been inside a church for fifteen years, but he is now a regular attendant.

Father Boudard, the priest in charge at the Convent of the Ursuline Nuns, in New Orleans, has caused considerable agitation among the Creole portion of the city by his reported miraculous cures. It is reported that several women who had lost confidence in the ability of their physicians to cure their ailments, applied to the reverend father and were directed to observe a course of religious meditation and prayer. This was followed by the application of a certain miraculous water at the hands of the priest, who at the same time made passes with a holy relic. The treatment is said to have been efficacious in a number of instances, but because of the excitement created thereby the Archbishop has ordered Father Boudard to cease his healing practices.

A remarkable instance of an invalid's recovery through faith is reported from Pueble county, O. Miss Sarah Fouble, the daughter of a respectable farmer living just out of Sonora, had been bedridden for thirty-one years because of an affection of the spine, and for nearly a year she had been speechless and blind. She is now entirely cured. Miss Fouble says that about the middle of March she went into a trance, during which an angel appeared to her and bade her pray for her recovery. On awaking from the trance she prayed long and earnestly and fell quietly asleep. In the morning she walked down to breakfast, to the great astonishment of the family, and has not known a day of illness since. She now spends the greater part of her time in singing and praying.

Mrs. John Buchanan, of Waco, Mo., relates in the Religio-Philosophical Journal how the spirits cured her 15-year-old daughter of a terrible attack of malarial fever. The child lay in bed for three months suffering terribly, and was finally given up by the physician, who said that in the improbable event of her recovery, she would be a cripple for life in her back and lower limbs. The mother, in her anguish, prayed to heaven for guidance, and the voice of a spirit responded with instructions for treating the sufferer. Mrs. Buchanan followed the instructions implicitly with the edifying result that (to use her own words) "in three days my daughter could turn herself in bed; and in two more days she could stand on her feet with a little assistance, and now she is well, and is married, and has a sweet little boy."

—Why are we always so much more rejoiced at finding a dime than at earning a dollar?—Tid-Bits. Because we don't.

In a paper entitled "The Handwriting of the Insane," recently read in Philadelphia, Mrs. Henry Hazlehurst said that the giving way of the mind in an educated person was often shown in bad spelling, blotting, frequent erasures, the absurd use of parentheses, italicization and underscoring in excess. Insane pride and obstinacy take to capitals, and, it is said, make frequent use of the letter "P," which becomes perfectly enormous.

He Told Her What It Meant.

She asked the scholars to define
The sense of "surreptitious,"
But every one had to decline,
Although they were ambitious.

"It's something done upon the sly,
That no one else has seen,"
The teacher said, "Now who will try
To tell me what I mean?"

She'd just been reading of the lad
Who thieved away uncaught,
And hoped, perhaps, her reading had
Some useful lesson taught.

Miff Smiff," hear yonder youngster call.
With eyes upon the floor,
"I know! You kithed the Principal
At noon behind the door."

Ethereal Wildness.

From Easter we reckon the advent of Spring. By many signs we mark the coming of the gentle season. None can escape its quickening influence; the influenza, as it were, takes hold of us all. Spring may be known in our latitude and city by divers tokens.

The coal is low in the bin. The furnace rages fiercely during the warm mid-day, and goes out entirely at chill nightfall. Every day the citizen takes a new cold, and every cold lasts a week; thus his constitution is perpetually overlaid and shingled with wheezy and inflammatory ailments, half a dozen deep. In spring you often hear a man say, "I have got over the cold I took night before last, but I still suffer from the cold I contracted a week ago."

In the spring the streets are dirty, wet when muddy, dusty when dry. In alleys and dark corners the ice lingers, a foot of frozen substratum underneath the litter of recent traffic. Gangs of men with pick and shovel open ice mines at such places. At great depths they find relics of by-gone days: last summer's banana peels, still good for several slips: or the discarded posters of an election long past.

"To Rent" is a sign of spring. It is also a sign that moving-day with all its attendant delights is at hand. A weary army of house-hunters roams the streets. Now is the harvest time of the real estate agent and the drayman. The professor of kalsomining and artistic whitewashing basks in the sun.

The swift bicycle resumes its swallow-flight over the asphalt. Urchins swarm on side streets, and after nightfall play marbles on the smooth pavements, under the white glare of the electric lights. The goat resumes the tomato-can in the potato patch.

Spring raiment renews the respectability of the race. With its donning comes a longing for luxurious ease. Algernon sighs at the ledger and Augustus yawns behind the thread counter. The movement for the Saturday half holiday begins.

By such passing signs as these do we mark the advent of spring.

Cuban Beggars.

The Cuban beggars seldom fail to capture the stray change of any American visitor, but in the case of F. D. M., of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, they seem to have taken his heart also. He writes:

The beggar girls merely hold out their hand and petition you with their wonderful eyes. Articulate speech is a poor recourse compared with such eyes. One dark eyed, dark-skinned little vagabond held out her dirty little paw to me and gave me such a look. It was a prayer, a petition; it was full of tears and pleadings, of infinite tenderness, hope and untold woe. She said only "Centano, senor," and murmured all sorts of buenos, and chequitos, and bonitos, or something of the sort, as a tribute to my gigantic goodness, my enormous heart and my overwhelming masculine beauty.

I couldn't stand it, and got out a Cuban 10-cent shin plaster, which is worth about 3 cents, and handed to her, though the hall porter was ordering her to "vayose" or vamos, or something to that effect.

When she saw the shin plaster she turned her great eyes up to mine as though almost stunned at my princely generosity, seized my hand and kissed it, turned and yelled "caramba" to some more little half-naked rascals, and away they went to a cigarette shop. The porter said she is the worst one in the business.

A quiet old gentleman from Albany was sitting near me, and a woman leading two children and carrying another upon her head approached him and held out her hand. He put a 10-cent piece in it, and with stately grace, she knelt, kissed his hand and called down a blessing upon his head, saying: "Ah, señor, que dichoso soy" which comes pretty near meaning, "Ah, sir, how happy I am!"

When she knelt in that solemn way, with a young one kneeling on either side, and raised her eyes to heaven, whereat the baby on her head nearly fell off, and held to the hand of the modest old gentleman from Albany, the group was the centre of observation, and the modest old gentleman got red in the face and looked painfully embarrassed.

Still Awaiting.

"Husband in?" asked the Assessor, cheerfully. "No," answered the woman, "he isn't home." "Expecting him soon?" asked the Assessor. "Well," the woman replied, thoughtfully, "I don't know exactly; I've been lookin' for him seventeen years, and he hasn't showed up yet. You travel round a good deal, and if you see a man who looks as though he'd make me a pretty good husband, tell him I'm still a waitin' and send him along. How's your wife?" But the Assessor wrote something in his book and, without speaking, slid softly away with the cautious haste of a man walking over a thin place in the ice.

The Cautious Farmer.

Hotel clerk (to farmer)—"Will you register, please?"

Farmer—"Will I do what?"

Clerk—"Register, sign your name in this book."

Farmer—"Not much, young feller. Ye don't git me to sign my name on no paper. I've been beat oncet, and that's 'nough."

THE vain attempts to identify the murdered girl of Rahway, N.J., again calls attention to the large number of people who mysteriously disappear and are never heard of afterward. The names of no less than forty-eight young women have lately come to light in connection with this tragedy as having strangely vanished, leaving no clue to the fate that has overtaken them.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, APRIL. 28, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Ours on assessments last week squeezed somebody's pet corn in a mighty tight corner. Its scalps we're after—and equalization of assessment.

What has become of our friend (!) "Miller," eh? We mean the gentleman who has acted in such a friendly manner towards the Editor of this paper in the matter of newspaper subscriptions. Did any one say rats?

The forthcoming South Grey Teachers' Convention will be the best ever held by the Association, and that is saying considerable. It will come off in Flesherton on the 2nd and 3rd of June, and, as usual, our people will accord the visitors a hearty and unstinted welcome.

If you discover a number of "Editorial Notes" among the "Tit-Bits" this week, be sure and blame the "intelligent compositor" for putting them there. That's what we have done. Other Editors are not going to enjoy a monopoly in this business if we can prevent it.

Some people do not believe in sudden conversions. We do. After subjecting The Advance to a series of unprovoked attacks, the Hanover Post boldly and manfully asserted last week that the Editor of this paper "is a gentleman." If that is not a case of sudden conversion we would like to know what is.

The Meaford Mirror expects to see warm work between The Advance and a "South Grey contemporary" on account of Valentine Muggins' "Parable of an Editor," which graced our columns last two weeks. "Whoever the cap fits can put it on," but, in any case, Valentine is quite able to fight his own battles.

The fair-haired scribe of the Duffer in Post had his fortune told recently. Of course he is to become a bloated aristocrat, with gold knobs on his door handles and all the rest of it. That's the fate of most country editors when their "fortunes" are told by silver-tongued sirens: the reality is what knocks most of 'em cold on the first round.

Fifty years ago last twelfth of July, Mr. Wm. Rutledge, sr., of Artemesia, attended divine service in a church at Derry West, Co. Peel. Although it is partly in ruins, the walls of the old church can still be seen standing out in bold relief. This old-fashioned structure is built of mud brick, but it has stood the storms of time much better than many of the red brick buildings of a much more recent date.

It is sincerely to be regretted that the Band Concert last week was so poorly patronized. Our Band deserved better treatment at the hands of the public. Its members have always been willing to extend a helping hand wherever and whenever their services have been required. All this they have done—in most cases—cheerfully and gratuitously. What a miserable return, therefore, was the paltry sum raised on the occasion named. Such contemptibly shabby treatment was never less merited. We hope it will not be repeated. Our big-hearted Band boys are much discouraged as it is, but a repetition might bring about a disbandment, which every one would regret—and none more so than those tight-fisted persons, who have so persistently witheld their support.

The spring poet has struck the office of the Chesley Enterprise like a western cyclone. He hails from a place called Scone. Dr. Landerkin ought to buy a club and lie in wait for him some dark night after he returns from parliament. Here is what he says about the Dr.:

When in the house his voice is heard,
No wonder some with hate are stirr'd—
He don't speak smooth things, but each word,
The ring of metal true hath—
Among the would be aristocrats
He's like a terrier catching rats,
He shakes 'em till they squeal, and that's
The style that tickles LUATH.

Thornbury is now an incorporated town and will have to provide itself with a Mayor, Reeve and no less than nine Councillors forthwith, together with Clerk, Treasurer, Assessor, Collector and what not. The absurdity of incorporating as a town a place of eight or nine hundred inhabitants must be apparent to most people. Perhaps we will be told that it is none of our funeral, but it is a mighty comforting thought to know that one cannot be hanged for expressing an honest opinion in this country.

Ladies troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough hands or face or Sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It will leave the skin in perfect health, smooth, clean and good color. Be sure and get the genuine, made by McGregor & Parke. Price 25c. Sold at the Drug Store

PRIZE COMPETITION!

W.C.T.U.

In order to instigate enquiry and research, the W. C. T. U., of Flesherton, have decided to offer three valuable Temperance Books, as 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize to any person under 20 years of age, who can furnish the longest list of Words and Names as follows:—

1st.—Dates and circumstances under which, during the year 1886, Temperance work was mentioned in the Flesherton Advance.

2nd.—Names of intoxicating beverages and of the materials out of which and the process by which they are made.

3rd.—Names of parts of the human system affected by alcohol, and names of the diseases caused by it.

4th.—Prominent words that came into use mainly through the Temperance Crusade.

5th.—Names of Persons and Organizations directly connected with the Temperance Reform.

6th.—Names of Counties and of States where the Scott Act or other prohibitory liquor laws are in force.

7th.—Names of Temperance authors and titles of Temperance works.

8th.—Names of men in the Provincial parliament who are known to be in sympathy with Temperance Reform.

Lists of words to be correctly written and sent in sealed envelope, without the name of writer, to Mr. Thos. Leitch, Flesherton, who will number the envelopes and furnish the writer with corresponding number, so that all will be opened together and no partiality can be shown. Competition open to all under the age above mentioned, and list must be sent in on or before June 19th, 1887.

SEEDS, SEEDS!

THE PUREST

Field and Garden

SEEDS!

That can be Bought are Now for Sale at

RICHARDSONS' DRUG STORE, FLESHERTON.

☞ William will Attend.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Tanned faces.

Cold, backward spring.

The farmers in this vicinity are starting their seeding and they complain of it being a late backward spring.

The fallwheat will not be a full crop around here this year owing to the recent night frosts.

The Rev. S. Henderson, of Priceville, filled the pulpit of the C. M. church here last Sabbath in absence of Dr. Strongman, who is attending his examination at the Coburg University.

News has just reached here that David Moorhead, formerly of this place and who was living with his brother at Mornington is dead, aged 70 years.

The Temperance lodge here has been largely increased in membership.

Mr. W. Williamson removed to his farm at Creemore.

We understand that there will be a spelling-match between S. S's Nos. 4 and 3, Artamesia, next Friday.

Master J. Roseborough still continues ill with inflammation on the lungs.

MAUD.

The exhausted and drowsy feelings, common to spring time, indicate an impure and sluggish condition of the blood, which may be remedied by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the most powerful, and, at the same time, most economical blood purifier known.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

No Certificate Required.

In Philadelphia, Pa., the school rule requiring scholars to bring physicians' certificates in case of sickness at their homes is rigidly enforced. Not long ago one of the lady teachers was walking by the residence of one of her scholars, when she saw a doctors carriage standing in front of the door. At once the thought of the terrors of contagious disease rose in her mind, and when she arrived at the schoolhouse she waited in anxious suspense until the little child from the house of sickness made her appearance. The child was summoned to the teacher's desk and asked:

"Have you a physician's certificate:"

"No, ma'am," was the timid response.

"Then you must go home, and not come here until you have a certificate from the doctor."

The child disappeared, but soon after returned, and, gleefully approaching her teacher, exclaimed: "Please, ma'am, but it's a little boy baby—and the doctor says it isn't catching!"

As a hair dressing and renovator, Ayer's Hair Vigor is universally commended. It eradicates dandruff, cures eruptions of the scalp, invigorates and beautifies the hair, and prevents its fading or turning gray.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

THE REV GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

LEITCHS

Tailoring Establishment

FLESHERTON!

Is the place to get your Suits made in future.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$2 00 to 2 10
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to 0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 80
Barley	0 35	0 48
Oats	0 27	0 27
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 14	0 14
Eggs, fresh	0 11	0 11
Potatoes	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 75	5 75
Hay, per ton	8 00	13 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16	16
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 35	0 35
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil"

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's Blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON.

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes, or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON.
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer.

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED DR CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 600 000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try the excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

A. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

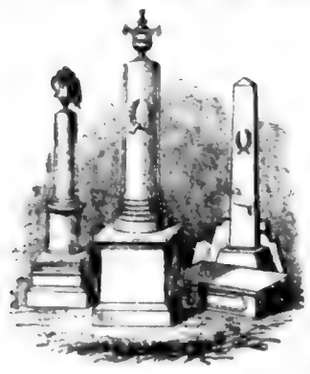
STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival, and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

And are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

TO RENT or FOR SALE CHEAP.

100 acre farm, 14 acres cleared. Apply to

M. RICHARDSON.

LOST NOTES.

ALL parties are hereby cautioned against negotiating for two notes—one for $8.50, drawn in my favor by Mr. Hillock, and the other for $15, drawn in my favor by Henry Down, both now due, as the same have been lost or misplaced by me. J. W. HODGSON.

CAUTION.—The Down note is not due until 23rd March, 1888; the Hillock note is now due.

Horning's Mills, March 21st, 1887.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

CAUTION.

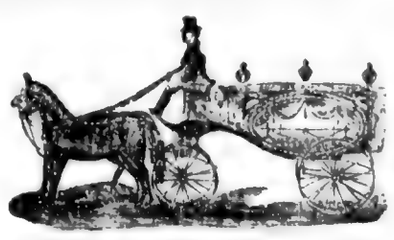
I hereby caution any person against negotiating for a note for $15, in favor of Samuel Martin, which fell due about 1st Nov., 1886, as I have not received value for the same.

JOHN SHERWOOD,
34. Eugenia P.O.

To Farmers' & Millers'.

FOR SALE.

WEST ½ of 33, Con. 9, Artemesia. Also TWO GRAND WATER POWERS in Eugenia, and a number of Town Lots. Write to DR. PURDY, P.M at East Selkirk, Man., or to R. McL. PURDY, Esq., Eugenia, and answer will be made at once.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS GIVEN LAST WEEK.

(8)—2¼%.
(9)—$214.50.
(10)—17-50 or 34%
(11)—$73.60.
(12)—A's $960. B's $160.

Flesherton P. S.

The following solved the whole paper correctly:—Lizzie Richardson, Lizzie Swanton, May Damude, Mamie Ayers, Mary Strain, Fred Ayers, Frank VanDusen, Lewis Ludlow and Wesley Smith.

Markdale P. S.

Pythagoras Thibadeau sent correct solutions to the whole paper; and Bella R. Cunningham to all but No. 8.

S. S. No. 9, Artemesia.

Alexander Cameron solved all but No. 11.

S. S. No. 1, Artemesia.

Bella Meldrum solved three, Nellie Meldrum one and Jemima Meldrum two.

Flesherton Station P. S.

Martha L. Whittaker solved five and Sarah Hogg four.

S. S. No. 3 Artemesia.

J. W. Caswell 3, J. J. White 3, Annie Akins 4, Harry Akins 4, and Wm. J. Moore 3.

S. S. No. 7, Artemesia.

Donald Stewart answered Nos. 8, 9 and 11 correctly.

We are pleased to hear from new schools. The interest is evidently increasing. We intend to keep the work within reach of fourth class pupils. The neatest solutions was sent in by Martha Whittaker, of Flesherton Station.

Questions for Next Week.

(13)—A person has a house worth $500. For what amount should he insure it at 4% so that in case of loss he would recover the value of the house, the premium of insurance and $47.20 besides?

(14)—A person pays $90 for a note of $100 due in 10 mos. What rate % of interest does he make on his money?

(15)—A sum of money bears 8% interest for 2 years, 3 mos. What fraction of the principal is the interest?

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

Have you ever tried McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate for sores of any kind? It is beyond doubt the very best preparation in the market for healing and curing Sores, Burns, Cuts, Pimples, Blotches, and is the only proper method of applying Carbolic Acid. Sold at the Drug Store for 25c. per box.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

IMPROVED

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored.—C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

Feversham.

To the Editor of The Advance

On the evening of Sunday the 17th inst., our usually quiet village was thrown into a state of excitement by a quite unlooked for racket at the S. A. Barracks.

On opening the service our military friend selected a text for his evenings' oration and after exagerating the subject to his own satisfaction he changed the program by extending an invitation to any who would like to join them in their testimony exercises. The soldiers all obedient to command rose and gave expression to their varied feelings with great sameness both of style and verbation after which a church member took the floor and after telling his own experience: in a most christian manner referred to a rather uncharitable allusion to church members made by the Lieut., in his preliminery address the force of which was to impress his very attentive audience with the idea that to attain to true holiness they would have to conform to His (barbarous) mode of worship. Continuing he was explaining in a masterly and very intelligent manner the only means by which man could attain to true holiness, but this unwelcome instruction was very insulting to the dignity of an Army official

So for want of better argument our worthy Lieut. resorted to the big drum as his only defense, consequently our esteemed friend was silenced. At this juncture a gentleman occupying a front seat rose to his feet and and claimed for the church member the privilege of continuing his remarks. The Lieut already boiling over with righteous indignation, was by this interference exasperated beyond endurance, and forgetting in his eagerness to hold supreme command, that "he who is slow to anger is better than the mighty," sprang at his adversary and gave him such a hallelujah yank as must have left the unfortunate gentleman with the impression that the laws of nature had taken a very sudden and somewhat disagreeable change. At this point the crowd rushed forward to the relief of our little gallant, and for a while Pandemonium seemed to open there. Men and boys howled and raged, seat after sent came crashing down while women and children might be seen with terror marked on every feature After the riot had somewhat subsided our illustrious friend the Lieut. followed the retiring crowd to the door and while endeavoring to push them from the platform was suddenly surrounded by the exasperated foe who fell upon and smote him hip and thigh until with much difficulty he secured a successful retreat and regaining his regiment had painfully to report victory to the enemy. Hoping that this will be a lesson to him to treat respectable people respectably and secure to himself and adherents peace and quietness. As we consider it nothing but a christian duty to sympathise with those in trouble, would say: If the Lieut. has discovered his error, and humbly seeks for it, there is consolation in the reflection that "whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."

OBSERVER.

Saved From Suicide.

A MR. RICHARDSON, OF WALKERTON, DETAINED AT THE FALLS.

NIAGARA FALLS, April 25.—Friday morning a well-dressed man came here from Buffalo and registered at the Niagara House as J. Q. Richardson of Walkerton, Ont. While at supper he called the proprietor, Mr. J. V. Carr, into the dining room and told him he had lost $6000 in Buffalo and he had come to the falls to commit suicide. Mr. Carr saw at once that his guest was very nervous and tried to talk with him, but he jumped up and ran for the door followed by Carr. In the hall there was a struggle, but Richardson was conquered. A telephone dispatch was sent to the police headquarters for an officer and when he came he had a dispatch from the Superintendent of Police, Buffalo, to arrest Richardson, who had left his baggage at an hotel there and said he was going to commit suicide. Mr. Carr did not wish to see the man locked up and offered a room in the house if the officer would stay and take care of him. A telegram was sent to the man's friends at Walkerton, and yesterday afternoon Mr. E. Robinson arrived to take care of him. The two left for Buffalo with the intention of going from there to Walkerton. Richardson is evidently insane over loss of money in some speculation in Buffalo, and had it not been for the prompt action of Mr. Carr he would probably have jumped into the rapids.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

Clarksburg & Thornbury:

CLARKSBURG.

We were much struck, during a recent visit to the picturesque little village of Clarksburg, with the marked improvement in that place since a former visit—some two years ago.

We found a web factory, employing no less than twenty-four hands, running in full blast. This as an important industry and the second of the kind, we believe, established in Canada. It is owned by the enterprising and popular firm of Tyson Bros.

Another and equally important addition to the business of this thriving place is the "Beaver Valley Banking Co., of which that esteemed and respected gentleman, Walter Hunter, Esq., is manager. It is evidently conducted on the soundest business principles and seems to be largely patronized.

Mr. C. W. Hartman, of "Medical Hall" fame, has one of the noblest drug stores in the county, located in a very neat brick structure near the post-office. The large business done here is evidence of the popularity of friend Hartman. Mr. H. possesses a remarkably handsome residence, with neat rustic fences and carefully kept grounds. In fact Clarksburg boasts many fine private residences.

We had an interesting conversation with the popular young druggist in Hartman's drug store on Saturday, through the instrument in the Standard office Thornbury. The telephone is a great convenience.

THORNBURY.

From a business point of view, there is little change to be noted since our previous visit. In private residences, however, we have quite a different tale to relate. License Inspector Campbell's residence on Bruce street is a beautiful and substantial structure; as, also, are those of Mr. T. Andrews and Mrs. J. N. Andrews, on Bruce and Mill streets respectively.

Friday and Saturday were "opening days" in Mrs. J. Farewell's extensive millinery store. Besides Mrs. F. there are four young ladies employed in the mammoth establishment. All the latest novelties in millinery are kept. During our visit the store was thronged with visitors, who were as well pleased with the bottom prices quoted as they were with the profuse display of pretty millinery and fancy articles generally.

SALT RHEUM CURED.—McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face or hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any Sore that nothing else will heal. Try McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. 25c. per box at the Drug Store.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties most perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

CHAMBERLAIN IN SCOTLAND.

Sir Geo. Trevelyan's Manly Denunciation of the Crimes Bill.

MR. REDMOND EXPLAINS.

The British Parliament Behave Like a Lot of Heelers.

Colonel Saunderson Talks of Murderers—Healy Calls Him a Liar

AND IS SUSPENDED FOR A WEEK.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: Sir Wm. Lyon Playfair resumed the debate on the Coercion Bill to-night. While admitting the difficulty in certain cases of procuring convictions in Ireland, he said the facts were not so serious as the Government alleged.

Sir George Trevelyan, one of the Unionist leaders, and formerly Chief Secretary for Ireland, has written a letter on the Coercion Bill which is tantamount to a manifesto against that measure. He says that really the Bill is chiefly aimed at politicians and editors opposed to the Government policy, and therefore that notorious partisans like Mr. Holmes, the present Attorney-General of Ireland, and Colonel King-Harman, the newly-appointed Parliamentary Secretary for Ireland, are unfit to administer the law if passed. "No true Liberal," he says, "ought to entrust such powers to them. When Lord Spencer repeatedly refused to suppress the League no word of remonstrance emanated from the Liberals. It is inconceivable that a Liberal can now support a measure empowering the Executive to treat Irish politicians as common criminals. In 1883 3,000 Orangemen on one occasion disturbed a National League meeting, their action leading to bloodshed and necessitating the calling out of the troops to preserve the peace. Col. King-Harman and Mr. Holmes actively defended these unwarrantable proceedings. There is not the slightest doubt that in the event of a recurrence of such action the Orangemen would be liable under the clauses of the present Bill to punishment as criminals; but the Government has effectively provided against this contingency by proposing to enact that the House of Lords may veto a proclamation by the Lord-Lieutenant. The full weight of this terrible but one-sided measure is intended to fall and will fall upon the politicians of one party alone. The measure will be administered by those who, beyond all question, are actuated by the strongest Orange sympathy, and it is calculated to exasperate the people without serving any useful purpose."

MR. CHAMBERLAIN IN SCOTLAND.

The language used by Mr. Chamberlain in speaking at the meetings in Ayr has influenced the Irish against him, and he has received numerous letters informing him that he will not leave Scotland alive. Speaking to an assemblage of 2,500 persons, Mr. Chamberlain said the opponents of the Crimes Bill have made an outcry against the repression of liberty. Liberty to do what? To commit theft, to ruin industrious men, to outrage women? (Hisses mingled with cheers.) What are you hissing—the crimes or the punishment?

Here a man, rising and menacing Mr. Chamberlain, cried, "It is not characteristic of the Irish to outrage women." An attempt was made to turn the man out, but Mr. Chamberlain cried out, "Leave him alone."

Then Mr. Chamberlain continued: Do you want instances of insult being offered to women?

Cries of, "Outrage, you said," and "You slander the Irish."

I do not mean the grossest outrage of all; but personal violence and insults. (Hisses and cheers.) I refer to cases like that of the Curtin family, where the lives of the widow and daughters of the murdered man were made intolerable; like that of the widow of another murdered man, Byers, who while accompanying the dead body of her husband was jeered and howled along the street. (Here the speaker was interrupted by cries of "Watch yourself," hisses and general disorder.) I am relating facts to which even my opponents might listen in silence of horror and shame. When I refer to assassinations a man here says, "Take care of yourself." Has the time come when we dare not discuss political matters in this country without being threatened with assassination? (Great cheering.) This is the spirit of the parties in the convention in Chicago. I am sorry to know that they have any representatives in Scotland. (Cries of, "They are not Scotchmen.") That convention, besides being attended by delegates honestly in sympathy with Ireland, had delegates of another stamp—apostles of outrage and murder, who have paid the outrage-monger of England. Mr. Redmond, the delegate of the Irish Parliamentary party, explicitly declared before the convention that it was the aim of that party to effect the entire separation of Ireland from England, and that their policy was to make the government of Ireland by England impossible. This they seek to effect by the most immoral conspiracy ever devised in a civilized land—by contending for liberty to violate every law human and divine. Do you think it infamous to restrain these men? (Cheers.) Mr. Parnell threatened in the House of Commons, under the specious guise of a warning, that if the Coercion Bill were passed there would be a renewal of outrages, dynamite explosions and attempts to assassinate our statesmen. This grim suggestion may prove the death warrant of some of us. (Cries of "No," "Shame.") Well, what happens to individuals is not of much consequence. The danger is to the Commonwealth. For the first time in English history our foes have sympathizers within our ancient fortress. Their plan of attack finds encouragement from those who ought to be the strongest defenders of our citadel. This makes our task more arduous. But we will not shrink, we will not abate one jot, we will not yield to threats from whatever quarter they come, but we will endeavor to hand down unimpaired to our children the unity, strength and honor of the mighty Empire our forefathers bequeathed to us.

Mr. Chamberlain's speech excites all parties. The Unionists consider it a declaration of war to the knife with the separationists. The Gladstonians charge Mr. Chamberlain with slandering and vilifying his former colleagues by the insinuation that they sympathize with the perpetrators of outrages in Ireland. It is asserted that during his tour through Scotland Mr. Chamberlain will be attended by a private guard.

MR. REDMOND'S EXPLANATION.

Mr. John Redmond, in the House of Commons, made a personal explanation with reference to his speech at the Chicago Convention. He said Mr. Chamberlain, in his speech at Ayr, had represented him as saying that the Irish party were not working for the removal of grievances; whereas, what he did say was that they were not working solely for the purpose of removing the material grievances of tenants, but to obtain political reforms also; and further, when he said that the government of Ireland by England was impossible, his allusion was to the centralized bureaucracy government of Dublin Castle. He believed it possible that a settlement could be effected honorable alike to England and to Ireland, such as was offered by Mr. Gladstone's Bill. (Cries of "Hear, hear.")

UNDER SECRETARY FOR IRELAND.

Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, intimated in the House of Commons this afternoon that no salary would be attached to the office of Under Secretary for Ireland, made for Col. King Harman. The Government were aware, Mr. Balfour said, when they appointed the incumbent that the appointment would be attacked. They had taken the highest legal advice and had been informed that their action was legal. In addition to this Mr. Balfour said the new office did not involve in its acceptance by a member of the House of Commons the necessity of his resigning his seat and recontesting it for re-election, because the office was not a place of profit or emolument under the Crowr. Mr. Gladstone said the precedents required Col. King Harman to vacate his seat and seek re-election. Mr. Gladstone said that when he represented Oxford University, he accepted for a short period a place in the Government without salary, and under legal advice vacated his seat and stood for re-election.

The United Ireland says if Irishmen had one chance in ten thousand they would transfer the coercion debate from Parliament to the barricades; but, as that chance does not exist, Irishmen can only set their teeth and hold their tongues. The idea remains to simultaneously summon the whole adult population of Ireland to make one grand historic protest against the coercion, but even the impressiveness of this would be destroyed by the misreporting of the English press.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: Sir William Vernon Harcourt, resuming the debate on the Coercion Bill in the House of Commons this afternoon, said the present alliance between the Liberals and Parnellites was based on the Liberal recognition of the fact that the wisest policy in Irish affairs lay in the acceptance of some form of Irish government which would tend to satisfy the Irish people. He twitted Lord Randolph Churchill and Mr. Chamberlain with having secretly consulted Mr. Parnell, seeking to make an alliance with him for their own purposes. Referring to the conspiracy and Whiteboy clauses of the proposed Act, Sir William declared that they sapped the foundation of all personal liberty, and would even debar Irishmen from forming business combinations to defend their existing rights. The spirit in which the Government would administer the Coercion Act, if it were passed, was sufficiently shown in the appointment of Colonel King-Harman to the Parliamentary Under-Secretaryship for Ireland. By this appointment the Government had declared themselves to be the partisans of the landlords and determined to administer the Bill as the agents of the landowners in Ireland, thus becoming instruments to stimulate the worst passions of the people and their bitterest religious prejudices. The Bill would fail to suppress the Irish National League, because the people of Ireland believed in the League and trusted it. The effect of the enforcement of the Bill would be to make the Government more detested and the League more popular than ever. As to the Tory and Liberal-Union taunts about American gold fostering Irish discontent, Sir Wm. Harcourt said: "There are none who have less reason to complain of American gold than the Irish landlords, for none get more of it. They get it through their poor tenants' rent." The proposal to make the Bill permanent Sir William characterized as a breach of the fundamental conditions of the Union between Ireland and Great Britain. The Government professed to reverence this Union, but were doing their best to violate it. If the Government earnestly desired to maintain the Union let them abandon the policy of exasperating the Irish people and adopt the policy of justice and conciliation. (Cheers.)

Col. Saunderson (Conservative) said the National League was supported mainly by criminals, dynamiters and murderers across the Atlantic. He did not charge the gentlemen opposite with imbruing their hands in blood, but he did charge them with associating with men whom they knew to be murderers.

Mr. Healy rose to a point of order.

The Speaker replied that Col. Saunderson had made the gravest charges, but that these could be met in debate. He himself was unable to interfere.

Mr. Healy responded that he would say what he thought of Col. Saunderson regardless of consequences. If Col. Saunderson referred to him he had no hesitation in saying that Col. Saunderson was a liar.

This remark was greeted with rousing Parnellite cheers.

The Speaker called upon Mr. Healy to withdraw his expression.

Mr. Healy replied—"I am not entitled to rise until you sit down," when the cheering was renewed.

The Speaker then resumed his chair.

Mr. Healy again took the floor. He said: "I am only able to meet the charge in one way. If you rule that Col. Saunderson was in order, my expression was equally in order. If you rule him out of order, I shall withdraw my expression."

The Speaker—"That is not so. Mr. Saunderson made a charge of the gravest nature. The responsibility rests entirely with himself. It is his duty to prove it if he can. (Cheers.) But I cannot allow the expression you used."

Mr. Healy repeated that Col. Saunderson was a liar. A great uproar arose.

The Speaker again called upon Mr. Healy to withdraw.

Mr. Healy refused.

The Speaker thereupon named him.

Mr. W. H. Smith, First Lord of the Treasury, moved that Mr. Healy be suspended.

Mr. Redmond jumped up and shouted, "I say he is a liar, too."

The House divided on the motion to suspend Mr. Healy, and the motion was carried by a vote of 118 to 52.

When the vote was announced, Mr. Healy walked out of the House, applauded by all the Parnellites, who stood up waving their hats and raising cheer after cheer.

Mr. Saunderson, upon attempting to resume his speech, was interrupted by loud cries of "Withdraw!" "Withdraw!"

Mr. Sexton, interrupting, asked Col. Saunderson whether he (Col. Saunderson) persisted in his statement or would withdraw it.

Col. Saunderson replied that Sheridan was a member of the Executive Committee of which the member for West Belfast (Mr. Sexton) was also a member. (Loud cries of "Withdraw!")

Mr. Sexton—"Did I know him to be a murderer? Did I ever associate with a man whom I knew to be a murderer?" (Cheers, and a voice, "Withdraw, you murderer!")

Col. Saunderson—"I said that Sheridan was on the committee, and against him a true bill was found for complicity in the Phœnix Park murders. The committee must have known what kind of a man he was."

Mr. Sexton, springing to his feet, shouted, "I say you are a wilful, cowardly liar!"

Then there was another uproar. The Parnellites all rose and cheered frantically, waving their hats in the air. As soon as there was a chance to be heard,

Mr. Sexton, again addressing Colonel Saunderson, exclaimed, "If I only met you outside the door of this House, I would thrash you within an inch of your life."

The excitement was again renewed.

The Speaker arose and addressed the House, but his voice was inaudible above the din. When quiet had been somewhat restored the Speaker said that unless Mr. Sexton withdrew his expression he would be compelled to name him. He appealed to the House to assist him in his duty, adding that he was willing to do anything in his power to allay bad feeling. (Cheers.) The Speaker then pointedly asked Col. Saunderson whether he charged Mr. Sexton with associating with murderers.

Col. Saunderson, after several evasive answers, which were interrupted by loud cries of "Answer," "Answer the Speaker's question," etc., eventually withdrew the words he had used.

The Speaker then asked Mr. Sexton to withdraw his expression, and at the same time added, "I cannot conceal from myself the fact that the provocation has been very great." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Sexton then formally withdrew his expression.

Mr. Leake, member for Lancashire, suggested that Mr. Healy be recalled.

The Speaker said that nothing could be done in the matter until the next sitting.

Mr. Sexton thereupon gave notice that at the next sitting of the House he would move that the suspension of Mr. Healy be revoked. (Cheers.)

Col. Saunderson then resumed his speech. He said that Mr. Sexton was present at the meeting at which Mr. Egan was made Secretary of the Clan-na-Gael, which was a murder society of America.

Mr. Sexton rose to a point of order, and the Speaker advised Col. Saunderson to withdraw the offensive expression.

Another scene of confusion ensued, Col. Saunderson repeating the words, whereupon Mr. Sexton shouted, "The hon. gentleman is again a liar."

The Speaker called upon both members to withdraw their offensive remarks, which they did.

Col. Saunderson again resumed his speech, and charged the Parnellites with various connections with Egan, Ford and other advocates of murder. At the conclusion of his speech Col. Saunderson was greeted with cheers from the Conservative benches.

The debate was then adjourned.

Mr. Healy was suspended for a week.

The Daily News (Liberal), commenting on the occurrences in the House of Commons, will say: "The Speaker deserves the greatest credit for the courtesy, impartiality and nice sense of honor which marked his demeanor on very critical occasion."

A last Saturday night's London cable says: The Marquis of Hartington, speaking at Edinburgh to-night, contended that there had been no change in the political situation since the Gladstone Government of 1880-85, except an increase of Irish representation, which was always known to be inevitable and could be discounted to justify the Liberals supporting some of the Parnellite tactics which they then opposed. It had been said that the Unionist policy was a negative one. This is denied, because, though in his opinion it would be a mistake for a small intermediate party to commit itself to positive and definite proposals, it was a fact that they, through a practical alliance, induced the Conservative party to propose a remedial measure for Ireland far in advance of Conservative ideas and even in advance of what the bulk of the Liberals a few years ago considered necessary. Lord Hartington believed the time had not yet arrived when it was possible for the Unionists to act as a party or propose a final solution of the difficulty. Before that time arrives the revolutionary party in Ireland, supported by the more revolutionary party in America, must be confronted and overthrown. "That conflict," the speaker said, "was now being renewed and must be decided in one way or the other before the field would be vacant for a final solution either of agrarian questions, which are the real root of the Irish troubles, or for a concession to the Irish people of those extended powers of self-government which we, as well as any other portion of the people of the kingdom, are perfectly willing to grant Ireland, Scotland or England." (Loud cheers.)

Goschen also made an address. He defended the alliance between the Unionists and Conservatives as an alliance of unionists of all shades against separatists of all shades, some of whom were very black indeed. He made an appeal to the press and the country for unstinted support in the fierce struggle now beginning. He saw with sorrow the tendency of the Gladstonians to adopt and support the sinister methods inaugurated by the National League. Boycotting, formerly confined to Ireland, was beginning to be defended by English politicians. (Cries of "Shame.") "Yes, shame, I say," exclaimed Goschen, "on those conniving at this barbarous method of political warfare. There is but small distance between connivance and apology and not so much difference between apology and invitation. The most pathetic point in the present situation is to have been obliged to abandon the leader whom we all admired and venerated, and even denounced not only the policy he pursues, but the methods whereby he pursues it. There is more at stake in the present situation than the simple question of unity and integrity of the Empire. The moralities of politics are at stake. The crisis is a grave one. When the Separatist party is calling to its aid the fierce forces of the revolutionary party it is the bounden duty of the Unionists to call to their aid all those ordinarily holding aloof from politics." Here the speaker caused a burst of laughter by comparing Gladstone to Faust and Labouchere to Mephistopheles. The former had incurred a heavy debt by his present escapades. Proceeding to defend the policy of the Government, Goschen said they had on the stocks a Bill for the reform of local government in England and Scotland which, conceived in no reactionary spirit, was deserving the support of his hearers.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt, addressing a meeting of 4,000 persons at Derby, his constituency, to-day, asserted that the present was the first time an English Government had ever proposed to make a Coercion Bill perpetual. When the Liberal Government proposed a repressive measure, Joseph Chamberlain was most energetic in insisting that the Bill should run for the briefest possible period. The meeting unanimously adopted a resolution protesting against the passage of the Coercion Bill.

Joseph Chamberlain, upon his arrival at Inverness, was greeted with mingled hoots and cheers. Replying to an address, after referring to the daily demoralization of Parliament, he said the accusations made by Major Saunderson against Irish Nationalists were true. It was high time that the opinion of the Kingdom was made known about these scenes. Chamberlain's remarks were generally a repetition of his previous speeches.

Earl Spencer, who was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland under Mr. Gladstone's administration, in an interview to-day with Charles Augustus Conybeare, Radical member of Parliament for Cornwall, said he knew from his experience as Viceroy, and nobody could possibly know better, that it was absolutely untrue that any members of the Irish Parliamentary party were murderers or the associates of murderers, as had been charged by Major Saunderson in the House of Commons.

Herbert Gladstone, Sir Lyon Playfair and Thomas Power O'Connor addressed mass and overflow meetings to protest against the Coercion Bill at Leeds to-day.

SUNDAY REST.

Bill Passed for the Better Observance of the Day in Nova Scotia.

A Halifax despatch says: The House of Assembly sat until midnight Saturday night discussing a Bill for the better observance of Sunday, in which an intense interest had been manifested by the public for some days past. The measure provides generally for the suppression of Sunday excursions and trafficking in goods. The original form in which it was introduced contained a provision prohibiting the operation of street railways on Sunday, which, it was contended, was the real object of the Bill, but which several city clergymen openly disapproved of, among the number being His Grace Archbishop O'Brien. This provision was expunged by the Committee on Law Amendments and a clause inserted especially exempting street railways and ferry steamers from the operations of the Act. When it came before the Committee of the Whole Saturday a strong effort was made to restore the clause providing for the prosecution of street railway companies operating on a Sunday, a course which met with the most vigorous opposition, and the entire afternoon and evening were occupied in discussing the proposed amendment. The galleries and lobby were packed with spectators, and the speeches for and against this amendment were loudly applauded. The Bill, as reported up from the Committee on Law and Amendments, was finally adopted on a vote of 22 to 15, and the street cars thus empowered to run at all times without interference.

Sufferings on the Sea.

A St. John's, Nfld., despatch says: Advices from the west coast give additional details of loss of life and property in the severe gale of Tuesday and Wednesday. Nothing has been seen or heard of the schooners missing from Rose Blanche. It is supposed they were engulfed with all their crews. On Thursday night during the dense fog the schooner Grace Carter, laden with herrings for Boston, ran ashore near Sandy Point, St. George's Bay, and became a total wreck. The crew were saved with difficulty. The sealing schooner Susannah arrived yesterday morning from the ice fields with the wrecked crew of the schooner Bellerophon. The latter vessel sailed from Twillingate on March 23rd and encountered boisterous weather. On the 4th inst. she was crushed by ice during the terrific northeast gale and had to be abandoned. Fortunately the Savannah was near enough to effect a rescue of the crew, who were drifting about on the ice without any shelter.

Lake Ontario Seen Upside Down.

A Palmyra, N. Y., despatch says: While the western sky was still glowing to-night with the rays of the sun that had sunk beneath the horizon, a beautiful mirage became visible to the north of this city. Lake Ontario, which is six miles distant, rose in mid air and floated in a halo of clouds. Boats passing to and fro upon the lake were plainly seen, and a narrow strip New York shore, with a setting of trees and isolated farm-houses upside down, also came into view.

Strauss will have a new comic opera ready for production in May.

A DIVINE MESSAGE.

The Head of the Mormon Saints Proclaims a Revelation from Heaven.

A Cleveland, Ohio, despatch says: At the Kirtland Conference of the Latter Day Saints President Joseph Smith made public a revelation, the first that has been vouchsafed the Church in some years. It is in substance as follows:

To the Elders of the Church:

Thus sayeth the Spirit: It is not yet expedient that the quorum of the twelve shall be filled. Nevertheless, separate my servants, James W. Gillen, Herman C. Smith, Joseph Luff and Gower T. Griffiths, unto the office of apostles, that the quorum may be more perfectly prepared to act before me. I have still other men in my choice who shall be designated in their time if they still continue faithful unto me and in the work whereunto they are now called.

Men of God who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing. Let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.

The elders must cease to be over careful concerning the return of those who were once of the faith, but were overcome in the dark and cloudy day, fearing lest they should bring in hidden heresies. Let him that partaketh (of the Sacrament) and him that refraineth cease to contend with his brother.

Let all strife and contention concerning song service cease.

Until further revelation is received the Saints are to observe the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's Day, as a day of rest and worship.

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may.

Bear the burdens of the body of which the spirit of healing from the Lord in faith or the use of that which wisdom directs does not relieve or remove, and in cheerfulness do whatever may be permitted you to perform, that the blessing of peace may be upon all. Amen.

"BOBBY, THROW UP YOUR HANDS!"

Master Leland Thought He Had a Blank Cartridge, but it Killed Bobby.

A Philadelphia despatch says: Frank Leland, 12 years old, living with his parents at Jenkintown, a suburb, went into the fields on Thursday with Robbie Printer, 8 years old, to practice shooting at a target with a rifle his father had just bought him. The last cartridge only snapped, and when they pulled it out of the gun they found the shell was empty.

"It's a blank," said Master Leland, as he put it back in the barrel. "Bobby, throw up your hands, and when I fire you're a dead man."

Young Leland covered his friend with his rifle and pulled the trigger. There was a report and poor little Printer fell to the ground, exclaiming:

"Frank, I'm shot; it wasn't a blank."

Frank Leland fell over his body and wept, and then ran to a brook near by and getting some water bathed the boy's face, but he had become unconscious. The child was removed to the inn of his uncle, Arthur Johnston, where he died on Friday during an operation by Drs. Hern and Harwitz.

The coroner's jury condemned the practice of allowing children to use firearms and advised prosecution against Leland.

A WESTERN CYCLONE.

Terrible Havoc Wrought in Ohio and West Virginia—Over a Million Dollars' Worth of Property Destroyed.

A Wheeling (W. Va.) despatch last (Friday) night says: The first genuine cyclone ever witnessed in this immediate vicinity was experienced this afternoon, and wrought devastation over a section of country extending from St. Clairsville, Ohio, ten miles west, to a point as far east as this city. Little damage was done here. The storm was first felt at St. Clairsville at 3.15 p.m. It appeared to be travelling from the west in the shape of a funnel-shaped mass of cloud resembling in appearance dense black smoke. The cone was downward, and could be plainly traced over its track by the destruction it left. Houses were demolished, trees snapped off like pipestems, horses and cattle prostrated and carried bodily hundreds of yards by the gale, and the sky was darkened with the clouds of flying debris. The storm and its effects showed all the distinguishing characteristics of the Western cyclone. Two persons are reported fatally injured and four others more or less seriously hurt. The aggregate loss will exceed a million dollars. The loss in St. Clairsville alone will reach $200,000.

Latest from the Northwest.

Mr. Willian Ogilvie, D. L. S., of Ottawa, arrived in Winnipeg on Monday in connection with the Yukon expedition. He will remain in the Yukon country all next winter, but Dr. Dawson will return in the fall.

Mr. Griffith, Col. Gilder's assistant in the proposed North Pole expedition, has arrived overland from Churchill.

George Chamberlain, formerly a resident in Dakota, has been arrested at the instance of his first wife on a charge of bigamy, having since his desertion married a widow at Parkdale, Man.

Three private companies are being incorporated to build a railway to the boundary. One is the Manitoba Central, which also provides for an extension to Portage la Prairie, to connect with the Manitoba and Northwestern. Another is the Winnipeg and Southern, in which Hon. A. Morris and Mr. Manning, of Toronto, are interested, and the third is promoted by the Hudson's Bay Railway. All the companies are under obligation to commence work by July 1st next and have the road in operation by January 1st, 1888.

W. R. Griffith, of New York, who accompanied Col. Gilder on his trip towards the Pole, and was left behind with the outfit at Fort Churchill when Gilder returned, arrived here last night. He walked overland from Fort Churchill to Norway House, a distance of 500 miles. He has had enough of Arctic explorations, and returns to New York in a day or so.

Lady Macdonald will return after the session and superintend the erection of a summer residence at Banff.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Latest Fashion Notes.

Heliotrope gloves and stockings constantly grow in favor.

Myrtle leaves are mixed with orange blossoms in bridal wreaths.

Large chaux of moire ribbon, matching the fabric in color, loop up the voluminous draperies.

Charles X. pink is rapidly becoming with absinthe green, the rival of the universal heliotrope. It is also known as old pink.

The sleeves of all the new French dresses are very full at the armhole and do not fit the arm tightly, except below the elbow. The French milliners call this the "American sleeve."

Combs are worn like large pins—narrow and high. There is sometimes placed at the back of the head, where the twist begins, a long comb with short teeth, to keep the hair in place.

Bridesmaids wear Pompadour toilets of crepe-de-chine draped over striped silk petticoats. There are also dresses of old-fashioned moire antique and Pompadour lace, a silk lace like the blonde lace of long ago.

Maiden-hair ferns of beautifully shaded green tints and green moire sashes of great width are on pretty striped lace dresses, and to complete them are capote bonnets of the lace, with green velvet around the brim and a high cluster of ferns for trimming.

For the new season dresses of silk and cashmere are being revived. They promise to be popular, because they can be worn as house dresses all the year round in this climate. The skirts are of heavy silk, untrimmed, the draping and basque of cashmere, the latter with a silk vest.

Dressmakers are abandoning the balayeuse. They are troublesome from so frequently coming undone, and it was not an unusual thing to trip over a straggling end. In its place two narrow flounces of silk, the same color as the dress, are sometimes used, but more often nothing at all.

Sarah Bernhardt has introduced the fashion of wearing with tea-gowns silver girdles, dropping below the waist and hung with vinaigrettes and tablets. Others are of leather, are undressed and colored either heliotrope or poppy-red. Plain silver belts are shown to wear with belted dresses.

For wear in the rain come silk waterproofs of dark red with close hair-lines of black, or of dark or old blue with garnet stripes. They are made to fit tightly in the back, have large, loose dolman sleeves, permitting free use of the arms, and very full skirts, to allow for the growing voluminousness in draperies.

The waistcoat cut in a U in front, which was fashionable for men last spring, is shown in the new tailor costumes for women this season. The waistcoats are frequently of a lighter shade than the waist proper and are sliced out at the throat in this U shape, showing either a chemisette and white tie or filled in with white China crape or surah.

Few underskirts are trimmed. The voluminous and fancifully draped overdresses are edged with narrow bands of fur in those of the spring costumes in which fur is still used. On the summer costumes these upper draperies will frequently be edged with narrow full ruches, either pinked if of silk, or with rolled edges if of other materials. This heavy edging to the swinging draperies adds much to the grace of the wearer when walking. Some of these draperies in India silk are edged with fluffy silk balls to match the colors of the flowers in the stuff.

A charming spring costume has a skirt of cream-white cashmere braided with brown braid. The full draperies are of Havana brown cashmere and very long, showing but little of the braided lower skirt. The short pointed basque of the brown has a white braided vest and plain sleeves made somewhat loose above the elbow and gathered into the arm-hole. The wrist is finished by a narrow cream moire ribbon tied in a smart bow on the outer side of the sleeve, the same in the neck with the bow tied on the left side.

Sateens will be more than ever popular this season. They are shown in all the new shades of heliotrope, gray, old-blue, Charles X. pink and the many shades of green. These are made with velvet collars, cuffs and revers, very frequently with vests of soft folds of lace, or silk muslin in a lighter tint. There are many also in the new Pompadour patterns, with creamy or white grounds strewn with gay flowers. These are made up with the plain sateens of the shade of the ground and are trimmed profusely with lace.

Hints to Housekeepers.

Essence of quassia will drive away flies, and cucumber peel is detested by cockroaches.

A small bag of sulphur kept in a drawer or closet that is infested with red ants will quickly disperse them.

A brilliant black varnish for iron stoves and fireplaces is made by stirring ivory-black into ordinary shellac varnish.

Windows should never be washed while the sun shines on them, as it is impossible to polish them without leaving blue streaks.

Remove the cover from the pot after pouring off the water from boiled potatoes and leave them on the back part of the stove, thus allowing the steam to escape. This will leave them mealy.

The best way of checking the bleeding from the nose is to apply cold water to the neck and face. Hold a sponge saturated with cold water to the nostrils, or if this should not succeed, dissolve a little alum in a basin of water, and inject or sniff this up the nostrils. Hold the head back and do not attempt to blow the nose.

To save stair carpets nail several thicknesses of old carpet or canvas over the edge of each stair. It is a good plan to buy more carpeting than is needed to cover the stairs, and move it each season, so that the whole will wear evenly. If stair carpets cannot be changed in this way they will not wear nearly so long.

To prevent polished steel from rusting after cleaning and when not in use take a cloth, with a very little sweet oil on it, and wipe the articles over so as to slightly but evenly oil the surface. Steel knives which are not in general use may be kept from rusting if they be dipped in a strong solution of soda, one part water to four of soda; then wipe dry, roll in flannel and keep in a dry place.

Useful Recipes.

How to Steam Fish.—Tie the fish up in a cloth and put in a steam and cook until done. The time depends upon the size of the fish.

Banana Charlotte.—The sides of a quart mould are to be lined with sponge cake and the bottom of the mould with thin slices of bananas. Fill the mould with stiff whipped cream. Set it aside in an ice-box till wanted. Remove carefully from the mould and serve.

Quick Cake.—Four eggs, two cups of sugar, one cup of milk, three cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar and one teaspoonful of soda; flavor with lemon. Put all together in a dish before beating, and let it stand in the tin after baking until ready for use. Bake in a quick oven.

Rye Drop Cakes.—Two cups sour milk, one egg well beaten, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in boiling water, enough rye meal for a batter that will spread easily on the griddle. Mix together the milk, meal and egg, add the soda and beat thoroughly. Bake immediately on a hot griddle, or in gem pans well oiled; if in gem pans the oven must be hot, and the cakes should bake half an hour.

ANIMALS THAT PRACTICE MEDICINE.

Where They Find Food to Alleviate Their Suffering.

Animals get rid of their parasites by using dirt, mud, clay, etc. Those suffering from fever restrain their diet, keep quiet, seek dark, airy places, drink water and sometimes plunge into it. When a dog has lost its appetite it eats that species of grass known as dog's grass, which acts as an emetic and purgative. Cats also eat grass. Sheep and cows, when ill, seek out certain herbs. An animal suffering from chronic rheumatism always keeps as much as possible in the sun.

The warrior ants seem to have regularly organized ambulances. Latraille cut the antennæ of an ant, and the other ants came and covered the wounded part with a transparent fluid secreted in their mouths. If a chimpanzee is wounded it stops the bleeding by placing its hand on the wound or dressing it with leaves and grass.

When an animal has a wounded leg or arm hanging on, it completes the amputation by means of its teeth. A dog, on being bitten in the muzzle by a viper, was observed to plunge its head repeatedly for several days into running water. The animal eventually recovered.

A sporting dog was run over by a carriage. During three weeks in winter it remained lying in a brook, where its food was taken to it. The animal recovered. A terrier hurt its right eye. It remained under a counter, avoiding light and heat, although it habitually kept close to the fire. It adopted, by way of general treatment, rest and abstinence from food. The local treatment consists in licking the upper surface of the paw, which it applied to the wounded eye, again licking the paw when it became dry.

Animals suffering from rheumatic fever treat themselves by the continued application of cold water, which M. Delaunay considers to be more certain than any other method. In view of these interesting facts, we are, he thinks, forced to admit that hygiene and therapeutics as practiced by animals may, in the interest of physiology, be studied with advantage. Many physicians have been keen observers of animals, their diseases, and the methods adopted by them in their instinct to cure themselves, and have availed themselves in their practice of the knowledge so brought under their observation.

The Weight of Women's Clothes.

The modern woman is well ballasted. If she had the wings that go with the celestial qualities the romancers ascribe to her, they had need be of good size and stoutly feathered to lift her and her paraphernalia above the ground.

The writer tried the scales upon her hat and wrap last week. The little jet and lace affair that fits so jauntily over her shoulders and looks as airy and light as the spring morning itself is no such gossamer. It need weigh next to nothing, but it can and does run as high as thirty pounds. Ten pounds is good average weight for glitter and tinkle enough to make a panoply of sparkling sun points of their owner as she walks the streets looking like a dewdrop and feeling like a lump of lead.

The long and dignified raglan that covers the figure from top to toe has possibilities in the way of beads that are not granted it for nothing, and it improves them to the full. Forty pounds it is said to weigh; there are fairy tales of fifty, but the writer speaks only whereof she knows. The bonnet hardly knows the meaning of avoirdupois till it makes the acquaintance of that black king jet, but then it weighs down the scales in right lordly fashion. Four pounds is little enough for a glittering beaded crown, and there are heads that submit to eight and nine without a murmur for the sake of such a regal diadem. Forty-five pounds has a jetted crown been known to weigh; plus thirty for the wrap and five for the bonnet the sum is a nice little total of eighty pounds for the proverbially delicate American woman to carry about with her on her promenades.—New York Mail and Express.

She Sobered Him.

Man (time 2 a. m.)—M'dear, open door (hic), shus from bus-business, m'dear (hic), ope door.

Wife (at up-stairs window)—Who are you? Go away or I'll call the police.

"M'dear, I'm your husband, m'dear, ope' door——"

"My husband, indeed! My husband came in four hours ago and is fast asleep. You are an impostor.'

"Eh! Wha—m'dear?"

"My husband is here asleep."

"Wha——"

"Here asleep. Go away."

"What?"

"You are an impostor."

"What! My gracious! Oh! This is terrible."

"Well, now that you are somewhat sober I'll let you in."

—"How did that man lose his hair, papa?" "Eating pie, my dear. He's pie bald."

A MORMON GIRL'S FATE.

She Shot Herself to Avoid Marrying an Elder Who Already Had Four Wives.

Sixteen years ago, writes a Jericho Valley, Utah, correspondent of the New York Sun, Samuel Bates, a Mormon, then the possessor of two wives, Ann and Jane, the latter being childless, took Mary Lee, an orphan, to bring up according to the rites of the Church of the Latter Day Saints. As Ann had many children to comfort her, the babe was placed in the charge of Jane, a devout Mormon, herself born in the faith. Mary Lee's parents were from England. Her mother was a delicate little woman, well remembered by many here as a tearful and unhappy person. Times were hard for them when they first appeared here, and they grew harder for some reason. Just as her husband was about to take a second wife, evidently against the wishes of the companion of his youth, he was killed in a snow-slide, and three months after that his widow died, some said of a broken heart, leaving little Mary alone in the world. Samuel Bates was something of a man among the Mormons. He was called Brother Bates. His first wife was a hard, coarse woman, but Jane, to whom the little orphan went, was tender, rather good-looking, and filled with a stern and unbending faith in the divinity of her religion and a determination to "live" it to the end. The child which thus fell to her partook of her dead mother's disposition. As she grew to womanhood she became fair to a degree not often seen in these parts, but in spirit she was gloomy, sad, and reticent. Surrounded by Mormons and taught by the pious Jane, she became almost a fanatic on the subject of religion herself, and readily accepted all that was instilled into her mind as the inspiration of the Lord.

A year or two ago Mary Lee became acquainted with a young man living in a mining camp not far from here, a Gentile, of course, as no Mormon delves for gold and silver. The youth, Seth Bentley by name, rarely lost an opportunity to pay the girl little attentions, and at length it became the rumor that he was her accepted lover. She would stroll away to the foot hills to meet him, of evenings they would be seen by the mountain brook which winds through the town, and on Sunday afternoons, particularly when Brother Bates was away from home, they would be riding or walking together. Jane made no opposition to the intimacy, but when Brother Bates' attention was called to the matter he felt that it was his duty to interfere. Little by little Jane's mind was won over to his way of thinking, though at first she had been unsuspecting. Bentley was forbidden the house, and the girl was told that she must never meet him again. But they met after this, not as a result of Mary's disobedience, but by reason of Bentley's persistance. He found her one day last summer down by the brook, and when she would have run from him he caught her, and, holding her closely, he told her of his affection for her, and entreated her to become his wife, and in return received some encouragement. From that time on they met occasionally, unknown to Brother Bates or to Jane.

In September Brother Bates went to New Mexico on an exhortation tour, and when he returned in October he brought back with him a Mormon elder named Cratty, who, seeing Mary Lee, bethought him that he would like to take another wife, his fifth, and he accordingly broached the subject to her on the second day after his arrival. The girl repelled him with horror, but he pressed the suit, and at length brought Brother Bates to his assistance. At first Jane opposed the proposition. She was a sincere Mormon, but her affection for her foster child got the better of her faith for a time, and until she could be placated Elder Cratty had to hang his harp on the willow. The means resorted to to bring Jane to see the error of her ways are familiar to all who have had intercourse with the strange people who inhabit these valleys. Brother Bates had a vision. Then Elder Cratty had a vision. Then a bishop who was passing through Jericho Valley had a vision. Then the Sunday school superintendent, the Sunday school teachers and the local elders and missionaries had visions. By a singular concensus of opinion all had seen the same thing. Mary Lee was God's choice for Elder Cratty's wife. Still the girl, now most of the time in tears, like her unhappy mother, dead sixteen years, shrank from the proffer of the visitor, and her foster mother, the kindly but superstitious Jane, still demurred, though growing weaker in her opposition.

The visions failing of the desired effect, Elder Cratty and Brother Bates went up into the mountains some time last month, and, fasting for fourteen days and nights, they wrestled with the Lord, and at the end of their vigil they were rewarded by seeing a great light and hearing a voice from heaven saying that Elder Cratty should take Mary Lee to wife, and that further delay would be both unseemly and displeasing to the Lord. With this revelation and the further assurance that a spirit had appeared unto Cratty in a vision saying that if Mary Lee would marry him she would receive the requisite affection for her husband by praying for it in the temple, the two wended their way homeward and communicated to Jane the result of their prayers and fastings. In the face of such undoubted evidence of the Lord's approval that good woman could say no more, and, taking the girl to one side, she advised her to give up her Gentile lover and cling to the husband selected for her by God, who had promised His servants that if she did not love him now the spirit would confer great and surpassing affection upon her at her nuptials.

Mary Lee's own faith was strong, and her inclination to follow the teaching of her religion was great; but it took many more interviews to bring her to admit that she had decided to obey the command. When she at last gave her consent there was much joy in Jericho valley, and a great company was made up to go along with the wedding party to the temple. They were to start by waggons on a Monday morning.

When the sun came up over the mountain range that morning it saw Mary Lee down by the brook, revolver in hand, stone dead. She had risen during the night, and having sought a secluded spot where she and Bentley often met, she had taken her appeal at once to the Judge of all the earth. Her religion would not permit her to marry the man of her choice, and her womanhood revolted against the alliance which, according to earthly interpretation, the unseen powers had arranged for her.

A Wee Mite's Faith in the Blue Coats.

Yesterday a gentleman who was walking on the street with a little girl (a wee, dainty mite) left her alone on Woodward avenue, and, turning the corner, said to an acquaintance whom he met: "I saw you coming and ran away from my little girl, who was looking at the things in a store window; go and see if she will come with you." The friend did as requested, but when he asked the little one to come with him she said: "No, papa's lost; I wants p'licemans." "Why do you want a policeman? I'll take care of you." "No, I tant do wiz 'ou. P'liceman s dood man an likes little dirls. He takes 'em to deir mammas." By this time the father had come back, and he said, as he took the little one by the hand: "I think you will agree with me that I am right. I have taught 'baby' to trust the police. If she should be lost she will gladly go with them but will distrust every one else."—Detroit Free Press.

Under a Mother Hubbard.

Last night a novel game was played on Conductor Harris, of the down fast Georgia railroad train, says the Augusta, Ga., News. When the train stopped at Union Point Captain Harris noticed two negro women get aboard, and one of them was dressed in a loose Mother Hubbard. When he went through the car he failed to find but one of the women, and upon questioning the negro she said that somebody had snatched the other girl's ticket away and she had to get off. The captain did not suspect anything wrong, but when the train reached Barnett the missing woman came from under the Mother Hubbard of her companion and got off unnoticed by the conductor, but to the amusement of the other passengers, who saw her when she made good her exit from under the expressly loose made dress. This is a capital and working scheme of the railroad beats, and is said to be practiced often. Conductors will now keep an eye on the "Mother Hubbard."

Expect a Rush.

First Tramp—"I see that the Inter-State Bill is kicking up a great bobbery among the big-bugs."

Second Tramp—"An awful bobbery, Jimmie. They are going to take the passes away from members of Congress and the Legislatures."

"And they'll have to ride on the bumpers of freight trains?"

"They will."

"Then, what in Heaven's name will become of us! We'll have to walk, for sure."—Wall Street News.

Knows How it is Himself.

Adelina Patti is in her 47th year—Exchange. She is, is she? Well, just say so in your paper some day when she's in your town, and then send your card up as the editor of the journal in which the observation occurs. You'll get an interview which you'll be likely to remember for many years. Our musical critic knows how it is himself. The diva pats her hand on the Bible and says she is 43.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Trifle Unreasonable.

Patient (to young doctor)—Why do you charge me so much, doctor? I had a similar trouble last year, and Dr. Pellet cured me for half this amount.

Young Doctor—How long did it take him to cure you?

Patient—Three days.

Young Doctor—Well, I've been working on your case for nearly two weeks. You can't expect to get two weeks' work for a three-day price.

Her Two Pets.

A reward offered—City editor (to woman in tears)—You say you haven't seen your husband for three days? Woman—Yes, sir. City editor—And that a valuable little dog belonging to you disappeared this morning? Woman—Yes, sir: and I want to advertise for 'em. City editor—Any reward offered? Woman—Yes, sir: $10 for the dog and $5 for the husband.—Puck.

Great Deceivers.

"Women are greatsh—hic—deceivers," said Jones, leaning up against the bar. "Thersh—hic—no trusting 'em. Theresh my wife. She said—hic—the other day the nextsh time—hic—I got drunk she'd go home to ma. Ish been drunk ever since, and she—hic—hasn't gone yet."

No Sale Effected.

Agent (to woman at the door)—Have you one of our patent double-back-action catch-'em-quick burglar alarms in your house, madam?

Woman—No, sir. We had one awhile ago, but a burglar broke in one night an' stole it.

Chinese an Easy Language.

There is no great force of intellect required in learning Chinese. For example, take Japanese. It is easy to learn, certainly, but has it the very flavor of the Chinese? "Watakushi" is to our taste too long a word for I, and the Chinese "wo" is better because shorter.—Pekin Gazette.

Advice to the Fire-Beset.

In a hotel fire, run; in a theatre fire, stand still; in a railroad train fire, say your prayers.—Omaha World.

A lady told this story the other day in Sorosis, the incident having occurred in her own family: A small boy was requested to look up the word anonymous and use it in a sentence. He found the meaning to be "without a name," and thereupon handed the following to his happy parent: "Mama has given us a new baby; it is anonymous."

The use of electric lights in theatres has driven paper snow largely off the stage. Various substitutes have been tried in Paris, and the very best imitation of snow has been found to be the scraps and clippings of kid left over from cutting out gloves. They float in the air, descending with very realistic slowness, and they cling visibly to the garments of the actors. These clippings are furnished by several of the leading glove houses of Paris, and cost $2 a sack.

English Names in England.

Abergavenny is pronounced Abergenny.
Beauchamp is pronounced Beecham.
Bolingbroke is pronounced Bullingbrook.
Brougham is pronounced Broom.
Bulwer is pronounced Buller.
Cholmondeley is pronounced Chumley.
Cirencester is pronounced Sissister.
Cockburn is pronounced Cobun.
Colquhoun is pronounced Cohoon.
Cowper is pronounced Cooper.
Grosvenor is pronounced Grovener.
Hawarden, Gladstone's residence, is pronounced Harden.
Holborn is pronounced Hobun; Cockney, 'Obun.
Knollys is pronounced Knowles.
Majoribanks is pronounced Marchbanks.
Marylebone is pronounced Marrabun.
Norwich is pronounced Norridge.
Salisbury is pronounced Sawlsbry.
St. Leger is pronounced Sillinger.
Talbot is pronounced Torbut.
Taliaferro is pronounced Tolliver.
Thames is pronounced Tems.
Wemyss is pronounced Weems.

Are You Making Money?

There is no reason why you should not make large sums of money if you are able to work. All you need is the right kind of employment or business. Write to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and they will send you, free, full information about work that you can do and live at home, wherever you are located, earning thereby from $5 to $25 per day, and upwards. Capital not required; you are started free. Either sex; all ages. Better not delay.

Dogs and Cats as Food.

Not a great while ago a west side family were discovered in a destitute condition whose chief sustenance had been the cats and dogs the man of the house could succeed in capturing for slaughter. The family finally went to the almshouse. Probably cats and dogs are oftener eaten by the poor in this country than the public are aware of.—Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin.

Tender Corns.

Soft corns, corns of all kinds removed, without pain or sore spots, by Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Thousands testify that it is certain, painless and prompt. Do not be imposed upon by substitutes offered for the genuine "Putnam's" Extractor. Sure, safe, harmless.

Neil Cummings, one of the pages in the Ontario Legislative Assembly, died on Tuesday night at his mother's residence, Toronto. His death occurred after a brief illness, and is believed to have been the result of injuries sustained while playfully wrestling with another boy a few days ago.

I had a very severe attack of sciatic rheumatism and was entirely cured by taking nearly a dollar's worth of McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant. I can confidently recommend it to all like sufferers. Ephraim Monk, Springford, Ont.

Rev. E. P. Roe, the novelist, has already received $7,000 in royalties on his latest book, "He Fell in Love with His Wife."

The largest table ever made from a single plank belongs to the Illinois Club of Chicago. The plank is 15 feet long and 6 wide, and was cut from a California redwood tree.

Squire Whitaker, of Waverly, N. Y., who is 83 years old, and who for several years was blind, has recently had his sight restored by a severe illness.

President Diaz, in his Message to Congress, says that the relations of Mexico with foreign powers are of the most friendly character. Allusion is made to the co-operation of Mexican and American troops in the war against the Apaches as an occasion for increasing the harmony and cordiality which should prevail without interruption between the two republics.

The Blueberry is a valuable fruit, and is a reliable fruit to grow in the Northern States, where the more tender varieties winter kill. It is perfectly hardy, will stand 40 degrees below zero without showing any injury to the most tender buds. Fruit ripens in this latitude about the first of July. Color, a bluish black, when fully ripened. The flavor is equal to the raspberry, a very mild, rich sub-acid, pronounced by most people delicious. The fruit is excellent for pies, or canned for winter use. It grows very stocky, the shining dark-green leaves and the blue fruit make a pleasing contrast. It seems to flourish in all soils and is a prolific bearer. One dozen plants by mail, carefully packed in oil paper, 60 cts.; two dozen by mail, $1.00; 100 by express, $2.50; 1,000, $15.00.

Address L. D. STAPLES, Portland, Mich.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

D C N L. 17. 87.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

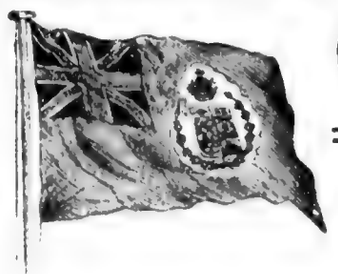
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto



GREATEST BARGAINS

YOU EVER HEARD OF!

—Will be Offered by—

J. G. ANDERSON

FOR THE NEXT 30 DAYS!

The Goods must be all Sold by the 15th of May, and in order to do this the prices will be Cut Still Lower than Before! No use quoting prices, come in and we will astonish you. No trouble to show goods.

J. G. ANDERSON. — — — Wright's Old Stand.

East Grey Spring Show.

The East Grey Agricultural Society's Spring Show, held on Friday last was a grand success. The former spring shows of the society were not a success, and the Directors this season, had some misgivings as to the propriety of holding a spring show, but it would have been a great mistake had this idea prevailed, as the show was an honor to the society, and must prove of inestimable benefit to stock breeders. We venture to say a better exhibition of sire stock could not be made in the Province of Ontario.

Lord Derby, owned by T. Wright, headed the list of imported Draught. And well he may, for he is one of the finest horses in his class in the province. Stock raisers are indebted to Trimble & Pickell for bringing this fine Clydesdale into the county.

In Canadian Draught R. T. McGirr carried off the red bun, and felt very proud. This was a close contest the entries were numerous and horses all first-class. It required expert judging to decide the several points of merit. Of course all were not pleased as that is impossible but the judges were men who knew the points of excellency and we have no doubt but their decisions were correct. But some of the proprietors thought otherwise. This is quite natural, as we all can see faults in others and look at what we own as perfection.

In the general purpose class the entries were also numerous, and some very fine active Horses. This class we do not consider so important, as the county will be well enough supplied in this class even if they breed from thorough bred stock. We could not say a word to favor this class.

Carriage and Roadster were not what we could have wished to see in their class. Those exhibited were not in our opinion, properly classified. Two exhibited by J. Henry, Markdale, were nice little horses, but too small for either Roadster or Carriage, and another partook more of Clydesdale than Roadster or Carriage. In this class there is a good opportunity for some energetic breeder to bring in a horse and make money. By breeding in this class we have horses for the English market. A large number will be required for Cavalry purposes and the buyers are now in our market ready to purchase that class of horses.

In the blood class there were no entries the words on the posters "Registered pedigrees must be produced" seemed to be the great barrier and consequently crowded some into a class not at all suitable. But taking the exhibition on the whole, it is now evident to all that the directors are bound to make all their future exhibitions grand successes. They are already preparing for the fall exhibition, which, they are bound to make exceed all former exhibitions. All good farmers should become members and make it boom, this is all that is wanting. The Directors have now the energy, and we bespeak a prosperous future for the Society.

PRIZE LIST.

Imported Draught, T. Wright; Canadian Draught, R. T. McGirr, M. Ryan; Gen. Purpose, A. King, J. McGee; Carriage or Roadster, S. Stokes, J. Henry.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices. R. TRIMBLE. (tf.)

An Example For Volunteers.

James McAllister was convicted in Toronto on Monday for neglecting to return his rifle into store when called upon by his commanding officer in the Royal Grenadiers. He was fined $20 and costs or 10 days. The officers of both city regiments complain of men getting rifles and uniforms and failing to turn out to drill. Even when called upon they neglect to return their arms. It is hoped that this case will prove a warning. Members of No. 2 Co., who may have rifles or uniforms in their possession which should have been returned will note what befel Jas' McAllister in Toronto—[Meaford Mirror.

Newspapers In 1887.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, will issue on Monday, May 2nd, the Nineteenth Annual edition of their standard publication, the "American Newspaper Directory."

The new volumn contains an exhaustive list of all Class Publications so admirably arranged that any one of the three thousand papers represented there can be readily referred to and all important facts concerning it together with its circulation rating, easily obtained

The Newspaper Directory will be used principally by Publishers, Advertisers and Advertising Agents, but the vast fund of information it contains makes it valuable to persons of almost every trade and profession. As a Gazetteer alone it is well worth the price charged, $5.00, for it fully describes every town in which a newspaper is issued, and few people care to know about any place where one is not.

The number of papers published in the United States, Territories (including Alaska) and Canada is put at 15,420: an increase of 581 in one year

The growth of newspapers in some of the Western States would be a matter of wonder, if it were not that this year is no exception to the rule. In Kansas the increase is 89 and in Nebraska 64; while the Keystone State shows a smaller advance of 35 and the Buckeye State of 30. Pennsylvania exhibits the largest increase in dailies, 17; Kansas in weeklies, 81, and New York in monthlies, 42. Seven States show a decrease; the most prominent instances being New Hamshire and Virginia, six each. The whole volume shows that great care has been taken to sustain its reputation as the most comprehensive work of the kind yet published, and to insure accuracy in every detail. Anything less than a complete compendium of American newspapers and periodicals would surprise those who are familiar with the former efforts of this firm, who are so well known as the oldest, largest and best known of all the American Advertising Agencies.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf)

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

Sons of Temperance.

OPEN DIVISION.

The regular Open Division of the Flesherton Division, Sons of Temperance will be held in their hall on Wednesday evening next, May 4th. Following is the program:—

Opening Ode.
Chairman's speech.
Instrumental, Miss Christoe.
Reading, Miss Fawcett.
Song, Mr. R. Smith.
Dialogue, G. W. LeGard and others.
Instrumental.
Tableau.
Speech, Mr. Wm. Irwin.
Charade.
Duett, Misses M. & F. Beecroft.
Speech, Rev. W. Ayers.
Reading, Mr. A. R. Fawcett.
Closing Ode.

Chair to be taken at 8 o'clock by J. W. Armstrong, Esq., D.G.W.P. A cordial invitation extended to all kindred institutions and to the public generally.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

A Shrewd Judge.

The following is told of a New York judge before whom a man was being tried for stealing the gold watch of a woman as she was taking a street-car. The neatness of the examination will remind the reader of Oriental stories:

The man declared that the watch was his, and the woman was mistaken in identifying it as hers. Suddenly the judge asked, "where's the key?"

The prisoner fumbled in his pockets, and said he must have left it at home.

The judge asked him if he had wound the watch frequently with the key, and he said "Yes."

Then a key was procured, watch and key were handed the prisoner, and he was told to wind the watch. He opened the case, but could not find any place to use the key, because the watch was a stem-winder.

The sentence was five years and a half.

BEGIN YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH Interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. — THORNBURY

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR SALE!

YOUNG MARE, 4 years old, sound, good worker either double or single. Will be sold cheap for cash or on time. Apply to

R. COOK, Flesherton Station.

TENDERS WANTED.

SEALED TENDERS for Repairs of the Township Hall will be received at the Clerk's Office until May 1st next. Specifications to be seen at the Clerk's Office, Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,
Flesherton, April 12th, 1887. Twp Clerk.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
304-320. Flesherton.

PUBLIC NOTICE!!

To all whom it may Concern.

Know ye all men that I, W. S. CHRISTOE, the Druggist of Flesherton, have the agency for JOHNSON'S celebrated TONIC BITTERS and NERVINE, JOHNSON'S little Pink Tonic Liver Pills and the ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

—THE—

TONIC BITTERS

are confidently recommended as the VERY BEST in the market for Nervousness, Hysteria, General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Complaints common to the female sex. PALENESS of complexion and for diseases caused by poverty of blood. In conjunction with the Tonic JOHNSON'S Little Liver Pills are the very best for liver complaint and general derarrangements of the stomach. The All Healing White Ointment is the very best for skin diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Chilblains, &c., &c.

You have only to try those great remedies to be satisfied. Sold by

W. S. CHRISTOE,
The Druggist, Flesherton.

FARM for SALE

OR

TO RENT.

BEING Lot 170, Con. 1 West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Well watered. Orchard. About 2½ miles from Flesherton. For full particulars apply to the undersigned.

JOHN O'MELIA,
Flesherton.

FARM FOR SALE.

BEING Lot 158, 1st E. T. & S. R., Artemesia, one mile from Flesherton, containing 50 acres, all cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Never-failing stream of water runs across farm, also a never-failing spring of water. New bank barn 36x56, with stone stabling full size of barn, underneath. Log House. Good soil and free from frost. Part payment down, time on balance. For full particulars, apply to

D. L. WHITE, Esq.,
Flesherton.

Mortgage Sale!

OF

VALUABLE VILLAGE PROPERTY.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by D. McCORMICK, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction, at ATKINSON'S HOTEL, in the Village of PRICEVILLE, on

Thursday, May 5th, 1887,

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following Lands and Premises in the Village of Priceville in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot No 4 on the North side of Kincardine Street in the said Village of Priceville more particularly described as follows commencing at a point 54 feet West of the South East Corner of said Lot number 4, thence Westerly 46 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 82 feet from the South West corner of said Lot number 4, thence Northerly 183 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 12 feet from rear of said Lot, thence Westerly 32 feet to Princess Street, thence Northerly 12 feet to rear of said Lot, thence Easterly 78 feet, be the same more or less, to a point 54 feet from the Eastern boundary of said Lot, thence Southerly 195 feet, be the same more or less, to the place of commencing. Containing by admeasurement 886 square yards, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a good 2 story frame building, size 30 feet x 40 feet, with cellar underneath used as a store and dwelling, occupying one of the best business stands in the Village, also a frame stable and a good well.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in one month thereafter without interest

For further particulars apply to D. McCORMICK, Esq., Auctioneer, FRANCIS WAITE Priceville, or to the undersigned.

J. W. FROST,
Vendor's Solicitor

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887.

Mortgage Sale!

OF

Valuable Village Property.

In pursuance of power of sale contained in a certain Mortgage to the Vendor, which Mortgage will be produced at the time of sale, there will be sold by A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, by Public Auction at MUNSHAW'S HOTEL in the Village of FLESHERTON, on Thursday, May 5th, 1887.

At the hour of 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the following lands and premises in the Village of FLESHERTON in the County of Grey, being composed of part of Lot number 151 in the 1st Range North East of the Toronto and Sydenham Road in the Township of Artemesia and may be more particulary known as Village Lots numbers 3 and 4 on the South-East side of Collingwood Street, in the Village of Flesherton, as laid out in a survey or sub-division of said Lot number 151 made by Wm. Spry, Esq., P.L.S. and re-surveyed and a map or plan thereof made by Thomas B. Gilliland, Esq., P.L.S. which map or plan is registered in the Registry Office of the South Riding of said County of Grey, and dated the 8th day of August, 1870, and containing by admeasurement about ¼ an acre, be the same more or less. There are on the premises a blacksmith shop, size 18x36 feet, a frame building used as a sash and door factory, 30x30 feet, and a frame dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE:

This property will be sold subject to a reserved bid. 20 per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale to the Vendor's Solicitor and the balance in 1 month thereafter without interest.

For further particulars apply to A. S. VANDUSEN, Esq., Auctioneer, Flesherton; or to the undersigned,

J. W. FROST,
Vendor's Solicitor.

Flesherton, April 1st, 1887.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm Wright's

Dentistry.

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S
DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.

OFFICES:—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St., Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE.
Flesherton

ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

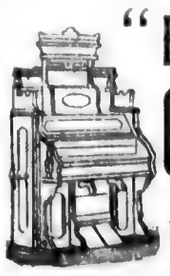
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 307. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO. MAY 5, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

THIS ❋ SPACE ❋ BELONGS

—TO—

W. A. BROWN.

LOOK FOR PRICES NEXT WEEK.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Go to Grier's for Paints, Oils, and Hardware.

Notice the "Mail Contract" advt. elsewhere in these columns.

Every lady should see the immense stock of Hats at E. J. Griers.

The Mortgage sales take place to-day in Flesherton and Priceville.

Another consignment of Prints of the newest patterns arrived at E. J. Griers.

A young man from Durham is in the employ of S. Spirit, butcher, of this town.

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's Block. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

Cash Buyers will consult their interest by pricing goods at E. G. Grier's before purchasing elsewhere.

A young man left this village about a year ago owing one of our citizens $108 for board.

The only place to get your watch repaired properly is at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. 2t.

Remember that E. J. Grier has about 500 patterns of wall paper and borderings at Rock Bottom Prices.

The junior lacrosse club, under the lead of their new captain, Mr. W. M. Sproule, intend putting in some splendid work this season.

There is a great rush to E. J. Grier's store for Window Blinds and curtains.

No use talking, those Plough Boots for $1 at J. G. Anderson's are great value.

The only place to get your watch repaired properly, is at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. 2t.

CATTLE FOR SALE.—Two steers two years old, two heifers two years old one cow in calf cheap for cash. R. TRIMBLE.

Do not miss getting 5 lbs of that famous uncolored Japan Tea at E. J. Griers. Big Dan. says that it is the Best Value in town.

Quite a number of houses are being built on the lots near the Methodist church. This is fine building ground and builders are taking advantage of the same.

Monday next is cattle fair day in Flesherton. Smith the Markdale barber, will be here as usual. He will be found at Johnson's Livery Office during his stay.

If people look to their own interests they always take their Watch, Clock, and Jewelry repairs to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. A perfect job every time. 2t.

The Royal Templars, of Flesherton, initiated their 105th member at their regular meeting last week. A healthy showing. Fountain Council is certainly an energetic youngster.

E. J. Grier's Boots and Shoes cannot be surpassed for style and cheapness.

THIRTY DAYS!

POSITIVELY

FOR

30 Days Only

—THAT THE—

Great Slaughter!

Of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex, etc., at RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, Flesherton, will continue.

Russell has just returned from the city, where he has secured some bargains never before known in this section of country—in fact it is impossible to compete with Russell.—All his goods are marked in PLAIN FIGURES, at very low prices and, for the next thirty days only, he is actually going to give 25 per cent. off on all cash sales over $1. Just imagine the finest grade of American Nickel Alarm Clocks at only $2, sold everywhere at $2.50 and $2.75. The finest grade of Plated Chains, beautiful patterns, for $1.60, sold everywhere at 2.25 and 2.50; the finest make of Clocks, beautiful Walnut Cases, from $2 75 up to $8.50, sold everywhere from 3.50 to 10.00. We are not making enough on these goods to pay your mileage or meals, neither will we give you a meal TO CATCH YOUR CUSTOM, but offer you finer goods at a little over half what you can get them for elsewhere! The finest make of Solid Silver Swiss Watches from $6.90 up; and the genuine American Watches from $9.50 up, bearing Warrants from 2½ to 5 years. ☞We keep only the genuine goods, which bear long warrants. THIS IS THE CHANCE OF YOUR LIFE!—FOR THIRTY DAYS ONLY!—As we must clear them out before the arrival of our Summer stock at that date.

In REPAIRING, everyone knows that Russell's work always gives satisfaction and his work has already given him the name of the boss watchmaker and jeweller in this section. DON'T FAIL TO CALL within the next 30 days and secure some of the GREAT BARGAINS NOW OFFERING.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,

FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

The | Last | Chance!

TIME NEARLY UP!

DON'T FAIL to call at once and secure some of the Terrible Bargains in Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Spex &c. 25 per cent. off on all sales of $1 00. Come at once. Do not leave it another day or you will be the loser, as we cannot afford to continue this Great Slaughter at

RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE.

FLESHERTON.

J. G. Anderson has the best value in Tea ever offered. Don't fail to get 10 or 20 lbs.

We are pleased to learn that our young friend, Mr. J. R. Keefer, has been promoted to a responsible position at Pearl River, in connection with the C. P. R. Success, friend Jim!

An immense stock of Rubber Coats at E. J. Grier's which cannot be undersold.

Building operations are commencing to boom in Flesherton. The growth of the place has been remarkably rapid and substantial during the past few years.

E. J. Grier is selling Gents Suits all wool for $5.

Mr. Egleston, general agent for the Massey manufacturing Co., is in town visiting Mr. VanDusen, the agent for the Co. They report business good and Binders selling fast.

I have now in stock a fine lot of Biscuits of all kinds. Also all kinds of Meals, such as Rolled Meal, Steel cut Meals, Cracked Wheat, &c. Satisfaction guaranteed. G. KEEFER.

E. J. Grier is selling Tweeds all wool for 35c. per yd. See them and you will be astonished at the low price.

Mr. J. E. Moore will soon have another meat store ready for occupation in his large block on Durham street. He has made many desirable alterations since purchasing this well located property.

The "Brewster's Lake Fishing Club" were driven out to their fishing grounds on Monday last by Liveryman Johnson. They arrived by the noon train from Toronto.

White and Regatta Shirts all sizes at J. G. Anderson's. Away down below wholesale prices. $1.25 Shirts for 75c.

Three contractors tendered for the proposed Township Hall repair. The contract was awarded to Mr. J. E. Moore, who agrees to perform the work called for by the specifications for the sum of $125, which is, we should judge, a "bottom price."

You can always rely on straightforward dealing at E. J. Grier's.

We had a brief but pleasant call from Capt. A. G. Campbell on Tuesday. He will take a position as Purser on the Frances Smith this season. If the other officers are as popular as friend Campbell, the Frances Smith will be one of the best patronized boats on the C.P.R. steamboat line this year.

All new and fashionable goods at E. J. Grier's. E. J. Grier always pays the highest price for Butter and Eggs.

REMOVED!—The undersigned has removed his Flour and Feed Store to the stand next door to Strain's Tinware and Hardware shop, Flesherton, where he will be pleased to meet with all his old customers and as many new ones as will favor him with their patronage. Satisfaction guaranteed. G. KEEFER.

It will pay you to come 20 miles to secure some of the terrible bargains that are going at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Come at once. 2t.

Orangemen! The glorious twelfth is rapidly approaching and if you want first-class Banners at very reasonable prices, by all means try Mr. Tegart, Thornbury, whose notice appears elsewhere in these columns. We can heartily recommend him as a first-class workman.

Our old friend, Mr. George Keefer left yesterday morning for Washington city, U. S., to take a lucrative position there during the summer and autumn months. He will return home about Christmas. Our old friend has our very best wishes for his success and prosperity during his sojourn in Uncle Sam's dominions.

Two respectable and esteemed young men—Mr. John Blakely, of Maxwell and Mr. Little, of Feversham—took train at the Flesherton C. P. R. depot yesterday morning for Franklin County, Nebraska, U. S. If they do not achieve success out there it will not be because they do not possess the necessary qualifications.

Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic for correcting irregularities of the stomach and bowels; Gentle, yet thorough in their action, they cure constipation, stimulate the appetite and digestive organs, and strengthen the system.

Don't spend your money with people who are here to-day and gone to-morrow. They don't help a place. For first-class Boots & Shoes—Men, Women and Children's wear go to Mr. Wm. Clayton, Flesherton, who has been in business here for over a quarter of a century, and who has a reputation at stake.

WHERE IT ENDS.—Nine-tenths of the disease denominated Catarrh is the result of protracted or oft repeated colds in the head. Nasal Balm will give immediate relief and permanently cures.

Thornbury, Ont., May 2.—This thriving place to-day threw off its old municipality and assumed the dignity of a town. The council was elected by acclamation throughout as follows: Mayor, Andrew Grier; Reeve, Thos. Andrews. Councillors: North Ward—W. Patterson, Geo. Wheatly, W. Grierson. South Ward—S. J. Alexander, R. F. Stevenson, J. Dibb. East Ward—F. Raymond, H. Pedwell, A. R. Foster.

That feeling of weariness, so often experienced in the spring, results from a sluggish condition of the blood which, being impure, does not quicken with the changing season. Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by vitalizing and cleansing the blood, strengthens and invigorates the system.

Left Over.

Report of Salem Sabbath School; Notice and route of Clydesdale Jock; and other matter. Will be published next week.

A PERSON.—Unable to sleep in bed, unable to work, unable to take ordinary exercise from the effects of Asthma until using Southern Asthma Cure. A sample package relieved, three packages permanently cured.

THE GREAT CYCLONE.

Further Particulars of the Fatal and Disastrous Blow.

EXCITING SCENES AND INCIDENTS.

A St. Louis telegram to-day says: Special despatches show that furious cyclones, tornadoes and hail storms swept over a considerable part of western and southwestern Missouri, southeastern Kansas and northern Arkansas on Thursday evening, causing great loss of life and destruction of property, killing and maiming a large number of people. The estimated loss to property is upwards of $100,000. Many people were killed in the neighborhood of the towns of Hume and Sprague, and a number seriously and some fatally injured. Humble station, on the Pacific Road, was destroyed, only one house being left. Dr. Smith's house, three miles from Rich Hill, was blown to atoms and Mrs. Smith fatally injured. Her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Ryan, and her two children were badly hurt. Two hired men on the place also received injuries. All the stables and granaries on the Bruce place were demolished. At the Miller farm, three miles west of Sprague, a splendid residence, barns and outbuildings were destroyed and nine cattle and a number of hogs and other stock were killed. Mr. Miller and his wife and baby were blown into the well and drowned. The farm houses of the following persons were entirely destroyed: Samuel Porter, George Hibler, L. Marsnon, J. Bough, H. Overman, Geo. Daniels, Mr. Gandries, Samuel Beatty, L. C. Robinson, Robert Robinson, Wm. Betty and William Pettitt. The latter's house took fire and burned. Wm. Kennett's home was blown down and then burned up. Mrs. Kennett had a very narrow escape from burning, as she was pinioned under some timber and was only rescued by the heroic efforts of her husband. The Montgomery and Queen Ridge schoolhouse were burned. It is reported that a brother and sister named Finn are dead, but this is not verified. The Methodist Episcopal Church at Sprague was demolished. B. F. Baker & Co.'s lumber yard was scattered over the prairie. The following houses were demolished: Mrs. Wainscott's, Will Grave's, Mrs. Riley's, Wesley Meeker's, Hamlan's blacksmith shop and Bassett's livery stable. In the lower part of Lynn County, Kansas, a regular funnel-shaped twister made a descent about 6 o'clock seven miles northwest of Prescott. Every farmhouse in the path of the storm was demolished and every house in Prescott was ruined. Four miles from Prescott, Mr. Flynn's fine residence was smashed flat, and Mrs. Flynn and three small children were mortally injured and two visitors dangerously hurt. Jacob Brook and his wife and one son, William McPold and his wife and a child, also of this vicinity, were fatally injured. A few miles from this scene, W. S. Bogat, Mrs. M. O'Dell and Mr. Hogan, his wife and two children had taken refuge in a storm cellar where eight cows fell on them through the roof and all were severely hurt. W. Browningburgh's family found refuge in a storm cave while a $5,000 house was scattered over the fields. Ten miles northwest of Prescott Mrs. Sarah Crane was killed and her family injured by the crushing of the house. In a distance of 22 miles only one house is known to have with stood the storm. H. C. Tripp, of Kansas City, was standing in the doorway of a grocery store in Prescott when the building was blown down, and he was killed. The buildings left standing in Prescott are stuck full of timbers. C. R. Underwood's residence, the Baptist and Methodist churches, W. H. Billingsby's harness store, Perkins' meat market and the Prescott House are among other buildings destroyed. Nearly every house at Miami Junction, five miles north of Prescott, was blown down, and several persons injured. Seventeen persons are known to have been killed in Lynn County and about fifty were seriously wounded. In Bourbon county, Kansas, reports are coming in slowly of terrible devastation. D. J. Field's farm was swept clear of buildings and live stock. Nearly all the Mills family was exterminated. Two children and the father and mother were killed and a niece and child were found barely alive, but will recover. The stone residence of Samuel Coles was raised. In Anderson county the cyclone badly damaged the town of Colony. At Blue Mound, a town of 900 inhabitants, twenty houses were wrecked and two persons killed. Joseph Duncan's house was hurled away in the midst of a wedding ceremony, but the party found refuge in the cellar and escaped.

The cyclone passed on the outskirts of Shell City, Mo., doing great damage. Several houses were demolished. John D. High was killed, and his wife and child mortally hurt. Not a fragment remains of their dwelling. The house of the Gibson family was blown away, and one child suffered a broken arm. The loss in this (Vernon) county is placed at $70,000.

A special from Greenville, Miss., says that section was visited by a terrible thunderstorm, followed by heavy hail that did great damage to live stock and injured many colored persons in Boliver county. The town was nearly demolished. A despatch from Hannibal, Mo., says that about midnight a terrific storm unroofed a number of buildings, and the rain which followed damaged a great deal of merchandise. Some twelve or fifteen dwellings and stores at Blossom Prairie, Tex., were destroyed.

A Nevada, Mo., despatch says: From Evansville, Ind., it is learned that on Friday night a tornado passed up White River, crossing the Evansville & Terre Haute Railroad, at Hazleton, thirty-eight miles north of here, doing great damage and killing Jas. H. Nott, a fisherman, and Scott Selby, a mechanic working on a barn, and fatally injuring another man. The small village of West Buano Vista was completely wrecked, only two houses remaining uninjured.

—First Girl: "Why, what's the matter, dear? You look terribly despondent." Second Girl: "I am afraid George has been engaged ever so many times before, and I thought I was his first and only love." "Well, how do you know you are not?" "After he proposed last night I told him he must never kiss me until we were married, because I didn't think it was proper." "Yes!" "Well, he kissed me right off, and said I didn't mean a word of it. He knows too much."

THE BRITISH BUDGET.

Goschen Takes a Penny Off the Income Tax and Reduces the Tobacco Duty—Harcourt and Churchill Criticise the Statement.

A London cablegram says: Mr. Goschen, Chancellor of the Exchequer, introduced the Budget in the House of Commons Thursday afternoon. From this it appears that during last year the expenses of the Government amounted to £90,000,000 and that the revenues reached the same sum. There has been a saving of £263,000 in the army estimates and £347,000 in the estimates for the Civil Service. The revenue obtained by taxes on alcoholic liquors had decreased £190,000, while that derived from the beer tax had increased £45,000. The receipts from the wine taxes had fallen off £93,000, and those from the tax on tea had largely increased. Sir William Vernon Harcourt had estimated that the surplus for the year would be £259,000, while it really reached £776,000. The Budget estimates the revenue for the coming year at £91,155,000, and the expenditure at £90,180,000. It is proposed to raise £100,000 by charging ten shillings transfer duty on each 100 debentures of stock, which has hitherto escaped duty. To clear the Budget of local loans it is intended to cancel £37,000,000 of other portions of the public debt and create the same amount of local loan stock, charging the local loan budget with an annuity of £100,000.

It is also proposed to take one penny per pound sterling off the income tax, and fourpence per pound sterling off the tobacco tax, and to reduce the taxation on marine policies.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt congratulated Mr. Goschen upon the ability he had displayed. He regretted, however, that nothing had been said about gold coinage. He condemned the proposal to reduce the repayment of the debt, which he thought would establish a reprehensible precedent.

Lord Randolph Churchill also regretted the absence of any reference to the gold coinage. He criticized adversely Mr. Goschen's estimates. The budget, he said, gave no real indication of economy and retrenchment. He believed a reduction of at least £150,000 was possible in the Civil Service estimates. If an increase in the expenditures for national defences was necessary, the amount required should be raised by taxation, not by reducing the repayment of the debt. He also objected to the proposed contributions in aid of local rates as likely to retard Government reform. He said that if Mr. Goschen's proposals had been made by him, they would have aroused the indignation of the whole country and probably have been rejected.

Mr. Goschen, in a general reply, excused himself for not having touched upon the question of gold coinage, on the ground of lack of time to deal thoroughly with the subject. He defended his proposal, adding that he would be glad if the House shou'd definitely express its wishes with regard to the expenditures for defence. His experience respecting further reductions had been that they were almost always followed by spasmodic increases under the influence of panic.

The budget was a complete surprise to the House of Commons. Many of its proposals (notably those relating to the National Debt charges) will be vigorously opposed. It is maintained that Mr. Goschen has resorted to unsound measures of finance in order to present a budget that may serve the Conservatives at the next general election. The Conservatives are much irritated at Lord Randolph Churchill's attitude.

FALL OF A TRAIN

Through a Bridge Near Morrisburg and Two Men Instantly Killed.

A last (Friday) night's Morrisburg (Ont.) despatch says: A terrible accident occurred one mile east of here about 4 o'clock this morning. Nash's creek, now a foaming stream, is here spanned by an iron bridge resting on two stone piers. A freight train going west went through the bridge, carrying the engineer and fireman to instant death. A brakesman was thrown into the creek, but was rescued nearly dead. Thirteen loaded cars were piled in the gorge, smashed to atoms. The driver's name is Stewart. It is said that the bridge was inspected last week, and pronounced safe. The loss will be very heavy. Express trains had crossed the bridge only an hour before, and the morning express from Toronto was to cross the unfortunate train here. The cause of the collapse of the bridge is a mystery. It is supposed that the stone piers had been undermined by frost, but an examination made since the accident shows that they are perfectly sound.

Latest From the Northwest.

Sam Jones will be here next month.

Telegraphic despatches from all parts of the Province and Territories show that on an average seeding is more than half completed. In some portions the work has been done some time.

A proposition has been made by Mr. Greenway to the Local Government that it should purchase lands sold for taxes, and if not redeemed it would be in a position to dispose of lands of its own to immigrants on favorable terms.

Mr. Norquay has had a second reading given to the Government Bill for the construction of a line to the boundary.

McCurdy, a deserter from the Mounted Police, was to-day sentenced in Winnipeg to pay a fine of $50 and two months' imprisonment.

There have been a couple of landslides in the mountains within the last few days, but no damage has resulted.

Captain Thomas Howard has been elected President of the society formed by the survivors of the Red River expedition force.

H. T. Buckingham, Treasurer of the Canadian Pacific Aid Society, has been arrested for embezzlement.

A Merciful Critic.

"Well," said Razorpen, more kindly than was his custom, "I can tell you how you can improve the play a little."

"How?" asked Inkwell, gratefully.

"You see, you kill the villain in the last act?"

"Yes."

"Well, that is good. Now make him kill all the other characters in the first."—Burdette.

THE FISH DISPUTE.

What is Thought of Salisbury's Offer of the Canadian Fish.

NOVA SCOTIANS AND THE SETTLEMENT.

A Washington cable says: The Secretary of State declines to either confirm or deny the statement cabled from London that Lord Salisbury has sent a despatch to this Government on the subject of the fisheries, offering to revert to the old condition of affairs, without pecuniary indemnity. Secretary Bayard also declines to express any opinion with regard to the subject matter of the despatch as cabled.

The subject matter of the proposition reported to have been made to the United States by Lord Salisbury is not exactly news in diplomatic circles, the same proposition having emanated from a Canadian source some time ago. Well informed persons incline to the opinion that the offer referred to in the cablegram has been thus indirectly and unofficially made as a "feeler," to ascertain in advance of an actual tender how such a proposition would be received by the American people. As the representatives of the United States on the Commission that negotiated the Treaty of Washington, and the Halifax Commission, which fixed the award made for the use of the Canadian inshore fisheries, expressly denied that the privileges accorded to United States vessels in Canadian waters was more valuable than the concession made to Canadian fishermen of a like privilege in waters of the United States and free entry of their fish, it is safe to assume that the Department of State never entertained the idea of renewing the Treaty of Washington with the understanding that a cash indemnity was again to be paid to Great Britain for the right to enjoy the inshore fisheries of Canada. Secretary Bayard to-day said that he was glad to note the increasing interest manifested in the subject. He felt that the people of the country, outside of Massachusetts, had never realized its importance or appreciated the gravity of the alternative left to the Administration—a declaration of non-intercourse if they failed to effect a peaceable adjustment of the difficulties between the United States and Great Britain respecting the constitution of the treaty rights of our fishermen. It is doubtful, he said, if the interests of San Francisco in maintaining her present source of coal supply from British Columbia, aside from the importance of the great Chicago business connections with Canada and of the vast trade that ebbs and flows across the three thousand miles of our northern boundary do not exceed the interest of Massachusetts in the results of the application of such an alternative as commercial non-intercourse. The negotiations with Great Britain on this subject were progressing and the Secretary hopes they will result in a harmonious and satisfactory understanding between that country and the United States.

SERVANT MURDERED.

Desperate Deed in a Fashionable Residence of Louisville in Open Day-light.

A Louisville despatch says: A horrible murder was perpetrated in broad day-light in one of the most fashionable resident portions of this city yesterday morning about 11 o'clock. The police authorities have just been informed of the terrible crime, and as yet it is shrouded in mystery. About 10 o'clock in the morning Mrs. A. Y. Johnson, the wife of a well-known Main street merchant, left her home on Brook street in company with her children and Jennie Bowman, a servant girl, who is white and about 24 years of age. It appears the latter accompanied Mrs. Johnson only a short distance on some special mission, after which she returned to the house. Shortly after this a little colored girl living next door to the Johnson family went into the kitchen of the house and discovered blood on the floor and signs of disorder. She called for help, and receiving no answer started up the back stairway to her room. There the child discovered the servant lying upon the floor horribly beaten about the head and breathing her last. The child gave the alarm, but the woman died before the physician's arrival. Two suspicious characters are known to have been loafing across the street when Mrs. Johnson and the children went out, and it is thought they entered the house and were discovered upon the return of the servant. A poker was found with the hair and blood of a man upon it, and it is supposed the woman opposed the burglars with the above result. The men can hardly escape.

Atrocious Outrage.

A St. Louis telegram says: A despatch from the City of Mexico gives an account of a horrible affair committed in the City of Patzcuoro last Wednesday night. The wife of Juan Ramierez was the belle of the town and a great favorite. Three policemen entered into a plot to outrage her, and on the night mentioned went to Ramierez's house, which was in the suburbs, entered his bedroom and butchered him with knives. The spouting blood deluged the wife as she lay beside her husband and she fainted. After Ramierez was dead they restored the wife to consciousness and then carried out their hellish plot, leaving the poor woman almost dead. The men fled to the interior on horseback, but two of them were captured and the third will be, as the whole country was aroused and intense excitement prevailed.

Queen's on its Dignity.

A Kingston despatch says: A committee of prominent citizens has undertaken to raise $50,000 of the increased endowment for Queen's. The professors will subscribe $10,000, and Dr. Grant will solicit aid in other places. Probably never before did prominent men display such interest in the college as at present, and the probabilities are that within a few weeks the desired financial position of Queen's will be obtained.

The Boston Transcript has evidently suffered at the hands of the compositor, and thus takes its revenge: "'Ah! what's this?' exclaimed the intelligent compositor; 'Sermons in stones, books in the running brooks! That can't be right. I have it! He means sermons in books, stones in the running brooks. That's sense.' And that is how the writer found it."

OLD IRELAND'S TROUBLES.

A last Saturday night's London cable says: Mr. O'Brien has postponed his Canadian trip for a week pending the negotiations for a settlement between Lord Lansdowne's agent and the tenants on his estates. Three more evictions were effected at Luggacurran to-day, completing the list. Altogether forty tenants, representing 300 souls, have been evicted. The police and soldiers have been withdrawn. The Marquis of Lansdowne has offered fresh terms to all the tenants of his estates, the proffer being extended to those leasing under the judicial as well as under the non-judicial rates. The offer has been extended also to those tenants who have been evicted this spring. The tenants have taken the offer under consideration.

Chamberlain, speaking at Stornoway, to-night, said that the land was the gift of the Almighty and ought to be treated as a trust, not as an absolute possession by private owners. This trust was not fulfilled while the land did not provide substance for the greatest possible number of the people. He saw a gleam of hope from Gladstone's speech before the Eighty Club. Regarding the reunion of the Liberals Gladstone said that proposals had been made to the Unionists to co-operate. Although they had not been made to him, Chamberlain rejoiced that they had been made at all. He was content to follow in the rear of those who would again fight by Gladstone's side in the prosecution of the Liberal programme, but only on the condition that Gladstone either postpone the Irish question this session or meet the Unionist objections to his plans.

John Dillon, M.P., says: "Since January 1st evictions have increased to an appalling extent. In Kerry alone, in three months, 306 families, making 1,766 people, were evicted; 5,190 persons altogether have been dispossessed. Meanwhile, in the returns of crime for the last quarter there is no increase, a fact unparalleled in Irish agrarian history, and which can only be attributed to the great faith of the people in the Plan of Campaign."

A great meeting was held on Blackheath Common to-day to protest against the Coercion Bill. Fully 10,000 persons were present. Several members of Parliament were present. Resolutions denouncing coercion were adopted by an almost unanimous vote.

Mr. Wm. Alexander Hunter, Gladstonian member for Aberdeen, thinks the whole of the now famous letter attributed to Mr. Parnell, signature and all, was the work of one pen, and that the thing was a forgery from the start, which was imposed on the Times. An article to this effect will appear in the Weekly Dispatch to-day, and a fac simile of a genuine letter written by Mr. Parnell about the same time as the alleged date of the Times' letter is published, in order to facilitate a fair comparison between the real and the alleged autographs.

An election was held yesterday at Taunton to fill the Parliamentary seat made vacant by the removal of Mr. Samuel Charles Allsopp from the House of Commons to the House of Lords. At the last election Mr. Allsopp was returned without opposition. Yesterday the Conservative candidate, Mr. Allsopp, a member of the same family, received 1,426 votes, and Mr. Saunders, Gladstonian, 890.

A BIG BLOW UP.

A Number of People Hurt by a Boiler Explosion.

A Paterson, N. J., despatch says: A terrible wreck was caused by the explosion of a rotary rag boiler in the Ivanhoe paper mill here on Saturday. The boiler was old and weak, as was shown by the condition of the fragments. It wrecked a large portion of the mill, went up through the roof, soared into the air, and came down in J. H. Booth's silk mill across the street, playing havoc with that also. About twenty-five persons are injured. The names of the most seriously wounded are as follows: Wm. Jenkins, married, has a piece of scalp taken off by flying fragments; he was blown into the raceway. Michael Burke, who with Jenkins, had charge of the boiler, is missing, and is supposed to be under the ruins; search for him was kept up till dark and then abandoned. James Simpson, who was carrying ashes from the boiler when the explosion occurred, was horribly crushed, and is dying. Daniel Bergin was seriously injured. Mary Keisbury, Eliza Farrell, Mrs. McCormick and Bridget Cowan, all employees of the paper mill, were badly hurt. The seven last named are in the hospital. Three girls in Booth's silk mill were badly hurt. Their names are Maggie Vansill, Rachel Levi and Maggie Stafford. The first two had their skulls fractured, and the last named received several scalp wounds. Owen Burns was dug out and is badly bruised.

Mexican Affairs.

A City of Mexico despatch says: The War Department makes known the facts of a doubly fatal duel. Lieut.-Colonel Tunoz, of the 8th Battalion, and M. M. Savala, musical director attached to the command, quarrelled in a saloon in San Luis Potose, where they were stationed, and a challenge was accepted at once. The two officers, accompanied only by a captain of the regiment, were driven to the Lodrillora, and at the word both shot at once and both fell dead.

Two buildings on the Pena Colorado ranche, near Dolores, were burned on Saturday. In one were twin brothers sick with typhus fever. Their mother attempted to save them, and all three perished.

Cholera is raging at Mazelalan and Guaymas. People are leaving the infected districts in large numbers.

Cajerns, the notorious Yaqui chief, was shot to death on Friday at Modano, near Guaymas, by the Mexican authorities.

—Papa—Well, girls, Lent is now over, and now what have you done for the good of the church during the season of penance? Bess, with a sudden attack of bravery—Mollie hasn't done much of anything, but I—hm—er—I've p-promised to m-marry he new rector.

—Boston is becoming more and still more æsthetic, for her people now spell jail 'gaol,' but we rise to remark that the walls are just as thick, the beds just as hard and the food just as plain.

WHOSE WIFE IS SHE?

A Case Involving the Marriage and Divorce Laws of Three Countries.

A Kingston (N. Y.) despatch says: A complicated case of matrimonial alliance has been brought to light through a hearing before Judge Parker in Supreme Court Chambers, on Saturday last. The case came up in an action for divorce brought by William H. Stewart against Annie Stewart. It involves many fine points as to the marriage and divorce laws of three countries—England, Canada and the United States. The facts are as follows:

On Feb. 18th, 1876, Annie Towers, a buxom English maiden of 20, was married to Charles Tate at the parish church in the parish of St. John's, Middleborough, county of York, England. In 1878 Mrs. Tate brought an action for divorce against her husband on the ground of adultery. On May 5th, 1879, an order was entered stipulating, among other things, "that the marriage be dissolved unless sufficient cause be shown to the Court why the said decree should not be made absolute within six months from the making thereof." Before the expiration of the six months the plaintiff came to the United States and drifted to this city, where she was slightly acquainted. Here she became acquainted with Stewart, and they were married on July 2nd, 1879. Before the marriage she informed him of her marital relations in England and the divorce proceedings. Both at that time were under the impression that the Tate marriage was dissolved. A final order in the English divorce was entered in January, 1880. After Stewart lived with the woman for two years, and two children were born to them, some doubt arose as to the English divorce proceeding. She requested Stewart to have the marriage ceremony performed over, but this he refused to do. They then separated, and have not lived together since. Soon after the separation Mrs. Stewart went to the Province of Ontario, Canada, and on September 20th, 1884, she married one Isaac Aves at Southampton, in that Province, and has since lived with him. Her Canadian husband at present lives in Stratford, Ont., and is a wealthy stock raiser. He also was made aware of her peculiar matrimonial alliances.

Stewart has brought his action for divorce in the Supreme Court of this State for adultery on account of the defendant's relations with Aves in Canada. The defendant in her answer admits all the facts as regards the marriage and divorce proceedings in England, but alleges that she had not in fact been divorced from Tate at the time of her marriage to Stewart, and that at the time she married Stewart she was the wife of Charles Tate, who was still living. She therefore denies any adultery with Aves, and asks for a dismissal of the complaint and that judgment enter declaring her marriage contract with Stewart void.

The leading question submitted to the Court to determine is whether the second order entered in the English court dissolved the marriage on Sept. 5th, 1879, which was six months after the first order was entered, or, whether the second order simply gave effect to the first order, and the marriage was dissolved when the first order was entered. At all events, it places the fair defendant in a very peculiar position. She is the wife of somebody, and who is it? If her marriage in this city is declared legal, then her marriage in Canada is illegal. The papers in the case were served upon her a few days ago while on a visit to this city, where she is at present awaiting the decision of the court.

MUST GIVE UP FRANCE.

Bismarck's Ruthless Plan of Germanising Alsace-Lorraine.

A Berlin cable says: Prince Bismarck is determined to stamp out French conspirators in Alsace-Lorraine. French sympathisers must either remain inactive or go to French territory. Germanising measures are being carried out systematically throughout Alsace-Lorraine. For instance, four merchants of the town of Dienze have been expelled since Monday for adhering to their French nationality. Each of them received twenty-four hours' notice to quit. At Chateau Salins a man was arrested for flaunting the French colors at a local ball. At the Sarreguimes tribunal a workingman named Gopp was sentenced to three months' imprisonment for shouting "Vive la France." Workman Schmitt was sentenced by the same court to one month's imprisonment for wearing tri-colored ribbons, and Workman Siebord to ten weeks' imprisonment for acting as a correspondent for the French Patriotic League. This treatment of French adherents may have a great effect upon the French public, and hasten a collision between the two nations; but these measures are believed to be forced upon the German authorities, who have instructions to deal with all peaceful inhabitants as German subjects.

CRUSHED TO PULP.

Six Men Meet Death in a Railway Accident.

A Spokane Falls, W. T., despatch says: It has just been learned that on Thursday afternoon a terrible accident occurred on the Cascade division of the Northern Pacific Railroad, four miles beyond Chelum. A west-bound train pushing a flat car loaded with laborers was going around the curve leading to a trestle when it ran into an engine which was running east, backing up. The flat car passed half way through the tender of the engine and the other end crashed up against the pilot of the west-bound train, on which were two men, who were crushed to a pulp. The light engine was knocked 80 feet. Five men were killed outright and one has since died. The injured number 18. All of the physicians of Allensburg were immediately sent to the scene by special train and have been rendering all the service possible. The scene of the accident as described by those present beggars description. Blood is scattered in every direction and the neighboring rocks bear the evidence of fearful carnage. The accident was the fault of one of the train's crew neglecting to flag as per orders. The dead and injured were brought to Chelum on Thursday night.

A Boston barque recently sailed for three hours through a cloud of dust, near New Zealand, just after a volcanic eruption on the island.

The floods in Montreal are receding though the people still suffer much.

If I Thought as You Think.

(From the New North.)

Why do you cling unto life, my brothers? Why do you cling unto life? I say.
Why do you weep when the yoke and fetters of flesh from a dear friend drop away?
You know this world is a House of Sorrow, you know this world is a House of Sin.
That pain is the Dead Sea fruit of pleasure, and will be ever as it hath been.
Why, then, cling unto life, when over the blue
transpicuous rim afar
Shineth the wall of the Wondrous City, where only blessing and blisses are?

Why do you beat your hands with passion, and storm the sky with your plea and prayer,
Whenever passes a stainless spirit forever out of your clasp and care?
You say he goes to a glad, brave kingdom, over a vague and voiceless sea,
Where never a last good-bye is spoken, and never and never a grave shall be;
And where from rapture to perfect rapture, with crown and lyre he soars and sings,
The chrism of Christ upon his forehead, the glory of God upon his wings.

If I thought as you think, my brothers, if I believed in a better sphere,
Beyond the grass and the golden lilies that blossom over a dead man here,
I would tingle with great, strange gladness whenever a friend of mine should die;
I would robe him in festal raiment, and would kiss him a gay good-bye.

And, O! when unto me came the hour—the miracle hour that comes to all—
Never a cypress branch or blossom should throw its gloom on my gorgeous pall;
At my funeral should be dancing, and dainty feasting at festal board,
Should be singing, and jest, and laughter, and gurgle of wine in the glasses poured;
And jubilant bells should rock the steeple when
I was borne to the gay, bright grave,
And rattle of drums and thrill of trumpets blend in a glad thanksgiving stave!

The Queen's Jubilee.

Old England calls upon her sons
To honor England's Queen,
Her sons respond, and daughters, too,
To keep her memory green;
With loyal hearts and ready hands
The Empire's children stand
Prepared to do, prepared to die,
For Queen and native land.

For fifty years our country's
Hath borne o'er earth and main
The name of Empress, Queen beloved,
With neither spot nor stain;
Long may it bear Victoria's name,
Long o'er us may she reign;
And for our Empire, broad and grand,
May she new honor gain.

Upon our Queen—our country—flag,
God's blessing ever rest;
With peace and plenty everywhere
Her people's homes be blest—
God save the Queen, her people pray
From hearts sincere and free,
God save our loved Victoria
And crown her jubilee.

CHORUS—Victoria! Our Queen beloved,
With loyal heart and hand
Thy colonies and fatherland
United by thee stand.

F. H. TORRINGTON.

Housekeeping Melodies.

(Carrie W. Bronson in Good Housekeeping.)

Sing a song of cleaning house!
Pocketful of nails?
Four-and-twenty dust pans,
Scrubbing-brooms and pails!
When the door is opened,
Wife begins to sing—

"Just help me move this bureau here,
And hang this picture, won't you, dear?
And tack that carpet by the door,
And stretch this one a little more,
And drive this nail, and screw this screw;
And here's a job I have for you—
This closet door will never catch,
I think you'll have to fix the latch;
And oh, while you're about it, John,
I wish you'd put the cornice on
And hang this curtain; when you're done
I'll hand you up the other one;
This box has got to have a hinge
Before I can put on the fringe;
And won't you mend that broken chair?
I'd like a hook put up right there,
The bureau drawer must have a knob;
And here's another little job—
I really hate to ask you, dear—
But could you fix a bracket here?"

And on it goes, when these are through,
With this and that and those to do,
Ad infinitum, and more too,
All in a merry jingle—
And isn't it enough to make
A man wish he was single? (Almost.)

To the Spirit of the Age.

(With apologies to Mr. Austin Dobson.)

If I were you, in moments of reflection,
Though criticism may be fair and true,
I'd not go in too much for vivisection
If I were you.

I would not take the flowers of life and tear them
Apart, their inner secrets all to view;
I'd pluck them gently, reverently wear them,
If I were you.

I'd leave some gossamer of tender fancies
In life's wide meadow, gemmed along with dew,
Not sweep them all before stern Fact's advances,
If I were you.

If I were you I'd leave some twilight hours
'Twix glaring daylight and the night's black hue,
Some neutral-tinted scenes—some shady bowers,
If I were you.

I would not let the oil of toleration—
The sameness of one general "width of view
Subdue the free waves' motion to stagnation,
If I were you.

I'd not laugh down enthusiasm's fire
As antique and high-flown—I'd leave some few
Sparks of noble rage, a generous ire,
If I were you.

And O! amid the rush for wealth or pleasure,
And all the hurly-burly and to-do,
I'd leave some breathing space, some nooks of leisure,
Some time for laying up th' enduring Treasure,
If I were you.

The Old Man Has Nothing to Say.

I heard of a husband and father who sought amusement in a public beer garden. He sat sipping his beverage steadily enough, until a pretty girl came within close range, and then, forgetting his dignity, he invited her to drink with him. She consented. Roguery in her eyes flashed into the foaming cup as she lifted it, and said:

"Well, here's to the health of Bessie and Charley!"

Those were the names of his children. He gave one hard look at the girl, and recognized in her the nursemaid of his household. The beer didn't choke him quite to death, but almost. And he doesn't dare to say boo at home about the manner in which his wife's favorite servant spends her evenings out.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Cute Boy Comes Out on Top.

Wife—"Before we were married you never thought of business matters in the evening; there was not a night that you didn't call to see me."

Young husband—"I remember, dear."

"Oh you do? Well, please explain why it is that you rush off to your office the moment you have your supper and don't get back until midnight?"

"I have two to support now."

CHILDREN'S FAITH.

How to Treat Children—Be Lenient, but Always Truthful—Franky's Ride.

Our children are born believing all things, hoping all things, and, so far as their parents' intentions toward them go, thinking no evil. Upon this rock we base our claim to obedience. The formula, "papa and mamma know best," is worthless upon any other assumption. "Because our knowledge is superior to yours," we say in effect, "you should obey us. Because we do not deceive you, trust us."

The baby's humility is involuntary, born of weakness and conscious ignorance. He confides in his parents absolutely. Our boy's law and gospel are contained in the teachings of his guardians. He lends equal credence to the story of Joseph in the pit and of Hop-o'-my-thumb in the wood; Elisha's greedy bears are no more and no less real than the Great Bear, the Middle Bear and the Little Bear, whose bread-and-milk was devoured by Golden Locks. The dear God who sees and loves him always lives beyond the solid blue of the sky; the fleecy rolls of cloud collected in the fields of ether are God's sheep; the thunder is His voice; the stars are holes in the sapphire pavement to let the glory through. Angels are detailed to watch beside baby's crib to keep evil spirits away, and are ever within call to help him to be good—and papa and mamma are always right.

The darling makes a precious hash of sacred and folk-lore, but his code is simple and strong. He believes what those who ought to speak the truth teach him, and trusts in what they engage to perform. Should he come to grief, the blame rests elsewhere than on his steadfast little soul.

"Let a boy once distrust the love or the tenderness of his parents, and the last resort of his yearning affections—so far as the world goes—is utterly gone," writes Ike Marvel.

"His heart will take on a hard iron covering that will flash out plenty of fire in his after contact with the world, but it will never melt."

Almost as sharp is the awakening to the knowledge that there is a limit to "papa's" ability to set wrong right, that there are sorrows from which the tender fold of "mamma's" arms cannot defend him. From such shocks we cannot protect him, although circumstances may aid us in postponing the evil day. It is in the power of each of us to prevent the cruelest disillusion of the many which change his bright optimism into cynicism of a type that revolts the listener—doubts of the good faith and truthful dealing of those who should be his exemplars in both.

As the first step to this wrong we are too ready to make promises to our children. The iteration of, "May I do this?" "Can I do that?" patters upon the ear of the busy mother until she answers mechanically, often not taking in the purport of the petition. The perplexed state that answers her clumsy defence when reminded of the assent she feels obliged to revoke. "I really did not think what I was saying, my dear," should warn her that the ground is caving under the ledge of infallibility. These clear-eyed critics of our walk and conversation reason long before they can put logic into words.

"What does your mother mean when she says, 'I will see about it, children?'" asked one little girl of another.

"Why, it's 'most as good as 'yes,'" was the careless reply. "If she does say 'no' afterward, we'll just go for her, I tell you."

"Now, when my mother says, 'I will see about it, children,' said the first speaker, gravely and slowly, it means, 'I am too busy now to attend to what you say. By and by, when I have time to listen, I will do what is right.'"

"My! what a fuss over a little thing!"

"Ah! but my mother never goes back on her word. When she does promise she sticks to it. That's worth waiting for, you know!"

Give children's requests due consideration before deciding upon them. If possible and prudent, say "yes." Some of us would be ashamed did we know how the habit of negativing, without thought or reason, has grown upon us. You are the sovereign; your child the subject. Be lenient and gracious. Why feign to yield grudgingly when there is no hesitation in your mind? Do not be afraid of weakening your authority by ready acquiescence. Let the little ones see how glad you are to make them happy. If you seal the boon with a kiss you make compliance doubly graceful. When compelled to deny, your petitioners will comprehend the necessity of the refusal—that "mamma would say yes if she could."

The promise made, keep it religiously. You injure the child when you forget or ignore your pledge to him, but you do yourself yet greater harm. From the throng of illustrations of this truth that clog my pen I have room for but one, and that a true story.

Four-year-old Franky's parents had promised him a drive on a certain afternoon. A thunder storm kept the three in doors, and the promise was renewed for the first time papa could spare time to take mamma out. The "time" was slow in coming to Franky's apprehension. Day followed day, and his ears ached vainly for hint or mention of the promised excursion. After a week that seemed a year, the little fellow, who had been taught "never to tease," heard the appointment made with his mother for 3 o'clock that afternoon. Nothing was said to him, but secure in the promise given, he coaxed his nurse to dress him for the expedition. Hair and hands above reproach, his straw hat on his head, he mounted guard on the front steps and waited for the appearance of the buggy and driver. Forgetful papa nodded gayly to him as he drew up at the door and signalled to the wife looking from an upper window. Mamma, as oblivious of her engagement with her boy, kissed him in passing, bidding him "be very good while she was gone." An aunt coming up behind him unheard—herself ignorant of the promise and its rupture—paused at sight of the figure standing stone-still on the upper step, hat on head, fingers crushing one another in the anguish of disappointment, the chubby face red with the struggle to restrain the tears, eyes strained on the receding carriage. "There go two of the blamedest liars ever was made!" soliloquized poor Franky, unconscious of his auditor.

"It was an awful thing to say of his parents," says the narrator, betwixt tears and laughter, "but I couldn't scold him."

Who could?—Marion Harland.

English Burglars' Methods

The most careful precautions will not always prevail against confederated thieves directed by superior intelligence. Now and then the enterprise of an erratic genius will give useful hints to the capitalists and their locksmiths. One of the most remarkable instances of the kind was that of the chief of a band of burglars arrested and convicted about twenty years ago. "Scottie," not without much natural pride in his professional ingenuity, after his conviction made full confession. His system, like that of most successful schemers, was as bold as it was simple. He set himself to attack the padlocks which secure those strong metal bands of which I have spoken. To pick them on the spot was difficult or impossible. On the other hand, by placing women on the watch, the fastenings might be tampered with in the interval of the policeman passing on the beat after his first satisfactory examination. The padlock was quickly removed by breaking the catch of the hasp with a small "jimmy," and replaced by one similar in size and appearance. During the night the intricate works were extracted, so that it could be opened by its own or any common key. Then the hasp was neatly repaired and the lock returned to its place before the arrival of the owners of the premises in the morning. Thus the burglars, being masters of the situation, might enter the place at their leisure. No fewer than twenty-seven doors had been so "doctored," when the gang came to sudden grief over a grand preliminary enterprise. They had been laying siege "unbeknown" to the proprietor and the police to the shop of a watchmaker in Lombard street. By their quiet method of manipulating doors they had made their way into an office on the upper floor, visiting it repeatedly without detection. Finally, after close examination of the premises, they forced their way into the watchmaker's from below a tailor's shop at the side. They carried off a quantity of watches and jewellery, but, fortunately for the twenty-seven gentlemen whose padlocks had been tampered with, in prudence they suspended operations after that coup, though, nevertheless, they were followed up and arrested. And, to show the cool deliberation which they had gone to work, "Scottie" mentioned that, having fitted a false key to it from the first, they had been in the habit of investigating the safe upstairs. As there was little in it to tempt them they waited till they had robbed the watchmaker, when they took their chance of what happened to be in the safe and cleaned it out. Nowadays there are said to be few regular receivers in London. Stolen property of value which is capable of identification is carried out of the country. It is sometimes consigned to Holland, but more generally to Paris.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Queer Use for the Darlings.

A farmer named August Pirch, who lives near Garvanzo, is the happy possessor of a dozen fine, healthy children. These youngsters grow fast, eat three or four hearty meals a day, and the way they wear out clothes is enough to make a woollen factory think a cyclone had struck it. Mr. Pirch has been in hot water with his little fishes for years, and was about to give up in despair, when a bright idea struck him. He had a tract of land that could not be used for the want of water. But how to irrigate the land without spending a large sum of money was a mystery. A ditch would cost thousands of dollars, but corner lots have not been so plentiful in the Pirch family as the happy father could have wished, and his bankbook simply showed a balance of a few hundreds instead of thousands. He figured on the cost of a well and found that he could stand a sixty-foot well, a cheap pump and one of those great big family swings which are noticed at pleasure-gardens and German pic-nic grounds. The well was bored, the pump was set up, and the swing was put in working order.

"Here, you little rascals," said the elder Pirch to his little fishes, "come out here and get in this swing. I'm going to give you something to play with." In five minutes the children were flying back and forth through the air. The pump worked up and down, making a merry tune, and a fourteen-inch stream of water flowed from the well. The children don't know that they are working, as the swing is some distance from the well, and is connected by an iron rod which works the pump, as the swing vibrates back and forth. Mr. Pirch is positive that the youngsters will pump enough water during the day to irrigate a large tract of land.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Times.

The Poet Won the Bet.

Author (timidly)—I see that the price paid for Tennyson's Jubilee Ode was $10 a line. I don't expect, of course, that this little effort of mine would be—

Editor (sarcastically)—O, you don't! You are too modest, sir.

Author—But if you will kindly insert it in to-morrow morning's paper I'll willingly pay you the regular advertising rate of 50 cents per line. Here's the money—$10.

Editor (with deep feeling)—My dear sir, on looking over the poem I find it full of merit. I'll take it.

The author, having made a bet of $50 with the rival publisher around the corner that his poem would be accepted, walks out of the office $40 a head.

A Trifle Unreasonable.

Patient (to young doctor)—Why do you charge me so much, doctor? I had a similar trouble last year, and Dr. Pellet cured me for half this amount.

Young Doctor—How long did it take him to cure you?

Patient—Three days.

Young Doctor—Well, I've been working on your case for nearly two weeks. You can't expect to get two weeks' work for a three-day price.

Two weeks ago, at Kimes' Post-office, near Bannister, I.T., the snow was twenty-two feet deep. The inhabitants had dug tunnels from house to house. When it commenced to snow a large number of cattle were lying down by a stack. They were completely covered up, and it is thought by the owners that they are still there eating hay.

Mimicry in Nature.

Beetles often imitate hornets, since the latter are insects to which birds in search of animal food prefer to give a very wide berth.

A species of mantis imitates the white ant, and, mixing with the family like one of its own members, quietly devours a fat termite, from time to time.

The bumble-bee flies, which are inoffensive little creatures, imitating the wild bee, flit about and buzz angrily in the sunlight, quite after the fashion of the insect they copy, and gain an undeserved reputation of fierceness.

Flies often dwell as unbidden guests in the nests and hives of wild honey-bees. They are belted and bearded in the self-same pattern as their unconscious hosts, but their larvæ pay for the hospitality they steal by devouring the young grubs of the hive.

There is in Borneo a sand-wasp which is addicted to the habit of devouring crickets, but there is also a species of cricket which exactly reproduces the appearance of its enemy, so that it can even associate with it undiscovered.

A curious case of imitation is that of two species of Malayan orioles, which are almost exact counterparts of two varieties of honey-suckers. The latter are such fierce birds as to be avoided by all their feathered neighbors, and thus the orioles find their own deceptive plumage a great protection.

The mimicry of stinging-insects is sometimes performed by innocent little creatures quite destitute of any such means of defence. A common insect, known in England as the devil's coach-horse, throws up its tail in the aggressive fashion of a scorpion, when irritated, but it has no hint of a sting. In its warlike attitude it is exceedingly alarming, not only to boys and girls, but to chickens and birds.

Crime the Result of Epilepsy.

It has been frequently claimed, and I believe with justice, that terrible crimes have been committed by the unfortunate victims of some of these disorders of memory and consciousness. I have myself been called as an expert in a few cases in which some questions of this sort was the issue. Sometimes these conditions of perverted consciousness follow immediately or remotely after injuries to the head; at other times they occur in patients who are known to be epileptic. In some cases crimes are committed by individuals who are probably epileptic, or at least sufferers from some of these epileptoid affections of consciousness, but who are not known to be afflicted by disease. In these latter cases in particular doubts and difficulties arise, and occasionally, at least, individuals go to the gallows for crimes which they have undoubtedly committed, but of which they have no more absolute knowledge than the innocent babe. A plea of this kind should, of course, always be weighed and sifted; but it should not be discarded on a priori grounds.—Philadelphia Polyclinic.

Domestic Home Rule Exemplified.

An Ottawa correspondent says: The latest story on the question of Home Rule is coupled with the name of Mr. Baker, of Victoria, B.C. The story runs that during the elections Mr. Baker was asked what stand he had taken in Parliament on the question of Home Rule. For the life of him he could not remember at the moment how he had voted, but with ready wit, pointing to Mrs. Baker, who occupied a seat on the platform, he asked if the audience did not think he had Home Rule enough right on the premises to be able to form a just and righteous conclusion. Mr. Baker weighs 126 lbs., his wife 219, and thereafter his campaign was not troubled with the question of Ireland's wrongs.

Seen Through Different Spectacles.

House-hunter—I like the looks of the building very well. I'll bring my wife to see it this afternoon. This is a good, quiet neighborhood, I presume?

Owner—One of the best in the city. My own house is just above. On the other side, where you see those little folks playing, Mr. Bills, the insurance man, resides. The children, however, are charming little people. You don't object to children, I hope.

House-hunter—Not at all. I have six of my own.

Owner (frigidly)—Ah! That makes a difference. I'm afraid I can't let you have the house. Can you find your way out? That's right. Turn the knob to the left.

Arrested for Fraud.

A Detroit despatch of April 23rd says: Sylvester Godbold was in the retail grocery business at Galt, Ont., until March, 1887, when he made an assignment to F. H. Lamb, and on April 11th came to Detroit. Yesterday he was arrested by the sheriff on a capias issued by Circuit Court Commissioner Weiss, at the instance of F. H. Lamb, who charges Godbold with concealing money and property belonging, by virtue of four accepted drafts amounting to $669.23, to Messrs. W. H. Gillard & Co., of Hamilton. Commissioner Weiss set the examination for next Tuesday.

The Virginia Girl in Love.

Here a young man may visit a girl several times a week and pay her a great deal of public attention, and yet it will never occur to her that he is in love with her unless he tries to make her think so. Even then, if she is sensible, he must be very direct and sincere about it before she believes him. But we do not publish our engagements, and a girl may have many gentleman friends even when she is engaged.—Virginia Girl in Home Journal.

The spring poetry received at this office is apparently not intended for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

It is easier to get up with the lark when you go to bed without one.

The first time old Fogiboy saw a telegraph line he remarked: "Cracky! but it takes a heap o' wire to keep them poles steady, and it must be plaguey expensive, too!"

"Mother, have I got any children?" asked little Johnny Fizzletop. "Why, no, child; what put that into your head?" "You read in the Bible about children's children. That's what put it into my head."

He Voted Aye.

Everybody in Dakota knows Wilbur F. Steele. He was a member of the Legislature from Steele county. There is an incident in Steele's legislative career that goes very far to show his characteristic regard for his wife. He has one fault, however. He takes no stock in woman suffrage—except where he is obliged to. On the occasion in question the Woman Suffrage Bill was before the House. Maj. Pickley was championing the cause of the fair sex in eloquent words when a call was made for a vote and the clerk proceeded to call the roll. When Steele's name was reached he rose with the dignity of a Demosthenes and commenced:

"Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I cannot support the Bill, but—

At that moment a well-dressed lady was seen to bend over the gallery rail. In a loud voice she exclaimed:

"W-i-l-b-u-r!"

He glanced upward. It was enough. He turned and said:

"Mr. Speaker, I vote aye."

The lady was Steele's wife.—Minneapolis Journal.

As if by Magic.

This is always the case when Polson's Nerviline is applied to any kind of pain; it is sure to disappear as if by magic. Stronger, more penetrating, and quicker in action than any other remedy in the world. Buy a bottle of Nerviline to-day, and try its wonderful power of relieving pain of every description. Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is just the thing to have in a house to meet a sudden attack of illness. Only 25 cents a bottle. Sample bottles only 10 cents, at any drug store.

—The word "boycott" has been adopted as a verb in Murray's English dictionary. It has been taken up in nearly every European language, e.g., French, boycotter; Dutch, boycotten, German, boycottiren; Russian, boikottirovat.

Don't Read This

if you have a sufficiency of this world's goods, but if you have not, write to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, and receive, free, full particulars about work that you can do, and live at home, wherever you are located, at a profit of from $5 to $25 per day, and upwards. All succeed; both sexes, all ages. All is new. Capital not required; Hallett & Co. will start you. Don't delay; investigate at once, and grand success will attend you.

—One of the policemen engaged in the Rahway mystery has consulted an astrologer in his effort to find a clue. Recent events have shown that an astrologer may have very accurate knowledge concerning the fate of missing girls.

Mr. Chas. Lehmorun formerly of Shakespere, Ont., writes from Oconomowoc, Wis., that McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant is making wonderful cures of rheumatism, sciatica and lumbago in most extreme cases to be found in that locality.

Proverbs of Every-day Life.

It is time for a young man to swear off when he mistakes a lamp-post for a perpendicular bed.

Many talk the loudest against sin when they are walking arm-in-arm with the devil.—From the Washington Hatchet.

The man who jumps overboard is supposed to be over-bored with life.

—The latest invention is similar to the contrivance by which money and small parcels are carried in shops, and is intended for restaurants. You take your seat at the table and give your order. In an incredibly short space of time, a cup of coffee, plate of fish, half-dozen fried, etc., come shooting noiselessly along overhead, then gracefully descend to the table before you.

The Blueberry is a valuable fruit, and is a reliable fruit to grow in the Northern States, where the more tender varieties winter kills. It is perfectly hardy, will stand 40 degrees below zero without showing any injury to the most tender buds. Fruit ripens in this latitude about the first of July. Color, a bluish black, when fully ripened. The flavor is equal to the raspberry, a very mild, rich sub-acid, pronounced by most people delicious. The fruit is excellent for pies, or canned for winter use. It grows very stocky; the shining dark-green leaves and the blue fruit make a pleasing contrast. It seems to flourish in all soils and is a prolific bearer. One dozen plants by mail, carefully packed in oil paper, 60 cts.; two dozen by mail, $1.00; 100 by express, $2.50; 1,000, $15.00.

Address L. D. STAPLES, Portland, Mich.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the disease, by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer who will give me their P. O. and express.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

D C N L. 18. 87.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, MAY. 5, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Markdale does not want our Division Court—because it can't get it, for one reason, and because it doesn't want it, for another. And two "werry good reasons they be," as Sam Weller would say.

Horsemen getting their route bills or other printing done in our job office have been and always will be liberally treated in the columns of The Advance. Those who do not get their printing done here will have to pay ten cents per line for local notices. This is plain English but it is the rule in all well regulated printing offices.

This is the season of the year when the small boy goeth out into the back yard and delveth into the bowels of the earth in search of worms; which, when he findeth enough to last for about fourteen days, he hieth himself to the nearest creek and casteth his hook and line into the waters thereof, and crieth "bully fun" when he draweth forth a speckled beauty. In the course of the day he teareth the seat out of his pants on an unseen knot and falleth into the water and getteth wet and mad. Then when the dews of evening begin to fall he returneth home, getteth spanked for playing truant, tearing his pants, getting wet, and is sent to bed supperless. Poor boy! sad is thy lot. Next day, however, he goes afishing again!

Coming down street on Thursday last we were told such a yarn about the Markdale Standard's alleged attack upon us, that we could come to no other conclusion than that our contemporary had suddenly become as frisky as a bob-tailed horse in fly time. Judge the astonishment which tickled our cranium when on opening that esteemed and venerable journal we found—instead of an attack, as we had been led to expect—two items clipped from The Advance and introduced to Standard readers in the following graceful language: "The following sensible items appeared in last week's Flesherton Advance." What a grand thing it is to be sensible—and say sensible things? Of course The Advance is always sensible.

That notorious Bradford Prophet is out again for April, May and June. We had thought some kind friend would suggest an early death of the publication to the publisher. This is not a healthy climate for weather prophets. Somehow or other the weather is changeable and mostly always fails to connect. A storm is predicted for a certain day, sure—it's to be a regular snorter, and none of your common five cent affairs. The day comes, but no storm—not even a semblance of one. Perhaps a cog has been broken and it has been obliged to howl around the Pacific ocean or some other distant place until the repair has been made. Then it comes, but too late to repair the damage done to the Prophet's reputation. Let The Prophet beware of big storms and such like, ever keeping in mind the fate of Wiggins, Moses Oates and the rest.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf)

TOWNSHIP ASSESSMENT.

Recently we complained that the Township assessment was "all out of joint." So it is, but this is certainly not attributable to any fault of the present Assessor, Mr. McLaughry; nor was the former Assessor wholly to blame. Our real motives in referring to the Township assessment in our issue of April 21st having been misunderstood, we have felt called upon this week to rise and explain. Our remarks have been construed into a personal attack upon the present Assessor. This was and is incorrect, although they certainly were intended as a note of warning to the ratepayers generally, including the Assessor.

What we really aimed to convey to the minds of our readers was, that the assessment of this Township is conducted on a wrong basis and has been for years back – since its formation for aught we know. There does not seem to have been any very determined attempt to equalize the assessment, so that each ratepayer would not be called on to pay any more than a fair and just proportion of taxes. Therefore we find some properties assessed at full cash value, some at two-thirds their value, and others at half and, in some cases, less than half cash value. If there is anything fair or just about that style of assessing property, we'd like somebody to pop up and say so!

Now, about Assessor McLaughry, we wish our readers and the public generally distinctly to understand, that we are not and have not been finding fault with his work—as yet, at anyrate—although some have so interpreted our remarks on the subject. He is a young and inexperienced officer, only recently appointed to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Whitby. As a matter of fact he will have to follow pretty much in the footsteps of his predecessor—for this season at least. He could not adopt a new basis on such short notice, neither would any sane person expect him to do so. But we did wish to create a lively interest in the minds of Artemesia ratepayers, which might find vent at the proper time and at the proper place, viz., on the 15th June next at the Court of Revision to be held in the Township Hall here. And if the ratepayers would only turn out in full force on that occasion, represent their greivances in an intelligible manner- distinctly giving the members of the Council Board to understand that a change was necessary and desirable, we were of opinion—when that objectionable editorial note was penned—that the year of our Lord 1888 would find a better system of assessment inaugurated than prevails at the present time. We are still of that opinion.

As Others See Us.

We clip the following from last week's issue of the Chatsworth News:—

We visited Flesherton last Thursday, Division Court Day there, and were pleased to meet a great many of our old friends and customers. Flesherton has improved greatly in the last few years, among the most noticeable improvements being Mr. M. Richardson's handsome three story brick block, elegantly fitted and furnished and well stocked with goods. While we were well pleased to see that Mr. Richardson is doing well we were sorry to learn that our esteemed friend Mr. R. J. Sproule has met with reverses in business, but we hope before long to hear that he is again prospering in business, as we found Mr. Trimble doing. We dropped in on Brother Fawcett and found him steeped to the eyes in business, turning out fresh editoral matter and studying up more for next issue of the Advance. We were pleased to see our old friend Mr. W. H. Johnson doing well in his livery business. Will has a fine lot of horses, among which are a pair of matched bloods, and all are excellent drivers, and he hitches to first-class rigs. Call on him when you are in Flesherton. As we said before it was court day and we attended in the capacity of a witness. There was a number of trifling cases on hand, which His Honor, Judge Lane, disposed of after patiently hearing the pros and cons of the parties interested.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS GIVEN LAST WEEK.

(13)- Amount of risk, $570.50.
(14) 13⅓ %.
(15)—18 % or 9-50.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS RECEIVED.

Flesherton P.S.

Martha Beatty 3, Fred. Ayers 3, Wm. Dinwoody 3, Bert. Armstrong 2, Lou Armstrong 1, May Damude 3, Lewis Ludlow 3, Wesley Smith 1, J. F. VanDusen 3, Lizzie Richardson 3, Lizzie Swanton 3. Total 28.

S. S. No. 9, Artemesia.

Margaret J., Alex. and Elizabeth A. Cameron, two each. Total 6.

Markdale P. S.

Pythagoras Thibadeau 3.

S. S. No. 3 Artemesia.

Annie Ekins 3, J. W. Caswell, 2, W.J. Moore 3. Total 8.

Questions for Next Week.

(16)—What is the present worth of a note of $75 due in 1 year, 3 mos., money being worth 10 %?

(17) -A note of $100 bearing 6 % interest is drawn for 10 months. What will it produce if discounted at once at 9 % true discount.

(18) - Find amount of $600 for 3 years at 6 %, compound interest.

(19) -The proceeds of a note having 2 years to run is $90; find its face value, at being discounted at 8 %.

(20)—I insure a house worth $600 it 3 %, so as to lose only $50 including premium if destroyed; find the amount of the risk.

Our Township Fathers.

Regular Monthly Meeting for the Transaction of Business.

Council met in the Township Hall, Flesherton, on Monday last, May 2nd, at 10:30 a. m.

All members present.

Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that the following accounts be paid, viz, J. W. Bates, coffin for N. Boyles, indigent, $7.00; and A. R. Fawcett, $22.05, for printing 200 Auditors' Reports, advertising abstract Treasurer's report, advtg. tenders, &c.—Carried.

McArthur, Boland—That the tender of J. E. Moore, for repairing and painting the Township Hall, be accepted, providing that he agrees to complete the work according to specifications—Carried.

Cairns, McArthur—That Mr Sharp and the Reeve be appointed to let job on cranberry marsh. Carried.

McArthur, Sharp—That the Reeve and Clerk be a committee to draft a Blank Bond for contractors to sign when contracting for Road Jobs and have two hundred printed for the commissioners. Carried.

Boland, McArthur—That the Township Clerk be instructed to instruct the County Treasurer to redeem Lot No. 4 Cavan street, Markdale, for the Township.—Carried.

Sharp, McArthur—That the Council accept Wm. Strain's Road Scrapers at $9 each, providing he deliver them 3 in each ward.—Carried.

Boland, McArthur—That this Council meet on the fifteenth day of June, when the Court of Revision will be held.—Carried.

"Northern Wonder's" Route.

MONDAY, MAY 2nd, will leave his own stable, Lot 9, Con. 19, and proceed to Atkinson's Hotel, Priceville, at noon, thence by North Line of Artemesia, to Thomas McArthur's remaining one hour, thence to Malcolm Ferguson's, Brown Farm, for the night.

TUESDAY, will proceed up the Back Line by Jacob Holley's, to Joseph Beatty's, at noon, thence to Wm. Anderson's 6th Con., Glenelg, for the night.

WEDNESDAY, will proceed to Henry Tucker's Glenelg, for noon, thence to Thomas Bell's, 19th Con., Egremont, for the night.

THURSDAY, will proceed to Robert Long's, 16th Con., Egremont, for noon, thence to Jas. Paul's, Con., 11, for the night.

FRIDAY, will proceed to Scarlet's Hotel, Hopeville, at noon, thence to Samuel Egerton's, Proton, Con. 12, for the night.

SATURDAY, will proceed to Andrew McAuley's, at noon, thence to his own stable where he will remain until the following Monday morning.

The above route will be continued during the season health and weather permitting.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

LEITCHS

Tailoring Establishment

FLESHERTON!

Is the place to get your Suits made in future.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$2 00 to 2 10
Fall Wheat	$0 78 to 0 80
Spring Wheat	0 78	0 80
Barley	0 35	0 48
Oats	0 27	0 27
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 12½	0 13½
Eggs, fresh	0 10	0 10
Potatoes	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 75	5 75
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16	16
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 35	0 35
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

SCROFULA

Humors,

Erysipelas,

Canker, and

Catarrh,

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Prince, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON.
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED Dr CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a derangement of the liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood.

500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford.

Flesherton
Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

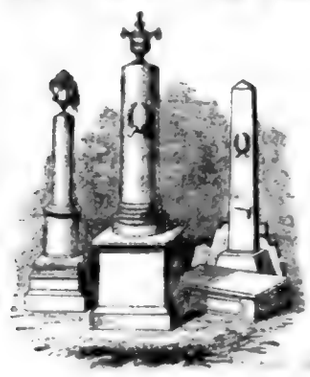
STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints Incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival, and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
(304-39). Flesherton

FARM for SALE

—OR—

TO RENT.

BEING Lot 170, Con. 1 West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Well watered. Orchard. About 2½ miles from Flesherton. For full particulars apply to the undersigned,

JOHN O'NEILL,
Flesherton.

FARM FOR SALE.

BEING Lot 158, 1st E.T. & S.R., Artemesia, one mile from Flesherton, containing 50 acres, all cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Never-failing stream of water runs across farm; also a never-failing spring of water. New bank barn 36x56, with stone stabling full size of barn, underneath. Log House. Good soil and free from frost. Part payment down, time on balance. For full particulars, apply to

D. L. WHITE, Agt.,
Flesherton.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH Interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER, - THORNBURY

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

SAD SHOOTING ACCIDENT!

A Gun Accidentally Explodes and Inflicts Terrible Wounds on Two Young Men.

From our Maxwell Correspondent.

Our Maxwell correspondent sends us the following particulars of the sad shooting accident on Monday last in the Township of Osprey:—

"Quite an excitement was created here on Monday last, when word was brought to the village that two young men of the village were shot. It appears that Thomas Blakely and Wm. Ferrier were out on a shooting excursion and on going down the bluffs of rock on the bank of the Beaver River, Thomas Blakely, who was somewhat in advance of his comrade, fell on the rocks, the gun striking a stone exploded in his arms, the shot tearing quite a large gash in his left arm. But poor William, who was a short distance above the rocks, recived about a dozen grains of shot in his limbs and body. Quite a crowd gathered at the place of the accident as soon as possible and he was carried home in a very weak condition. Hopes are entertained that he is not fatally injured." Dr. Kerr is doing everything that medical shill can suggest.

The accident was one that might have happened with the most skillful sportsman, and no blame whatever can be attached to Mr. Blakely, who, quite naturally, has been plunged into the deepest despair through the unfortunate occurence.

LATER.—Wm. Ferrier was not as badly wounded as was at first supposed and will likely be able to move aaound in a few days.

OTHER MAXWELL ITEMS.

Mr. J. Blakely and Mr. C. Little left here on Monday last to seek their fortunes in Nebraska. We wish them all the pleasure and wealthathey anticipate.

The show of horses came off here on the 27th as advertised and quite a display was the result, there being some very fine animals exhibited. But, when the exhibition was over, there was no Committee to be found, and no one seemed to know who they were. So that those who had paid their dollars as entrance had either to shut up or set 'em up.

If people look to their own interests they always take their Watch, Clock, and Jewelry repairs to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. A perfect job every time. 2t.

Hotel Licenses.

Thornbury Standard.

A meeting of the License Commissioners for the East Riding of Grey was held at Mullers Hotel, Clarksburg on Saturday last. Members present were Messrs. T. W. Tyson, T. B. White and W. Brown, and also the License Inspector, Mr. James Campbell. Licenses granted were as follows, viz., the Queens Hotel, Clarksburg, Mrs. J. U. Muller, the Royal Hotel, Clarksburg, Capt. E. H. Parsley; the Revere Hotel, Thornbury, M. J. Reynolds; Low House, Thornbury, C. Wiggins; Ravenna Hotel, Ravenna, W. Weir; Globe Hotel, Heathcote, S. Rowe; Munshaw Hotel, Flesherton, A. Munshaw; Lorne House, Rocklyn, W. Dodson. Applications from Markdale, Feversham, Maxwell, McIntyre's Corners, Kimberley, Cedarville and Dundalk were laid over. Two complaints were laid against the Royal Hotel, Clarksburg, and fully investigated by the Commissioners, and after mature deliberation they dismissed them, all holding that the Royal Hotel, Clarksburg, was one of the best if not the best conducted hotels in the East Riding of Grey. Three petitions from Temperance Societies in Kimberley were laid before the Commissioners praying not to license any hotel at Kimberley. The Commissioners will take these petitions into consideration.

Honor Roll, for March.

KIMBERLEY SCHOOL.

Fourth Class.—F. Thurston 253, J. Dynes 220, A. Thurston 194, E. Carruthers 184, E. Dynes 184.

Third Class.—R. Abercrombie 136, P. Dynes 126, E. Graham 123, J. Howell 117.

Sr. Second Class.—J. Hammond 131, R. Howe 126, J. Carruthers 117, H. Fawcett 113.

Jr. Second Class.—N. Gilbert 153, Wm. Mundle 127, E. Lawrence 126, Wm. Lawrence 122.

No. on Roll for month 92
Highest attendance.....74
Average 65

S. GAUDIN, Teacher.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices.

R. TEMPLE. (tf.)

A SPELLING MATCH.

Pupils of Two Artemesia School Sections try Conclusions.

Between the Mathematical Editor's corner in The Advance and keenly contested spelling matches between pupils of various school sections, educational matters in Artemesia have reached a dizzy, enthusiastic pitch.

Above paragraph copyrighted,—All rights reserved.

Last Friday afternoon the Editor of this paper attended a spelling match in the schoolhouse of S. S. No. 4, Artemesia. When he arrived at the door the whole atmosphere seemed charged to the muzzle with strains of sweetest music. On opening the door he found the senior pupils ranged at the head of the room and pouring forth such a melody of song as must have held the attention of the most critical connoiseur of vocal music. It was a sacred piece and a deep hush fell on the hearers as they listened, enraptured, to those pure child-like voices. The singing ceased and as the talented young vocalists filed off to their seats the applause was enthusiastic and spontaneous. Then we were introduced to the zealous and pains-taking teacher of S. S. No. 4, Mr. Clemis, after which the rules of the match were arranged between that gentleman and our respected friend, Mr. C. J. Sproule, of S. S. No. 3. Sides were chosen, a Third Reader placed in the hands of ye Editor and the tug of war commenced. For half an hour the wordy warfare was continued without interruption, amidst breathless excitement on the part of the spectators. Some of the spellers were rather nervous and went down on words they could easily have spelled under different circumstances; while others were cool and self-possessed throughout. At the end of half an hour four pupils of S.S. No. 3 and six of S.S. No. 4 were left standing. Then came a brief intermission, after which the stubborn contest was renewed, the Fourth Reader being used instead of the Third. Miss Atkinson, Teacher in S. S. No. 2, Proton, was referee and performed her duties very impartially. One by one the spellers dropped out of the ranks until only Miss Annie Akins and Master Newton Large remained standing by the colors of S. S. No. 3 and Miss Bannon maintained the now unequal contest alone on the part of No. 4. Now came a "jaw-breaker." Miss Bannon made a brave effort, but, being somewhat nervous, left out but one letter, and the palm of the hard-won victory rested with S. S. No. 3. Next came some of that grand singing for which No. 4 is so justly celebrated.

Brief speeches were next made by the genial chairman, Mr. Bannon, A. R. Fawcett, and Mr. C. J. Sproule. The last named gentleman paid a very graceful compliment to Mr. Clemis and the pupils of No. 4. "God save the Queen" brought the interesting proceedings to a close.

Ye Editor, in company with Mr. Sproule, the Misses Atkinson, and Mr. Clemis, spent a most enjoyable evening at the residence of Mr. James Best, and were most hospitably and right royally entertained by that gentleman and his amiable lady.

(SPRINGHILL SPELLING ASSOCIATION.)

No. 3, is in good fighting trim now, so that we need not be surprised to hear of them wanting to try conclusions with the Flesherton "Maple Leaf Spelling association" at an early date.

So mote it be.

It will pay you to come 20 miles to secure some of the terrible bargains that are going at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Come at once. 2t.

"Billy V."

This is rather an odd name, but it is applied to one the handsomest roadster stallions in Northern Ontario. "Billy V." is the property of A. S. VanDusen, Esq., of this town, and will make the season of 1887 as per route, &c., advertised in our columns elsewhere. "Billy V." is only three years old, stands 15 hands 3 inches high, weighs 1150 pounds and for bone, muscle, style and action is without a peer. He was sired by that famous horse, Clear Grit, Jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger, so that it will be seen he comes of well bred ancestors. A personal inspection has satisfied us fully that he is all that his enterprising proprietor claims him to be. The importance of using such first-class stock must be apparent to all progressive stock-raisers.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Miss Mittie Fraine.

Notwithstanding the downpour of rain a fair audience attended the entertainment in the Methodist church, Flesherton, last Thursday evening. Miss Mittie Fraine has a very pleasing appearance and created a decidedly favorable impression. Her rendering of the "creed of the Bells" was certainly the best we have ever heard, and, judging by the enthusiastic encore which followed, the majority of those present held a similiar opinion. "Searching Among the Slain" was strikingly realistic and brought tears to many eyes. But it is in humorous pieces that she excels, although she has few equals in any one department. Her powers as an elocutionist are remarkable in many respects. For instance, a certain selection, if read by a clumsy amateur, (yea, or by a clumsy professional) might fail to awaken that deep and intense interest which the author intended. Place the same selection in the hands of an earnest and painstaking artiste, such as Miss Fraine, and what hidden beauties are suddenly revealed!—at once we are enabled to grasp what the author intended should be conveyed to the minds of his readers or hearers as the case might be. Look at the hidden depths in the immortal Shakespeare as revealed by cultivated disciples of David Garrick. What to the casual reader is often hazy and monotonous, becomes charmingly realistic, interesting and instructive when rendered by Miss Fraine and all equally earnest elocutionists.

The readings (or recitations for they were all committed to memory) were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music. This part of the program was well sustained by Misses Damude, Armstrong, Richardson and Christoe, Mrs. W. W. Trimble, Mrs. Dr. Armstrong, and Messrs. Russell & Barnhouse, the latter being loudly encored. Dr. Christoe occupied the chair in his usual happy manner.

SUNDAY EVENING.

On Sunday evening Miss Fraine delivered a practical and interesting address from the pulpit of the Methodist church to a very large congregation. She seems to be an earnest and zealous Christian lady, and her remarks created quite a profound and, we believe, a lasting impression. We understand, that she also delivered a brief but beautiful address to the Sabbath School children in the afternoon.

Volunteers.

No. 6 Company, 31st Batt. will meet at the Drill Shed, Flesherton, on Saturday evenings for drill, until further orders. 25 young men wanted to fill up the above company. Apply to J. J. Field, Lieut., No. 6 Company, Flesherton. t.f.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stoveall, M. D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases.—M. A. Rust, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.—S. P. Henderson, Saulsburgh, Penn.

Cured By Using

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured.—Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Mr. Charlton introduced a Bill to amend the Seduction Act and to make further provisions for the protection of women and girls, and moved the first reading, seconded by Mr. Mitchell.

Sir John Macdonald in moving the first reading of the Bill to establish a Ministry of Trade and Commerce, said the Bill was similar to one introduced in 1867, and defined the duties of the Minister and the nature of the department. Bills would be introduced for reorganization of certain departments, and he would ask the House at the proper time to consider the organisation and reorganization together.

Mr. Mitchell asked whether it is the intention of the Government to lay before the House the correspondence which has taken place in relation to the Fishery question between the Canadian and the British Governments and the Government of the United States, and if so, when?

Hon. Mr. Foster—The correspondence will be laid before the House on Friday.

Hon. Mr. Pope, replying to Mr. Amyot, said that the $960,000 voted in 1884 for the extension of the C. P. R. to Quebec harbor had been invested in bonds and the interest was held to make up any deficiency in the running of the road.

Mr. Casgrain asked who is now acting as High Commissioner for Canada in London? Has Sir Charles Tupper continued to act since his return to Canada, and is he still acting as such, ad interim or otherwise?

Sir John Macdonald said that Sir Charles Tupper had consented to act without salary or emolument, while he was in Canada. Mr. Colmer acted as charge d'Affaires, or Secretary of Legation.

Mr. Curran, on rising to move his resolutions in condemnation of the Coercion Bill, was received without cheers. He said he was confident the position he took and the action he was to propose would meet with the favor of at least 80 per cent. of the Canadian people. He was proud that no Canadian newspaper, so far as he knew, in discussing this question, had spoken against the principle of Home Rule. It was true some had declared this resolution in its form was insensate and stupid, but he would recover very soon from the criticisms of men expressing such opinions. Irland was not alone in this great contest, for she was being joined by Scotland and Wales, while her plea was sustained by practically all those colonies which knew by experience the blessings of local control of local affairs. It was said that the Protestants of Ireland were opposed to Home Rule, but it was not so. He read the report of a meeting of Irish Protestants in Dublin recently held protesting against coercion and favoring Home Rule. He dwelt upon the probable effects of coercion, and said that it would strike a direct blow at those who had conducted the constitutional agitation for Irish liberty which had challenged the admiration of the whole world, for the political descendants of the men who had spent millions in debauching a Parliament to deprive a nation of its liberties would hardly hesitate at the peccadillo of packing a jury to ruin the influence of a man who stood in their way. He closed by moving the resolutions of which he had given notice.

Mr. Patterson (Essex) seconded the resolution.

Mr. McNeil, after eulogizing Mr. Curran's ability and devotion to the cause of Ireland, expressed regret at the introduction of this resolution. It was true the House had last year passed a resolution on this subject in favor of Home Rule, but it was modified by a demand for the full recognition of the rights and position of the minority. The leader of the Opposition had with that dove-like innocence which characterized his course always—sought to commit the House to agreement in full with Mr. Gladstone's Bill, which was then before the British House, but the effort was unsuccessful. It was the first duty of a Government to maintain the law, and in any event this must be done. The steps necessary to do this were better known to those in charge of affairs in Britain and to the people of Britain than the people of Canada. It was to be deplored that the Coercion Bill was introduced. It was to be regretted that there was any criminal law, but the same phases of society which made the criminal law necessary, made it necessary, in the opinion of the British Government, Parliament and people of England, that coercion should be established. Were an effort made to establish Home Rule without recognition of the rights of the minority it would result in civil war, for every man of the minority would fight for his rights to the last gasp. He feared that if this resolution were passed it would give encouragement, not to the poor peasantry of Ireland, but to those who were enemies of the Empire, Fenian traitors to the Queen. He moved the following amendment:

That this House desires to repeat the expression of its deep and abiding interest in the prosperity and happiness of the people of Ireland and its sentiments upon the subject of Home Rule enunciated in the joint address of both Houses of Parliament passed in the session of 1882 and the resolution adopted by this House in 1886. This House is, however, unable to form or express an opinion as to the merits or demerits of the Bill for the amendment of the criminal law with respect to Ireland now before the Imperial Parliament in the absence of the measure itself and of the papers and evidence on which it was based.

Mr. Kenny spoke briefly, supporting Mr. Curran's resolution.

Mr. Flynn referred to the land troubles in Prince Edward Island, when the people broke out into open revolt, which had to be suppressed by military force, but when the Government stepped in and allowed the people to purchase their holdings peace returned and prosperity reigned again. No more law-abiding and peaceful people existed than those of Prince Edward Island. The right to agitate for the reform of abuses and for the extension of liberty educated the people in the principles of government and made them loyal to the laws which they themselves authorized. He denied that crime had increased in Ireland. He gave statistics quoted by Mr. Gladstone to show that never had there been less crime in Ireland than there was at this time. To deprive the people of the right to agitate for reform must lead to most regrettable acts. In the Maritime Provinces, before the principle of local control over local affairs was admitted, the people were in a state of constant discontent. This state of affairs was a constant source of trouble to the Mother Country. If repression had been longer continued he believed there would have been an outbreak, but Home Rule was granted and the people became at once contented. Mr. Gladstone had declared that there were two roads, coercion and greater local liberties. They had tried the first long enough; let them try the other now.

Mr. O'Brien expressed regret that these resolutions had been introduced. The House had voted last year in favor of Home Rule, but only on condition that the rights of the minority should be protected. It seemed to be assumed in this debate that the people of Ireland were a unit in favor of Home Rule, but there were a million and a half of people in Ireland who would not submit to such a measure as Mr. Gladstone proposed. He referred to the charges against Parnell and other Irish leaders, that they had entered coolly upon a system of assassination, and declared that these resolutions called upon the House to express sympathy with men convicted—for he held they were convicted, as the evidence admitted of no doubt—of using such means as this in furthering their agitations. He denounced the League for sending an emissary to dog, as he said, the footsteps of the Governor-General because he did, in his capacity of Irish landlord, something which the League did not like. He regretted to see also that Archbishop Lynch had sent to a public meeting a letter which in effect incited Irish sympathizers in Canada to insult Her Majesty's representative. The question has been asked of the Government, he believed, whether this emissary of the National League was to be placed under police surveillance. He (O'Brien) could tell him that it was more in the nature of police protection he would require, for if he tried to carry out the programme laid down by the League there were men in every town and village in this country who would convince him that the representatives of Her Majesty was not to be thus treated with impunity.

Mr. Casey said that the last speaker had given a specimen of the fairness and freedom from the bias of those who favored coercion. He had taken certain newspaper statements and upon them held the leaders of the Irish Nationalists to be guilty of the gravest crimes. It was true there were differences between the circumstances of Ireland and those of Canada, but the principle of Home Rule was as good for one as it was for the other, and means should be found to apply it, so as to meet the different circumstances. It was true that the Government of Mr. Gladstone had declined to accept the suggestion of Canada in 1882, but Canadians would be unworthy of their position if they accepted this snub, thereby acknowledging that they had no right even to approach the theme and subject in which they were deeply interested. The statement was made by the members for North Bruce (McNeil) and Muskoka (O'Brien) that the minority in Ireland would not submit to a measure such as that proposed by Mr. Gladstone, plainly making a threat on behalf of that minority of an appeal to arms should such an Act be passed. Such a threat would hardly influence those who believed in Home Rule in their favor.

Mr. Wallace (West York) said he was in favor of a measure of Home Rule, but thought the House was not in a position to express an intelligent opinion on this question of coercion. To pass the original resolutions would be to endorse the policy and actions of Parnell and other Nationalist leaders, and there was now a cloud hanging over them. He found in the London Times a letter of fearful import signed "Charles S. Parnell."

Mr. Jones said that the people of Ireland, who were seeking redress in a constitutional way, could not be charged with disloyalty. One-half of the population of Halifax were from the old land, and they were all engaged in the advancement of the welfare of the country although he could look back to a time when such was not the case. When Irishmen left the Old Country and came to Canada they were found to be leading citizens of this country. It was in the interest of the British race that they should see this question speedily settled, and therefore he had much pleasure in supporting the resolution.

Mr. Laurier resumed the debate on Mr. Curran's resolutions against coercion in Ireland and Mr. McNeill's amendment declaring that the House was not in a position to express an opinion upon the question. He said that under ordinary circumstances it would not be necessary for the House to further express its opinion upon Irish affairs, but the circumstances under which Ireland found herself to-day were not ordinary. The mover of the amendment (Mr. McNeill) had directed an able and well-tempered speech to prove that coercion was necessary in Ireland, but he concluded by an amendment to commit the House to the view that it could not express an opinion on this subject for want of information. He thought that Canadians, and especially French Canadians, were a standing proof that Home Rule tended to peace and union instead of to discontent and disunion. After all there were only two ways of governing a people tyranny, or coercion, if they choose so to call it, and freedom. They might govern by tyranny a degraded and inferior race, but they could not so govern a proud and self-respecting people. To suppress crime the proper way was to suppress the temptation to crime. Rebellion did not come without some moving cause. The doctrine had of late been taught in this House that people armed themselves and faced the fearful chances of open revolt out of sheer wantonness, but it was not so. It was said there were demagogues in Ireland who incited the people to discontent. It might be so, but these demagogues would have no power if the people were not laboring under unredressed grievances. It was urged that the great Liberal leaders of England had refused to trust the Irish people and to concede Home Rule. But the Irish people were not the only ones whom even the most advanced men of their time had hesitated to trust. In proof of this he went briefly into the history of French Canadian discontent, showing how their grievances had been set forth, after investigation by Lord Durham, but when the proposal was made to grant a measure of Home Rule to Canada, even so great a Liberal leader as Lord John Russell opposed it on the ground that it would not be safe to trust the people so fully. But when Home Rule was granted discontent disappeared in a very few years, and all would agree with him that no people more loyal to the Crown existed than the French Canadians. What would be the condition of Canada to-day if the old course had been followed of keeping the people in subjection? (Hear, hear.) The condition of the Irish people was the most miserable in Europe. Was there no remedy? There was. It was not coercion, but freedom. Let Britain trust the Irish people as they had trusted the Canadian people and the problem would be solved. In order to make the Government of Ireland strong it was necessary only to make the people free.

Mr. Costigan was the first speaker after recess. He advised Mr. Curran not to accept any amendment to the resolutions unless he were satisfied that it would add to their strength. He denied the statements of crime charged by certain of the speakers against the Irish people. He further defended himself against the charge that he had rendered null the last Home Rule resolutions. Mr. Costigan spoke shortly, but well.

Mr. McCarthy opened by sensibly remarking that the discussion had taken so wide a range that it might be as well to look for a moment at the matter they had to decide upon. He went on to say that he, on this question, could not say that he could voice the sentiments of his constituents because he could not pretend to voice an opinion that had not been delivered. They had pronounced before on the question of Home Rule, but what were they being led to now? They were being asked to pronounce upon a legislative enactment at present before the Imperial Parliament and he, for one, was not prepared to say that they were not going beyond the powers delegated to them if they attempted such an act. He said that the tenantry in Ireland were better off than the tenantry of Canada. It was not for him to say whether Parnell had written that letter in the Times or not, but until he took the way open to him to clear his name and sued the alleged libeller, he for one would not vote to send him a copy of the resolution. In conclusion McCarthy moved an amendment to the amendment to the effect that the Canadian Parliament had no business to interfere with legislative matters before the Imperial Parliament.

Mr. Davin pointed out that if they did pass Home Rule there would be still the same number of landlords and the same number of tenants, and the tenant who would not pay his rent now would not pay it then.

Scott Act Jottings.

Mr. Dalton McCarthy has given notice of a Bill to amend the Canada Temperance Act. It is believed that the Bill will provide for the sale of wine and beer in Scott Act constituencies.

The Dominion Alliance Legislative Committee recommend that the amendments to the Scott Act refused last session be again applied for, and that a Prohibitory Bill be introduced. This was adopted.

The Scott Act is being vigorously enforced in the county of Lincoln. Six Port Dalhousie hotel-keepers went to St. Catharines on Wednesday and paid $50 each as fines for illegal liquor selling, and complaints have been lodged against about twenty people in Niagara for the same offence.

Prof. Foster explained to the Dominion Alliance yesterday that, while he is individually in favor of prohibition, there is no immediate chance of prohibitory legislation. Such a measure, affecting revenue, must originate with the Government, and the Government is not going to propose a measure which must ensure its own defeat.

An Upheaval at the Falls.

The Suspension Bridge, N.Y., Journal says: One of the strangest miracles—if you may call it such—occurred here this winter that seems almost incredible. On a certain day during the month of March, when the ice was coming down the river thick and fast, a high mound of that solid substance accumulated on the very brink of the American Falls, about midway between Prospect Point and Luna Island. The mound usually reaches the height of about twenty feet or more, and it resembles a perfect circus tent. The cause of this formation is owing to the shallowness of the water at this point, and as it has formed in this manner winter after winter as long as the "oldest inhabitant" can remember, nothing unusual was said about it. But since the ice has all disappeared there remains a huge rock on the very brink, sticking out above the rapid waters fully ten feet and probably ten or fifteen below the surface.

Mechanics' Lien Law.

In the Ontario Legislature, Mr. Gibson, of Hamilton, has put through a short Bill amending the Mechanics' Lien Law by making it clear that the wages of a mechanic or workman cannot be garnisheed before the registration of the lien during the statutory period. Some county judges have held that amounts due for wages could be attached in this way, others holding differently. Mr. Gibson's amendment makes the law clear and in favor of the mechanic or workman.

No Carelessness There.

"See here, Harry," said one, as they stood in front of a place on Griswold street, "we are now going in among men of money. If you get a chance just carelessly ask some of them if they don't know of something into which you can drop a few thousand dollars."

"Oh, but it wouldn't do."

"And why not?"

"Why, I'd have my tailor and shoemaker after me on old accounts in less than an hour." Detroit Free Press

An Appreciative Husband.

A mourning husband came to see the bust of his dear deceased wife. "Pray study it well," said the sculptor. "It is only clay, and I can alter it." The widower looked at it with most tender interest. "It is her very self!" he exclaimed; "her large nose—the sign of goodness!" Then bursting into tears, he exclaimed: "She was so good! Make her nose a little larger!"—Youth's Companion.

"Tell your mother, Johnny," said his kind maiden aunt, as she placed a piece of cake in his hand, "that I was very sorry your sister couldn't come." "And what will I say," replied little Johnny, with an air of strategy, "if mamma asks where is sister's piece of cake?"

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Latest Fashion Notes.

Claret color is revived among the reds.

Picot-edged ribbons are the most fashionable for all sorts of trimming.

Roses of a vivid red are being used on the new spring hats, combined with velvet of a shade to match the costumes.

Nearly all the new covert coats being turned out by fashionable tailors are of an invisible olive; the tan-colored ones are out of favor.

Neapolitan violet is one of the most delicate of the new tints, but is becoming only to extreme blondes.

The waists of dresses for young women are almost all made with the effect of a crossed fichu front and the leg-o'-mutton sleeves. Basques are but little worn by young girls.

Colored bengalines are seen on silk counters. Some are plain, some striped, plaited and barred. The colors are very pretty, showing old tapestry shades, while the fabric is repped and very pliant.

To wear with her travelling dress a bride chooses a close-brimmed English round hat either of dark straw, the color of the dress, or with the crown covered with the dress material, a velvet brim, and a group of loops or bows of gros-grain ribbon, with corded or looped edges for its trimming.

A pretty dress recently worn at an artist's studio tea was in two shades of silver-gray. The bodice, train and draperies were of cloud-gray velvet. The front was a softly arranged mass of silver-gray crepe de chine embroidered with silk of the same shade.

One of the handsomest of imported spring hats was brought by the wearer from London. It is of black felt, high crowned and broad brimmed. It is raised slightly on one side and the brim grows narrow in the back. It was faced with tiny coal-black cock's feathers placed as closely as they grow. This is more softly becoming to the face than velvet and infinitely more becoming. The only other trimming was a great group of glossy coal-black ostrich plumes tied with a wide bow of velvet.

A pretty and clever new bracelet for wearing at dances has just been invented. Imagine a gold bangle with three slight gold hoops, which a gold pencil-case fits. This pencil is attached to the bracelet by a slender chain, so that when it is drawn out to mark the ball programme there is no need to restore it to its place; it looks very well hanging. Among new jewels for men are sleeve-links and studs of white enamel set with a tiny but very brilliant diamond in the centre.

Handy Helps and Makeshifts.

When cleaning a stove if a small quantity of sugar be put into the stove-blacking it will not burn off so quickly.

It is claimed that holding a shovelful of hot coals over varnished furniture will take out spots and stains. Rub the place while warm with flannel.

To clean tins, making them look almost as nice as new, wash in hot soapsuds, dip a dampened cloth in fine, sifted coal ashes, scour well, then polish with dry ashes.

It is said that the lustre of old picture frames may be restored by washing the gilding in warm water in which an onion has been boiled (after dusting the frame with a brush), drying quickly with soft rags.

To make calicoes wash well infuse three gills of salt in four quarts of boiling water and put the calicoes in while hot and leave them till cold. In this way the colors are rendered permanent and will not fade by subsequent washings.

To remove paint and putty from window-glass put sufficient saleratus into hot water to make a strong solution, and with this saturate the paint or putty which adheres to the glass. Let it remain until nearly dry, then rub off with a woolen cloth.

To preserve carpets against the ravages of the buffalo moth or carpet worm the following process is recommended: Add three tablespoonfuls of turpentine to three quarts of pure cold water; in this mixture steep a sponge, then squeeze it about two-thirds dry and pass it carefully over each breadth separately and in all the corners. As often as the water becomes soiled take a fresh supply. It will cleanse the carpet, besides acting as a disinfectant and moth destroyer.

Useful Recipes.

Crullers.—Two eggs, a pinch of salt, flour enough to knead hard, roll as thin as a wafer, cut in strips and twist; fry in very hot lard.

Puff Pudding.—One pint of boiling milk and nine tablespoonfuls of flour; mix first with a little cold milk. When cold add a little salt and flour, three well-beaten eggs, and bake in a buttered dish. Serve at once.

Aunt Kitty's Suet Pudding.—One cup of molasses, one cup suet, one cup raisins, one cup of milk, two teaspoonfuls baking powder; add flour till very stiff to beat with spoon; put in a steaming pan, or floured bag, and steam constantly for three hours.

Snow Pudding.—One-half box of gelatine dissolved in one pint of water, two cups of sugar, juice of two lemons. Strain when it begins to thicken. Mix in the whites of two eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Mould it before serving; pour around it a soft custard made of the yolks.

White Cake.—One cup of butter, three cups of sugar, beaten to a cream; four cups of flour and half-cup of cornstarch, added alternately with a cup of sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, flavored to taste; lastly, the whites of twelve eggs beaten to a stiff froth.

Progressing.

Clinton is now assessed at $543,700, a slight increase over last year; population, 2,800.

Te increase in population of Galt for the past year was 323. The population is now 6,637, and the assessment $1,611,600. Increase on the year, $71,950!

A contractor who sweeps and partially cleans the streets of Buffalo has been arrested on a warrant charging him with dumping the garbage and filth in the lake above what is known as the inlet pier, so that it affected all the water drawn from the lake for city purposes, either domestic or public.

SEARCHING THE SEA FOR GOLD.

The Fiction of the Present Less Strange than the Truth of the Past.

"Talking about the stories of treasures sunk at sea, which are now so popular," said a lawyer who has had a large experience with the claimants to foreign estates to a New York Mail and Express reporter, "I have on file some facts which largely support the old adage that truth is stranger than fiction. One of the most famous cases of this sort occurred as long ago as 1799, and the salvage operations have been continued to almost the present day. Eighty-eight years ago the ship Lutine sailed from Yarmouth Roads, England, on Oct. 9th, for Texel, laden with twenty-two guns, a number of passengers and £140,000 of specie. She struck on the outer bank of Fly Island passage in a violent gale at night, going to pieces and carrying down with her all on board except two. The treasure had been consigned to Hamburg by certain mercantile firms, and the spot where she went down being within the territory of Holland salvage operations were at once begun, the Dutch Government making a condition that two-thirds of the specie found should go to it and the remainder to the finders. After eighteen months £80,000 were recovered, besides some silver; after which the work was abandoned. In 1814 it was resumed, and kept up for seven years, the result being the recovery of a few paltry pieces of silver. In 1822 a company was formed for the purpose of making a further search for the missing money, the Dutch Government advancing the company a sum of money on condition that it should have half of the find. Several thousand pounds were spent in the work, but nothing was recovered. By this time the wreck had become deeply imbedded in the sand and was extremely difficult to reach by the divers. In 1857 the search was again begun by other speculators. After several years of persistent effort over £25,000 were recovered. In 1871 a special Act of Parliament was passed authorizing the Lloyds to continue this work and these contracts with the Dutch Government. But I have not heard that anything more has been recovered. Possibly in years to come a violent storm may shift the bed of sand now covering the old wreck and afford better facilities for the divers.

A parallel case was that of the Thetis, a British frigate, which was wrecked on the coast of Brazil in 1830 with £162,000 of bullion on board. The hull went to pieces, leaving the specie in five or six fathoms of water. For eighteen months the admiral at the Brazil station and the captains and crews of four sloops of war were engaged hunting for the treasure. So great was the danger that four lives were lost. It is known that a good part of the treasure was recovered from the fact that in the disputes and litigation resulting from the find the Court of Admiralty awarded £17,000 and the Privy Council £29,000 with £35,800 for expenses.

Medical all Sorts.

If a person is threatened with fainting, bathe the head with warm, not cold water.

According to statistics, everywhere, in all countries, in all the provinces, in all the cities of Europe, the frequency of divorces and separations de corps is incessantly increasing.

St. Louis has a physician who is not only doctor in medicine, but, what is more singular, writes himself down before the whole world as doctor I. N. Love.

It seems but little better than a vulgar error to consider the termination of advanced life as the inevitable consequence of time, when the immediate cause of death in old persons is generally known to be some well marked disease. (Anthony Carlisle.)

Mr. Beecher was once asked by one of his myriad of correspondents, "How shall I feel when I come to die?" The great preacher replied, characteristically: "You will probably feel stupid," referring to the kindly provision of nature in benumbing the faculties when putting her children to sleep.

The following will interest asthmatics: Dr. Holmes, it is said, has found nothing which did him so much good as this combination of drugs: Stramonium leaves, lobelia, saltpetre and black tea, equal parts by weight. These are powdered, mixed together and then sifted. Some of this is burned on live coals and the smoke inhaled.

Some patients who have suffered for years from that extremely annoying affection, "canker," report that, after using unsuccessfully numberless remedies, they have found that it yielded quickly to teaspoonful doses of the flowers of sulphur. They took it every morning for a week, then omitted it for three days, and again went on until a cure was effected.

There is quite a difference in the quantity of tobacco consumed in the various countries of Europe. Spaniards are the most temperate, there being used by them but little more than one pound per head. Nearly double that quantity is consumed in France, three times as much in Germany, four times as much in Holland, and five times as much in Belgium.

One physician reports that he has found the iodide of potassium combined with cow's milk a very efficient remedy for asthma. He makes a solution of two drachms of the potassium in five ounces of water. One tablespoonful of this to be taken in a cup of milk twice a day. It can be safely tried, and in some cases of that most distressing disease the potassium will be found of exceeding value.

A Double-Action Excuse.

It was a noted old Scotch laird who, when he went to Paris, took his ordinary country clothes to wear. He met a friend.

"What are you going about Paris in those old clothes for?"

"Oh, naebody kens me," said the laird.

Some time afterward they met in the laird's own country town.

"You've got the same old clothes, I see.'

"Oh, weel, everybody kens me."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Western journalism is full of spice and enterprise. Not your ordinary adulterated mustard and pepper, but the genuine article which makes the tears flow and gives you the whooping cough. As for instance: "Owing to the death of the editor there won't be any leader to-morrow, but look out for a ripper the day after."

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

The following Bills were read the third time and passed :

To incorporate the Western Fair Association—Mr. Meredith.

To amend the Act incorporating the Sandwich & Windsor Passenger Railway Company—Mr. Balfour.

For the protection of infant children—The Attorney-General.

Mr. Balfour, moving the second reading of the Bill respecting the law of libel, said that while there had been legislation for every other class of the community, there had not been since Confederation any legislation in favor of the press. The Bill asked for no license. They asked only for liberty to discuss public matters fairly. At present lawyers of no repute frequently brought groundless suits for libels against newspapers. It was objected that this Bill would deprive the poor man of the opportunity for redress. But it was not the poor who usually brought these speculative cases, but scoundrels and blackmailers. Newspaper publishers often paid unjust claims to save themselves from being dragged all over the Province to be tried.

Hon. Oliver Mowat said that there might be some difference of opinion as to the details of the Bill. He had no objection to the second reading. The Bill was read a second time and referred to a committee composed of Messrs. Fraser, Hardy, Meredith, Creighton, Stratton, French, O'Connor, Wood (Hastings), E. F. Clarke, Clarke (Wellington), Guthrie, Craig, Gibson (Hamilton), Evanturel, Chisholm and Balfour.

On the motion for the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act relating to the new Parliamentary buildings,

Mr. Fraser stated that the architect's own figures for the cost of the interior work, woodwork, painting, etc., on these buildings were $298,000, this amount being additional to the amount of $750,000 voted for the construction of the buildings themselves, and included all the work not covered by the original contract. The Bill sanctioned the expenditure of the amount named for the above purposes.

The Bill was read a second time and advanced a stage.

The Provincial Secretary's Bill, better to provide for the enforcement of the temperance laws, was recommitted, and on motion of Mr. Gibson (Huron) amended by providing that the County Councils should be entitled to a copy of the receipts and expenditures by the License Board yearly when called on to pay a share thereof.

The Bill to amend the Public Schools Act was read the third time. Hon. G. W. Ross, replying to Mr. Creighton, said that when a Board of Trustees had once adopted the ballot in elections for trustees there was no provision for getting back to the old state of things. So far as he had learned the ballot had worked well.

On the motion for concurrence in the items of expenditure on Government House,

Mr. Marter moved, That, while concurring in this resolution, this House is of opinion that after the present year no further expenditure be incurred by the Province in the maintenance of the Government House. He thought that the salary of $10,000 a year paid by the Dominion Government and the use of the house and grounds were sufficient remuneration for the duties of the office, and that these should not be supplemented by this Province. The average annual amount paid by the Province was $11,000. The duties of the Governor of a State in the Union were far more onerous, and yet only two, the Governors of New York and Pennsylvania, received as much as $10,000 per annum. Mr. Marter then dealt with the details of the expenditure.

Mr. Wood (Hastings) seconded the motion. He thought the expense was unnecessary, the duties of the office being very light. The attempt to keep up in this city a little court mimicking royalty was absurd on the face of it. To attempt to keep up the tawdry tinsel of royalty here was an insult to the intelligence of the people. This opening of the House with a pomp that feebly imitated a Lord Mayor's show was utterly absurd. He had the utmost respect for the Speaker of this House, and he respected him none the less because he had no adornment but his good looks. They had a gentleman there with a sword and a belt, who was supposed to keep order, but he supposed that if any emergency arose he would go out of one door and the Speaker out of the other. He considered it was perfectly absurd for the Lieutenant-Governor to come down in a cocked hat and gold spurs, stumbling over the steps, to give his solemn assent to the Bills passed by the House.

The Attorney-General said that the hon. gentleman's remarks regarding the expenditure in connection with the opening and closing of the Legislature had no bearing on the items under consideration. The cutting off of the expenses of the Lieut.-Governor's house would not reduce the expenses of such opening and closing. As to the objection raised to these expenses of the ceremonies he thought people were rather fond of ceremonies. It was well known that they were frequently willing to pay very large sums in connection with military displays. He did not say the public taste was a good one in this respect, but merely said that it was such as he stated it to be. That the Governor should have a Government house, and that these other expenses should exist, was simply what obtained in all other British colonies and in every one of the States on the other side of the line. He wanted to disabuse the mind of the hon. gentleman of the idea that the Lieut.-Governor's salary was paid to him in addition to the expenses of his office. If the hon. gentleman thought that the Lieut.-Governor simply took his salary of $10,000 and put it in his pocket he was very much mistaken indeed. Far from it. The salary was wholly taken up with the expenses of his office. Without having any special reference to the gentleman who at present held the position of Lieut.-Governor, he would mention that he had had conversations with every Lieut.-Governor the country had had except one, and they had all told him that they had found it necessary in carrying out the duties connected with the office to spend a considerable sum outside the salary. Let nobody imagine, therefore, that the salary was over and above the Governor's expenses. It was only a contribution on the part of the Province towards the expenses necessarily incurred in carrying out the duties of the same. It has been suggested that the Lieutenant-Governorship was a Dominion position, and that the Dominion should bear the expenses. But if they admitted that principle they must admit that the Governors of all the Provinces should be paid by the Dominion, and in that case Ontario would have to pay considerably more than at the present time. It was in the interest of the Province, therefore, that it should pay its own gubernatorial expenses, rather than that they should be paid by the Dominion.

Mr. Fraser moved as an amendment to the amendment that all words after "that" in the original amendment should be stricken out and the following inserted in their stead : "And this House, while granting such sums, trusts that all possible and reasonable economy will be exercised in its expenditure."

Mr. Meredith said he did not intend to support the motion for the abolition of Government House, though New Brunswick, he believed, had abolished its Government House and had found it could get along very well without it. He considered, however, that the office of Lieutenant-Governor was a necessary office, and must be maintained, and he believed in its being maintained in a reasonably respectable manner.

The House divided on Mr. Fraser's amendment to the amendment, with the following result :

YEAS—Messrs. Allan, Awrey, Ballantyne, Biggar, Blezard, Chamberlain, Chisholm, Clancy, Clarke, E. F. (Toronto), Clarke, H. E. (Toronto), Clarke (Wellington), Conmee, Craig, Creighton, Dack, Drury, Evanturel, Ferguson, Field, Fraser, Freeman, French, Gibson (Hamilton), Gibson (Huron), Gould, Graham, Guthrie, Hammell, Harcourt, Hardy, Hess, Hilliard, Hudson, Leys, Lyon, McAndrew, McKay, McLaughlin, McMahon, Mack, Master, Meredith, Metcalfe, Monk, Morin, Morgan, Mowat, O'Connor, Pacaud, Pardee, Phelps, Preston, Rayside, Rorke, Ross (Huron), Ross (Middlesex), Smith, Stewart, Stratton, Tooley, Waters, Widdifield, Wilmot, Wood (Brant)—64.

NAYS — Messrs. Armstrong, Balfour, Blyth, Cruess, Fell, Garson, Ingram, Kerns, Lees, Marter, Meacham, Nairn, Ostrom, Snider, Willoughby Wood (Hastings), Wyllie—17.

The item of $1,600 for the Immigration Department was carried by 51 to 36.

The item of $16,900 for general immigration purposes was carried on the same division.

On the item for colonization roads, $109,550, Mr. Marter moved that municipal councils be allowed to control the money voted for this purpose.

Mr. Conmee moved in amendment to the amendment declaring that the House, while concurring in the motion, approves of the policy of the Government in expending yearly a limited sum of money in building Colonization roads in the new and outlying districts in such a way as not only to produce the greatest mileage of roads and at the same time give employment to settlers in constructing such roads.

After remarks by Messrs. Meredith, Awrey and Rorke, Mr. Conmee's amendment to the amendment was carried by 55 to 33.

The House expressed concurrence with the report of the committee.

The supplementary estimates to the amount of $105,063.55 were then brought down.

On the motion for the third reading of the Attorney-General's Bill respecting Separate School debentures, Mr. Meredith moved, seconded by Mr. Creighton, without comment, the resolution moved by him in committee on the preceding evening, being, as he alleged, an explanation of the 121st section of the Public School Act of 1885.

The amendment was lost.

The House went into committee on the Bill respecting the property and income of the University of Toronto, University College and Upper Canada College.

Mr. Meredith asked to have it made clear that the new Upper Canada College building would be within ten miles of the city of Toronto.

Hon. G. W. Ross said it was not the intention to go one mile out of the city, but he had no objection to make the limitation. The intention was to erect the building.

Mr. Meredith referred to the proposed grant of a site to Victoria College, and expressed the fear that it would be a precedent and that similar grants would have to be made for other denominational institutions.

Hon. O. Mowat said that the circumstances of Victoria were peculiar, as it was necessary for the authorities to abandon the site and buildings at Cobourg in order to come here.

Mr. Meredith said that the same argument might be used by Queen's or Trinity in case of their entering into the scheme of federation.

Hon. O. Mowat said there was some force in this argument. He had supposed that what Mr. Meredith was contending for was that this grant would be a precedent for grants to denominational colleges which remained out of federation.

Hon. G. W. Ross said that the maximum cost of the new U. C. College building was $120,000, and of the site $20,000, of the alterations in the University $10,000, and of Convocation Hall $50,000.

The Bill was reported and read a third time.

The following Bills were read a third time :

To unite Toronto Baptist College and Woodstock College under the name of McMaster University.—Mr. Harcourt.

To amend the Act incorporating the Home of the Friendless, of Hamilton.—Mr. Gibson (Hamilton).

On the motion to read the Bill amending the Municipal Act a third time,

Mr. O'Connor moved its amendment by the insertion of a clause giving township councils power to compel the removal of obstructive dams from streams under their control, the clause, he said, being the same as that which had been obtained in the Drainage Bill, which had been already considered and approved by the House.

The amendment was carried.

Mr. Widdifield moved to amend the Bill by the insertion of a clause reducing the qualifications of Mayors, Reeves, etc., to that of municipal electors.

Mr. Garson would like to see the change proposed, but was afraid the House would not agree to it, and rather then be defeated on so very radical a measure he would prefer trying to get something more moderate. He moved in amendment to the amendment providing that the qualifications for councillors in cities, towns and villages be $400 freehold and $800 leasehold.

Hon. O. Mowat implored the members of the House to make short speeches, in order that this might be the last sitting of the House. (Cheers.)

Mr. E. F. Clarke suggested that Mr. Garson should withdraw his motion for the present, in order that a vote might be taken on Dr. Widdifield's motion. Then if Dr. Widdifield's motion was lost, Mr. Garson could still propose his again.

Mr. Garson withdrew his amendment on that understanding.

The House divided on Dr. Widdifield's amendment making the qualification for mayors and councillors the same as that for electors, which was lost—35 yeas, 55 nays.

The House then divided on Mr. Garson's amendment, which was lost on the following division : Yeas, 36 ; nays, 50.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. Hardy's Bill for the better enforcement of the temperance laws was read the third time and passed.

Hon. O. Mowat rose amid loud applause to move the resolutions favoring Home Rule for Ireland and protesting against the Coercion Bill. He said that he had calculated on being able to move them at an earlier hour. He believed the passing of these resolutions might be of service to the cause of Ireland. Recent events had done a good deal to moderate the antagonism existing between the two races, especially the conversion of Mr Gladstone to the cause of Home Rule. The very fact that Mr. Gladstone had taken up the cause, and had been supported by a great majority of the Liberal party, had done much to allay ill-feeling. Here in Canada we knew the effects of Home Rule. We knew that there would be no prosperity here without Home Rule, and we knew that under it the Irish people lived here in content and happiness. The resolutions had been drawn in such temperate language that it seemed difficult to suppose that any one should oppose them, as it would be a grand thing for Ontario if they were passed unanimously, and they had been drawn with that end in view.

Mr. E. F. Clarke said he did not desire to make political capital out of the discussion. This seemed to be the sole aim and object of the promoters of these resolutions. The Imperial Parliament was now dealing with this difficult subject, and he was entirely opposed to interfering in their deliberations. The recent elections in Great Britain were on the question of Home Rule, and were unfavorable to the cause of Home Rule in Ireland. This Coercion Act was only intended for the lawless, for the assassins, the boycotters, those who maimed cattle and pulled down houses, those who had brought disgrace upon the name of Ireland. Why should the House express disapproval of an Act to repress such crimes ?—and that was all it was meant to do.

Mr. Stratton said that the preceding speaker had no right to impute to the Attorney-General the motive of a mere desire for political gain. The member for Toronto had quoted many opinions against Home Rule, but the opinions he quoted were those of a privileged class. The hon. gentleman had spoken as if this was merely a Catholic question. He forgot that nearly all the great leaders in the Home Rule movement had been Protestants.

Mr. Metcalfe said that it might have been as wise for the Attorney General not to have moved these resolutions. But as they had been moved he must express his views. He had always favored Home Rule for Ireland, believing that it would promote not only the happiness of Ireland but the prosperity of the Empire.

The debate was continued by Messrs. Awrey, French, Evanturel and H. E. Clarke.

At 2.45 Mr. Meredith rose to speak in opposition. It was thought he would move an amendment, but he did not.

Mr. Fraser followed Mr. Meredith, and moved that copies of the resolutions be forwarded to Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell. This was agreed to. At 3.30 the House divided, and the resolutions were carried, 59 to 28.

Mr. Fraser called for three cheers for Home Rule, which were given with a tiger.

Mother's Work.

"My mother gets me up, builds the fire, and gets my breakfast and sends me off," said a bright youth. "Then she gets my father up, and gets his breakfast and sends him off. Then she gets the other children their breakfast and sends them off to school; and then she and the baby have their breakfast." "How old is the baby?" asked the reporter. "Oh, she is 'most two, but she can walk and talk as well as any of us." "Are you well paid?" "I get $3 a week, and father gets $2 a day." "How much does your mother get?" With a bewildered look, the boy said, "Mother, why, she don't work for anybody." "I thought you said she worked for all of you." "O, yes, for us, she does: but there ain't no money in it."

The New York Tribune has discovered the great truth that "it is the rarest thing in the world to find a baldheaded man suffering from insomnia." It must be then that they do not permit their minds to dwell upon their wickedness.

—There are scores of perfect loves bonnets on the streets these days. The spectacle makes one think that a rainbow has been chopped into small pieces and scattered over the sidewalks.

—Beggar's Wife—"August, why are you taking off your wooden leg?" Beggar—"Darling, I am only going to strap it on the other foot; one gets tired of hopping about all day long on the same leg."

—Beware the seductive influence of light underclothing.

Sour milk will soon taint cream and make "off" butter.

—Dr. Brown-Sepuard, the celebrated physiologist, says he has discovered that the moment the skin of the neck is cut all sensibility disappears, and that the best means of resuscitating persons asphyxiated by smoke, coal gas or water, is to apply galvanism to the skin of the neck—a method he has successfully employed.

There is a woman in Ohio who eats nothing but pie. Why she chose this form of suicide in preference to "Rough on Rats" was probably because the latter sometimes misses fire.

Bishop Harris, of Michigan, explains that the word "obey" was not dropped from the marriage service by the late Episcopal convention. No clergyman is allowed to omit this vow for the bride when performing the ceremony.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMAYR.

The steamer Northern Light has escaped from the ice jam off Pictou and reached Georgetown.

On Thursday a little child named Meagher fell into a tub of hot water at Renfrew and was scalded to death.

Under the Inter-State Commerce law the Michigan Central Railway cannot charter coaches to excursion parties this summer as in the past.

Mayor Howland interviewed the Minister of Justice yesterday with the object of obtaining amendments to the Sunday Observance Law to make it more stringent.

Mr. J. D. Munro, of the firm of Munro & Stevens, quarrymen, of Wallace, dropped dead in the Rankin Hotel, Charlottetown, N. S., while awaiting breakfast yesterday morning.

A human arm was found by some children yesterday among a lot of rubbish at the foot of Carling street, London. The coroner ordered its burial, as it had probably come from the Western University dissecting room.

As the St. Clair branch express, due at St. Thomas at 10.15 yesterday morning, was passing Brigden, Engineer Truman discovered ahead of him a child under 3 years of age. In a moment he reversed the engine and brought the train to a standstill a few feet from the child. The mother, the wife of a section man, as the train stopped, rushed frantically across the track. Had the train not stopped she would have been killed with the child.

The London bakers raised the price of bread to-day from five to six cents per loaf.

Wm. C. Stinson, husband of the woman who was found dead Thursday morning at her residence, Dundas street, London West, has been arrested on suspicion of having caused his wife's death.

Yesterday evening the river at Montreal commenced rising, and was expected to increase during the night. No change has occurred in the inundated district, where the only means of communication is by boats. It is feared that dangerous floods will follow the moving of the ice above Lachine, which is still solid.

Mrs. Edward Bawder, of No. 537 Hamilton Road, London, was aroused about 2 o'clock on Saturday morning by the crying of a child, and going to the door discovered a baby on the doorstep. The waif, which was about two months old, was wrapped in a shawl, while a feeding bottle and bundle of clothes neatly wrapped up lay on the steps beside the little one. So far there is no clue to the parentage of the child.

Furlong's mill at Fermoy, nineteen miles north of Cork, were destroyed by fire yesterday. The loss is $400,000.

The Czar has abandoned his intention of staying several weeks in St. Petersburg and has returned to Gatschina. This alteration of the Czar's plans is said to have been made in consequence of additional arrests made on Easter Sunday on the Newsky prospect of several persons in addition to those before reported arrested, all of whom, it was ascertained, had taken positions along that thoroughfare for the purpose of making a fresh attempt on the Czar's life. These arrests were made quietly in order to avoid alarm.

The Colonial Conference met again in London yesterday, with Sir Sidney Holland presiding. The War Office officials were present. Mr. Stanhope told the Conference what had been done and what still remained to be done with respect to the defence of the different coaling stations, specifying the works and armaments, and the proportion of expense borne in each case by the Imperial and the Colonial Governments respectively. A further discussion arose on the King George's Sound and Torres Straits, and a statement was made by different delegates with reference to defensive expenditures incurred by their respective colonies.

The Swiss National Council has voted 450,000f. towards the construction of the Simplon tunnel.

A disastrous fire has occurred at Arnaut-keui, Asia Minor. Five hundred houses were burned, and many persons lost their lives.

Congo advices say that the Stanley expedition passed Boma, on the Congo River, on April 20th, and that all the members of the party were well.

Advices from Allahabad say Mahomed Shah, whom the Ghilzais have proclaimed Ameer, is summoning refugees from India, and that rumors are current that a great coalition of Ghilzais is being formed.

The Colonial delegates went on Saturday to the Earl of Onslow's county seat at Guildford. They were afterwards taken to the old country house, where they were shown historical relics which created the deepest interest.

John Bright, advocating a continuance of free trade in England, has written a letter in which he says that the reason other nations maintain high tariff is that those who are protected are an organized army, while the consumers are merely a mob. The United States, under a system of protection, are burdened with a large surplus revenue, yet refuse to lessen duties, thus promoting a system of corruption unequalled in any other country.

Little news has come to light regarding the extraordinary affair on the Franco-German frontier. The official notification in the Berlin press that the arrest of M. Schnaebeles is final seems to indicate that the German Government will not repudiate the act of its police. The most probable explanation at hand is that, suspecting M. Schnaebeles to be conspiring against German interests, the German police issued a warrant for his arrest and placed it in the hands of the frontier patrol. The latter, like all police, desired to distinguish themselves by an immediate capture, and resorted to unscrupulous measures to accomplish it. The matter may become a prolonged question of evidence, attended with much irritation, and possibly the worst will ensue.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire iron manufacturer, was married last night to Miss Whitfield, daughter of the late John Whitfield, at the bride's residence in New York city.

It is asserted in Chicago that the three Socialistic organizations of the United States are about to coalesce. The three, it is said, will join forces and form one body, with a general executive board, and as a unit will take part in all political fights, municipal, State and national.

A sensation was caused on Wisconsin street, near Bridge, Milwaukee, yesterday afternoon by the violent explosion of a bomb, which is supposed to have been thrown from a street car. Fragments of the bomb, which was cased with copper, were blown in all directions.

The Inter-State Commission has suspended the long and short-haul clause in the case of trans-continental lines for 75 days.

A gloom was cast over Philadelphia society yesterday by the news that Miss Annie C. Lesley had been accidentally shot and instantly killed at the house of a friend whom she was visiting in Brooklyn.

W. A. Stinson, a large cattleman, and two of his employees have been murdered by Comanche Indians in Green county, Texas. A large portion of the tribe have taken the warpath, and a general outbreak is expected.

During a thunderstorm which passed over Sumter county, S.C., on Friday, a house in which six people were living was struck by lightning. Two boys named Harbin were prostrated and shortly afterwards died. Four other persons in the house were not affected by the stroke.

The brutal assailant of Jennie Bowman, the white domestic who was so horribly and fatally beaten by a burglar at Louisville, Ky., in broad daylight, last Thursday, has been captured. The miscreant is a burly, black negro named Albert Turner. He said he had gone to the house for the purpose of robbery, and had ransacked several rooms when Miss Bowman came in. The girl seized him, and he could not get away from her until he struck her on the head.

Mr. Guilfoyle, a wealthy contractor of Carmansville, N. Y., left his home on 10th avenue at 1 o'clock on Friday afternoon to collect money with which to pay his hands. Just after sundown he was brought back unconscious and died an hour later. He stated while conscious before death that he had been drugged. An autopsy on the body was held yesterday, when it was found that he had not been drugged and that death was due to heart disease.

On Thursday there arrived at the Western Hotel, Detroit, a tall, slim man, accompanied by his wife and three children. He registered as "Michael Sheehan and family, Simcoe, Ont." Late that afternoon he told his wife he had business of importance to transact at Windsor and would return soon. He left the hotel and has not since been seen. He had about $200 in his possession when he left his wife and children. The faithful wife waited until last evening before making any stir to find her missing husband and then notified the police.

Fact and Science.

Piles have been successfully driven by dynamite at Pesth.

As many as 100 quakings of the earth a day have been registered in New Zealand.

The lowest average temperature known in the world is observed at Werknojanck, Siberia. For 1885 it was 1° Fahrenheit. For January of that year it was 56° below, and the maximum coldness was 90° below.

Ten cables across the Atlantic ocean are now in active operation, and two have been abandoned. The Anglo-American (Field) Company has four cables, Western Union (Gould lines), two; Direct lines, one; Franco-American, one; Commercial (Mackay-Bennett), two. Owing to competition a message may be sent to England at 12½ cents a word, while it costs from $2 to $4 a word to South America, from $1 to $1.80 from England to India, from $2.05 to $2.45 from England to China, and $1 90 to $2.25 from England to South Africa. There are now in operation throughout the world about 100,000 miles of submarine cables, representing a total capital of $175,000,000.

"A new method of burning gas, and one which promises to cause a small revolution in gas apparatus, has lately been exhibited in London," says "Chambers' Journal." "This is an incandescent burner, invented by Dr. Auer von Welsbach. It consists of a so-called 'mantle' of muslin, which has been impregnated with certain incombustible oxides produced from the rare metals zirconium and lanthanum. This cap or mantle is supported by a platinum wire in the flame of a Bunsen burner, with the result that the delicate incombustible network is brought to a white heat. The flame gives out an intensely white light, which is perfectly steady and of high value; for a light of 20 candles is obtained from burning only 2½ feet of gas per hour."

A Scare in the New Tunnel.

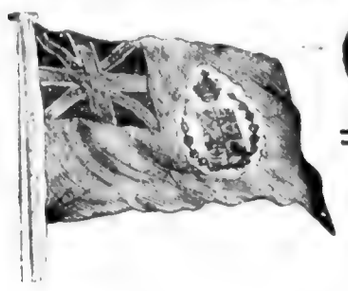
Work on the G. T. R. tunnel at Sarnia was temporarily stopped this week. It appears that while the men were at work the other day a vein of water and an air pocket was struck. For a few minutes the escaping air made considerable noise and the water bubbled up with some force. The men became frightened and made a rush for the shaft and were pulled up. A later investigation proved that the vein of water was nothing but a spring in the bottom of the tunnel, something that had been looked for since operations were commenced. Up to this time the earth had been perfectly dry.

—A young man was strolling along Tremont row, Boston, the other day about the time for the daily prayer meeting in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, and a member of the association stood without the door inviting passers by to go in and worship. As the young man sauntered by the Y. M. C. A. man tapped him upon the shoulder and said : "Step right upstairs, my friend, you will find a cordial welcome." "No, you don't, yer can't play any of yer confidence games on me. I've hearn tell too much about you fellers to be caught before bein' in the city two hours."

Ella Wheeler says that "the world has outlived all its passion." She can cure herself of this error by planting the heel of her shoe on a nervous man's corn.

—"Big trees,' says the Monetary Times, "are grown in Essex County. One of buttonwood was teamed from Essex to Windsor the other day, which weighed 92,000 pounds or forty-six tons. The load was drawn by a single team on a pairo' common trucks."

Mr. Carpmael is at present in Ottawa for the purpose of obtaining certain improvements for the Toronto Observatory.



GREATEST BARGAINS

YOU EVER HEARD OF!

—Will be Offered by—

J. G. ANDERSON

FOR THE NEXT 30 DAYS!

The Goods must be all Sold by the 15th of May, and in order to do this the prices will be Cut Still Lower than Before! No use quoting prices, come in and we will astonish you. No trouble to show goods.

J. G. ANDERSON. — — — Wright's Old Stand.

For the Baptist Weekly

TEMPERANCE HYMN.

BY REV. T. WATSON.

From homes and hearts now blasted,
From countless thousands slain,
There comes a cry of anguish,
Of sore distress and pain,
Through alcoholic poisons,
In tempting mixtures sold.
More harm is wrought amongst us
Than ever hath been told.

From many a sunless hoved
From many a garret bare
Ascends the wail of mortals
Who languish in despair,
Strong drink has wrecked the husband,
The father's love hath slain,
Of joy, and hope, and comfort
No vestige doth remain.

And shall their cry of anguish
To us ascend in vain?
Shall we do nought to help them,
Break the accursed chain?
We who have learned of Jesus
For all mankind to feel,
Shall we not make some effort
This social wound to heal?

Oh, ye who plead for justice,
And ye who preach God's word,
In heaven's high name we charge you,
Let all the truth be heard.
Unmask the soul-stained system,
Your ablest prayers apply
Till all the nations echo
The prohibition cry

Till like Sennacherib's army,
Slain by that awful blast,
Strong drink, with all its evils,
Is reckoned with the past.
Till those who now are mourning
Through drear and dismal days,
Shall sing aloud in triumph
The Lord Jehovah's praise

Flesherton, Ont.

W. C. T. U.

The Times correspondent, telegraphing from Tangier, March 13th, says:—To-day, after an artillery salute, a letter from the Sultan was read in the Mosques forbidding the sale or purchase of intoxicants. A few hours later, two soldiers found smoking keifs, were put in irons and imprisoned, others were arrested and some soundly beaten. The State tobacco monopoly has been abolished, the Moorish snuff and tobacco shops have been closed and large quantities of kief were solemnly burnt in the market place to day. At the instigation of the authorities, processions of snuff stained kerchiefs fixed on poles paraded the town hooting the unclean thing, and applauded Sultan's decree. Some Moors are to be stripped fastened on donkeys, and flogged through the streets of Tangier for smoking in defiance of the Sultan's order. Some are dissatisfied and think only the poor are punished for smoking.

"IT'LL MAKE YOU WORK."

Those who indulge in the use of intoxicants sometimes apologize for their drinking by asserting that it helps them to do their work, the following dialogue is a good answer to the assertion:

"I drink to make me work" said a young man, to which an old man replied, "that's right; thee drink and it will make thee work; hearken to me a moment and I'll tell thee something that may do thee good. I was once a prosperous farmer, I had a good loving wife and two fine lads as ever the sun shone on. We had a good home and lived happy, but we used to drink to make us work. Those two lads I have laid in drunkards graves, my wife died broken hearted and lies by her sons. I am seventy years of age. Had it not been for drink, I might now be an independent gentleman; but I drank to make me work, I am obliged to work now for my daily bread. Yes drink, drink, and it will make you work."

STRUCK WITH A CRUTCH.

An Hospital Patient's Assault upon Rev. Thos. Cullen.

Toronto World.

Rev. Thomas Cullen, of the Dundas-street Methodist church, formerly of Artemesia, was the victim of a brutal and unexpected assault upon a recent visit to the general hospital. The affair took place on April 18, a week ago last Monday, and only leaked out yesterday. His assailant was a man named John Langford, whose widowed mother resides at 244 Church-street. The story of the assault is given substantially in the clergyman's own words, in an interview last night with The World at his residence, 130 Shaw-street.

"Late on Saturday afternoon, April 16, a message was received at my house from Mrs. Langford, requesting me to visit her son at the hospital. I was not at home when the message was delivered, and was not able to accede to her wishes till the following Monday afternoon.

"Upon reaching the hospital I was informed by the janitor that Langford was in ward 15, in the east wing, whither I proceeded. I have no recollection of seeing the man, and when I entered the ward I asked one of the patients where he was. A young man who was standing at a window was pointed out as Langford. I asked him if this was his name, but he made no answer for a moment, and then he demanded to know what had brought me there. I explained in a pleasant tone that I understood he was poorly and I had therefore come to see him. His reply was a vicious oath. Recognising that he was not in a fit condition to converse, I walked away in the direction of the door, but had only taken a few steps when I heard someone exclaim loudly, "run!" I looked up, and at the same time a blow descended upon the back of my head.

"Although terribly dazed, I retained consciousness, managing to make my way out of the room. The sensation was as if life were going out. I had no idea of protecting myself. I afterwards ascertained that the blow was administered with a crutch and upon my departure from the ward that my assailant attacked the other patients, two of whom were painfully assaulted. One managed to escape to an adjoining bath room, while another secreted himself under one of the beds."

After getting out of the ward the clergyman descended to the ground floor where the attendants discovered his condition. Everything was done to alleviate his pain. The wound, which was deep and a half an inch in length, was stitched

Mr. Cullen then went back to the scene of the attack, being desirous, as he said, of learning the assault which had been made upon him by the patient. He subsequently returned home and has been confined to the house ever since. His attending physicians stated that the reverend gentleman had had a narrow escape.

Langford is a man of about 31 years of age and from the long use of alcohol, chloral and opium has lost, to a certain extent, his reasoning powers. He was placed in the hospital for treatment, and his violent conduct upon this occasion is doubtless due to his unbalanced mental condition. That he himself feared such a denouement as followed the clergyman's visit is evidenced by his request to the hospital authorities upon his entrance to put him under restraint. The World cannot say if this was done, but he certainly was not under restraint at the time of Mr. Cullen's visit.

The World inquired about the matter at the hospital last night, but the attending physicians were reticent. They stated that the affair was private, was not as represented, and was not worthy of publicity.

The Open Division.

A large audience assembled in the Son's of Temperance hall here last night, on the occasion of the regular monthly Open Division of that flourishing society. Mr. J. E. Moore, W. P., occupied the chair. The program gave general satisfaction. Miss Fraine, the gifted elocutionist, very kindly gave several recitations which were enthusiastically applauded. The opening prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. T. Watson, was a most beautiful and expressive one—a fitting prelude to the exercises which followed. Rev. Mr. Ayers moved and Mr. W. Richardson seconded a vote of thanks to Miss Fraine, which was unanimously carried

We might add that the Charade passed off very nicely. Miss Christoe and the Misses Beecroft made very happy vocal and instrumental selections, which were well rendered. Short addresses were given by Messrs. Irwin, Ayers and Christoe. Those who took part in the Charade were Misses B. Christoe, M. Beecroft, K. Bellamy and E. Fawcett and Messrs. J. G. Anderson and A. R. Fawcett.

Our Member.

In speaking to a gentleman from Toronto the other day about our member, Mr. Joseph Rorke, he said of him that he was much respected in the House, and was an excellent man on committees. His remarks were listened to on both sides with respect. Mr. Rorke he said seemed to be perfectly at home and had conducted three private bills through the House. —[Thornbury Standard.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Siniloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

Gravel Roads.

The Gravel Roads in the County of Grey did service for us when there were no railways, and the Gravel Roads, as an institution, is one the County Council must not ignore. Their usefullness is not gone. It is the duty of the County Council yet to protect them. We will speak of these roads in a future issue.—[Thornbury Standard.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

BEGIN YOUR GRUEL.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W. M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

MAIL CONTRACT!

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the Postmaster General, will be received at Ottawa until noon, on 27th May, 1887, for the conveyance of Her Majesty's Mails, on a proposed Contract for four years, 3 times per week each way, between Dundalk and Maple Valley from the 1st July, next.

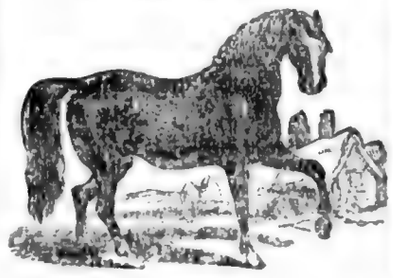
The conveyance to be made in a vehicle or otherwise via., Badjeros and Shrigley. The Mails to leave Maple Valley every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 5 a.m., and travelling via., Badjeros and Shrigley, arrive at Dundalk at 11:10 a.m., or in time to connect with the Mail train passing North. To leave Dundalk as soon as possible after exchange of Mails and arrive at Maple Valley within three hours and ten minutes afterwards

Printed notices containing further information as to conditions of proposed Contract may be seen, and blank forms of Tender may be obtained at the Post Offices of Dundalk, Maple Valley, Badjeros and Shrigley.

DANIEL SPRY,
Post-Office Inspector.

Post-Office Inspector's Office, Barrie, April 18th, 1887.

THE ROADSTER STALLION.



BILLY V.!

Will leave his own stable in Flesherton, on MONDAY, MAY 2nd, 1887, at 12 o'clock noon, and proceed to Linley's hotel, Maxwell, where he will remain over night.

TUESDAY, will proceed to Jonathan Irish's, Wareham, for noon, thence to Johnston's hotel, Dundalk, where he will remain till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY, will return to Flesherton for the night.

FRIDAY, will proceed to Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, for noon, and return to his own stable for the night.

SATURDAY, will proceed to Marsh's hotel, Markdale, for noon, and return to his own stable in Flesherton, where he will remain till the following Monday.

The above route will be continued during the season, health and weather permitting.

Description and Pedigree:

BILLY V., foaled June 18th, 1883, is a dark dappled bay, stands 15 hands 3 in., weighs 1150 pounds, and for bone, muscle, style and action, cannot be surpassed, was sired by Clear Grit jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger.

TERMS:

To insure a foal $10.00, payable March 1st, 1888. Season mares $8.00, payable last round of horse, or not later than July 12th, 1887, if not then paid said mares will be charged as insured mares. Single leap $6.00, payable at time of service. All mares not returned regularly to horse will be charged as insured mares. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Owners trying their mares to said horse and knowing them to be afflicted with any contagious disease, will be liable in damages. Groom's Fee 25 cents.

A. S. VANDUSEN, Owner. GEO. GLASSFORD, Groom.

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE — DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE — INSTANT RELIEF FOR ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS — BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE — SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00 — ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

TAMARAC — ELIXIR — NATURE'S REMEDY. FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS. INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

PUBLIC NOTICE!!

To all whom it may Concern.

Know ye all men that I, W. S. CHRISTOE, the Druggist of Flesherton, have the agency for JOHNSON'S celebrated TONIC BITTERS and NERVINE, JOHNSON'S little Pink Tonic Liver Pills and the ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

—THE—

TONIC BITTERS

are confidently recommended as the VERY BEST in the market for Nervousness, Hysteria, General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Complaints common to the female sex. PALENESS of complexion and for diseases caused by poverty of blood. In conjunction with the Tonic JOHNSON'S Little Liver Pills are the very best for liver complaint and general desarrangements of the stomach. The All Healing White Ointment is the very best for skin diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Chilblains, &c., &c.

You have only to try these great remedies to be satisfied. Sold by

W. S. CHRISTOE,
The Druggist, Flesherton.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., Ont.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST.

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer,

Office.—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER, in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Con and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN
At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE.
Flesherton.

ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at owest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.

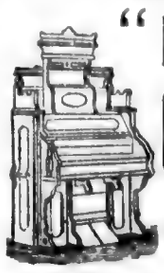
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

Wm Mitchell Library

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 308. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, MAY 12, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

W. A. BROWN,

—THE—

PEOPLE'S JEWELLER,

Keeps the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, Wedding Rings, Spex, etc., between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden Watches, my own name on, accurately timed, 2 and 3 years warrants, $8.50 to $28.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto Cases. 2 to 5 oz. ¼ Waltham, P. S. Bartlett's, Jas. coin case, $17.50; Ellery's, $14.50; lower grades, $8.00, to $18.00; Elgins if preferred. Ladies 10 & 14 k. Watches, and Gent's 10 & 14 k. filled cases always in stock. It is safe to buy Watches from me because I do business for myself, in my own name, and can be held to my warrants. 84 Seth Thomas, New Haven and Ansonia Clocks now in stock, bought close.

They will be sold below the "Terrible Bargains," prices at least 15 per cent.

It is easy to come down when goods are away up. I don't do a catch business.

Straight dealing ensures success.

I shall stay on that line. Small profits, modest prices. I secure patronage through low prices. Assortment Complete. Send for quotations. If I do not save you money I will make other Jewellers take cost. 18 years at the trade.

SPECIALTIES:

Watch Repairing, Fitting Spex.

Address Box 5, MARKDALE, ONT.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.

A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,

FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Go to Keefer's for fresh Biscuits, Figs and Dates.

Go to Grier's for Paints, Oils, and Hardware.

A couple of village canines worried a fine lamb belonging to Mr. Bentham last week.

All new and fashionable goods at E. J. Grier's. E. J. Grier always pays the highest prices for Butter and Eggs.

Squire Armstrong has been visiting friends in Toronto and Hamilton during the past week.

Mr. Geo. Saul paid Flesherton a brief visit last week, returning to Toronto on Monday evening last.

If you want first-class Flour, Bran or Shorts, try Geo. Keefer. All orders promptly filled and delivered.

E. J. Grier is selling Tweeds, all wool, for 35c. per yd. See them and you will be astonished at the low price.

Fishing for suckers in Flesher's pond is a favorite pastime of Flesherton boys—and some adults!

We had a pleasant call from our old friend, Mr. Dean Carscaden, of Thornbury last Friday. He looked well.

It will pay you to come 20 miles to secure some of the terrible bargains that are going at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Come at once. 2t.

You can always rely on straightforward dealing at E. J. Grier's.

The only place to get your watch repaired properly, is at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. 2 t.

Remember that E. J. Grier has about 500 patterns of Wall Paper and Bordering at rock bottom prices.

Mr. Campbell, Inspector of Public Schools for South Grey visited the Flesherton schools on Monday. He reported things flourishing.

Master Josiah Strain left for Uncle Sam's country last week, carrying with him the best wishes of a large circle of friends here.

It will pay you to come 20 miles to secure some of the terrible bargains that are going at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. Come at once. 2t.

Rev. Mr. Ayers preached a masterly sermon on "Forgiveness" in the Methodist church here on Sunday evening last. It was one of the best ever delivered by him in Flesherton.

Service was held in the Presbyterian church here last Sunday evening as well as the afternoon. Every other Sabbath evening in future there will be service in that church.

The Shelburne Free Press was twelve years old week before last. Its a grand paper and under the skillful management of Bro. Mortimer its success has been almost phenomenal. Success!

Cash buyers will consult their interest by pricing goods at E. J. Grier's before purchasing elsewhere.

THIRTY DAYS!

POSITIVELY

FOR

30 Days Only

—THAT THE—

Great Slaughter!

Of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spex, etc., at RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE, Flesherton, will continue.

Russell has just returned from the city, where he has secured some bargains never before known in this section of country—in fact it is impossible to compete with Russell.—All his goods are marked in PLAIN FIGURES, at very low prices and, for the next thirty days only, he is actually going to give 25 per cent. off on all cash sales over $1. Just imagine the finest grade of American Nickel Alarm Clocks at only $2, sold everywhere at $2.50 and $2.75. The finest grade of Plated Chains, beautiful patterns, for $1.60, sold everywhere at 2.25 and 2.50; the finest make of Clocks, beautiful Walnut Cases, from $2.75 up to $8.50, sold everywhere from 3.50 to 10.00. We are not making enough on these goods to pay your mileage or meals, neither will we give you a meal TO CATCH YOUR CUSTOM, but offer you finer goods at a little over half what you can get them for elsewhere! The finest make of Solid Silver Swiss Watches from $6.90 up; and the genuine American Watches from $9.50 up, bearing Warrants from 2½ to 5 years. We keep only the genuine goods, which bear long warrants. THIS IS THE CHANCE OF YOUR LIFE!—FOR THIRTY DAYS ONLY!—As we must clear them out before the arrival of our Summer stock at that date.

In REPAIRING, everyone knows that Russell's work always gives satisfaction and his work has already given him the name of the boss watchmaker and jeweller in this section. DON'T FAIL TO CALL within the next 30 days and secure some of the GREAT BARGAINS NOW OFFERING.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store,

FLESHERTON.

The | Last | Chance!

TIME NEARLY UP!

DON'T FAIL to call at once and secure some of these Terrible Bargains in Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Spex &c. 25 per cent. off on all sales of $1 00. Come at once. Do not leave it another day or you will be the loser, as we cannot afford to continue this Great Slaughter at

RUSSELL'S NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

FLESHERTON.

E. J. Grier is selling Gents' Suits, all wool, for $5.

The only place to get your watch repaired properly is at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. 2t.

We forgot to mention last week that little Robbie Smith gave a humorous song at the Sons of Temperance Open Division, which was received with great applause.

The cattle fair here on Monday last was poorly attended and very few sales were made. April, May and June are rather poor months for such fairs anyway.

The Mortgage sale of property in Flesherton was held on Thursday last as advertised. The properties enumerated were knocked down to our esteemed postmaster, Mr. R. J. Sproule.

If people look to their own interests they always take their Watch, Clock, and Jewelry repairs to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. A perfect job every time. 2t.

District meeting and Sabbath School convention, of the Methodist Church, will be held in Flesherton on Tuesday and Wednesday next, May 17th and 18th. The program will be found published in full elsewhere in these columns.

Mr. W. H. Elder, and family returned home to Flesherton on Friday evening last from California. They were met at the railway station by the Band and a number of citizens and welcomed home in right hearty style.

From the Hillsview (Dakota) Democrat we clip the following:—"Mr. Park of Toronto, Canada, a brother of our worthy townsman, J. M. Park, arrived here yesterday (April 22nd) and will locate with us." Mr. Park, the gentleman alluded to above, is a brother of our genial mail carrier.

Another consignment of Prints of the newest patterns arrived at E. J. Grier's.

A man from Parry Sound district recently came all the way (by land, too) to Grey County in order to be treated for some tedious disease, requiring surgical operations, by Dr. Armstrong. His confidence in the latter, whom he had known for some years, was unbounded.

Every lady should see the immense stock of Hats at E. J. Grier's, Priceville.

Mr. C. W. Chadwick, of Stratford—formerly of Artemesia—has been in Flesherton and neighborhood for some time advancing the interests of the "Temperance and General Life assurance Co.," of Toronto, of which he fills the very important position of Inspector. There are two sections, or classes, of life insurance in this company, namely, Total Abstaining and General. The vital statistics are largely in favor of the first named section, which, outside of the insurance aspect of the case, places a strong argument in the hands of Temperance reformers.

An immense stock of Rubber Coats at E. J. Grier's, which cannot be undersold.

There is a great rush to E. J. Grier's store for Window Blinds and Curtains.

Mr. Geo. H. Candler, of Toronto, is writing a novel for the Meaford Monitor, entitled, "By the Sweat of His Brow." The first instalment was published last week and gives evidence of considerable ability on the part of the young author.

The Band played on the streets last Saturday evening and the universal opinion of the citizens who were promenading at the time, was that they have never played better. The whole formed an animated scene not soon to be forgotten, and the moon shining in all its splendor suggested walks down by the Boyne bridge and—so forth.

E. J. Grier's Boots & Shoes cannot be surpassed for style and cheapness.

M. Richardson & Co. have at length completed arrangements for importing Teas direct from Japan. Their first shipment direct from Yokahama to Flesherton will arrive about the first of September and will be the product of this month's (May) pickings. This Tea will be put up to their order under their own brand and guaranteed pure.

Major Sutherland, so well-known and highly respected in this neighborhood, has gone to Bronson, Branch Co., Mich., U. S. His many friends throughout Ontario will be glad to know that he is as zealous and energetic as ever in the evangelistic work he has mapped out for himself in the great cause of the Master. Their prayers and sympathies go out after him.

Advance readers can not fail to notice the Flesherton Carriage Works announcement on our last page this week. Mr. W. A. Milburn, proprietor of this popular establishment—located near the planing factory—has been three years in business here and has succeeded in working up an extensive trade. The work turned out of this establishment is in every respect first-class.

If you purpose going on a trout fishing expedition and want fishing tackle or anything under the sun in that line, we do not know of a place in the county of Grey where you can be better supplied than at Richardsons Drug Store, Flesherton. Mr. Wm. Richardson, who is a connoiseur in all matters of this kind, will be pleased to show you the very best lot of fisher's sundries we ever saw in our life.

Flesherton can now boast a first-class barber of its own, viz., Mr. W. J. A. Smyth, late of Walkerton. He has opened out a very tasty shop, opposite Munshaw's Hotel and has done a good paying business since he came. This is an excellent centre for his business, and as Mr. Smyth is really an A 1 barber he will soon have a rattling trade. He will visit Priceville every Friday and attend to the wants of customers in that village and neighborhood.

Do not miss getting 5 lbs of that famous uncolored Japan Tea at E. J. Grier's. Big Dan says it is the best value in town.

His Second Wife.

In silence she raises
  Her low drooping head
To list while he praises
  The wife who is dead;
And ever he echoes the old refrain,
  "Oh! that was life
  With such a wife,
Poor Susan Amanda Matilda Jane!"

She never was idle,
  She never would tire;
Her temper could bridle,
  Her servants inspire.
And ever her virtues he sang again:
  "No one could be
  Like her to me,
Poor Susan Amanda Matilda Jane!"

She never spent money,
  Was ever content;
To have a new bonnet
  Would never consent;
Yet summer or winter, or shine or rain,
  Would never stay
  From church away,
His Susan Amanda Matilda Jane!

Was never too early,
  Was never too late;
Her dinner was ready,
  Or ready to wait.
But, ah! he never should see again
  With mortal eyes
  Such peerless pies—
Poor Susan Amanda Matilda Jane

Could sew on his buttons,
  Darn, back-stitch and hem,
Each button a picture,
  Each darn was a gem,
A vision of beauty, a pearl without stain!
  When she was there
  His woes to share,
Poor Susan Amanda Matilda Jane!

In silence she listens,
  Till sudden their lies
An ember that glistens
  Deep down in her eyes.
"To praise her yet farther to me is vain.
  No one," quoth she,
  "Regrets like me
Poor Susan Amanda Matilda Jane!"

Press On.

Press on! surmount the rocky steeps,
  Climb boldly o'er the torrent's arch;
He fails alone who feebly creeps,
  He wins who dares the hero's march.
Be thou a hero! Let thy might
  Tramp on eternal snows its way,
And, through the ebon walls of night,
  Hew down a passage unto day.

Press on! if once and twice thy feet
  Slip back and stumble, harder try;
From him who never dreads to meet
  Danger and death, they're sure to fly.
To coward ranks the bullet speeds,
  While on their breast who never quail
Gleams, guardian of chivalric deeds,
  Bright courage, like a coat of mail.

Press on! if fortune play thee false
  To-day, to-morrow she'll be true;
Whom now she sinks, she now exalts—
  Taking old gifts and granting new.
The wisdom of the present hour
  Makes up for follies past and gone;
To weakness strength succeeds, and power
  From frailty spring—Press on! press on!

Therefore press on! and reach the goal,
  And gain the prize, and wear the crown!
Faint not! for to the steadfast soul
  Come wealth, and honor, and renown.
To thine own self be true, and keep
  Thy mind from sloth, thy heart from soil,
Press on! and thou shalt surely reap
  A heavenly harvest for thy toil.

BAYARD TAYLOR

Canon McColl's Experience in Ireland.

Rev. Malcolm McColl, rector of St. George's, London, and Canon of Ripon, speaking at Nantwich on Home Rule, said he was interested in some Irish property, on which the "plan of campaign" had been put into force. (Laughter.) He was not going to denounce or to defend the plan, but he would tell them what happened in his own case. He allowed an agent to manage that property, and a short time ago six of the proper tenants offered the agent 50 per cent. of the rent, but the agent refused to accept it. The agent would have had recourse to eviction, but he could not do that without his (the speaker's) consent, and he had the agent before him and questioned him. He found out that the tenants had been on the farms for twenty-five years; that it was originally bog land, and their rent was 6d per acre, and that for the past ten years the rent charged had been £1 per acre. The last question he put to the agent was this: Supposing the landlord had paid the tenants as laborers to till the land, what would be the worth of that land now? The agent replied, 7s per acre. Then, says he, it seems you have been robbing the tenants of 13s per acre for ten years. He held that it was complete robbery, and no sooner had he made the reduction than the tenants immediately retired from the "plan of campaign," paid their rents, and there were peace and harmony on that property now. (Cheers.) He put these facts before a very prominent Liberal-Unionist, with the question. Did he do right or wrong? and the answer he received was that he did right. (Cheers.)

Woman Suffrage Out West.

Kansas citizen (profanely)—"Why, in the name of all the high-priced corner lots of this great city, isn't dinner ready?" Wife—"Don't get impatient, dear; Bridget will be back presently." Kansas citizen "Has she gone out?" Wife—"Yes, she has gone out to vote."—Louisville Courier Journal.

Where Curiosity is Unknown.

A police magistrate has refused to believe that a man can live next door to a saloon and never enter it. Why, men have been known to live next door to a church and never enter it.—Philadelphia North American.

The Queen has arrived at Windsor Castle from the continent.

There are more schools in France than in any other country in Europe.

The biography of the late Mr. Darwin by his son is to be in three large volumes, and it will be published in a few weeks.

"Gentlemen of the jury," once said an old time Judge in Mobile. "The lawyers have been here two whole days discussing the constitutionality of the law under which this suit was brought. You have nothing to do with that. All you have to ascertain is whether the man got the money. If he did he ought to pay it. Take the case."—American.

In the new residences at Montreal of Sir Geo. Stephen, Sir Donald A. Smith, R. R. Angus and others, wires for using the incandescent electric light were placed. A company has been organized with a capital stock of about $100,000, and all the capital stock practically taken by these gentlemen. Mr. W. C. VanHorne and others proposed to use the Edison system. Engine stations will be built at various points, and private houses supplied as well as banks, large business houses, factories, etc. The system will be in operation by autumn.

LOVE AND LUCRE:

A Tale of To-day.

(By J. H. Williams, the Funny Man of the Norristown Herald.)

Tom Hurley, usually as bright and jolly as a funeral director's assistant, entered a friend's office looking as haggard and melancholy as if he had just witnessed the initial performance of a new American comic opera.

"The newspapers," he said, in a lugubrious tone, in reply to his friend's questioning look, "have wrecked my happiness, and I'll soon be a weary wanderer upon the face of the earth. If there is an expedition fitting out to go in search of the North Pole I want to join it, and starve and freeze to death a few degrees farther north than any other reckless explorer has ever reached. That would be less painful than to remain in this part of the country. I would achieve fame, too, and have my name put under a caricature of a face in hundreds of newspapers. Here cowhidings and disgrace await me."

Another look, bristling with interrogation points, impelled him to proceed:

"It is a queer story, but is founded on facts. I was never very fond of work, you know, and about a year ago I resolved to marry a fortune. Not being an impecunious English lord, nor an Italian count with a name much longer than his purse, I fully realized that the fulfilment of this resolution was no easy task. I am simply an American, with an average amount of brains, and a respectable but rather plebeian name, and an American heiress doesn't look favorably upon such a suitor, unless he should happen to be employed as her father's coachman. While wondering how I should achieve my object all sublime, I encountered this paragraph in a daily paper:

"Miss Maggie O'Rackett, a young, comely and intelligent girl, employed as a cook at the Blank Hotel in Cincinnati, has just inherited a fortune of $500,000 by the death of an uncle in Ireland. Pretty Maggie's lovers will now be as numerous as the admirers of a professional beauty."

"'Eureka!' I exclaimed. 'Young, beautiful, an heiress and—a cook. What a rare combination of female accomplishments.' I incontinently determined to lay siege to Miss O'Rackett's heart. I proceeded at once to Cincinnati and registered at the Blank Hotel. When I first beheld the 'young comely Maggie,' my hopes almost fell to zero. She was about 35 years old, had decidedly warm hair, a cast in one eye, and no upper front teeth.

Her brogue was thick and her hands large and red. She was a'most homely enough to carry off the first prize at a female beauty show. But it is really wonderful how much feminine ugliness a fortune of $500,000 will successfully conceal. When I remembered Maggie's money, her personal blemishes disappeared as if by magic. There was after all, something about her that was interesting and attractive. I soon made her acquaintance, and when, a few days later, I asked her to be my wife, she gave me an amazed look and said:

"Shure, now, Misther Tom, an' it is not foolin' me yez air. Sech a noice gintilman as yourself wouldn't desave a poor orphin girrl wid nayther fayther or mother."

"I assured her that I was sincere, and facetiously added that the high order of talent she displayed in frying the seductive flapjack and boiling the fragrant cabbage had completely captured my heart; that it was the practical, not the ornamental, I wanted in a wife. For fear she would think my motives mercenary, I carefully refrained from alluding to her newly-acquired wealth. Indeed, I began to suspect that she had not yet heard of her good fortune. She finally promised to marry me, and the wedding was to take place in one week. Before the eventful day arrived I questioned Maggie concerning her relatives in the old country.

"'Relatives, is it?' she said. 'Shure an' Oi have lashins of 'em; but, begorra, they are as poor as Misther Job's turkey. An' Oi have a rilative in this country, too—an' that same is a big brother in this city; an', upon me honor, he's a that shtrong an' quick wid his two fists that Oi belave he could knock out John Sullivan himself.'

"'But, Maggie,' I anxiously inquired, 'haven't you any rich uncles in Ireland?'

"'Rich uncles, is it? Faith and Oi have only one uncle an' he's in the poor-house,' replied Maggie, with painful frankness. Then I showed her the newspaper paragraph, but the 'comely and intelligent' girl couldn't read. When apprised of its purport she snickered and said:

"'That's a good joke, Misther Tom, so it is. The blaggards knowed it wasn't thrue whin they printed it. All the rilitives Oi have in the worruld couldn't raise foive hoondred dollars bechune thim."

"That settled it. My love for Maggie vanished like the mists of a summer's morning. I was too honorable to blight her life or give her my hand without my heart. To avoid causing her pain, I left the city without informing her that our engagement was broken off. And now something tells me that her big brother is on my trail and will sooner or later wipe up the earth with me."

Tom looked as if life was not worth living, and when his friend urged him to brace up and dismiss such foolish fears, he dejectedly replied:

"But that was not all. My adventure with Miss O'Rackett did not shatter my resolution to corral an heiress. I remembered my old copy book motto: 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.' I tried again. I discovered another newspaper heiress. This time the paragraph read:

"Gretchen Nan Danm, a pretty little blonde from over the Rhine, now employed as chambermaid in the Hasche House, in Blaketown, Wis., will shortly come into possession of an estate valued at $700,000 by the death of a very wealthy aunt in the Vaterland."

"There was an air of sincerity about this announcement that prompted me to instantly repair to Blaketown and secure quarters at the Hasche House. Blaketown is a village of about 1,400 inhabitants, and I was inclined to believe that the news of Gretchen's fortune had not preceded me. Miss Van Dahm did not quite fulfil the newspaper description of a 'pretty little blonde.' She weighed about 175 pounds, was a thoroughbred brunette, wore freckles and short hair, and had a mouth of such liberal proportions that she could make a quarter of a 25 cent pie disappear at one bite. But her name was Gretchen Van Dahm, she was a chambermaid in the Hasche House in Blaketown, and must therefore be the heiress. After a week's courtship we were engaged. For reasons not necessary to explain, our marriage was to be a sub rosa affair.

"'Gretchen,' I asked one evening, 'have you any relations in this country?'

"'Only mein fadder, who lives py der iron fountry out, und he vos so cross und savage like a madt dog. He would kill you a couple or duo dimes ofer he know ve vos marriet mitout his consent.'

"This information was not calculated to inspire a timid man and prospective bridegroom with cheerfulness. 'Have you,' I again queried, 'any aunts in Germany?'

"'Nein.'

"'Nine?' I echoed. 'Well, have you heard of the death of any of them lately?'

"'Nein. They vos all deat before I left Shermany aireaty, und dot vos more ash seex years ago.'

"I began to feel uneasy. I showed her the newspaper paragraph, and after reading it she burst into a harsh and cruel laugh that sounded like the death-knell of my financial hopes.

"Dot vos a good choke, ven I nefer haf a rich aunt."

"I felt the 'choke.' An interview incog. with Gretchen's Nihilistic father convinced me that the newspaper paragraph in re her fortune was another horrible 'sell.' With the disappearance of her wealth also disappeared my love. There is too much misery in this world caused by misfit marriages, and I didn't propose to add to it. I left Blaketown between two days, without saying good-bye to a single soul. And now my misery is made more poignant by the belief that, in addition to Maggie's athlete brother, Gretchen's savage father is also seeking my gore."

"Didn't you pursue any more illusions in the shape of newspaper-made heiresses?" asked his friend.

"I did," he replied, in a voice full of emotion and anguish. "And the third was the greatest mistake of all. Although I had lost faith in newspaper-discovered heiresses, I was greatly interested when I read the annexed paragraph in a reputable morning journal:

"'Miss Mamie Bellville, a poor and pretty young seamstress of Clayton, Mass., has inherited $600,000 by the recent death in Australia of a brother whom she had long mourned as dead. She has been officially notified of her good fortune, and will soon come in possession of the money.'"

"This announcement was more to the point than either of the preceding two. 'Officially notified of her good fortune, and will soon come into possession of the money.' There was something tangible about that. There could be no mistake this time. With buoyant hopes and my best suit of clothes, I started for Clayton. I hardly know how it happened, but I was not in the town twenty-four hours before I met Miss Bellville. That part of the paragraph in relation to her personal appearance was true—she was young and pretty. She was also a seamstress, and was still employed at her trade. She had plenty of suitors, but she showed a preference for me. I felt highly flattered at being thus honored, and I must confess that I began to feel something more than a friendship for the girl. I found myself unconsciously writing the name 'Mamie' on scraps of paper and on the margins of newspapers when alone. The young lady was bright and intelligent, as well as young and pretty. But why did she continue to industriously ply the needle if she was a $600,000 heiress? There was something suspicious in that fact. Perhaps it was a scheme to keep fortune hunters at a distance. I was falling head over heels in love with the girl, and when, a few weeks after my arrival in Clayton, I asked her to be my wife, she looked tenderly into my eyes and said in a tone of frankness:

"Tom, our acquaintance has been very brief—too short, in truth, to take such an important step as you propose. I am a poor girl, without father or mother, sister or brother. A ridiculous report has been printed in the newspapers that I have inherited a fortune of $600,000 by the death of a brother in Australia. I wish it were true for your sake. The report has brought me many suitors, but when I told them it was an error they soon faded away. I believe that you are not actuated by any such selfish motives. If you will come to me to-morrow night and say you love me me, a poor girl—I will give you an answer that will make you happy."

"I bade her good-night and did not see her again. The following night saw me 200 miles from Clayton."

"Well, the girl had no big brother or stern father to put on your trail, anyway," said his friend, consolingly.

"No," moaned Tom, "but she lied to try her 'lovers' when she said that she had not inherited a fortune of $600,000, and I was her last victim! Last week she married a young man who did not care for wealth, and now he is spending her $600,000, and I really loved her, too."

Next morning Tom's body was found in the river.

A New Swindle.

An exchange says: A brace of rascals are going round the country operating a new and ingenious swindle. They read the local newspapers carefully, and when a farmer publishes an astray notice No. 1 calls to look at the animal. The farmer shows the beast and the fellow decides it is not his; then he returns to his partner and describes it minutely to him. No. 2 goes to the farmer and, after proving by a thorough description that he is the owner of the animal, says he cannot take it away, and offers to sell it at a bargain. The farmer buys it, and in a few days the rightful owner comes and claims the animal.

The lists of the Swiss Landsturm formed under the new law show an enrolment of 300,000 men.

It is fortunate that the war horses of famous soldiers are dying off so fast. It would have been only a question of time when some congressman would introduce a bill to pension them.—Philadelphia Times.

Times of India: A Sepoy died a long way from his home and country, and his caste fellows duly cremated him. Having done this pious duty, they went to the telegraph office and wired as follows to his parents: "Binda Persad died last night. Bones by post!"

THE CANADIAN LAZARETTO.

Report of the Physician on the Hospital for Lepers in New Brunswick.

The annual report of the Department of Agriculture contains the following report of Dr. A. C. Smith on the hospital for lepers at Tracadie, New Brunswick, for the year 1886: During the year three patients were admitted—two males and one female. Of these, one was from Tracadie and the others from one of the adjoining parishes—Caraquet. There were five deaths, leaving at present in the hospital nineteen—eleven males and eight females. Two of the patients are in the last stages of the disease, their sufferings soon to end in death; twelve in the early, and five in the more advanced stage, in which different portions of the body suffer from infiltrations of leprous material, leading to the destruction of the healthy flesh — ulcerations causing the loss of fingers and toes, and tubercles destroying the eyesight and functions of tongue and throat. With the exception, however, of an outbreak of ulcerated sore throat, from which all the inmates suffered, and which, for the time being, bore heavily on the sisters in charge, there has been an immunity from much of the intense suffering incident to the disease. The patient whom I discharged a year ago, and whose recovery was entirely due to the hygienic influences of the lazaretto acting on a robust constitution, remains free from the disease. The girl referred to in my report of 1884, from whom all symptoms of the disease were disappearing, has entirely recovered, but for reasons given in my last report, I did not yet advise her discharge from the institution. With the exception of one suspected, there is but a single known case of the disease outside of the lazaretto, which will, doubtless, soon seek admission. It is rumored that a family living in the neighborhood of Caraquet have the disease, but private inquiry leads me to believe that it is not leprosy, but a malady bearing some resemblance to it. Before my next report I shall personally investigate the matter. I cannot close this report without adding an humble tribute of respect to the memory of three of the sisters who have lately passed from among the living. While in life it was theirs to soothe the sufferings and comfort the sad hearts of those upon whom a mysterious Providence had laid an afflicting hand; now it is theirs to sleep their last sleep by the lonely shore, near to those for whom they died. Earth may erect no monument to such unselfish devotion, but across the ages comes a voice: "Inasmuch as you do it for the least of my little ones you do it unto me."

Salt in Manitoba.

A correspondent of Bradstreet's writes that experts are examining the saline springs in the Red River Valley, Manitoba, with the view of determining whether it is possible to make them remunerative. In boring wells for water, the further down the operator gets the more brackish the water becomes, and at one point on the Red River, thirteen miles above Winnipeg, a spring of brine runs out the year round, never freezing even in the coldest weather. But a still more remarkable indication that salt may be obtained in paying quantities in this very neighborhood is found on the north bank of the White Mud River, where, at a point near Woodside, brine of considerable strength bubbles up in such quantities as to form a constant stream two feet wide and four inches deep. Salt in large quantities is a necessity in these far inland regions, and if it is found in paying quantities it will be a great saving to the settlers, who already, though the country is but sparsely peopled, have annually to buy from the Ontario producers from $100,000 to $150,000 of the product. As the freight from Goderich to Winnipeg is $1.12 a barrel, and the salt is retailed at $2.50, a good home market would be assured from the start.

Britain and Her Possessions.

The might and magnitude of Britain and her colonies are presented in striking fashion if the tabular form in square miles is given thus:

THE MOTHER COUNTRY.

England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland	121,000 square miles.

COLONIES.

	Square Miles.		Square Miles.
Aden	65	Leeward Islands	[illegible]
Ascension	34	Malta and Goza	117
Bahamas	5,500	Mauritius	[illegible]
Basuto Land	10,000	Natal	21,000
Bermudas	11	Newfoundland	40,000
Canada	3,500,000	New Guinea	100,000
Cape Colony	[illegible]	New South Wales	325,000
Ceylon	25,000	New Zealand	105,000
Cyprus	4,000	North Borneo	25,000
Falkland Islands	5,000	Perim (naval and military station)
Fiji Islands	8,000	Queensland	668,000
Gambia	[illegible]	Rotumah	14
Gibraltar	1½	St. Helena	47
Gold Coast	15,000	Sierra Leone	468
Guiana	85,000	South Australia	903,000
Heligoland	4	Straits Settlement	1,000
Honduras	8,000	Tasmania	[illegible]
Hong Kong	32	Trinidad	2,000
India and Burmah	1,473,375	Victoria	88,000
Jamaica and Turks Island	4,000	West Australia	1,059,000
Labuan	30	Windward Isl'ds	800
Lagos	75	22 other possessions.

What! a Dude with a Brain!

A Burlington dude was struck with an idea for the first time in his life the other day, and is suffering from concussion of the brain.

The latest bird-cage has glass sides with a wire top.

Twinkle, twinkle, little star!
I know exactly what you are
A glowing ball of burning gas
Revolving round your central mass.

Twinkle, twinkle, little star!
I know exactly what you are:
For to my spectroscopic ken
I see you're only hydrogen.

—The gudefolk of Langholm, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, propose celebrating the Queen's jubilee by starting a new cemetery. They take their pleasures grimly in Langholm.

At a meeting of commanding officers, held in Montreal, it was decided to hold a grand field day, parade and review of all the regiments in the fifth and sixth military districts on June 21st, in celebration of the Queen's Jubilee.

A trifle unreasonable—"Why didn't you stop?" said the fat passenger as he clambered onto the car. "Ye didn't signal," replied the driver. "I stood on the corner." "Well, I'm no mind reader," said the driver, lashing his horses.

INFATUATED WITH A CRIMINAL.

Rosa Trainor's Sacrifice for an Aged and Ugly ex-Convict.

An Erie, Pa., despatch says: An accomplished and beautiful girl of 17 was arrested here to-day while in the company of an old and confirmed criminal whose personal appearance is almost grotesque in its ugliness. "Rusty" Collins, as he is known to the police of western cities and the officers of the law, has spent most of his life in prison. He returned here two months ago from serving a sentence in the Allegheny Penitentiary.

Rosa Trainor, while with school companions, met the ugly ex-convict on the street. He was pointed out to her as a late release from prison. At first sight she seems to have conceived a strange passion for him and she took the first opportunity to make his acquaintance. He was wary, thinking her attentions were a trap of some kind set for his benefit by detectives. But she soon undeceived him, leaving home, friends and the surroundings of a comfortable home to follow his fortunes. She was found in his company soon after she left home and was taken in custody and returned to her parents. In her rage at being separated from him she poured petroleum into her piano and set fire to it, destroying the instrument and nearly burning the house over her parents' heads. She escaped from home again about two weeks ago with the assistance of her strange lover. They disappeared then, but returned here last night. James Trainor, her father, got a warrant for their arrest, and Rosa and "Rusty" were captured. He yielded, but Rosa fought like a little demon, and when her father appeared she attacked him savagely. Before she was seized with this strange infatuation she had borne the character of a virtuous and more than ordinarily gifted young lady, a member of the Church and a dutiful daughter. "Rusty" explains the case simply by saying, with a wicked leer, "She's 'gone' on me."

Advice to a Young Man.

My boy, when you meet a good-hearted, genial fellow, open-handed and generous, who spends money freely when he has it, who "doesn't know the value of money," who only esteems it for the good it can do, who believes in the lively shilling, and always does his best to make it lively, who can't hoard up money for the life of him, who gets it and spends it, and then gets more to spend, so that all of us may get a little of it, who doesn't put down every cent he lets a friend have, as though he was a money lender, who, if he has only one dollar in the world will let you have ninety cents of it if you ask for it; a good, whole-souled, generous fellow, who knows no more and cares no more about money than a pig does about Greek, and he is a little hard up, and wants to borrow $10 of you for a few days—my boy, don't you lend him a cent; don't lend him a cent. Eh? Do I want you to be mean, close-fisted, stingy, weighing all friendship and good fellowship on the scales of the money lender? Oh, no, my boy, I didn't say anything of the kind. I said, and I repeat it, "don't lend him a cent. I don't want you to be mean, I only want you to be business-like. Give him $10 if you have it to spare and feel like it; give him what money you can spare, and your heart and head justify you in giving, but never lend that kind of a man a dollar. Only lend money where there is at least a remote idea of its being paid back. That's all. You may go, now. By the way, I took care of that note of Jack Merrihart's that you didn't tell me anything about; it's all right now, only don't lend Jack any more than you can afford to give him. A man who has no idea of the value of his own money has just as little comprehension of the value of yours.—Burdette in the Brooklyn Eagle.

The Aged Emperor.

German papers call to mind that Kaiser Wilhelm in his ninety years has survived no fewer than seventy-two reigning sovereigns who were his contemporaries, viz., fifty-two kings or queens, eight emperors, six sultans and six popes. Of these three were Kings of Prussia, Frederick William II., Frederick William III., Frederick William IV.; two were Kings of Hanover, two Kings of Wurtemburg, four Kings of Bavaria, three Kings of Saxony, one King of Westphalia (Jerome Bonaparte), one King of Greece, one King of the Belgians, three Kings of Holland, three Kings of England, three Kings of France, five Kings of Sweden, four Kings of Denmark, three (or four) Sovereigns of Portugal, five Sovereigns of Spain, five Kings of Sardinia, six Kings of Naples, two Emperors of Austria (one of whom was the last of the former line of German Emperors), two Emperors of France, four Czars of Russia. He has also survived twenty-one Presidents of the United States.—N. Y. Tribune.

Cholera and Revolution.

A Panama despatch says: Cholera is decreasing in Chili. Two thousand eight hundred and seventy-three persons have died of the disease in Santiago de Chili alone.

A despatch from Guayaquil says a revolutionary party under Ruiz Sandoval has been defeated in Colcho by Government forces, and a number of them killed and a number taken prisoners. Ruiz Sandoval is a Mexican. He has served in Colombian revolutions, and only a few days ago left the Isthmus for the purpose of making this raid.

—The Chief of Police of Toronto yesterday received a letter from Glasgow, Scotland, asking for information which would lead to the whereabouts of David Sherar, who left Glasgow in 1880 and worked for a few weeks during 1882 in the Grand Trunk freight sheds, Toronto. He has been left a fortune of some $40,000 by his deceased father.

While out fowling near Maxwell, Ont., yesterday afternoon two young men named Thomas Blakely and William Ferrer were accidentally shot, the latter seriously.

A boom belonging to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company broke on Sunday and five thousand logs escaped and passed over the Chaudiere Falls. The logs will be recovered at a cost of about $1,200.

George McKee, son of Detective McKee, of Windsor, and a brakesman on the Grand Trunk, was thrown from a buggy on Saturday evening near Sandwich by his horse running away. His skull was fractured and there are no hopes of his recovery. He is about 24 years old.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Mr. Amyot introduced a Bill to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. The Bill provides that the time for filing pleadings against elections, instead of being 30 days after gazetting the return, shall be as follows: Thirty days after nomination, where the election is by acclamation, and thirty days after the election where there is a contest. The Bill was read a first time.

Mr. McMullen introduced a Bill to regulate proceedings in the collection of first and second mortgages, and also to regulate payment of the same. The Bill provides that a first mortgagee before selling the property shall give notice to the second mortgagee, who shall have an opportunity of paying off the mortgage. The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. Thompson, replying to Mr. Watson, said the Government did not intend to appoint Jeremiah Travis a Judge of the new court for the Northwest.

Hon. Mr. Costigan, replying to Mr. Barron, said that M. F. O'Donoghue, brother of the late W. B. O'Donoghue, had been employed by the Dominion Government temporarily at various times within the past year.

Hon. Mr. Costigan, replying to Mr. McMullen, said that distillers are not allowed to import corn in bond for manufacturing purposes, but that if distillers import corn and pay duty on it, manufacture whiskey out of it and export, they will be entitled to a rebate of duty.

Hon. Mr. Thompson, replying to Mr. Wilson (Elgin), said the Government had received a request to appoint a junior judge of Elgin, and was considering the matter.

Hon. Mr. Costigan, replying to Mr. Laurier, said the Government was considering the question of amending the law respecting the inspection of flour in accordance with the recommendation of the Montreal Board of Trade.

Mr. Charlton moved his resolutions in favor of giving the information in the public documents to the public before being presented to the House. In this matter Parliament should not be treated as a privileged class. The information collected was really the property of the public, and should be given to the public as soon as possible. The system of holding back information sometimes lead to real and serious injury to the public interest. For instance, last election was fought largely in the dark because of lack of information later than the reports last presented to Parliament, covering the facts only up to June, 1885. He had been informed last session that the net public debt on April 30th, 1886, was $205,569,000. He had asked for a statement up to the 1st June, but in the hurry of prorogation the Finance Minister forgot to give it. With great courtesy, however, he sent him statements showing a net debt of $206,000,000 in round figures, but the Public Accounts, bringing the statements down to the 30th June, showed the net debt to be $223,159,000. During the last election the people of Canada were in the dark respecting the fact that the net public debt had gone up about $17,590,000 in thirty days, and stood at one time at over $223,000,000. He found that in many countries public information of this kind was placed before the public much earlier than in Canada. For instance, in England he found the Board of Trade published monthly statements, and statements of trade and navigation were made quarterly. He thought a system as good as circumstances would permit should be established in Parliament.

Sir John Macdonald agreed in the principle of the reform proposed, but thought it would require a change in the statutes establishing the different departments, under which it was provided that the reports should be sent to the Governor-General and by him submitted to the House.

Sir Richard Cartwright expressed gratification at the principle of this reform being conceded. The public interest had suffered in the late election by lack of information. Estimates had been made in relation to the public debt by the leader of the Opposition, and, as usual with that gentleman, his estimate was well within the mark.

Mr. Blake expressed the opinion that it would require no change in the statutes, because the provision that these reports should be sent to the Governor-General and then to the House did not prevent an earlier presentation of the facts to the public. The efficient carrying out of the proposed new system would involve the early communication with the departments, for no doubt men in office were like other people, not apt to anticipate duty, and it was fair to suppose the late time of presenting the reports caused lateness in getting the information in a shape to be presented. He thought another change should be made, and Government railways should publish weekly returns of traffic like other roads.

An agreement was reached that the matter should stand over for the present.

Mr. Casey moved for a copy of the commission or other documents appointing Sir Alexander Campbell and Sanford Fleming as representatives of Canada at the Colonial Conference in London. It was generally understood, he said, that the Conference was intended as a preliminary to Imperial Federation. He trusted the Government had not authorized its representatives to speak for Canada on that subject without submitting the question to the people at a general election.

Sir John Macdonald suggested that the motion should call for all papers. He did not think the despatches had been brought down.

Mr. Casey adopted the suggestion, and the motion so amended was carried.

Mr. Perry, moving for a return relating to the steamboat service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, said that during the recent elections a letter signed "John A. Macdonald" was circulated, and that it promised a subway would be built if it cost not more than five million dollars. He expressed the hope that the Government would have another survey and would come to the conclusion and announce definitely whether or not they would go on with this subway. If they would not the people of Prince Edward Island would consider the bargain of Confederation broken and themselves free from Confederation. He did not say there was a feeling in favor of secession in Prince Edward Island, but he did say there was a feeling of dissatisfaction, a feeling that they had to pay the late dollar of taxes and then were not given the consideration which were promised them.

The motion was carried.

A number of private Bills were read a second time.

Mr. Hickey asked if it was the Government's intention to increase the duty on butter and if butter imported for consumption was subjected to scientific tests.

Sir Charles Tupper said it was not competent for the Government to make a communication in advance of its intention on such a point. If a report was made that butter of an unwholesome character was being imported, a scientific inspection would be made.

Sir John Macdonald, on moving the first reading of the Act relating to the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue, excused himself from explaining at length the object of the Bill because of a severe cold. Briefly, however, the object was to make these two departments subsidiary parts of the new Department of Trade and Commerce, under secretaries, as it were. He would ask to have this Bill considered with that to provide for the establishment of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Jamieson, on moving a Bill to amend the Canada Temperance Act, explained that it was somewhat similar to the one introduced by him last session. Many of its provisions received the approval of the House, but failed in the Senate. It was to make the Temperance Act as perfect as possible.

Mr. Mills—I think this is a favorable opportunity to call attention to the responsibility resting upon the House in this question. If there is a question on which it is the duty of the Government to have a policy and undertake to direct the House along the line they intend to travel, it is this. When another Administration occupied the Treasury benches, an honorable member for the Province of Manitoba, who is now in the Senate, introduced a resolution declaring that it was the duty of the Government to take up the question of prohibition and guide the House upon that subject. That resolution, I believe, was supported by every gentleman now on the Treasury benches who had then a place in the House. The Government of that day admitted the soundness of the principle laid down and introduced the Bill now known as the Canada Temperance Act, which is still on the statute book, and which these gentlemen, who are not members of the Government, are endeavoring to amend. Why should this question, which affects the peace, order and good government of the country, which affects the morals of the people, which affects the public revenues, be eliminated from the policy of the Government, and transferred to the hands of private members? Why, sir, a large portion of the community are scarcely satisfied because the Opposition, who are in a minority, do not undertake to direct the affairs of the country in this respect. How much less can those who are in the majority, and who assume the responsibility of the general policy of the country, escape responsibility in this most important matter? The time has gone by when they could shirk that responsibility, and I trust the House and the country will insist upon these gentlemen showing the courage of their convictions whatever those convictions may be.

The Bill was read a first time.

Sir Richard Cartwright asked if the Finance Minister could say when the estimates would be brought down, or the budget speech to follow, would be made.

Sir Charles Tupper—I hope early next week to be able to intimate the probable time.

Sir John Macdonald, moving the second reading of the Bill respecting the Department of Trade and Commerce, said that he would make his explanations when they came to consider the Bill respecting the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Sir Richard Cartwright said he had always been of opinion that it was a mistake to have in this country a Cabinet composed of thirteen or fourteen Ministers of the first rank, and that it would be better to have a much smaller number of Ministers and to have a number of Under-Secretaries of State appointed from among the junior members of the House, as was done in England.

Mr. White (Cardwell) moved the second reading of the Bill respecting the Banff National Park.

Sir Richard Cartwright said he had been informed that some portions of the land included within the limits of the park were already owned by gentlemen who were formerly members of this House. The Government should surely own everything that was included within the limits of the park. Then he understood that some large hotels had been erected, and leases given to persons who were formerly members of this House. On the whole he thought there should be considerable discussion and inquiry before the Bill was passed.

Mr. White (Cardwell) said that the park was twenty-six miles long by ten broad, but that a very considerable portion of it was covered by a sheet of water called Devil's Lake, which is fifteen miles long.

Mr. Mills said the Bill actually gave the Minister of the Interior a little Province of his own and allowed him to rule it as he pleased. The regulations should be subject to the control of Parliament.

Uncle Esek's Wisdom.

We stand n our sunshine oftener than others do.

It is the little things that are the most wonderful and difficult; it is possible for human enterprise to make a mountain, but impossible for it to make an oyster.

There is nothing so necessary as necessity; without it mankind would have ceased to exist ages ago.

The heart gets weary, but never gets old.

If a man is right he can't be too radical; if wrong he can't be too conservative.

The silent man may be overlooked now, but he will get a hearing by and by.

Method and despatch govern the world.

You can outlive a slander in half the time you can out argue it.—Century.

King Humbert and Queen Margaret of Italy arrived at Venice yesterday to open the exhibition. They were conveyed to the royal palace in gondolas, accompanied by a long procession of boats manned by gondoliers attired in antique costume.

Georgia boasts of three stingy men. One of them will not drink as much water as he wants unless it be from another man's will; the second requires his family to write a "small hand" to save ink, and the third stops his clock at night in order to save the wear and tear of the machinery.

GREAT NAVAL REVIEW.

The Queen's Jubilee Naval Review the Biggest Thing Out.

A London cable says: At the banquet of the Royal Academy to the colonial delegates on Saturday Lord George Hamilton, replying for the navy, referred to the naval review to be held at Spithead on July 23rd, where a fleet of superior strength and power to any fleet ever seen by any Sovereign at any time or in any place, would be assembled, numbering upwards of one hundred pennons and including every variety of the most modern war ships, from the torpedo boat, with its gossamer skin three-eighths of an inch thick, to the great mammoth ironclad, with its pachydermatous hide of two feet of iron; and every variety of ordnance from the 110 ton gun, capable of projecting a missile weighing 1,800 pounds, to a distance of six miles, to the rapid firing machine guns, capable of discharging many hundred rounds of ammunition in a single minute. A scheme had been brought before the Colonial Conference for the strengthening of the navy by the employment of merchant cruisers, which would place one-fourth of Her Majesty's colonies and the Mother Country in a different position to that hitherto occupied for naval defences. If this scheme were realized it would be brought to maturity mainly through the statesmanlike attitude adopted by the representatives of the colonies, with whom the members of Her Majesty's Government had come in contact. They have met us, said Lord George Hamilton, in no haggling, parsimonious spirit, for they had confidence in the idea of Imperial unity and solidity, and he alluded to this scheme because Her Majesty's present Government, in common with all preceding Governments, attach the utmost importance to its realization.

INSANE ASYLUM HORRORS.

The Buffalo Investigation—Inhuman Treatment of Patients by Attendants.

A Buffalo despatch says: Charles Brandt, a former patient of the Lunatic Asylum, came here from Welland, Ont., yesterday, to testify before the Grand Jury. Concerning ex-Assemblyman Frank Sipp, who is now under treatment, Brandt testified: "One day I saw an attendant named Poulson get terribly angry because Mr. Sipp was awkward in sweeping the floor. He pulled Sipp into the extension and I looked through an open door and saw Poulson and Winspear catch Sipp by both arms and throw him on the floor on his back. Poulson jumped on Sipp's chest and then knelt on his legs above the knee while he choked him. Sipp had lucid moments and in one of these he complained of his breast being sore and said: 'If they would only let me alone! But when a man is once in this place God knows he never will get out.'"

Abram White, of Perry, said that some of the attendants used to shake the patients violently. When he first came one grabbed him by the shoulders, and after shaking him shoved his knee into White's abdomen. White nearly fainted and suffered intense agony for hours.

Ella Cummings, of Fredonia, kept a journal during her stay at the asylum. She told the jury of a female patient who was forced into a bath tub and then mopped off with a kitchen mop. Then the attendant threw some soft soap in her eyes and laughed at her pain and fright. All the testimony is in, and a report is expected on Monday.

FAMILY TROUBLES

Cause a Man to Cut His Throat and Suffocate His Child.

A Sunday's Pittsburg despatch says: This morning when Jennie Oswald, a girl 11, years of age, came from her bedroom into the dining-room of her home in Shater township, near Etnaboro', just beyond the limits of the city, she found her father, Chas. Oswald, sitting in a chair with his throat cut and her younger sister, Bessie, lying on a lounge dead. It was a case of suicide on the part of Oswald, and all the signs indicate that he murdered his daughter before cutting his own throat. Since last Christmas he had lived with his wife without changing a word until Saturday week last, when he spoke to her about a farm in Armstrong County, in which they were interested. Yesterday afternoon he sent his wife up to see it. Bessie wanted to go up with her, but the father refused to permit it. At supper last night he gave the children maple syrup, saying it was good for colds and coughs. The children said it was bitter and refused to take it. Bessie had been ill, and after supper she lay down on a lounge and fell asleep. Jennie, about 9 o'clock went to bed, and before going started to waken her sister. Oswald ordered the child to let her alone. The girl obeyed and went to bed. When she came down in the morning, about 7 o'clock, she found her father and sister as above stated. The child had evidently been smothered, as a piece of cloth was found stuffed in her mouth. It is supposed constant brooding over his domestic and financial troubles had turned his brain, and when he sent his wife away he had in contemplation the death of his daughters and himself.

Personal and Literary.

Prince Napoleon, who is now living in Switzerland, is occupied with his long-meditated work on Napoleon I., which is to be a refutation of the damaging attacks of Lanfrey and Taine.

A biography of the late Earl Russell is to be written by Mr. Spencer Walpole, who is to have the use of Lord Russell's papers, of which a very large number are in the possession of his family.

Lord Lyons will continue to hold the Paris Embassy for another two years. The Queen has been most anxious that he should retain the important post in which he has rendered such valuable services to the country.

Among the new novels which were published this week is one named "My Own Love Story," the author of which is H. M. Trollope, the eldest son of the late Anthony Trollope. This is Mr. Trollope's first attempt at fiction.

Mr. Chamberlain, with his ever faithful Mr. Jesse Collings, continuing his tour of Scotland, has now reached the Island of Skye, and is looking into the crofter question thoroughly. Mr. Chamberlain's well-known opinions concerning land make it certain that he will return as a champion of the crofters.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

Blood Indians fired on a party of Mounted Police near Medicine Hat.

A despatch from Cooktown, Australia, announces that the steamer Benton, of Singapore, was sunk in a collision with a barque off the Island of Formosa, and that 150 persons were drowned. No Europeans were lost.

The Pope has sent a telegram to Emperor William and Prince Bismarck, thanking them for their support of the new Prussian Ecclesiastical Bill. The despatch adds that His Holiness desires the prosperity of Germany and the Catholic Church.

It is semi-officially stated that if the Afghan insurgents succeed in overthrowing the Ameer the latter's downfall would not lead to complication between England and Russia; that, on the contrary, projects are under consideration to enable the two powers jointly to arrange for the suppression of the tribal war and the subsequent administration of the whole country under a protected ruler.

The National Fair Trade League gave a banquet in London last night to the colonial representatives attending the Conference and the members of the recent Royal Commission on the Depression of Trade and Industry. The speeches were all in the direction of encouraging trade with the colonies and consolidating the union between the Mother Country and her children. Most of the speakers favored a preferential importation of colonial products into Great Britain. The toast of the colonial visitors was enthusiastically received. The Canadian representatives were unable to attend.

Dr W. J. Northrup, a prominent physician at Haverhill, O., was murdered on Wednesday by Thos. McCoy, a saloonkeeper. Dr. Northrup had incurred the displeasure of the McCoy party by being active in favor of local option.

A romantic discovery of hidden treasure in the cellar of a house on the south side of Milwaukee came to light yesterday. Henry J. Peters, an old resident of the city, died nearly a year ago. He had borne the reputation of being a miser, and on his deathbed he declined to make a will or give his wife information as to his affairs. Recently the sewer under the house became clogged, and workmen were engaged to remedy the trouble. On taking up the flooring of the cellar the men came across a heavy box securely locked. It was found to be filled with gold coin, dollars, eagles and foreign money, to the aggregate of nearly $20,000.

The young women of Newton, N. J., have formed an "anti-vice" society, having for its object the regeneration of young men. All members bind themselves to refuse any attentions from gentlemen using alcoholic liquors or tobacco in any form, and over 50 marriageable young women have signed such a pledge. The men refuse to submit to what they consider an arbitrary rule, and are seeking social enjoyment in the neighboring villages. The action of the women is the result of agitation of the temperance question, and is creating a social furore never before equalled in the place.

The will of the late Mr. Alex. Mitchell, of Milwaukee, the Scotch millionaire, has been read in private to his family. It has not yet been filed for probate. The following bequests have, however, been made public: Protestant Orphan Asylum, $10,000; Catholic Orphan Asylum, $5,000; Milwaukee Hospital, known as the Passa Vant Hospital, $10,000; St. Mary's Catholic Hospital, $5,000; Young Men's Christian Association, $10,000; Nashotan House (Episcopal) Theological Seminary at Nashotan, $5,000; Racine College, $5,000. The opinion prevails that there are other public bequests which cannot now be made public owing to the nature of the provisions for their administration.

The Italian Government has received alarming advices from Massowah, and has ordered three battalions to reinforce the garrison there.

Lord Salisbury's eldest son will be married in the parish church of the House of Commons on May 17th to the second daughter of the Earl of Arran.

A colossal system of robbery by means of prepared packs of cards has just been discovered at the Casino at Monte Carlo. The proprietors of the tables have lost $90,000.

The widow of the late Mr. Frank Forman, of London, who died two weeks since, succumbed to the shock yesterday, leaving two daughters to mourn her loss.

Captain George D. Calder, of the Hose Company, Brantford, was presented with a valuable gold watch on Saturday evening at the parlors of the company in appreciation of his faithful and efficient services.

Notice is given in last week's Gazette of the incorporation of Charles Riordon, J. R. Barber, J. G. Riordon, Thomas Reynolds and W. J. Douglas, under the name of "The Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company," for the manufacture of wood pulp and paper.

Chief Engineer Jennings, of the Western Ontario Pacific Railroad, said that the tracklayers were eight and a-half miles from Richmond street, London, on Sunday, and would lay one and a-half miles before night. They will possibly be within the corporation limits on Friday next.

At an influential meeting of Montreal citizens, held on Saturday, a committee of citizens and the Council of the Board of Trade were appointed to accompany the City Council deputation to Ottawa and urge on the Government the necessity of taking prompt steps to prevent the recurrence of floods.

A statistical publication just issued at Paris calculates that there are about 350,000 Frenchmen in the Western Hemisphere.

An Athens court-martial has sentenced to death three officers for treachery in having surrendered to the Turks during frontier fighting. Five others charged with the same offence were acquitted.

Advices from Creto report a fight between a band of Turks and a number of Christians, which resulted in several deaths. The Turks kidnapped a Christian girl and were attacked by her friends.

Manchester people are once more attempting to raise money for a Manchester ship canal. The large meeting yesterday was sanguine in tone. Local subscriptions, according to Manchester papers, reach nearly three millions sterling, leaving only one-sixth of the capital Lancashire has to raise to be taken. This secured, fresh effort will be made to float the scheme in London, where it is supposed the remainder of the capital will then be subscribed.

A new sort of pressure is being tried in behalf of the Imperial Institute in England. It is now given out that knighthoods will be withheld from Mayors who have not raised subscriptions for the Institute in their own towns. Many of these functionaries have preferred to promote local objects in connection with the Jubilee. This is to be their punishment. The papers publish brief accounts of the intended procession, but the programme is not yet finally settled.

Abe Littlejohn, a well-to-do farmer, and his wife, living near Clinton, Ala., were burned in their dwelling on Wednesday night. It is supposed the couple were murdered.

The Vatican has notified France that General Boulanger's military law, which refuses to exempt clerical students from service, is an infringement of the concordat, and has demanded its withdrawal.

The Italian Government denies the reports received at Cairo from Massowah that a battle had been fought between a large body of Abyssinians and a force of Italians which was advancing on Keren. An official denial is also given to the statement that the Government, owing to the receipt of alarming intelligence from Massowah, had ordered three battalions to reinforce the garrison there.

It is estimated at the Treasury Department that the debt decrease for April amounts to $12,500,000.

J. E. Lavin, a manufacturer of leather for pocketbooks, committed suicide in Central Park, New York, on Saturday afternoon, because he had failed to keep a promise made to his affiance to stop drinking.

Two sharp shocks of earthquake were felt at Spokane Falls, Washington Territory, at 4 o'clock on Saturday morning. The vibrations were from north to south. Many of the citizens were awakened. There was only a moment's interim between the shocks.

During a heavy shower on Friday afternoon a waterspout burst on Fairbank's hill, West Peterboro', N.H., and caused the most damaging washout ever known in the town. Rocks weighing two tons were moved from their bed and left in the middle of the street.

Saturday night at 12 o'clock every liquor license in Fall River, Mass., expired, and prohibition under the license law took effect. There were about three hundred licensed liquor dealers in the city, which will lose $60,000 in revenue annually derived from licenses.

Pleuro-pneumonia is reported to be more prevalent among cattle in Chicago and its vicinity than ever before. Stringent measures for stamping out the plague have been adopted, as many as 200 diseased animals being slaughtered in one day.

The dead bodies of three negro brothers named Sylvester were found hanging to a tree six miles east of Proctor, W. Va., on Friday, each body bearing the following placard: "Nigger thieving must be broken up."

Jay and Lee Moore, aged 14 and 12 years, and Ira and Bertie Hotchkiss, aged 11 and 8, sons of well-to-do farmers of South Valley, Cattaraqui County, N.Y., on Saturday went fishing along the Alleghany River. They found and entered the skiff and pushed out. The swift current immediately caught and capsized the boat and all four were drowned.

On Friday Edward S. Samuels, a prominent St. Louis merchant, jumped from the bridge in Nashville, Tenn., into the river. He was rescued and removed to the hospital, where he died yesterday morning. He said his reason for attempting suicide was because he had broken a promise made to his wife that he would drink no more intoxicating liquor.

STRANGE FATAL ACCIDENT.

A Lady Drowned by Falling Into a Flooded Cellar.

A sad and fatal accident happened early Thursday morning to a Mrs. Rafferty, a widow of advanced years, whose son keeps a grocery store on the corner of Murray and Ottawa streets, Montreal, in what was the inundated district. Mrs. Rafferty had opened the store before 7 a.m., when a woman came in for some goods, and, going to the back of the shop, where it was dark, to serve her, deceased stepped upon a trap door, which gave way beneath her weight, and she fell into the water which filled the cellar. Her screams brought the customer to the edge of the trap door, and she managed to catch Mrs. Rafferty's hand and called for help, but while a young man was trying to make his way to the hole the woman was forced to relax her hold on Mrs. Rafferty's hand, and the latter fell back and disappeared under five feet of muddy water. Her son, who heard the screams, rushed from his bed and jumped into the hole and rescued his mother, but life was extinct.

The State Lottery of Austria-Hungary last year netted a profit of 8,000,000 florins. As, usual, the fleece was cut from the weakest lambs.

—One safe way to guard your pockets is to carry with you no more "portable property," as Dickens calls it, than is absolutely necessary.

—New kid gloves have broad bands of stitching on the backs; three rows in color contrasting or harmonizing with that of the glove.

—The fresh importation of French white toilets, embroidered and lace-trimmed, are marvels of Parisian skill, art and matchless delicacy.

—The latest fashionable decree is that strawberries must be eaten with a fork and never with a spoon. How about eating them with a mouth.

—An advice to housewives from the Figaro: "To prevent roasting meat from burning, place in the oven a basin full of water. The steam will also prevent the meat getting dry."

Omaha World: "Bachelors are not taxed in this country as they are in Switzerland, but here they have to support all the theatres, livery men and ice cream saloons, so things are about even."

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, MAY. 12, 1887.

The Government majority in the House of Commons is 43—within two of the number published in The Advance right after the elections last winter. There was a straight party vote in the House last week with the above result. The Globe's majority of one must be off holidaying in Muskoka or somewhere else. It hasn't turned up since the elections.

A number of over-zealous Conservative papers are raising a vigorous howl because Mr. Mowat appointed, or caused to be appointed, his son to York shrievalty No. 2. All we've got to say about it is that Mr. Mowat would be a very foolish man if he did not do something for his own flesh and blood occasionally. Some of these papers give evidence of the possession of certain asinine-like qualities, which we never, until quite recently, thought belonged to them. This narrow-minded partyism is silly—and sickening!

We had almost forgotten to mention that Mr. Curran's Home Rule resolution was carried in the Canadian House of Commons the other day. Not that the omission will grieve any of our readers very much—oh, no! It is the spectacle of a large number of our representative men wasting a lot of valuable time in discussing a question with which, as a nation, we have no concern, that is like "gall and wormwood to them. Twice have our parliamentarians been snubbed by the imperial authorities—once, indeed, by Mr. Gladstone himself—for not minding their own business in this matter. For the sake of capturing a few votes, however, some of the people's representatives have shown a most remarkable willingness to make asses of themselves!

Mr. Wm. O'Brien, accompanied by a tenant recently evicted from the Marquis of Landsdown's Irish estates, has arrived in New York and will shortly cross over into Canada. Mr. O'Brien's purpose is to stir up discord and make things as unpleasant as possible for our Governor General. The latter, owing to his official position as representative of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen in this country, cannot avail himself of the means usually employed in receiving such attacks. Practically he is defenceless and must trust to the loyalty and good sense of Canadians. Under these circumstances, Mr. O'Brien will get a decidedly cool reception from all classes and creeds of our countrymen. Archbishop Lynch has frankly acknowledged, that O'Brien has ill-timed his visit to this country. All lovers of fair play are of the same opinion.

Some objections have been raised in regard to a statement which appeared in the report of East Grey Spring Show, relative to General Purpose horses, in The Advance of a few week's ago. Not having written the report in question ourself, we disclaim all personal responsibility in connection with the opinions therein advanced; but our columns are always open for the discussion of all live topics, whether the views advanced are in harmony with our own or not. There are many very fine General Purpose horses in the county, but of course there is a diversity of opinion as to the best class of stallions to use—some say one class, some say another. See all and then decide, The people themselves are the arbitrars in these matters.

It is very commendable on the part of Messrs. M. Richardson & Co., of Flesherton, that they have completed arrangements for the importation of Teas from Japan direct. The first shipment will arrive about the first of September. The aroma of the tea is preserved in the most perfect condition by the interesting method now in vogue for drying and packing it. From Yokahama the beautifully flavored teas are then shipped to the Pacific terminus of the C. P. R., and from thence via our great transcontinental railway to Flesherton—a distance altogether of 12,000 miles! Messers. Richardson & Co. are to be congratulated most heartily on the consummation of this great stroke of enterprize.

DOMINION DAY.

The time has fully arrived, we think, when a healthy change may be made in the manner of celebrating Dominion Day in Flesherton. The people have expressed their disapproval of one feature in connection with past celebrations in terms not to be misunderstood. We mean horse-racing. It will not do to tell them that things will be differently managed this year or next year. Such promises have been held out in the past and with what result? Simply to convince the public that promises amount to nothing, however good the intentions of the management committee.

Under the circumstances, then, we come forward with the suggestion, that athletic games take the precedent in future. Let good prizes be given. This will draw the best athletes to our town and, at the same time, secure the moral support of the entire community. Other features might be introduced, such as swimming races, climbing the slippery pole, catching the greased pig's tail, walking the spring pole, egg race, fireworks, &c.

By following out this idea we believe hundreds more people would visit the town and grounds than hitherto. It will be a mistake to continue the horse-racing feature. Better far better- for the management committee to recognize this undoubted fact now, and, by altering the program in this respect, bow gracefully to the popular feeling and secure that patronage and support at the hands of the people which has so largely fallen off of late years. These remarks apply with equal force to many neighboring places.

THE FISHERY DISPUTE.

(Contributed.)

Canadians are a peace-loving people. Whether this principle has its origin in superior Christianity as compared with "our neighbors across the way," we are not vain enough to answer in the affirmative; but, taking it all-in-all, our forbearance under rascally provocation shows that our British principles have not degenerated by transplanting upon American soil.

ADVANCE-readers are, ere this, posted on the Yankee assumption to encroach upon our Fisheries. They claim by reason of numerical force, that we must surrender to them our heritage under the Treaty of 1818; and if we don't permit poaching by Yankee fishermen, according to Curran the less, the Yankee-Fenians will demolish our tabernacle "in a jiffy." However, it would be well for our foreign desperadoes to re-read the historical lesson of 1812-15. Our country possesses many cliffs and precipices equally as dangerous as Queenston Heights.

The lugubrious tone of the Toronto Mail upon this subject is a charming illustration of slobberly innocence. It measures prowess by the square acre, and national right, by the law of might. This has ever been Yankee doctrine, but true Canadians will not subscribe to it. It has been said that the Home Government will not sustain us in maintaining the letter of the Treaty of 1818. Be that as it may, we will maintain our heritage or die in the trenches. Our lineage scorns cowardice. Life would be a burden, except accompanied with honor.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS GIVEN LAST WEEK.

16.—$66⅔.
17.—$97.67 +
18.—$714.6096.
19.—$104.40.
20.—$567.001.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS RECEIVED.

Flesherton P.S.

Lou. Armstrong, 2. Annie Richardson, 2. Martha Beattie, 2. Fred. Ayers 2. Bert. Armstrong, 2. Lizzie Richardson, 2.

Flesherton Station P. S.

Sarah Hogg, 2.

S. S. No. 9, Artemesia.

Alex. Cameron, 1.

[Questions last week seem to have been too difficult. We look for a long list next time.—MATH. EDITOR.]

Questions for Next Week.

21.—A piece of ground 100 feet square is enclosed by a brick wall 2½ ft. thick and 15 ft. high. How many bricks 9 inches long, 4½ inches wide, and 2½ inches thick, will be required to build the wall, 1-15 of the whole allowed for mortar?

22.—A rectangular piece of land 120 links wide contains 1 acre, 2 r., 16 per., how long is it?

MANY PERSONS SUFFER.—From impure breath and suppose it comes from a disordered stomach. In many cases the actual cause is Catarrh. Nasal Balm will remove the cause, and cure.

Births.

HOLMAN.—In Artemesia, on Sunday, May 30th, the wife of Henry Holman, Esq., of twins, boy and girl.

TAMARAC.—For hoarseness and all Bronchial Troubles that usually effect public speakers, Tamarac Elixir will give speedy relief. Try it.

Salem Sabbath School.

The annual meeting of this School was held on Sabbath last 1st May, after the lessons for the day had been gone through with. There was a good attendance and a lively interest was manifested in all matters connected with the school.

Mr. Henry Meldrum was re-elected superintendent, Mr. Robt. Hawkins, assistant Superintendent, Teachers for the Male classes are Messrs. S. Pedlar, J. Hawkins, R. Meldrum, W. Pedlar and J. Pedlar. Teachers for the Female classes are Misses Annie Park, Sarah Pedlar, Tena Meldrum and Bella Meldrum.

Mr. George Meldrum was re-elected Sec. Treas., and Mr. F. C. Bruce assistant Secretary.

Moved by Mr. Samuel Pedlar, seconded by Mr. Robt. Hawkins, and carried unanimously, that Salem Sabbath School continue to be as it has been a Union Sabbath School, free from Sectarianism, and that all without distinction are cordially invited to attend the school and and that we continue to get our "Lesson Helps" from D. C. Cook, Chicago. The Secretary-Treasurer's report was read which showed the finances to be in a healthy state and the attendance good. It was agreed to have our annual picnic and a concert in connection with it on Jubilee day and a committee was appointed to make all necessary arrangements.

GEORGE MELDRUM, Sec. Treas.

If people look to their own interests they always take their Watch, Clock, and Jewelry repairs to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton. A perfect job every time. 2t.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W. M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

Maxwell Carriage Works,

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

AYER'S PILLS. Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia. —G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Regulate

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured. —Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored. —Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00	to 4 30
Fall Wheat	$0 83	to 0 83
Spring Wheat	0 83	0 83
Barley	0 35	0 48
Oats	0 27	0 27
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 12½	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 10	0 10
Potatoes	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 75	5 75
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	16	16
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 35	0 35
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

A POSITIVE CURE for CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief for Cold In Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W. M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

Maxwell Carriage Works,

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

In the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON.
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

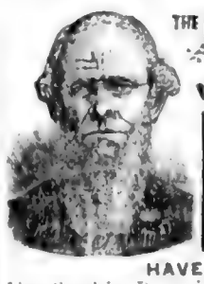
Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton Sept. 17th, 1885.



THE CELEBRATED Dr. CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests entirely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

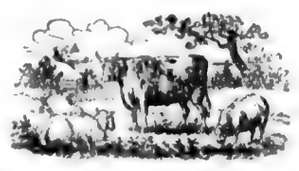
TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.



Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large auditions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

STRAIN'S,

FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
304-320. Flesherton.

FARM for SALE

—OR—

TO RENT.

BEING Lot 170, Con. 1 West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Well watered. Orchard. About 2½ miles from Flesherton. For full particulars apply to the undersigned,

JOHN O'MELIA,
Flesherton.

FARM FOR SALE.

BEING Lot 158, 1st E.T. & S.R., Artemesia, one mile from Flesherton, containing 80 acres, all cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Never-failing streams of water runs across farm; also a never-failing spring of water. New bank barn 36x56, with stone stabling full size of barn, underneath. Log House. Good soil and free from frost. Part payment down, time on balance. For full particulars, apply to

D. L. WHITE, Agt.,
Flesherton.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH Interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. - THORNBURY

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

WELCOME THE VISITORS!

District Meeting and S. S. Convention in Flesherton Next Week.

The following is the Program of the District Meeting and Sabbath School Convention to be held in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 17th and 18th :—

FIRST SESSION, TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

2.00 p. m.—Devotional Exercises, Rev. W. Ayers.

2.15 p. m.—Opening Address by Chairman of District.

2.30 p. m.—District Sunday School Reports, followed by brief verbal reports from Superintendents.

3.15 p. m.—Home influence on Sunday School Work Rev. A. Thibadeau, to be followed by brief addresses, led by M. Richardson, Esq.

4.15 p. m.—Mass Meeting of Sunday School Children. Addresses by Messrs. G. S. Bowes, W. A. Brown, Revs. J. W. Mahood, and R. I. Hosking.

Collection and Closing Exercises.

SECOND SESSION, TUESDAY EVENING.

7.30 p. m.—Praise and Prayer Service, by Rev. R. Johnston.

7.50 p. m.—The relation of the Sunday School to the Church, by Rev. W. A. Strongman, M.A., LL.B., Ph.D.

8.20 p. m.—The aim and results of S. S. Teaching as found in individual experience, by Rev. W. Ayers.

8.50 p. m.—Essentials of a successful Teacher in our Sunday Schools, by Rev. G. A. Cornish, Chairman of District.

Collection and Closing Exercises.

THIRD SESSION, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

2.00 p. m.—Devotional Exercise by Chairman.

2.20 p. m.—The cultivation of Christian Beneficence in our Sunday Schools and its importance to the church of Christ, by Rev. R. Johnston, to be followed by short Addresses, led by J. W. Armstrong, Esq.

Temperance Meeting. 3.00 p. m.—Address by Rev. A. S. Parker and Dr. Christoe.

3.40 p. m.—The Conversion and Christian Culture of Children, by Rev. J. S. Corcoran, to be by short addresses, led by Mr. Hames.

Collection and closing exercises.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

7.30 p. m.—Sermon by Mr. A. J. Irwin, a candidate for the Ministry.

Closing exercises by Chairman.

Appropriate music will be furnished for all the Sessions and Services by the Sunday School children and church choir. The public are most cordially invited to attend the convention as a grand time is expected.

FANCY GOODS :—Fancy Goods. A very fine lot of Fancy Goods just received at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, consisting of all colors of Macrame Cord also Tinsel. Macrame Cord all colors All colors of Felt for Fancy work, Black Bugle Beads, Painting Cards, Floss and Floselle, all colors, Albums, Fancy Frames, &c. All kinds of Fancy work & Stamping of every description done to order by Mrs. Russell.

W. C. T. U.

The Right Rev. Samuel Crowther, D. D., Bishop of the Niger territory, is a native of Africa. His history—extending over seventy years or more—is a very romantic one. His original name was Adjai. He lived at Ochugu, in the Yozuba country, 100 miles inland from the Bight of Benin, once in abject servitude to the episcopate. In 1821 he was carried off by the Eyo Mahometans and exchanged for a horse, and was again exchanged at Dahdah, cruelly treated, and sold as a slave for some tobacco; was captured by an English ship of war and landed at Sierra Leone in 1822. In 1825 he was baptized, taking the name of the then Vicar of Christ church, Newgate street, Samuel Crowther. In 1829 he married Asano, a native girl who had been taught in the same school with him. He was then for some years schoolmaster of Regent's town, and subsequently accompanied the first Niger expedition; then sent to the church Missionary College, Islington, and ordained by the Bishop of London. In 1854 he accompanied the second Niger expedition; afterwards an active clergyman at Akessa; translated the Bible into Yozuba; wrote literary works of a religious character, for the benefit of his African brethren. He was consecrated first Bishop of Niger territory, West Africa, June 1864. Lately he is greatly concerned at the rapid increase of intemperance among the native tribes. Here is a translation of a letter sent by King Malike, a Mahommedan, in October, 1885. He makes the appeal through the Rev. C. Paul in the following words:

"Salute Crowther, the great Christian minister! Tell him he is a father to us in this land. Anything he sees will injure us in all this land he would not like. This we know perfectly well. The matter which I am speaking with my mouth, write it, as if done by my hand. It is not a long matter. It is about barasa (rum or gin). Barasa! barasa! barasa! By God and the Prophet! it has ruined our country! It has ruined our people very much. It has made our people become mad. I have given law that no one dares buy or sell it; and anyone found selling it his house is to be eaten up (plundered); anyone found drunk will be killed. I have told all the Christian traders that I agree to everything for trade except barasa. I have told Mr. McIntosh's people to say the barasa remaining with them must be returned down the river. Tell Crowther, the great Christian minister, that he is our father. I beg you Malam Kips (Mr. Paul) don't forget this writing, because we all beg that he (Crowther) should beg the great priests (Committee C. M. C.) that they should beg the English Queen to prevent bringing barasa into this land. For God and the Prophet's sake! For God and the prophet's, His messenger's, sake, he must help us in this matter—that of barasa. We all have confidence in him. He must not leave our country to be spoiled by barasa. Tell him may God bless him in his work. This is the mouth word from Maliki, the Emir of Nupe."

CORRESPONDING SEC.

Volunteers.

No. 6 Company, 31st Batt. will meet at the Drill Shed, Flesherton, on Saturday evenings for drill, until further orders. 25 young men wanted to fill up the above company. Apply to J. J. Field, Lieut., No. 6 Company, Flesherton. t.f.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices. R. TRIMBLE. (tf.)

The young man Connell, who was drowned week before last, was buried by the Orangemen in the Flesherton cemetery on Tuesday afternoon last. The cortege was preceded to the grave by our Band, which played several solemn and beautiful airs. Rev. W. Ayers, assisted by Worshipful Master Van-Dusen, conducted the last sad rites over the remains of deceased, who was well and favorably known in this locality.

CATTLE FOR SALE.—Two steers two years old, two heifers two years old one cow in calf, cheap for cash. R. TRIMBLE.

Many ladies admire gray hair—on some other person—but few care to try its effects on their own charms. They need not, since Ayer's Hair Vigor restores gray hair to its original color. Sold by druggists and perfumers.

Twins!

By the Winnipeg Free Press of the 26th ult., we notice the following item:

BIRTH.

DOLL.—On Wednesday, the 20th inst., (April) the wife of W. F. Doll, of twins, boy and girl.

Accept the hearty congratulations of the entire staff of The Advance, friend Doll, from the Agricultural Editor down to the latest arrival. Twins! Manitoba takes the lead—we yield up the palm.

In the spring, hundreds of persons suffer from boils, carbuncles, and other eruptive diseases: These are evidences that the system is trying to purge itself of impurities, and that it needs the powerful aid which is afforded by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Young Leabond.

This handsome and sprightly English Draught Stallion, the property of Mr. John J. Magee, Artemesia, is a dark bay, with black legs, mane and tail, stands 16 and a half hands high, with good flat bone and superior action. He is a shapely animal and has attracted considerable notice during the past few years. In every respect Young Leabond is a fine representative of his particular class. Following is his route during the season of 1887:

MONDAY, MAY 2nd, will leave his own stable, Lot 17, Con. 11, Artemesia, and proceed to A. Munshaw's hotel, Flesherton, for noon, thence by way of gravel road to John Curtin's, for night

TUESDAY, will proceed by way of 10th Side Road to 10th Line, Osprey, to Hudson's for noon, thence by way of 10th Line to Town Line and go North to John Linley's, 12th Line, for night.

WEDNESDAY, will proceed by way of 12th Line, to Robt. H. Platt's, for noon, thence by way of Valley Road, to Condy's hotel, Kimberley, for night.

THURSDAY, will proceed by way of Valley Road to Epping, John Eaton's for noon, thence by way of 8th Line to 11th Line, Euphrasia, go South 6 Lots to George Tailor's for night.

FRIDAY, will proceed by way of 60th Side Road to Allen's hotel, Berkeley, for noon, thence by way of 6th and 7th to Ned Watts's, for night.

SATURDAY, will proceed by same Line, to Glenelg, thence to Markdale, to Brien's, for noon thence by way of Back Line and Vandeleur home to his own where he will remain until Monday.

Above route will be continued throughout season, health and weather permitting.

Farmer's Friend.

This celebrated General Purpose horse the property of Mr. H. Kennedy, Artemesia, is a beautiful rich dark bay, with very heavy mane and tail, perfect symmetry, of superior action and sound, is rising 9 years old and stands 16 and a half hands high. He has taken many first prizes—indeed it is stated that he has never yet left a show ring without 1st or 2nd prize, which speaks for itself. His colts have also been noted prize takers. Following is his route for the season of 1887:—

Monday, May 2nd, will leave his own stable, Lot 30, Con. 8, Artemesia, and proceed by gravel road to Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton; for noon, thence to Lamont's hotel, Priceville, for the night.

Tuesday, will proceed along Durham Road to Samuel Wauchob's, for noon, thence to Wm. McNalty's, 16th Con., Proton, for night.

Wednesday, will proceed to Hannah & Proctor's hotel, Dundalk, for noon, thence by gravel road past Inistioge, to Samuel Sheardown's for night.

Thursday, will return by gravel road by Breen's Corner, to John Brown's for noon, thence to his own stable.

Friday will leave his own stable and proceed by Corbett's Blacksmith shop to George Fisher's, 4th line Osprey, for noon, thence across by Madill's to gravel road, thence to his own stable.

Saturday, will proceed up 9th Con. to Town Line, thence to Linley's Corner, 12th line thence by Engenia to his own stable where he will remain until the following Monday morning.

Above route continued throughout the season health and weather permitting.

FANCY GOODS :—Fancy Goods. A very fine lot of Fancy Goods just received at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, consisting of all colors of Macrame Cord also Tinsel Macrame Cord, all colors. All colors of Felt for Fancy work, Black Bugle Beads, Painting Cards, Floss and Filosells, all colors, Albums, Fancy Frames, &c. All kinds of Fancy work and stamping of every description done to order by Mrs. Russell.

Clydesdale Jock.

This truly supberb Heavy Draught stallion—the property of Messrs. McAleer & McGirr—will make the season of 1887 as given below. Clydesdale Jock will be five years old on the 21st of this month, stands 16 hands 1 inch in height, weighs 2000 lbs., is a dark bay, with flowing mane and tail, good heavy bone, sound feet, perfect symmetry and superior action. He was sired by the celebrated horse, Scotland's Glory, dam, a Wonderful Lad, so that from both sides, Clydesdale Jock comes from a superior class of ancestors. Following is his route for this season:—

Monday, May 3rd, will leave his own stable and proceed to Wm. Cameron's for noon, thence to Eugenia for night.

Tuesday will proceed to S. Irwin's for noon, thence to J. Curley's, Irish Lake, for night.

Wednesday, will proceed to S. McMullen's for noon, thence by way of Booth's corners to Wm. Stewart's, Proton, for night.

Thursday, will proceed to Shrigley's settlement for noon, thence to McIntyre's Corners for night.

Saturday, will proceed by way of Gravel Road to his own stable.

Above route will be continued throughout the season health and wether permitting.

THE REV GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

The Best Remedy

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. E. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass
Sold by Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

IRELAND'S UNHAPPY LOT.

It has transpired that Mr. Gladstone, in his speech at the dinner given by the Labor members of Parliament last night, declared his entire disbelief in the accusations made against the Irish leaders. Mr. Gladstone said in May, 1882, immediately after the assassination of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Under Secretary Burke in Phœnix Park, Mr. Parnell wrote him a letter with reference to that crime. The contents of the letter, which had obviously been written under great mental distress, threw considerable light upon the topic of the present hour, and was strong evidence in favor of the contention that the Times letter was a base and malicious forgery. Mr. Parnell, apparently foreseeing that in the public mind he would be associated with the crime, offered to place himself without reserve in Mr. Gladstone's hands. He wrote that he regarded the murders with the utmost abhorrence, and he offered to resign the leadership of the Irish party and retire altogether from political life if Mr. Gladstone considered such a step advisable in the interests of Ireland. Mr. Gladstone said he would refrain from saying what reply he made, adding that it was only a short time since he obtained Mr. Parnell's assent to his mentioning the matter.

Alluding to the advice tendered Mr. Parnell from certain quarters that he should bring an action against the Times, Mr. Gladstone said that many years ago, when he was Commissioner to the Ionian Islands, the Times bitterly attacked him, accusing him of treason. On returning to England he consulted a famous lawyer, with a view of bringing an action, but was dissuaded from taking legal steps, the lawyer expressing the conviction that, even if Mr. Gladstone proved his case, no jury in the then state of public mind would be likely to convict the Times. Mr. Gladstone's statement has caused an absorbing sensation in the clubs, but has not yet appeared in the press. The Conservatives talk of challenging the production of the letters.

The debate in the House of Commons to-night on the Coercion Bill was featureless. Mr. Gladstone will not speak on the motion to go into committee on the Bill. Mr. Parnell and Mr. Healy, the latter for the first time since his suspension, will appear in the House to-morrow.

Lord Rosebery, in a speech at Glasgow to-night, said he had an almost unlimited belief in Mr. Gladstone. The Government, he said, by pressing on the Coercion Bill were raising an agitation that would certainly lead to a general election. With regard to the assertion that if Home Rule were granted to Ireland that country would fall under the control of the American Irish, he said that it was his belief that if Mr. Gladstone's Bill had been passed the Irish would now resent interference from New York as much as they had resented interference from England.

Sir George Trevelyan writes: "The passage of the Crimes Bill as it stands would lay Ireland bound hand and foot at the mercy of the party in the ascendancy in Ireland, which has never governed justly and never will, besides postponing quite indefinitely the conciliation and settlement of Ireland. The doctrine that the Bill must be supported in order to keep the present Government in power is the most unsound and dangerous one ever openly broached since I have been in public life."

The Marquis of Lansdowne has declined to accept the provisional arrangement made last week by the mediators engaged in the task of adjusting the dispute between him and the dissatisfied tenants on his Luggacurran estates. Lord Lansdowne's agent refuses to agree to any of the proposed abatements of rent. He suggests no terms, and much bitterness is provoked by the suspicion that he has been using the negotiations merely to find out what was the utmost the tenants would volunteer in order to place his demands a few points beyond and still within the limits of probable acceptance. Mr. William O'Brien, whose proposed tour to Canada to stump the country against the Marquis of Lansdowne was postponed on receipt of the intelligence that the Luggacurran difficulty was about to be settled by the above mentioned mediation, stigmatizes the agent's present offer as a flagrant repudiation of every term of the agreement which the public was led to believe had been accepted. Mr. O'Brien announces that he will no longer delay proceeding to Canada to expose Lord Lansdowne's conduct towards his Irish tenantry.

A last (Thursday) night's London despatch says: The resolutions of the Dominion Parliament with reference to the Irish Crimes Bill were unnoticed by the London morning papers, but are subjected to criticism in the evening journals.

The St. James' Gazette (Tory) wonders what the Canadians would say if the Imperial House of Commons passed a resolution in favor of releasing Nova Scotia from the union. Our colonial cousins, says the Gazette, would not like it, and England would hear plain words indeed, yet the Imperial Parliament has a perfect technical right to interfere in Canadian matters, while the Dominion has none whatever to interfere in British politics. Continuing, the Gazette says: "While we are not inclined to take the resolutions too seriously, it would have shown better taste and statesmanship to have let the matter alone."

The Pall Mall Gazette (Liberal) approves of the resolutions and speaks of the significance of the division, which may be attributed to the Irish vote, which shows its power in passing so important a resolution. Parliamentary majorities may wax and wane, but the Irish vote is a permanent factor in colonial politics.

The Evening News (Ind.) says it is very kind of Canadian Liberals and the Irish element to teach us what we ought to do. It pities the Canadian Parliament that it has nothing better to do than pass aimless resolutions of the school debating society order.

The Globe (Tory) regrets that Mr. Blake lent himself to a movement with which Canada has nothing to do. Canadian Liberals have gravely discredited themselves as a party, while the supporters of the Government, by voting in opposition, show a want of patriotism or wisdom which ought to tell against them in the eyes of their constituents.

Mr. Bright has written a letter in which he says: "No Government, Liberal or Conservative, is likely to promote a measure like that before Parliament except under a strong sense of necessity. Such measures bring the Government much difficulty, rendering it unpopular and interfering with other measures with which the Ministers are anxious to proceed. In 1881-82 I consented to measures of repression for the sake of law and order. I was then a member of the Government. What I thought needful then I think needful now, and I will not condemn the present Bill because it is introduced by Conservatives."

In the House of Commons to-night the motion offered on the 26th inst. by Mr. Robert T. Reid, Liberal, that the House decline to proceed with any measure directed against tenants combining for relief until a full measure for their relief from excessive rents was presented in Parliament, was rejected by a vote of 341 to 240. A motion that the House go into committee on the Crimes Bill was then adopted.

In the debate before the vote on Mr. Reid's motion, Mr. Thomas Power O'Connor said it was the duty of the Parnellites to delay the Crimes Bill as a hostage for a satisfactory remedial measure. He accused Mr. Balfour, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, of gross ignorance respecting the state of that country, and contended that if he himself dealt with crime in England on the same basis on which the Ministers favoring coercion dealt with crime in Ireland, he could show a state of things that was truly appalling.

Mr. Morley said the effect of the Bill would be, not to prevent the withdrawal of capital from Ireland, but to drive out the labor that supported capital. The Government had its own weak case to thank for the prolonging of the discussion, the Opposition being compelled to extract information piece-meal. First the Government had said the Bill was directed to suppress crimes, then that it was directed against combinations. Now the Government said the measure was not aimed at combinations.

Mr. Parnell, who was expected to return to London to-day, is suffering from a cold, and is confined to his house at Avondale, Ireland.

The Freeman's Journal stated that the Government recently applied for a list of educated candidates to fill vacancies in the ranks of the Irish Constabulary caused by resignations, and that the refusals to join the service were so numerous that the Government was compelled to resort to an inferior list. Many even of the latter refused to take the places offered them.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: The Marquis of Hartington will preside over a meeting of Liberal-Unionists called to assemble here to-morrow to consider certain proposed amendments to the Irish Crimes Act Amendment Bill, principal among which is one doing away with or greatly modifying the clause permitting the Crown to change the venue to England in a certain class of Irish cases.

The House of Commons this afternoon went into committee on the Irish Crimes Act Amendment Bill. T. M. Healy proposed that the word "offence" in the Act should be changed to the word "crime." Mr. Dillon and Mr. Bradlaugh supported the proposal. Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, declined on behalf of the Government to accept the change. Sir Wm. Vernon Harcourt said it was evident that the Bill was not intended to punish crime in Ireland, but designed for applying penalties by the resident magistrates to new offences created by the Bill. Mr. Gladstone advised the Government to concede Mr. Healy's amendment. The word "offence" could not be held to be strictly synonymous with the word "crime" in the Bill. If the Government desired a strictly legal use of the measure they would accept accurate definitions. A division was taken and the amendment defeated by a vote of 157 to 120.

The Dominion and Nova Scotian resolutions in condemnation of the Irish Crimes Bill are still but little noticed here. Mr. John Morley last night referred to them in support of his opposition to the Bill.

The St. James' Gazette says these votes only become mischievous when used as arguments in the House of Commons. When an English party politician tells us he has got the Canadians on his side, it is difficult to avoid reminding the colonists that they have nothing to do with domestic politics, and that their interference is very much out of place. The Gazette objects to this rather foolish piece of Canadian officiousness as a sort of threat to the Imperial Parliament.

The Daily Chronicle regards the resolutions as simply impertinent. It says if the Imperial House of Commons were to pass a resolution affirming the right of the French half-breeds in Canada to cut the throats of Canadians who are loyal to the Dominion, we do not say the Canadians would ignore it, because we fear they would retort with a considerable degree of asperity. When American or Canadian legislatures pass resolutions of this sort they simply demonstrate their unfitness for the exercise of legislative functions.

The Canadian Mail Route.

A London cable says: In the House of Lords last night the Earl of Harrowby asked for information respecting the decision of the Government on the proposal of the Canadian Government to establish a line of mail steamers between Vancouver and China. The Earl of Onslaw, Parliamentary Secretary of the Colonial Office, replied that the committee to which the matter was referred had declined to recommend a subsidy of $300,000 for the proposed service of a steamer every three weeks, but was considering the advisability of granting a subsidy of $300,000 for a monthly service, Canada to contribute also. Lord Carnarvon urged that a subsidy be granted. He said that if England did not assist the enterprise the advantages of the route would pass into the hands of another power.

A loafer insults a septuagenarian who is still rather solid. "Now," said he, "I am too old a man to be thus insulted; but," added he as he made the loafer bite the dust, "I am still too young to stand it."
Paris Figaro.

The Duke of Portland's residence at Robertland, his seat in Ayrshire, has been burned.

The prevalence of pleuro-pneumonia among English cattle will probably engage the attention of the Canadian Department of Agriculture, with a view to taking steps to prevent contagion in this country from imported animals.

THE SCHNAEBELE'S SCARE.

Supposed Satisfactory Settlement of the Case—The Strained Relations.

A Paris cable says: The Paris newspapers appear to be nearly all well pleased by the manner in which the Schnaebele affair has been settled and pronounce it an honorable settlement. They praise the prudence and fairness displayed by M. Flourens, Minister of Foreign Affairs, in his conduct of France's side of the case. A majority of the papers draw from the incident the lesson that in the future France must redouble her vigilance in order to avoid surprises of the kind caused by the arrest of Schnaebele. According to the Republique Francaise, all the French prefects have been instructed to prevent the people in their respective districts from using the occasion of Schnaebele's liberation for making anti-German demonstrations.

Schnaebele reached Paris on Saturday afternoon. He at once called on Premier Goblet and had an interview with him, in which he re-affirmed the story of his arrest as originally told. It is again asserted that Schnaebele will be relieved of his post of commissary at Pagny-sur-Moselle, and be retired on a pension.

La France is soliciting donations of 1 franc each toward the purchase of a diamond cross for M. Schnaebele. Eleven members of the Gautsch family head the subscription list.

A Berlin cable says: Official circles consider that Germany has a good claim to demand that France shall cease from official intriguing in the German Provinces. It is believed Prince Bismarck is about to make urgent representations that, having proved good will in the Schnaebele case, France must now stop offences against international law by ordering her officials to refrain from fomenting treason in Alsace-Lorraine. If the response of the French Government is not satisfactory, the Schnaebele incident, it is thought, will become the starting point of the greatest events of the century.

The Cologne Gazette publishes a list of French agents who have been arrested and convicted in Germany, and defies the French Government to adduce a single case where a German Government agent has been convicted of espionage in France. Hitherto, the paper adds, the French Government agents who were arrested have been liberated after a short detention. The cases of the Danish captain, Sarauw, the poet Krazewski and the Belgian Jansen do not apply to the French. A recent instance of the leniency of the German Government is the case of Lieut. Letellier, who was caught at Carlsruhe, having in his possession plans of the fortress and sketches, and who was liberated after his guilt had been fully established. This course on the part of the Government has been the rule toward other Frenchmen, but a further observance of the rule, the Gazette declares, is impossible.

The Kreuz Zeitung represents that the increased irritation among all classes in Germany must impel the Government to ask France to offer trustworthy guarantees that Germany shall in future be protected against officially-permitted espionage. The regret of the war party is that if Bismarck means to raise the final question now, the delaying of the conflict has enabled the French War Department, during the past four months, to reform and immensely strengthen the line of defences of the frontier. On the other hand, four months ago popular feeling was against war, while now the balance of opinion throughout Germany will be with Bismarck if war is declared necessary. Gen. Waldersee, with his staff, inspected during the week the frontier line northward from Metz. There has been a continual movement of troops in the frontier Provinces.

MINIATURE REBELLION.

The People of Paulding, Ohio, in Arms—Troops Called Out—The First Victim.

A Defiance, O., despatch says: Fred. Reeves, one of the militiamen from Toledo, who went to guard the reservoir and State property in Paulding county, accidentally shot and killed himself while on guard duty about midnight.

News from the disturbances at Paulding reservoir yesterday indicate no material change in the situation. At last accounts there had been no conflict between the troops and the men engaged in destroying public works.

THE CAUSE.

Trouble has been brewing for some time in the vicinity of Antwerp, Paulding County. There is situated near there a reservoir which feeds the Miami & Erie Canal, and a portion of the Wabash Canal. Some Paulding County people want the reservoir and Wabash Canal abandoned, claiming it to be a detriment to their land and practically valueless. Since the Bill to abandon them was defeated in the Legislature last winter several attempts have been made to blow up the aqueduct. The last attempt, which resulted in much damage, occurred about one month ago. The breakage was, however, repaired, and guards were stationed to watch the lawless dynamiters. The latter declared a 30 days' armistice, and notified lumbermen to remove their logs from the Wabash Canal, as it certainly would be destroyed. Little attention was paid to these threats, but early Tuesday morning, about 200 men, armed with picks, shovels and explosives, made a raid on the canal. They easily overpowered the four guards on duty and leveled the canal banks for a distance of 100 feet. They blew up two locks and burned another, also burning the lock tender's house.

Mrs. Kate Fuller, of Jackson, Mich., sued George Blesenger for damages for walking over her clean floor with muddy boots, and the jury gave her a verdict of 25 cents. Who will say that woman is not getting her rights?

Capt. Roberts and three of the crew of the British ship City of Ottawa, which arrived at Newcastle yesterday from Mobile died from fever during the voyage.

A pretty dress recently worn at an artist's studio tea was in two shades of silver-gray. The bodice, train and draperies were of cloud-gray velvet. The front was a softly arranged mass of silver-gray crepe de chine embroidered with silk of the same hade.

So far this season a total of 4,368 immigrants have arrived in Winnipeg.

TRAIN ROBBING EXTRAORDINARY

A Band of Thieves Stop a Train, Blow Up a Safe and Steal $5,000.

A last (Thursday) night's Tucson (Arizona) despatch says: One of the most audacious, desperate and successful train robberies ever recorded occurred yesterday on the west-bound overland train on the Southern Pacific Railroad near here. The western bound express, due here at 10.30 last evening, was stopped and robbed at Papago station, eighteen miles east of here, about 9.30. The number of men engaged in the robbery is variously estimated from five to eight. Col. Harper, the engineer, when approaching Papago was signalled by a red lantern to stop. He slowed down, and as he neared the light he noticed obstructions on the track so placed that, in case he failed to stop, the engine would spread the track and derail itself. Immediately on stopping a dozen or more shots were fired into the express car, and a man with a pistol in each hand boarded the locomotive and commaded Harper not to get down. The other robbers had in the meantime been prying open the express car, and, failing to get it open, they placed a stick of giant powder under it, and compelled Harper to light the fuse attached. This he was obliged to do, but to avoid being blown up the messenger opened the car and the robbers took possession. After extinguishing the fuse they then took charge of the car, uncoupled the engine, baggage and express car from the remainder of the train, and made Harper get on the engine and pull ahead two lengths. This being done, Harper was again put off and the robbers took charge of the engine and pulled six miles toward Tucson. Here they killed the engine and left it. During the run the robbers went through the mail and express cars, but did not get more than $5,000. Nothing was known here of the affair until past midnight, when a telegram was received from Pantano, a brakeman having walked back eight miles to that place. None of the passengers were molested.

THE AMERICAN DILEMMA.

The Alaskan and Canadian Fisheries Must be Settled on Similar Principles.

A Washington cable says: The Department of State is carefully considering the question of the jurisdiction of the United States over the Alaskan fur seal fisheries. The statement made in the Canadian Parliament yesterday, to the effect that communications on the subject had been sent by that Government to Secretary Bayard, is denied at the State Department, and it is said that all of the correspondence touching the fisheries has been carried on directly with the Government of Great Britain. This fact, it is believed, will explain the delay in hearing from the State Department, of which complaint has been made at Ottawa. The United States laws, under which certain British Columbian vessels were seized by the revenue cutter Corwen last season, are more than twenty years old, and the question of a conflict between them and the law of nations is one especially knotty and difficult of settlement. The fact that this question has been raised strengthens the Department of State in its determination to continue to pursue the temperate course it has so far followed in the negotiations with Great Britain concerning the Canadian fisheries. The vast Alaskan fisheries are thought to be quite as important to this country as are the Nova Scotian inshore fisheries, and the State Department is necessarily obliged to so shape its construction of the laws and treaties as to preserve the right of the United States to the exclusive enjoyment of the Alaskan fisheries while maintaining the treaty rights of our fishermen in North American waters. It is held that there cannot be two constructions of the laws, and any position assumed by the Department must apply equally to Atlantic and Pacific waters.

Alexander Mitchell's Will.

A Milwaukee despatch says: The will of Alexander Mitchell was made public on Saturday. No approximation of the value of the estate is made and the terms of the will avoid the filing of an inventory, so that the exact wealth left by Mr. Mitchell will never be known. It is believed to be from fifteen to twenty-five millions. The entire property, real and personal, is left to his only son, John L. Mitchell, after deducting the following legacies: Mrs. Martha Mitchell, widow, $200,000, the homestead valued at half a million dollars, and $50,000 annually; David Mitchell, grandson, $100,000; Mrs. Isabella Mackie, of Milwaukee, niece, $25,000; seven bequests to public charities aggregating $50,000; Jessie Mitchell of Aberdeen, Scotland, his sister, $500 a year. The property known as the Wisconsin Marine & Fire Insurance Company's bank is divided equally between John L. Mitchell, John Johnston, his nephew, and David Ferguson, his most intimate friend.

Northwestern Ontario's Climate.

A special correspondent of the Glasgow Herald describes the Lake of the Woods as a pretty bit of scenery, and adds: "Some dyspeptic has been proposing to make it the site of a sanatarium, but surely Canada has not come to that. My experience, and I am not ostrich-stomached, is that the whole country is a sanatarium. Its clear, bracing autumn air is worth all the tonics and liver pills ever concocted by mortal quack."

A resident of Birtle, Manitoba, claims to have trapped 105 foxes and wolves last year.

The whole of the $10,000 of stock required for the new show grounds at Kingston has been subscribed. Only $800 were taken by farmers of the county.

The newest champion to demand recognition as such is Michael Yerger, of Montgomery county, Pa., who glories in having inserted rings in the noses of over 13,000 pigs during two years, being far ahead of any other man in the profession, as far as heard from.

To remove paint and putty from window-glass put sufficient saleratus into hot water to make a strong solution, and with this saturate the paint or putty which adheres to the glass. Let it remain until nearly dry, then rub off with a woolen cloth.

Maggie Liston, the Kingston little girl who was badly burned while lighting a fire with coal oil, died on Saturday.

BUFFALO BILL'S SHOW.

The Grand Old Man Visits the American Exhibition, is Entertained at Lunch and Makes a Speech.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: Mr. Gladstone and his wife to-day paid a visit to the grounds of the American Exhibition and the camp of the Wild West Show. A special performance was given for their entertainment. Mr. Gladstone sat and looked on with all the evidence of childlike delight. After the performance was over he was introduced to Red Shirt, one of the Indians. Mr. Gladstone spoke to him at length, and asked him whether he noticed any difference between the English and Americans, or if he regarded them as brothers. Red Shirt replied that he "didn't notice much about the brotherhood." The fifteen hundred workmen employed at the Exhibition grounds cheered for Gladstone and Home Rule. Mr. Gladstone and his wife bowed repeatedly in answer to the salutations. Mr. Gladstone was entertained at lunch by the managers of the Exhibition. Col. Russell, of Boston, presided. Mr. Gladstone, replying to a toast to his health, said, among other things: "The institutions and progress of the United States have always been subjects of great interest to me ever since, very many years ago, I studied the life of Washington. I became then aware, first, of the magnitude of the destiny reserved for Americans, and second of the fact that the period of the birth of the American State was of more interest than any other it was possible to study. Whenever a youth desirous of studying political life consults me respecting a course of study in the field of history, I always refer him to the early history of America. God Almighty made Englishmen and Americans kinsmen, and they ought to have affection for one another. If they had not, humanity would cry shame upon them. I rejoice that the clouds which once obscured our mutual vision have almost vanished from our political sky, and that the future is as bright and promising as the warmest-hearted among us could desire."

HEAD CUT OFF.

An Englishman Decapitated by the Cars at Niagara.

A last (Thursday) night's Niagara Falls (Ont.) despatch says: About half-past 1 o'clock this afternoon Conductor Ganter, on a special freight, arrived at the West End G. T. R. yard, near Clifton Junction. On looking out of the van window he noticed a man walking down the C. S. R. transfer track lazily. The manner in which he was walking during the drizzling rain attracted his attention. It was about fifteen minutes before the train could be taken into the yard, and it consisted of about sixty empty coal cars. Upon the train starting he noticed the third car from the van rise on one side as well as the fore truck of the next car. Upon looking out of the van at the rear to see what caused it a most horrid spectacle presented itself to him in the shape of the body of a man between the rails and the head outside of the rail, it being cut off as if done by a knife. He immediately alighted from the van and flagged the express train west, and with the assistance of one of his brakemen had the body removed from the track. It was taken to the depot, and up to a late hour no one had recognized him. There was nothing on his person that he could be identified by. He is about 5 feet 7 inches high, apparently middle-aged, weighs about 145 pounds, has short-clipped full whiskers, and is attired in working clothes. He is supposed to have been the man whom the conductor noticed. It has been reported that the man was recognized by some quarrymen from Queenstown quarries as being a stonecutter named Carruthers, lately out from England. He had been in town with some of his associates during the morning and had partaken freely of liquor, and had been left by them in town.

THE ROYAL JUBILEE.

Particulars of the August Ceremonial—The Women's Gift—The Barnardo Homes.

A London cable says: The Queen is to sit in the Coronation Chair at the Jubilee service in Westminster Abbey. It will be placed just under the lantern where the lectern usually stands. The choir will be occupied by the royalties and the personages who form part of the procession. The House of Lords will be seated in one transept and the House of Commons in the other, so that the Queen will have the High Court of Parliament on both sides of her. Tiers of seats are to be erected in the transepts and in the nave. There are to be galleries above the aisles on each side of the choir and nave, just as at the coronation. The composition of the representative congregation is giving infinite trouble to the Lord Chamberlain and his myrmidons.

The trustees of the Barnardo homes have decided to celebrate the Jubilee year by establishing a home for the street children of London and developing land in Manitoba and the erection of an industrial farm for the employment of older lads rescued from the great towns. These and other projects are contemplated at a cost of £50,000.

The women's Jubilee gift to the Queen promises to be a great success financially. One distinguished lady, to whom the origin of this project is due, has collected and paid in $12,000. Money is now coming in at the rate of $5,000 a day, and the managers are sanguine that the total will exceed $250,000.

Oil portraits of all the members of Crown Prince Frederick William's family are being painted. The pictures are intended for a present to the Queen from the German residents of London on the occasion of Her Majesty's Jubilee.

The family of Perry Richardson, in Fountain County, Ind., has been poisoned. The wife and one boy are dead and two other children are lying at the point of death. Reports are conflicting as to the author of the poisoning. Some accuse the husband, and others think Mrs. Richardson did it herself.

Patti's recent season in New York city was a great financial success. The monetary results are as follows: "Traviata," $10,950; "Semiramide," $11,200; "Faust," $10,600; "Carmen," $19,150; "Lucia," $12,100, and "Martha," $15,000, making a total of nearly $80,000.

Emperor William has signed the release of Schnaebele.

LATE SPORTING NOTES.

Baseball

Catcher Hallman has been sold to Wilkesbarre with which team he played last year. He is a good man, but the club has Moore, Warner and Morrison behind the bat and can do without him.

At Altoona on Tuesday the Hamiltons won by 6 to 3. Wood and Hallman were the Hamilton battery, and 15 hits were scored for Altoona, including five bases on balls. No Hamilton man was given a base on balls nor anything else that the umpire could prevent.

Dave Orr, the first baseman of the Metropolitan Club, was more seriously injured by his collision with Andy Sommers (formerly of the Hamiltons) than was at first supposed. Both men were running at full speed for a high foul hit. They came together with great force and both fell to the ground. Sommer's head hit Orr in the mouth, breaking two teeth and cutting his tongue almost through. Orr bruised his left knee very badly and received a terrible blow in the chest, from which he had a hemorrhage. He was rather easier yesterday, but is still unable to leave his bed, and will not play ball for several weeks. Sommers was not much hurt.

Wesley Curry, the manager of the Oswego team, will have the sympathy of the International League in the death of his wife, which occurred at his home in Philadelphia on Tuesday. Mrs. Curry has been a long and patient sufferer from consumption.

FINE POINTS IN SCORING.

Secretary White has issued the following instructions to International League scorers:

In section 6 of rule 65, the player who completes the play in a run-out gets credit for a put-out; all others who have handled the ball get credit of assists.

When the bases are not occupied by base runners, if the catcher drop or pass the ball on the fourth strike and cannot recover in time to field the runner out at first base, it counts as an error; but should he recover it in time and should he field the ball perfectly to the first base and the baseman fails to put out the runner, give the error to the baseman and credit the catcher with an assist. In the above cases give the pitcher credit for a strike-out in the summary and an assist in the assist column.

The expression "handles the ball," in the same section, is construed to mean if the ball has touched any part of a fielder's person, enabling another fielder to put out a base runner.

When two men are out and a batsman makes a safe hit for two or more bases, sending home any men who may be on bases, their runs do not count if the batsman be declared out for not running within the 45-foot lines or for not touching first base, for that is construed as being put out "before reaching first base."

Errors should be given to a fielder in case a ball is fielded to first base on the bound, and is missed by the baseman.

Scorers' attention is particularly called to section 7 of rule 65 in reference to scoring battery errors.

Earned runs should be credited to the club—not to individuals.

Should a batsman reach first base on called balls and the pitcher sends the next three men to base in like manner, forcing the first batsman to the home plate, the run should be scored as being earned. A player must earn first base in order for him to gain an earned run. Should a player reach first on a safe hit, steal second on a fumble of the baseman or a wild throw of a catcher, and is batted home, the run shall not be scored as being earned.

Cricket.

THE CANADIAN GENTLEMEN'S TOUR.

Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey has secured the patronage of the Governor-General and the Lieut.-Governors of all the Provinces for his team's tour in England this summer. Liberal subscriptions were sent by all of these gentlemen. All the team, except Dr. Ogden, will play at Seabright against the Gentlemen of New York. The match there will be of particular interest, as the professional bowlers of the Staten Island and Seabright Clubs will be pitted against the visitors. However, a substantial victory is expected for the Canadians. Mr. Annand, of Halifax, will be as good as Harley. Boyd never intended going; he is an Englishman, and there will therefore be no Englishmen on the team. Every courtesy has been extended the team, so that an enjoyable time is expected. A well-known sporting man said yesterday that the Canadians would win at least two-thirds of their matches. He took the results of the American matches in 1884, and assumed the strength of the Canadians to be, from the last three international matches, at least 25 per cent. in favor of the Canadians as compared with the Americans, so that a comparison of results will show that, other things being equal, the per cent. of matches that will fall to the Canadian gentlemen will be as above indicated. A great deal of money has been wagered in New York that the Canadians will win one-half of their matches. Dr. Ogden sails May 28th by the Anchor line. Most of the team will visit Paris, returning home Sept. 18th at the latest, about which time the Ontario Cricket Association has fixed the international match.

Pedestrianism.

In a letter to Jack White, the celebrated amateur sprinter, Lou Myers says that Harry Hutchens refuses to run him a quarter of a mile. All sorts of inducements were made to the English champion, but he would not make a match. Myers, finding that he was likely to be shelved, offered to give any man in Australia (barring Hutchens and Malone) ten yards' start in a quarter of a mile. Malone, the Australian runner, will not make a match with Myers, and it is said that some of the former's backers tried to buy off Myers when he first arrived, but failing in this they let the American drop.

The Turf.

At latest advices the quotations for the Epsom Derby, to be run on May 25th, were: 7 to 2 against The Baron, taken; 5 to 1 Enterprise, 10 to 1 Blanchland, 18 to 1 Whistle Jacket, 33 to 1 Florentine, 33 to 1 Aintree, 40 to 1 Martley.

Mr. Wm. Hendrie's string of thoroughbreds in training have gone to the Valley Farm, and will be worked on the new five-eighth of a mile track there.

Liberal bets are offered that Harry Wilkes will not lower his record of 2.13¼ this year. It is said that the glorious climate of California has about the same effect upon horses as champagne has upon men. It livens them up, but only temporarily. When Sweetzer went there in '78 he was no good. When he got there he paced in 2.13. When he came back he fell off once more. Adelaide trotted to waggon in 2.19 in California, but on her return east 2.22 was the best she could do. Rarus on the Oakland track, 'Frisco, he could do a mile easily in 2.14. In Michigan a couple of months later he labored in 2.20, but in August of the same year at Buffalo he once more got his speed and covered the mile in 2.14¾.

Rowing.

George F. Galt, the captain and stroke of the Winnipeg Club, is in Montreal, and says the west will be represented at the C. A. A. O. Regatta at Ottawa, and while he thoroughly recognizes the fact that Lachine will be hard to beat, he thinks the championship will journey westward this season. The Winnipegs are a good set of men, and will render a good account of themselves.—Mail. Capt. Galt will find only one of last year's Lachine four in the crew this year, and he may remember that the Winnipegs came west two years ago quite as confident of success, but finished 20 lengths behind the Nautilus four at the Beach.

Aquatics.

George Bubear, who is as much the champion sculler of England as any Englishman can be while Canadians and Australians easily beat him, is 27 years old, 5 feet 8 inches high and weighs 163 pounds.

The cutter Cyprus, bought in England by Mr. E. J. McMurchy, of the Toronto Yacht Club, arrived in New York by the steamship Richmond Hill on Tuesday.

Edward Hanlan, in conversation with a Boston Globe reporter on Monday evening, said: "I have just received a letter from Mr. Innes, the celebrated English bookmaker, and promoter of the international regatta, which was held on the Thames championship course last fall, who says: 'I have got a man, and it is not Beach or Hanlan, that I will back against Jake Gaudaur for £1,000 a side, the race to be on the Thames championship course, from Putney to Mortlake.' In the letter he does not mention who it is, but it is safe to say that Bubear is the man he has reference to."

CANNIBALISM IN CANADA.

Disgusting Rites of the Savages of British Columbia.

The Victoria, B. C., Colonist publishes an account of Prof. Jacobien's sojourn among the Indians of the interior of the northern part of British Columbia. The professor tells of some sickening sights which he witnessed there during the past winter, which, at this day, one could scarcely believe capable of being witnessed so near home, did the information not come from a reliable person. The custom is still carried out there of men ambitious for the honor of chieftain betaking themselves to the woods, and after remaining there for some time coming back possessed of a spirit and biting pieces of flesh from the bodies of those whom they first meet. One who wished to graduate last winter went out and remained from sight for several weeks, though he came near the camp occasionally and made night hideous with his yells. When he returned to the tribe he came naked, notwithstanding that it was the middle of winter and two or three feet of snow on the ground. The first man he met he seized, knocked down, and bit a piece out of his arm which he chewed ravenously. This was repeated many times over, his face becoming besmeared with blood and presenting a fiendish appearance. The victims of the would-be-chieftain's bites receive in return for their pains a small pecuniary compensation, and it is an honor to carry the scar. The more scars of this kind decorates an Indian's body the more numerous are his honors, and when he comes to have a great many he becomes a chieftain himself in a little way. The biter on one occasion made a break for the professor, who soon gave him to understand that he was going to experience something pretty tough if he tackled him. He was not further molested.

INTERESTING LIBEL SUIT.

Wants $25,000 for being Called a Fenian Gladstone a Home Ruler in 1879.

A London cable says: The libel suit brought against Wm. Ridgeway, publisher, for $25,000 for asserting in the Black Pamphlet on the Irish question, recently issued by him, that Sir John Brennon, the plaintiff, a former Home Rule member of Parliament, was a Fenian and an ally of the Invincibles, came up for trial yesterday. The court-room was crowded in anticipation of interesting developments. Mr. Ridgeway being called pleaded that the alleged libel was true. Sir John Brennon being sworn made an emphatic denial of the defendant's statement. Sir John said he never was a Fenian. He left the Land League in June, 1880, after a quarrel with its managers for opening his telegrams. He had not since then joined any Irish league or association or any Fenian league or association. He had never travelled between Paris and London on Irish Republican business. He had never interfered with the work of tracing. Sir John declared that Sir Lyon Playfair told him that Mr. Gladstone had become converted to the Home Rule theory in 1879, and that he desired Mr. Parnell to accept the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland. Witness spoke to Mr. Parnell about taking the office, but he declined even to entertain the idea.

SAVED AFTER MUCH SUFFERING.

Captain and Crew of the Louis O'Neill Safe After All.

A Cleveland (Ohio) despatch says: Capt. Thomas Walker and his daughter and eight sailors of the schooner Louis O'Neill arrived here yesterday. He says his vessel went to the bottom near Port Stanley. The cause of the disaster was the breaking of the tow and the fouling of the O'Neill with the Thos. L. Parker, a hole being stove into the bow, and his vessel rapidly filled with water. He and the crew took to the yawl, and ten minutes later the O'Neill went down. The party were at sea twenty-three hours, during all of which the storm raged with unabated fury, when they made Conneaut, an Ohio port, all being nearly dead from exposure.

Mrs. Jas. Bowlby, of Talbotville, met with a sad and it is feared fatal accident on Saturday evening, in the absence of her husband. She had gone to the barn to collect eggs, and when reaching the loft she slipped and fell to the ground. She was found in an unconscious state, and being in a critical condition the shock caused the premature birth of a child, which lived only a short time. Mrs. Bowlby is still alive, but cannot recover.

"Where do the birds go in winter?" asks an exchange. We cannot answer for all of them but a good many go to pot.

FARMERS FAVOR RECIPROCITY.

Interesting Meeting of Officers of County Institutes.

CANADIAN BUTTER INDUSTRY.

Among those present at the meeting of the Presidents, Vice-Presidents and Secretaries of Farmers' Institutes in Ontario, held in Toronto Thursday, were: Messrs. A. H. Pettit, Grimsby; W. J. Hill, Wyoming; D. Campbell, Nelson; J. Z. Frazer, Burford; D. Burt, St. George; W. Roddick, Brantford; Alex. Waldie, Halton; Wm. Clements, Halton; William Anderson, Mountain View; H. A. Nixon, St. George; F. Ruddell, Georgetown; J. C. Dance, Kingsmill; V. E. Fuller, Hamilton; Thos. Shaw, Binbrook. Mr. Awrey, M.P.P. for South Wentworth, and Mr. Archibald Blue, Assistant-Commissioner of Agriculture, were also present.

Mr. V. E. Fuller was called to the chair, and Mr. Thomas Shaw, of Hamilton, was appointed Secretary.

Mr. Awrey addressed the meeting with reference to the importance of the agricultural interest and the lack of attention which it received at the hands of public men. He urged the advisability of producing a class of stock that would lead Britain to Canada for her regular supplies, and so in reference to the butter industry and various other interests. He urged immediate action.

Mr. Thomas Shaw then read a carefully prepared paper on extension of Farmers' Institutes, and how they might be made more beneficial to the farmers of Ontario; after which it was decided to proceed at once with the organization of a Central Farmers' Institute for the Province of Ontario.

A discussion on the best means of improving the butter industry resulted in the adoption of this resolution:

That this meeting desires to place on record their opinion that the butter industry of Canada can be best raised to the position it ought to occupy by the establishment of creameries in Canada, and that every encouragement is due to the Ontario Creameries Association in their efforts to improve and establish creameries throughout Canada.

At the evening session it was decided to call the organization "The Permanent Canadian Farmers' Institute of Ontario," and these officers were elected: President, V. E. Fuller, of Hamilton; Vice-President, J. Dryden, M.P.P., Brooklin; Secretary-Treasurer, Thos. Shaw, Hamilton; Executive Committee, James Murdoch, Yeovil; M. D. Willard, Morrisburg; T. Kosmack, Northcote; Thos. Crowe, Chatham; D. Campbell, Nelson; A. H. Pettit, Grimsby; J. H. Wooley, Simcoe; J. Legge, Gananoque; James Cochrane, Kilsythe; D. M. McPherson, Glengarry.

The most important business was the consideration of the trade relations existing between the Dominion and the United States, and the farmers in discussing the question showed a lively appreciation of the matter in so far as it affected their interests. As the resolution adopted will show, they are unanimously in favor of a broader trade policy with United States. The debate was introduced by Messrs. Thomas Conant and Andrew Annis, of Oshawa, moving the following resolution:

That this Central Farmers' Institute unanimously and individually feel the great want of a reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada, and that this institute will at all times urge the Dominion Government to obtain such reciprocity for us at the earliest possible moment.

The following amendment was put in by D. J. Hunter, of Laurel, seconded by D. R. Ellis, of Kimberly:

That in the opinion of this Institute a removal of all restrictions on trade between the Dominion of Canada and the United States is desirable, either by reciprocity treaty or otherwise, as may be agreed upon by the Government of the respective countries, and that the officers of the Institute are hereby authorized to take such action in the premises as shall best promote the object of this resolution.

Mr. James McEwan, of Drayton, heartily endorsed the resolution, believing that with reciprocity times would be greatly improved. This feeling was widespread among farmers.

Col. Campbell thought the time was at hand when the farmers of this country should call upon the Government to take measures for the carrying out of more amicable trade relations with the United States. Some might accuse him of disloyalty for holding such views, but if it came to a question of Queen and country, his position would soon be ascertained.

Chairman Fuller called upon Mr. Anderson to take the chair while he spoke on the question. He referred to Mr. Wiman's message to him, which he had answered as a private individual, and he thought the executive officers should be empowered to carry the matter further. His business was carried on mostly with the United States, and if those opposed to reciprocity knew the amount of trade which might be carried on if commercial restriction were withdrawn there would not be one dissenter. A cry was made that the measure would be death to Canadian manufactures. If the Canadian manufacturers did not have the pluck and energy to hold their own against American competitors, all he could say was that they deserved to succumb. It was not the manufacturing so much as the agricultural interests that were at stake.

Mr. Joshua Legge, of Gananoque, said he lived in a manufacturing village, and the manufacturers there would only be too glad to have the markets of the United States open to their goods.

Mr. James Cochrane, of Owen Sound, thought that it would be better to take another move and ask the Government of Great Britain for commercial union in food supplies.

Mr. D. R. Ellis thought that every farmer in Canada would throw up his hat if reciprocity were obtained.

Mr. Thos. Kells, of Vandecur, thought that the resolutions were premature. He had a little too much British blood in him to throw himself at the foot of Congress, and he would not support the resolution. He had advocated Canadian manufacturing interests in the past, but he believed that these interests now take care of themselves. The consideration of the matter was premature.

Mr. D. R. Ellis thought that now was the proper time. (Cries of hear, hear).

Mr. James Cochrane submitted the following addition to the amendment:

That in the event of failure to obtain reciprocity between the United States and the Dominion Government, the Imperial Parliament be asked for such trade relations as would admit colonial goods free of duty and place a heavy tax on foreign food supplies.

The amendment of Mr. Hunter, with the above addition, was unanimously carried.

The following resolution on the railway tariff, by Joshua Legge, was carried after some discussion:

That in the opinion of this meeting the tariffs and classification of the railroads as they now exist are prejudicial to the interest of the farmers of this country; and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of the Railway Commission.

A resolution was adopted favoring the appointment of a practical farmer as Minister of Agriculture.

The Convention adjourned at 11 o'clock, after singing the national anthem.

A MADMAN'S ACT.

A Husband Murders His Wife and Wanders About with His Throat Cut.

An Ionia, Mich., despatch says: A terrible tragedy occurred Saturday in Bushnell township. John A. Snyder, about 35 years old, had been acting queerly for a month and a medical examination had shown him a fit subject for an insane asylum. He was living with his wife and two children in a log shanty on his father's farm. Sunday morning he did not appear, and his brother went over, and a terrible sight met his view. The wife lay dead in bed, her skull being broken in with an axe. A child of 2 years was on the bed bathed in its mother's blood, uninjured, while another, a little older, was in a crib, both screaming in terror. Snyder was tracked to the swamp back of his house. From there he was trailed by blood for several miles. About 10 o'clock he walked into the house of George Forsher. He had with a razor cut three large gashes in his throat, from which he will probably die. His wife was younger than he, and handsome, and there had been trouble between them. She was afraid of him and had told her friends that she had hidden the axe and razor for fear of his using them on himself or on her.

A Trial by Jury.

That great American jury, the people, have rendered a unanimous verdict in favor of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the standard remedy for bowel and stomach disorders, biliousness, sick headache, dizziness, constipation and sluggish liver.

Marker Rush, a well-known character of Pittsburg, Pa., who was a few years ago worth $500,000, died at the City Poor Farm yesterday afternoon of softening of the brain.

Come to the bridal chamber, Death!
Come to the mother, when she feels
For the first time, her first-born's breath,
And thou art terrible!

The untimely death which annually carries off thousands of human beings in the prime of youth is indeed terrible. The first approach of consumption is insidious, and the sufferer himself is the most unconscious of its approach. One of the most alarming symptoms of this dread disease is, in fact, the ineradicable hope, which lurks in the heart of the victim, preventing him from taking timely steps to arrest the malady. That it can be arrested in its earlier stages is beyond question, as there are hundreds of well authenticated cases where Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a complete cure.

—Mother—"How do you like Mr. de Snoodle?" Daughter—"Oh, he's just lovely—such an educated man! I didn't understand half what he was talking about."

Walking advertisements for Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy are the thousands it has cured.

To make calicoes wash well infuse three gills of salt in four quarts of boiling water and put the calicoes in while hot and leave them till cold. In this way the colors are rendered permanent and will not fade by subsequent washings.

Neither plain or high living provides immunity from rheumatism, that scourge of advancing years. McCollom's Repellant, taken internally, cures like magic. Thousands testify to it. Sold by wholesale and retail druggists.

It is said that Rev. Mr. Springer, assistant pastor of Grace Episcopal Church, Chicago, was driven to insanity by the prosecution of his creditors. The rector of his parish, who is now in Europe, receives a salary of $6,000 a year, but Mr. Springer got only $300.

Tender Corns,

Soft corns, corns of all kinds removed, without pain or sore spots, by Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Thousands testify that it is certain, painless and prompt. Do not be imposed upon by substitutes offered for the genuine "Putnam's" Extractor. Sure, safe, harmless.

Lawrence Clark, a laborer, was struck by a train at the Grand Trunk station in Kingston yesterday morning and killed.

The quarantine service in the Gulf will go into effect immediately, and the precautions against the introduction of cholera will be very stringent this year.

The British Admiralty has decided that the Indian troopships are to be laid up and the transport service in future to be done by private contract. This decision causes much discussion in naval circles, but the plan has been adopted for purposes of economy.

Two hundred and fifty indictments have been found against the Missouri Bald Knobbers by the grand jury at Ozark.

A sensational elopement occurred at Lockport, N.Y., on Monday which has just been disclosed. Mrs. Jos. Farnsworth, a blonde with doll-like features, aged 25, ran away with her husband's father, aged 60 years. Mrs. Farnsworth left two small children.

DUNN'S
BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

☞ Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D C N L. 19. 87.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

WEBSTER'S
Unabridged Dictionary.

Invaluable in every School and at every Fireside.

A DICTIONARY, 118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings, a GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD, of 25,000 Titles, and a BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, of nearly 10,000 Noted Persons, ALL IN ONE BOOK.

Contains 3000 more Words and nearly 2000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

The Blueberry is a valuable fruit, and is a reliable fruit to grow in the Northern States, where the more tender varieties winter kills. It is perfectly hardy, will stand 40 degrees below zero without showing any injury to the most tender buds. Fruit ripens in this latitude about the first of July. Color, a bluish black, when fully ripened. The flavor is equal to the raspberry, a very mild, rich sub-acid, pronounced by most people delicious. The fruit is excellent for pies, or canned for winter use. It grows very stocky; the shining dark-green leaves and the blue fruit make a pleasing contrast. It seems to flourish in all soils and is a prolific bearer. One dozen plants by mail, carefully packed in oil paper, 60 cts.; two dozen by mail, $1.00; 100 by express, $2.50; 1,000, $15.00.

Address L. D. STAPLES, Portland, Mich.

Flesherton Carriage Works!

W. A. MILBURN,

Proprietor.

In returning thanks to the public for the patronage extended to him during the past three years, the undersigned wishes to inform the people that he is in a better position than ever to turn out all work in his lines of business, such

—AS—

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons, &c.

on short notice, in a workmanlike manner and at reasonable prices. All kinds of Repairs,

HORSE-SHOEING, AND GENERAL JOBBING

will receive equally prompt and careful attention. Works, next to Planing Factory, Flesherton.

Respectfully Yours,

W. A. MILBURN,

Proprietor Flesherton Carriage Works.

KIMBERLEY!

The Agricultural Editor Jots Down a Few Notes by the Way.

"The sounding cataract
Haunted me like a passion: the tall rock,
The mountain, and the deep and gloomy wood,
Their colors and their forms, were then to me
An appetite;"

—WORDSWORTH.

Some two and a half miles North of the Beaver river's "sounding cataract" at picturesque and romantic Eugenia, the traveller comes to the brow of a lofty hill, overlooking an immense tract of land of one of the fairest portions of this great Province. To the right is "the tall rock, the mountain and the deep and gloomy wood," forming a striking picture in themselves, but of secondary importance when contrasted with the many beautiful and well cultivated farms lining the gently sloping uplands to the left and stretching away to the North until lost in distance. Along the base of these fertile uplands meanders the Beaver river until—some sixteen miles distant, as the crow flies—its waters mingle with those of the Georgian Bay at Thornbury.

At one of the narrowest points of the immense V shaped Beaver Valley, and nestling cosily at the foot of the "tall rock," which towers hundreds of feet above it, is the pretty little village of Kimberley. Situated in the midst of a splendid agricultural district, with immense water powers all around it, a well wooded country adjacent, a peculiarly favorable climate, and the possibility of a railway running through it at no distant date, it does not require much of a stretch of the imagination to foresee a bright, prosperous and progressive future in store for it. Even now Kimberley is with a steady annual influx of "newcomers," to use a homely phrase. Several neat new buildings have been completed during the past twelve months, and already the village boasts of a sidewalk—sure precursor to future "great expectations"—town council, mayor and all the rest of it. The only objection we had to the sidewalk in question was that it was too brief, or, in other words, not long enough. Even in that fact there is some comfort to be derived viz., the corporation will not have so many repairs to make when the sidewalk becomes old and cranky; and pedestrians will not find so many opportunities for breaking their limbs and necks in tripping over broken planks and fruitlessly endeavoring to kick a hole in the sky! We have lately trodden the Thornbury sidewalks (so-called) and speak with authority. But onething more than any other has drawn the attention of the outside world to Kimberley oflate. It is the fact that the prevails here! The very mountains seemed to have been raised up around the pretty village and peaceful valley as bulwarks against the aggressive advance of King Alcohol and his forces. But the liquor traffic did get a pretty firm footing even here, although the Temperance Hotel furnished all the accommodation necessary for man and beast and rendered additional travelling facilities quite unnecessary. But the traffic often finds friends amongst those who should be its greatest enemies and things soon came to a pretty pass. More than once the Temperance Hotel has been made a target for bullets and on one occasion several panes of glass were broken in one of the front windows. People never the worse of liquor before were now observed reeling along the streets and highways in a beastly state of intoxication. Things at length came to such a pass that the people arose in their might and petitioned the License Commissioners not to grant a liquor license in the place. A counter petition was got up about the same time and of course excitement ran high. Amongst those most concerned with the first named petition (to cancel the liquor license) the names of Mrs. McConnell, Mrs. Thos. Ellis, and Mrs. T. Carruthers stand out in bold relief. They worked with that vim and earnestness for which women Temperance workers are characterized the world over. The result was A MOST DECISIVE VICTORY in the cause of Temperance reform, for only the other day the License Commissioners met in Kimberley and decided to grant the prayer of the petitioners for the abolishment of the liquor license. An opportunity was afforded both sides to argue their respective cases before the commissioners. This was done very ably and eloquently after which came the decision above mentioned. Comment is scarcely necessary, Vox populi vox dei. The people are largely in favor of excluding intoxicating liquor from the lovely valley and their will should be law with all honest people. If the boot were on the other foot, under similiar circumstances, it would be the same. It is not the man who deals the liquor over the counter whom they oppose: it is the accursed traffic itself. The liquor dealer is engaged in a traffic, which THOUGH MORALLY WRONG is, from a purely legal point of view, as legitimate as any other business. But just as soon as he tries to do an unauthorized business—contrary to law and the will of the people—he is engaged in a traffic that is both legally and morally wrong, and should be held accountable for his actions before the proper tribunal.

QUITE A FLOURISHING PLACE,

TOTAL PROHIBITION OF LIQUOR

One thing in connection with the matter is much to be regretted, namely, that the hotel-keeper should have suffered himself to be induced to locate and spend money in a place so largely opposed to such a business. Perhaps, like many other men, he had counted the cost and was prepared to take his chances. There is a certain amount of risk in connection with every business, but in none more so than in that which embraces the sale of intoxicants—especially in this era of the world's history when the growth and developement of Temperance sentiment is almost phenomenal.

THE TEMPERANCE HOTEL,

owned and managed by Mr. Jas. M. Thurston, would do credit to places of greater pretensions than Kimberley. We put up at this excellent hostlery on Saturday last and found the accomodations for man and beast all that could be desired. Mine host and hostess we found affable, genial and courteous and fully alive to and prepared to satisfy the wants of the travelling public. The house is a model of neatness throughout, while the meals would satisfy the desire of the most fastidious. Such was the verdict of ye Editor and his young company on that occasion, Master George Treadgold, who with ourself, visited the place for the purpose of fishing for speckled beauties in the Beaver river. Nor did we come empty away, although the water was yet too high and murky to ensure a successful catch. While here we met Kimberley's affable magistate, Squire Stewart—an old friend, a straightforward and upright gentleman and an honest man:—

"Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."

We did not have an opportunity to call on the excellent postmaster Mr. M. R Hammond, and other respected friends. We'll make time to do so on the occasion of our next visit, if spared.

The sun was just going down behind the lofty Western highlands when we drove away from beautifully situated and growing Kimberley. In imagination as we gazed back from the rising ground and took a last survey of the valley, we could picture the snorting, puffing iron horse thundering along the banks of the Beaver, through a large and populous manufacturing town, and on to where the waters of that tortuous stream mingle with those of the Georgian Bay. Who knows but that our vision will some day be realized? Time alone will tell. At length we reach Eugenia and—

"Now came still evening on, and twilight gray
Had in her sober livery all things clad;
Silence accompany'd; for beast and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests
Were slunk, all but the wakeful nightingale;
She all night long her amorous descant sung,
Silence was pleased; now glowed the firmament
With living sapphires; Hesperus that led
The starry host, rode brightest, till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length
Apparent queen unveil'd her peerless light,
And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw."

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

BROK YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure incipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Tenders

WILL be received up to Wednesday, June 1st, for the erection of a Brick School House at Flesherton Station, S. S. No. 10. Plan and Specifications to be seen at R. H. Cook's.
Lowest tender not necessarily accepted.

Trustees { JAMES McMILLEN, R. H. COOK, JAMES ASHEDOWNE.

Auction Sale

—OF—

VALUABLE FARM

—IN THE—

Township of Artemesia.

Under and by virtue of the powers of sale in certain Mortgages made by John Fisher and David White, to the Vendor's which will be produced at the time of sale and on default in payment of the money's thereby secured. There will be offered for sale by Public Auction at MUNSHAW'S HOTEL, in the Village of FLESHERTON, on

Monday, 30th day of May, A.D., 1887,

1887, at 2 o'clock, p.m., by A. S. VANDUSEN, Auctioneer, the following property, viz.: Lot number 158, in Concession 1, N.E.T. & S. Road, in the Township of Artemesia, containing 50 acres more or less nearly all of which are said to be cleared. On the premises are said to be a frame barn nearly new and a log house. Lands are well watered, by a small spring Creek. There is a small orchard on the premises which are well fenced and are on a good gravel road within about one mile of Flesherton.

TERMS:

Ten per cent. at time of sale, fifteen per cent. within one month, balance to remain on Mortgage for five years with interest at 6½ per cent. yearly, or such other terms as may be arranged with the purchaser at time of sale.

For further particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Esq., Flesherton, or to

MOSS, FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK,
Vendor's Solicitor's.

Toronto, May 10th, 1887.

MAIL CONTRACT!

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the Postmaster General, will be received at Ottawa until noon, on 27th May, 1887, for the conveyance of Her Majesty's Mails, on a proposed Contract for four years, 3 times per week each way, between Dundalk and Maple Valley from the 1st July, next.

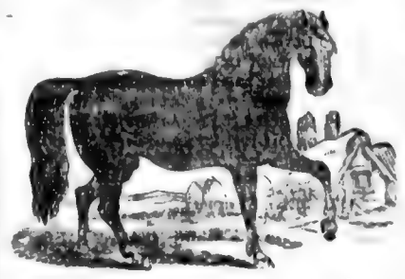
The conveyance to be made in a vehicle or otherwise via., Badjeros and Shrigley. The Mails to leave Maple Valley every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 8 a.m., and travelling via., Badjeros and Shrigley, arrive at Dundalk at 11:10 a.m., or in time to connect with the Mail train passing North. To leave Dundalk as soon as possible after exchange of Mails and arrive at Maple Valley within three hours and ten minutes afterwards.

Printed notices containing further information as to conditions of proposed Contract may be seen, and blank forms of Tender may be obtained at the Post Offices of Dundalk, Maple Valley, Badjeros and Shrigley.

DANIEL SPRY,
Post-Office Inspector.

Post-Office Inspector's Office, Barrie, April 18th, 1887.

THE ROADSTER STALLION,



BILLY V.!

Will leave his own stable in Flesherton, on MONDAY, MAY 2nd, 1887, at 12 o'clock noon, and proceed to Linley's hotel, Maxwell, where he will remain over night.

TUESDAY, will proceed to Jonathan Irish's, Wareham, for noon, thence to Johnston's hotel, Dundalk, where he will remain till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY, will return to Flesherton for the night.

FRIDAY, will proceed to Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, for noon, and return to his own stable for the night.

SATURDAY, will proceed to Marsh's hotel, Markdale, for noon, and return to his own stable in Flesherton, where he will remain till the following Monday.

The above route will be continued during the season, health and weather permitting.

Description and Pedigree:

BILLY V., foaled June 18th, 1883, is a dark dappled bay, stands 15 hands 3 in., weighs 1150 pounds, and for bone, muscle, style and action, cannot be surpassed, was sired by Clear Grit jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger.

TERMS:

To insure a foal $10.00, payable March 1st, 1888. Season mares $8.00, payable last round of horse, or not later than July 12th, 1887, if not then paid said mares will be charged as insured mares. Single leap $6.00, payable at time of service. All mares not returned regularly to horse will be charged as insured mares. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Owners trying their mares to said horse and knowing them to be afflicted with any contagious disease, will be liable in damages. Groom's Fee 25 cents.

A. S. VANDUSEN, Owner. GEO. GLASSFORD, Groom.

PUBLIC NOTICE!!

To all whom it may Concern.

Know ye all men that I, W. S. CHRISTOE, the Druggist of Flesherton, have the agency for JOHNSON'S celebrated TONIC BITTERS and NERVINE, JOHNSON'S little Pink Toute Liver Pills and the ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

—THE—

TONIC BITTERS

are confidently recommended as the VERY BEST in the market for Nervousness, Hysteria, General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Complaints common to the female sex. PALENESS of complexion and for diseases caused by poverty of blood. In conjunction with the Tonic JOHNSON'S Little Liver Pills are the very best for liver complaint and general desarrangements of the stomach. The All Healing White Ointment is the very best for skin diseases of a scrofulous nature. Burns, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Chilblains, &c., &c.

You have only to try these great remedies to be satisfied. Sold by

W. S. CHRISTOE,
The Druggist, Flesherton.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S

DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE.
Flesherton.

ANDREW McGIRR,

Issuer of Marriage Licenses,

FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance affected in first-class companies. Money to lend at owest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

☞Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop.

"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 309. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, MAY 19, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

W. A. BROWN,

—THE—

PEOPLE'S JEWELLER,

Keeps the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, Wedding Rings, Spex, etc., between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden Watches, my own name on, accurately timed, 2 and 3 years warrants, $8.50 to $28.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto Cases. 2 to 5 oz. ½ Waltham, P. S. Bartlett's, 3 oz. coin case, $17.50; Ellery's, $14.50, lower grades, $8.00, to $18.00; Elgins if preferred. Ladies' 10 & 14 k. Watches, and Gent's 10 & 14 k. filled cases always in stock. It is safe to buy Watches from me because I do business for myself, in my own name, and can be held to my warrants. 34 Seth Thomas, New Haven and Ansonia Clocks now in stock, bought close.

They will be sold below the "Terrible Bargains," prices at least 15 per cent.

It is easy to come down when goods are away up. I don't do a catch business.

Straight dealing ensures success.

I shall stay on that line. Small profits, modest prices. I secure patronage through low prices. Assortment Complete. Send for quotations. If I do not save you money I will make [illegible] the trade.

SPECIALTIES:
Watch Repairing, Fitting Spex.

Address Box 5, MARKDALE, ONT.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inepect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Next Tuesday is the 24th.

Milk drawing to the cheese factory commenced last Monday.

Go to Keefer's for fresh Biscuits, Figs and Dates.

WOOL WANTED FOR CASH, or trade at M. Richardson & Co's.

Fresh Bannanas, Oranges and Lemons just received at Beecroft's restaurant, Flesherton.

Two Girls wanted to learn Dress-Making. Apply to MISS COLE & OSBORNE, Flesherton.

If you want first-class Flour, Bran or Shorts, try G. Keefer, Flesherton. All orders promptly delivered.

If you want Croquet Setts, Lacrosse Sticks, Lacrosse Balls, or Base Balls, go to Wm. Richardson.

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's block, Flesherton. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

Highest prices paid for Wool, Eggs, Butter and all other farm produce at Richardson & Co's.

Mr. Chas. LeGard, of Artemesia, had an apple tree which bore fruit twice last season. The last crop grew to be as big as large crab-apples.

If you want Pure Seeds, Grass, Timothy, or any kind of Clovers, go to Wm. Richardson.

When you go fishing, Wm. Richardson can supply you with an outfit.

M. Richardson & Co. are selling Building Hardware at old prices yet.

Read W. A. Brown's new advt. and get one of the bargains he will give in Watches, etc., at special sale, May 24th.

Mr. W. K. Flesher returned home from England Wednesday evening of last week. He looks quite hale and hearty.

Cheapest of cheap Millinery, latest styles, best quality, now offering at bottom prices at Miss Lever's Millinery Store, Flesherton.

If you go to camping out for a picnic, you will find Hamocs at Wm. Richardson's. In fact he keeps everything for pleasure trips.

Rev. A. Thibaleau, of Holland Centre called at our sanctum yesterday; also Mr. Steer and Mr. W. A. Brown, of Markdale.

Miss Ella Ayers returned home from a pleasant trip to Oshawa on Monday of last week. Her youngest sister, Miss Ettie Ayers, went to Toronto on a visit on Saturday last.

Have you seen the new Gravity Lock—the grandest invention of the age—at M. Richardson & Co's.

There is no danger to human life more to be dreaded than that which arises from vitiated blood. Dyspepsia, rheumatism, headache, and general debility, all result from it, and are cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Take it this month. Six bottles, $5.

If you want pure drugs go to Wm. Richardson.

CATTLE FOR SALE.—Two steers two years old, two heifers two years old one cow in calf, cheap for cash. R. TRIMBLE.

Mr. W. H. Elder brought a "horned toad" from California with him. The animal is about the same size as our common toad and has a number of little horns in a circle around its head and over its back. It is kept in a glass jar in Petch & Mitchell's shop window.

Mr. John Fawcett, brother of ye Editor, and who resides at Brandon, Manitoba, has just completed arrangements with a prominent Dakota railway firm and is now pocketing proceeds at the rate of $2,700 per annum. Its not a bad idea, occasionally, to adopt Horace Greeley's advice and "go West!"

Are you going to sow Turnips, Carrots, or any other kind of seed? go to Wm. Richardson.

Our readers will please remember that Vicker's Express office here is in Mr. Strain's block. All parcels intended for delivery through this agency will be promptly and carefully attended to if left with the courteous agent of the above company in Flesherton, Mr. Wm. Strain.

The 24th of May (Queen's Birthday) is to be celebrated in Shelburne this year in grand style. The new Driving Park will be opened on the occasion. No less than $500 in prizes will be given, which gives one some idea of the manner in which Shelburne will entertain visitors on the date above given.

The funeral sermon of the young man Connell—referred to in last week's Advance—was preached in the Methodist church here Sunday evening last by Rev. Mr. Ayers from the words, "Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth," &c. There was a very large congregation and the sermon was eminently practical and soundly orthodox.

The bridge in the Stinson neighborhood, about 4 miles East of this town is in a very bad condition. Mr. Wm. Wright, of this place, was driving over it when the logs began to float and he and his horse had a narrow escape from drowning. If it had not been for the assistance of the neighbors around, the horse would have been drowned in spite of fate.

ASTHMA.—Persons who have suffered for years with Asthma will find a quick relief and cure in the double treatment of Southern Asthma Cure.

The great event of the Queen's Jubilee will be the Jubilee number of the Montreal Star, a superbly illustrated paper, of twenty-eight pages and two artistic plate supplements. Those who have seen the advance copies say it is magnificent. Something that everybody will want and few can get. It is to be sent by mail for 25 cents. Graham & Co., Montreal, are the publishers.

Nearly a Serious Affair.

But for the timely intervention of Mr. J. E. Moore and others, on Saturday forenoon last, an incipient conflagration which was rapidly developing into a fierce blaze among some rubbish in the rear of Mr. Fred. Ryder's premises here, might have laid a large portion of the business part of our town in ruins. As it was, one corner of a stable was pretty well scorched before the flames were extinguished. Ashes containing live coals had been thrown out among the rubbish, which was the origin of the matter. Too much care cannot be exercised in disposing of ashes, which should always be kept in fire proof vessels and never thrown out until sufficient time had elapsed to do so with safety.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

We notice with great pleasure by the Globe of last week, that our talented young friend, Mr. Earle Strain, recently passed his primary examinations at the Toronto School of Medicine with flying colors. We also observed by the same paper, that Mr. W. C. Wright was equally successful in passing his second year's examinations. Both the young men above named are Fleshertonians and we extend to them our heartiest congratulations.

CRITICISM.—A lady in Brockville states—I was induced to try Nasal Balm for a long standing cold in my head that was pronounced Catarrh. The Balm gave immediate relief and permanently cured me. It was so pleasant and agreeable to use that I at first thought it "no good." I now use it with my children for colds and stoppage of the nasal passages.

A NEW PERIODICAL.—The Grip Publishing Company, of Toronto, have commenced the publication of a new monthly periodical, entitled Grip,s Own Library. The first number is made up of "Good Things from Grip," being comic pictures and comic reading selected from the pages of Grip. It is printed on the finest calendered paper, and at the price of 10 cents is a credit to the publishers, and will no doubt meet with a large sale. The second number will be entitled, "Jubilee Jollities," to be issued June 1st, and a very large edition is being prepared in anticipation of an enormous sale.

Whether on land or at sea, on the prairie or in the crowded city, Ayer,s Pills are the best cathartic, being convenient, efficacious and safe. For torpid liver, indigestion, and sick headache, they never fail.

The Flesherton School Trustees have unanimously approved of a new site, on which to erect the proposed new school building. It is substantially the same site as the one selected and approved by the section at a meeting held on the 1st of April. A public meeting will be held in the Schoolhouse on Saturday next, 21st inst., at 4 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of submitting this selection of school site to the ratepayers for their approval and confirmation. In this connection we might also add, that tenders for the erection of the new school building have already been advertised for by posters, and will be received up to Saturday, May 28th. Plans and specifications may be seen with Mr. M. Richardson, Sec.-Treas., Flesherton.

Birth.

GENOA.—In Artemesia, on the 3rd of May instant, the wife of James Genoa, Esq., of a son.

The Late James Connell.

Flesherton, May 13, 1887.

To GEO. CONNELL, ESQ.

Dear Sir,—At the last regular meeting of Flesherton L. O. L. No. 429, held on Friday evening, the 13th inst., it was moved by Bro. J. W. Bates, seconded by Bro. W. P. Crossley and resolved—

1st—That we, the members of this Lodge, deeply deplore the untimely death of our beloved Brother, James Connell, and are reminded of the uncertainty of time, he having been cut off in his youth and vigor by drowning, thereby making the first break in the fraternal chain in our lodge:

2nd—Resolved that we tender our sincere sympathy to you, his Brother, in the hour of your bereavement, and hope that the Giver of all good will sustain you through life and be a guide to your path.

3rd.—That a copy of this resolution be engrossed on the minutes of this lodge and a copy be presented to you, his Brother, George Connell.—CARRIED.

Signed on behalf of this Lodge,
W. H. JOHNSON, W. M.
W. P. CROSSLEY, W. Sec.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

THIS IS

RUSSELL'S

SPACE,

THE ONLY GENUINE

WATCHMAKER & JEWELLER

IN THIS SECTION OF THE COUNTY. LOOK OUT FOR HIS NEW

ADVERTISEMENT NEXT WEEK

IRELAND'S CRIMES BILL.

A last (Wednesday) night's London cable says: There was an unusually large attendance in the House of Commons to-day, as strong interest was felt in the Dillon libel question.

Mr. W. H. Smith announced in the House of Commons this afternoon that the Government had resolved that the allegation that the statement by the London Times that Mr. Dillon told a falsehood while denying in the House of Commons that paper's utterances concerning his alleged relations with Sheridan, the Invincible, was not a breach of privilege and not sustained by precedent. It would be against the dignity of the House to summon the Times to the bar without previously inquiring into the circumstances. The gentlemen below the gangway, Mr. Smith added, asked that a select committee be constituted to inquire forthwith into the allegations of the Times. The practice of the House had been to divest itself as far as possible of judicial duty. The Government thought such a committee as was asked for would be unfitted to consider such grave questions as would have to be referred to it for decision. The Government, feeling it to be their duty to endeavor to solve the question, had instructed the Attorney-General and such others as he cared to associate with him to prosecute the Times for the libel on Mr. Dillon, who was at liberty to select such counsel as he saw fit. Mr. Smith urged the House to accept the course proposed.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor condemned the Government's proposal. He said he commiserated the Government on their humiliating and degrading position. Their proposal was really for a collusive action at law made by the valor of a libel. Mr. O'Connor here produced a copy of the Times containing the libel on Mr. Dillon, and flourishing it aloft he said: I purchased this copy of the Times at one of the bookstalls owned by the Right Honorable the First Lord of the Treasury. It is he speaking for the Government who says no breach of privilege was committed. (Irish cheers.) He is therefore deeply interested as a party in the case against the editor of the Times. The two men ought to be in the dock together. The Irish members reject his proposal as unfair, unjust and unprecedented. The House of Commons ought not to be taken in by a collusive action.

Mr. De Lisle, Conservative, rose to a point of order. He said he had heard Mr. Tanner (Home Rule member for Middle Cork) say the "Conservatives are a damned lot of cads."

Irish voices—"So you are."

Mr. Speaker Peel—The Clerk of the House will please see that the words are taken down.

Mr. Tanner denied that he had used the word "damned." He repeated, however, that the Conservatives were a lot of cads.

Mr. Speaker said Mr. Tanner must withdraw the expression and apologize.

Mr. Tanner said he would do so.

Sir Wm. Vernon Harcourt denounced the Government's proposal.

Sir Edward Clarke, ex-Solicitor-General, moved an amendment to the Government's proposal, to the effect that the House did not consider the Times statement concerning Mr. Dillon a breach of privilege. Justifying his action in offering the amendment, Sir Edward declared that there was no record of Parliament having committed a man to custody for breach of privilege, such as the action of the Times was now alleged to be. He added that he and the Attorney-General were responsible for the advice on which the Government acted. He proposed to confine himself to the legal points of the case, regardless of party politics. He then quoted precedents to sh that the House was not the proper tribunal to deal with such matters. No corruption had been alleged of a member, nor had any contempt of the House been exhibited, such as had constituted the offence in previous cases where breach of privilege had been committed. The course of the prosecution would be left to such persons as the Irish members might nominate, both counsel and solicitors. If the Government were asked to appoint them they would interpose no objection. Sir Edward modified his amendment, making it read that the House declines to treat the Times publication as a breach of privilege.

Lord Randolph Churchill admitted that the case presented a prima facie breach of privilege, but he thought the House was not refusing a judicial inqury. The only difference was as to the form of inquiry to be adopted. He regarded a resort to the ordinary tribunals of the law one that would afford a better remedy than could be obtained from action by the House. He deprecated the attack made by Mr. O'Connor on the Government leader in the House. No one outside Mr. O'Connor's own circle could be expected to sympathize with him in such an assault. It was utterly unjustifiable. From the very language used, Mr. Smith could well afford to ignore the assault. (Cheers.) If the Government leader in the House was charged with not taking primary action on behalf of the House for a breach of privilege committed against one of its members, he could retort that it was the leader of the Opposition who ought to have been expected to protect his friends, having taken the lead outside the House in an agitation for the repeal of the Union. (Cheers.)

Mr. Gladstone—I emphatically repudiate the assertion of His Lordship.

Lord Randolph Churchill responded—It is true, however. He then proceeded to argue that it would be unwise for the House to go beyond the action the Government had proposed. The action of the House, if the Times publisher should be brought before the bar, would in no wise curb or control the great power wielded by the press of the country.

Mr. Storey (Radical), a newspaper proprietor—You can try to suppress the press in Ireland. (Parnellite cheers.)

Lord Randolph Churchill—How would a committee of inquiry be constituted? Would it be proposed that members of the National League be put upon it? (Cries of "Certainly!") If so, there would be nothing in the whole history of jury-packing like it. (Cheers.) Besides, the powers of a committee would not be equal to those of a court of law. The committee, indeed, would be hopelessly incompetent to settle such questions of law as a court could. In a court the prosecution would proceed at the cost of the country, with the employment of any counsel the Irish members liked to name. In this way the truth would be arrived at and justice done the offenders.

Mr. Dillon said he did not consider the ordinary tribunals of England in the present state of political feeling on the Irish question fairly open to the members of the Irish party in the House of Commons. He therefore maintained that he had a right to be heard before a committee. For six years the Parnellites had been held up to public odium as criminals. Some of them in the meantime had been imprisoned. Enough had been done and said in these six years to prejudice the minds of any English jury possible to impannel. He must decline to take proceedings in a civil action against the Times, because he believed he had no chance of obtaining a verdict. If, on the other hand, a select committee of the members of the House should be appointed to hear his case, he would be contented that it should be so constituted as not to include a single Irish member. (Cheers.)

Mr. Gladstone intimated that in the event of the adoption of Sir Edward Clarke's motion, he would move an amendment to the main question to the effect that an inquiry be made by a committee into the charges of wilful falsehood, in a speech delivered in the House of Commons brought in an article by the Times against Mr. Dillon. (Cheers.)

Mr. W. H. Smith asked if Mr. Gladstone would make that motion at once.

Mr. Gladstone said he was surprised at the suggestion, coming as it did from the Government leader in the House. For him (Mr. Gladstone) to make such a motion at the present time would be only making confusion, and it would tend to obscure the issue if the course suggested by Mr. Smith were followed.

On motion of Mr. Bradlaugh the debate was adjourned.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: In the House of Commons this afternoon consideration of the question of breach of privilege in the Times-Dillon case was resumed. No member rising to speak on the motion of Mr. Lewis, that the conduct of the Times was a breach of privilege and the House take notice of it, Speaker Peel put before the House the amendment of Sir Edward Clarke, Solicitor-General, that the House decline to treat the Times' publication as a breach of privilege.

The Parnellites at once challenged a division. This resulted in a vote of 297 in favor of the amendment to 219 against it. The amendment then became a substantive motion, and Mr. Bradlaugh resumed the debate.

Mr. Gladstone, who on rising was loudly cheered, moved an amendment, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the charge of wilful falsehood made against Mr. Dillon in the Times on Monday. He said he did not intend to suggest that the inquiry go beyond the article referred to. He objected to Lord Randolph Churchill's calling him the leader of the party of separation. He perfectly understood why Lord Randolph did not call it the party of Home Rule. There was a future before Lord Randolph, in which Home Rule plans might figure as convenient to propose. (Cheers.) Turning to the question of privilege, he said it was unfortunate that the Government refused to inquire into the present charge against an Irish member, while inflicting upon the Irish people, by means of a permanent Coercion Bill, a brand of perpetual dishonor. Why take the case into a court of law? Was it certain that Mr. Dillon would get a verdict, whatever might be the proof, in a case where Parliament declared charges against a member no breach of privilege? Nearly thirty years ago he went as Commissioner to the Ionian Islands. The Times then said that the Ionian Assembly was committing treason and that the Commissioner was aiding and abetting the assembly. He thought these charges required redress, and he took the best advice on the subject, but all of his advisers said he could not depend upon securing a fair verdict. The Irish members would be in a still more unfavorable position in a jury trial, and it was no wonder they preferred the tribunal of the House. The House was a perfectly competent tribunal—indeed the only competent one. The precedents were all on the side of the appointment of a committee. There was the case of Mr. Butt in 1854, when it was held that the accusation that members were hungry for places to which were attached salaries and pensions deserved an inquiry. After citing a number of other precedents, in all of which the charges were less grave than those brought against Mr. Dillon, he challenged the Government to establish a single precedent where a prosecution had been ordered without the House having previously condemned the Act upon which the prosecution was based. He appealed to the Government to alter their determination, which otherwise might lead to a crisis of the most serious and momentous importance. The Irish members, who had been maligned to an enormous extent, asked for a particular course, which the majority refused, forgetting that they were acting against a minority representing a nation. (Parnellite cheers.) The Government could yet, on the grounds of reason, prudence and precedent accept his amendment, showing the country that they had determined at last to give even the Irish members full justice, even indulgent justice, seeing that their honor and character were at stake. (Cheers.)

Sir Richard Webster, Attorney-General, admitted that Mr. Gladstone had put the issue in the clearest possible way, but the opinion of the law officers of the Crown was unshaken. An examination for precedents showed that there never was a case parallel to the present, that there never was a case where the Government directed an inquiry into a charge where the authorship was admitted and the party accused of libel expressed willingness to justify. (Cheers.) The House had never dealt with a charge of falsehood as a matter in which it should interfere. Not a single case existed in modern times in which a similar libel upon a member of the House had been treated as a breach of privilege. If such a precedent should once be established there would probably be a breach of privilege every week. It was idle to suggest that commom justice should not be done in a case of gross libel. He appealed to the House to affirm that the course proposed by the Government was a most honorable and adequate one, and that a court of law was the proper place in which to deal with the charges.

An application for the release of Father Keller, the priest of Youghal, who was imprisoned in Kilmainham for refusing to testify regarding his connection with the Plan of Campaign, has been dismissed.

United Ireland says that only a fool or an enemy of the Irish party would recommend the Parnellites to legally prosecute their slanderers.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: In the House of Commons last night Mr. Hugh Childers followed the Attorney-General. He taunted Mr. Webster with entirely ignoring Mr. Gladstone's powerful argument that Parliament had never ordered a prosecution without first declaring the offence. He hoped, on the ground of precedent and fairness, that the House would agree to the appointment of a committee.

The debate was resumed in the House Commons this evening on Mr. Gladstone's motion to appoint a committee to inquire into the Times' charges against Mr. Dillon.

Mr. Healy said every possible question seemed worthy of inquiry by the House except a question affecting the character of its members. The Parnellites did not care whether they got this inquiry or not, but if the Government majority refused this inquiry the names of British gentlemen would be placed on a level with that of the Indian Thug. The Parnellites challenged the Tories to combat at once on this question. They would stand on no technical reference, but would meet any charges brought against them. From the decision of the majority of the House the Parnellites would appeal to the people outside and to other nations. The Irish people never sent them there to beg favors, but to demand their rights.

Major Saunderson said he did not wonder that Mr. Gladstone tried to whitewash his Irish friends, who were now supplying his policy. He challenged Mr. Dillon to disprove the Times evidence.

Mr. Dillon—"I have offered to enter into the charges fully before a committee. I shall no longer exchange the lie with members of the House over them." (Cheers.)

WHIRLED TO DEATH.

Horrible Death by a Young Woman's Playful Carelessness.

A Jersey City despatch says: A horrible accident occurred in the smoking and fine cut department of Lorrillard's Tobacco Factory, this city, about 2 o'clock, which resulted in the death of Mrs. Honora Perrine, a widow, employed in the factory. At the time of the accident there were over 250 girls in the room, many of whom were eye-witnesses to the frightful tragedy. There are ten packing machines on the floor. All of these except two were shut down and the girls were standing about chatting, waiting for the paymaster to come along. While waiting for the paymaster Mrs. Perrine went over to the opposite end of the room to chat with her friend, Miss Cosgrove. Only two of the machines were running, and the two inch belts from all the others had been detached from the pulleys and were hanging loose on the revolving shaft. Despite the warnings of Miss Cosgrove, Mrs. Perrine sat in one of the loose beltings and began swinging as she would have done in a soup, holding fast to the belt with both hands a little way above her head. The girl's weight acted as a pressure upon the belt, which suddenly commenced to revolve, and she was borne upward with a crash to the ceiling, ten feet above, with a frightful crash. The girl's shoulders struck the ceiling and her hands and arms became entangled in a shaft revolving 350 times in a minute. The girl fell in almost the same spot in which she had stood. She lay in a mass upon the floor and a great stream of blood trickled out through her clothing upon the floor, and she died soon afterwards.

CZAR AND NIHILIST.

He Will Commute their Sentences—Determination of the Prisoners.

A St. Peterburg despatch says: It is reported that the Czar has decided that the sentences of death pronounced against the Nihilists, convicted of complicity in the recent attempt to assassinate him, shall be commuted to imprisonment at hard labor for life in the cases of all but two of the condemned. Polianoksky, one of the condemned, said he and his accomplices acted from firm conviction that what they set out to do it was their duty to perform. Another of the prisoners is a young student. He had just finished his studies with brilliant success, having taken the gold medal of the university which graduated him. The youth was so ardent in the cause of Nihilism that he sold his gold graduation medal to obtain funds to enable an accomplice to leave the Empire. All the prisoners pleaded guilty, and every one refused under threat or promise to betray any accomplice. The evidence indicated the existence of four widely ramifying Nihilist organizations, having head centres at St. Peterburg, Kief, Vilna and in Siberia. One of the witnesses was a woman. She admitted that she was the wife of one of the accused, although she said she had never been joined in wedlock to him by "unnecessary religious formalities." She was, on this admission, arrested and conducted to prison.

Stabbed to Death.

A New Westminster (B.C.) despatch says: Between 9 and 10 o'clock yesterday morning J. E. Muir, who has been engaged for many years logging at Semiahmoo, was murdered on the railway wharf in this city by a man named Wm. Shearer. The cause of the trouble between them is supposed to be of long standing. Shearer, who was discharging lumber from a scow, deliberately walked upon the wharf to where Muir was standing, and without any words stabbed him repeatedly. On Muir attempting to get away Shearer caught him by his coat-collar and forcibly held him until the murder was accomplished. The murderer then threw his knife into the water and quickly gave himself up. Muir died in a few minutes, and on examination eleven stabs were found between the neck and the lower part of his body.

The coat-tail flirtation is the latest. A wrinkled coat-tail, bearing dusty toe marks, means: "I have spoken to your father."

During the next three days three thousand more immigrants are expected to arrive in Montreal.

Two hundred houses have been destroyed by fire in the town of Nagy Karoly, Transylvania. The castle of Count Karolyi narrowly escaped destruction.

BELLIGERENT COLONISTS.

Colonial Delegates Get Mad Over Britain's Policy in the New Hebrides—Quite a Scene Raised—The Queen's Title to be Further Lengthened.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: A meeting of the Colonial Conference was held to-day, with Sir Henry Holland presiding, when the draft scheme for the increase of the Australian squadron was agreed to, as were the resolutions relative to laying a sub-marine cable between Vancouver and Australia. A discussion was invited by the President as to the proposal to extend the title of the Queen so as to include distinct reference to the colonies. The delegates were unanimously in favor of the extension of the title, subject to the Queen's pleasure, and suggested that the terms of the proclamation of 1858 should be adopted, viz., Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the Colonies and Dependencies thereof. At the close of the Conference an address was presented to Sir Henry Holland, expressing a sense of the manner in which he had presided. Sir Henry Holland thanked the delegates for their kindness and courtesy.

The Conference will visit Cambridge to-morrow. The final sitting of the Conference will be held on Monday.

Sir Henry Holland, Secretary of State for the Colonies, announced in the Colonial Conference here on the 27th ult. that the Government hoped to arrange with France for a joint naval commission for the government of the New Hebrides. The Commission, it was stated, would have power to protect the settlers, traders and missionaries, and would also be empowered to land marines to punish the natives for committing outrages and to maintain order, the marines, however, to be withdrawn when the special work for which they landed was accomplished. If the scheme proposed was accepted by France it was to be arranged that the French garrisons now occupying the chief harbors of the New Hebrides should retire. The publication of the details is attributed to the indignation which the proposal has aroused among the Colonial representatives here, many of whom are said to be unable to conceal their anger at what they deem the surrender of their claims to France. It is said that Sir Henry Holland's statement amazed the members of the Conference and almost led to a scene. The Australians all without exception deprecated any policy which even seemed to recognize French pretensions in the New Hebrides. Lord Salisbury, who was present, supported the speech made by Sir Henry Holland in justification of the Government's proposal. The Premier's argument, however, instead of mollifying the incensed delegates, served but to intensify their wrath. His remarks implied that the Australian demands hampered England in her negotiations with France. He maintained that the colonists made a grave mistake in not accepting the compromise which the Earl of Rosebery proposed, and which, the Premier said, would have prevented the extension of the evils complained of by the Australians, or arising from the sending of French convicts to the South Pacific, and the rejection of which made it difficult for the English Government to approach France with any request that she curtail her liberty of action as to the uses to which she should put her own territory. "Surely," exclaimed the Marquis, "the Colonies do not desire to make the recidivist agitation a casus belli." The Premier's speech increased the dissatisfaction of the delegates to such an extent that Sir Graham Berry, the Agent-General of Victoria, twitted the Prime Minister with having made a speech that would have been excellent coming from the mouth of the French Premier.

M. Chauvat has been installed as French resident at Walles Island, the capital of the Walles Islands group in the South Pacific, in view of a possible British or German occupation.

RAILWAY DISASTER.

An Intercolonial Express Wrecked by an Enormous Snowslide—Two Men Killed.

A Moncton, N. B., despatch says: Yesterday's express from Quebec was five hours behind time. The delay was caused by a fatal snowslide three miles west of Trois Pistoles. The west-bound accommodation struck an avalanche which had dropped on the track from a high bank in a clay cutting, and both engines and the four first-class cars ran off the track and piled in a heap of ruin. The fireman of one of the engines named Pierre Levasgeur was killed, and a brakeman named Alfred Lavard was so badly scalded that he died in a short time. The two engine drivers and one of the firemen crawled out from the wreck with scarcely any injury. Their escape is simply miraculous. Mr. McDonald, the superintendent, was on board, and immediately sent for medical aid and for the auxiliary cars of St. Flavie and River du Loup. Owing to the awkward position of the wreck between two banks fifty or sixty feet high, leaving no place to dump the debris, the clearing of the line was a difficult matter. The accident was one which it was difficult to foresee, nothing of the kind having been known to happen before. The bank that fell is an enormous one, and is composed of snow as hard and heavy as clay.

A Level Headed Father.

First Man—Umph! The idea of spending $200 for a bicycle for your boy! You'll ruin him.

Second Man—On the contrary, I desire to keep him out of bad company.

"What good will that new fangled contrivance do any one, I'd like to know? He can go where he pleases with it."

"Did you ever hear of a young man coming home drunk on a bicycle?"

—A certain current slang phrase has been traced to no less a person than John Bunyan. In "The Pilgrim's Progress" occurs the passage: "When it is a cold day for them in a nation, then they lurk in the hedges, though their ordnance lie there, as leaves that are dry and fallen down from the tree."

—In front of a grocery store in Bleecker street, New York city, is a sign on a basket of eggs which reads as follows: "Fresh eggs guaranteed. Every egg dated."

—"Define a monstrosity," said the teacher, and the children all replied in ringing chorus: "An insurance agent with the mumps."

A METEOR AT SEA.

The Narrow Escape From Destruction of a Vessel—Peculiar Experiences.

A New York despatch says: The Mail and Express says: It has often been thought by mariners and those intimate with astronomical phenomena that many of the sudden and mysterious disappearances of vessels lost at sea could be accounted for by their being struck by meteors and meteoric stones. The theory appears to have some foundation by the following statement by Captain Swart, of the Dutch barque J. P. A., bound for Quebec, and one of the first statements of the kind ever made public: On March 19th the ship, while in lat. 37 degrees 39 minutes north, and long. 57 degrees west, experienced a severe storm. About 5 o'clock in the afternoon a meteor was observed flying through the air. It presented the appearance of two balls. One was very black and the other very brightly illuminated. The latter appeared as if ready to drop on board amidships. The vessel was hove to under storm sails and the meteor dropped into the sea close alongside, making in its flight a tremendous roaring noise. Before falling into the water the upper atmosphere was suddenly darkened, while below on board everything appeared like a sea of fire. The force of the meteor on striking the water caused the latter to form heavy breakers, which swept over the vessel, rocking her fearfully. At the same time such a suffocating atmosphere was caused as to force perspiration to run down the faces of all on board, and greatly oppressed the breathing from the amount of sulphur in the air. Immediately after solid lumps of ice fell on the deck, and the decks and rigging became covered with an icy crust, caused by the immense evaporation, notwithstanding the fact that the thermometer registered 66 degrees. The barometer during the phenomena oscillated violently, so that no reading could be taken. After close examination of the vessel and rigging no damage was found on deck, but on the side where the meteor fell into the water the vessel appeared all black and some of the copper sheathing was terribly blistered. The affair was followed by an increase of the wind to hurricane force.

SHOT AND ROBBED.

Plucky Fight of an Old Sandwich Hotelkeeper.

A Windsor despatch says: Captain John Horn, sen., of Detroit, has for the past two years conducted the Road House at Sandwich, a short distance above the mineral springs. Captain John is frequently the only person on the premises. Last night he was alone, his bedroom being just in rear of the bar, with an entrance to it from the dance hall. Between 1 and 2 o'clock this morning he was aroused by burglars moving in the front part of the building. Jumping and grabbing his cash-box, which he kept at the head of his bed, he opened the door and found himself face to face with one of the burglars. The fellow had a cocked revolver in his hand and poking it into the landlord's face demanded his money or his life. "I'll be —— if you get my money," retorted the Captain, who, in spite of his 67 years, is able-bodied. He made a lunge at the burglar; the latter lowered his revolver in a twinkle and fired a bullet which passed through the fleshy part of his left thigh. "You've done it now," roared the stalwart old veteran, "but I'll fix you yet," and he snatched a lather's hatchet that was close at hand. The burglars retreated and darted out of the front door, which had been left open in case of surprise. Capt. Horn followed, and in the dim light of the moon saw four men running down the road. With nothing on but his nightshirt he chased them with the hatchet about 40 rods and then lost sight of them. On returning he sized up his loss, which amounted to about $200 worth of cigars, dressed himself and walked half a mile to the nearest doctor. This morning, although suffering considerable pain, he walked to Windsor and crossed to his home in Detroit.

COLONIAL CONFERENCE.

The Delegates Present an Address to the Queen—Handsome Gifts and Congratulations.

A London cablegram says: The Colonial delegates visited the Queen at Windsor today to present their address. Several valuable presentations were made from the colonies, among them being a gold casket studded with Cape diamonds, which was presented by the Cape representatives, and a casque of native woods, mounted in silver and jewels, from Natal. Both Sir Alexander Campbell and Mr. Sandford Fleming were present. The address stated that the Queen's subjects from distant parts of the Empire, assembled in London to confer on questions affecting the Imperial possessions throughout the world, desire to avail themselves of the opportunity of approaching Her Majesty with humble, united and earnest congratulations on the approaching completion of the fiftieth year of her reign. Mention was made of the growth of the population of India and the colonies, and that the increase of trade and the shipping revenue had been proportionate to the population. No one in the Queen's wide dominion is subject to any other away than that of even and impartial law. The address congratulated Her Majesty that after half a century's reign, amidst changes of dynasties and systems of government in other countries, the principles of law, which have their foundations in the past, still afford her subjects safety and prosperty, and the Empire that stability which claims the admiration of the world. The delegates assured the Queen of the continued loyalty and devotion of her colonial subjects, and prayed that her happy reign would still be prolonged, and the throne remain established in the land in justice and righteousness for generations to come.

—"There is something in this little fellow I like," said an appreciative visitor to a young hopeful he was trotting on his knees. "Now," said the boy, "how did you know I had swallowed a penny?"

You can't judge an artist from the way he writes his name, nor a woman's disposition by the size of her bustle.

The Bishop of Ontario will not return from England until the middle of September. In consequence the Synod, which is usually held in June, will not be convened until after his return.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

The House went into committee on the Bill respecting the representation of the Northwest Territories in the Senate.

Mr. Kenney resumed the general discussion on the recent elections and denied that he owed his election to the fact that some 400 civil servants were coerced into voting for him.

Mr. Jones gave an account of various practices resorted to by the Government at the last elections. He said that minutes of Council promising to aid various railways were distributed in bushels through various counties.

The discussion was continned by Messrs. Tupper (Pictou), Jones and Welsh.

Hon. Mr. Foster, replying to Mr. Landerkin, said that the Act which compels owners of saw mills to keep sawdust out of streams, was in force in every county in Ontario, but that mill-owners on the Ottawa River were exempted from the law.

On the order for the disallowance resolutions being called,

Mr. Watson said he had received a communication from F. W. Robertson, Chairman of the Manitoba deputation, representing that the matter was under the consideration of the Government, and asking him to allow the question to stand until Thursday, May 17th. He would do so, if it was the wish of the House.

Sir Hector Langevin said there was no objection, and the question was made the first order for Thursday, May 17th.

Sir Richard Cartwright moved for a return showing the amounts in detail expended under warrants from the Governor-General in each year from 1873 to 1886, both inclusive. It was a fixed constitutional principle that money should not be expended without the consent of Parliament. The only exception was in cases of great urgency which arose while Parliament was not in session. The House sat last year until an unusually late period, so that the officers of the various departments had ample time in which to prepare their estimates. Besides that, the estimates both for 1886 and 1887 were unusually large and liberal. The estimate for 1886 was about 38½ millions and for 1887 about 34½ millions. Yet the Government had taken under Governor-General's warrants $308,748 for the few remaining weeks of 1886 and $2,005,589 for 1887. The House would be wanting in its duty if it did not investigate strictly the causes which led to the expenditure of nearly 2½ millions without its authority. He referred to various expenditures made under the warrants, many of which were made about the time of the last elections. The sum of $118,000 was spent on February 1st last to pay the award on the Windsor & Annapolis Railway. On January 25th there was a sum of $10,000 for sufferers by the flood at Cornwall. The expenditure of $46,000 on the Banff Park was peculiarly unjustifiable, because there was no pretence of urgency in the case of laying out pleasure grounds. Then there was $32,000 for salaries and expenses of the Commissioners on rebel losses. On March 11th there was $115,000 for seed grain to settlers in Assiniboia and Saskatchewan. Then, one of the last things which should have been paid without authority of the House, was the sum of $4,000 to pay the St. Catharines Milling Company the costs of the suit brought by the Ontario Government against them. There were very large expenditures made on the Intercolonial Railway, amounting in all to $600,000. He called particular attention to the fact that a large sum had been expended by Governor-General's warrant while the House was actually in session, which was distinctly illegal.

Sir Charles Tupper said he was disposed to concur with Sir Richard Cartwright in the principles which he had laid down, namely, that Governor-General's warrants should not be used except in cases of great urgency. In regard to the abnormally large sums which had been referred to by the hon. gentleman, he admitted that his colleague (Mr. McLelan) might have made a mistake in his estimates of the amounts required.

Mr. Mitchell said the Government should see to it that the amounts put in the Estimates should be more in accord with what the expenditure would really be. Otherwise the House would be much misled in granting money.

Mr. Paterson (Brant) pointed to the fact that under the Governor-General's warrant money had been paid for an Indian Commission, showing that it was a matter of urgency, but there was nothing to show that the Indian Commission had been appointed. He quoted the Prime Minister's declaration last session after charges were made against the Indian Department of gross malfeasance, that a commission would be appointed to examine into the report.

Sir John Macdonald said the charges made against the Indian Department were made by one not now a member of the House, when he (Sir John) was not present, and not being able on his return to give the facts he promised they would be looked into by a commission. But after the session he found those charges were foundationless and false, and only a statement of the facts was necessary. That statement was printed and circulated on the authority of the department. No charges made since the world began were more false and outrageous than those made in this case, and the answer was complete.

Sir Richard Cartwright said Mr. Cameron had challenged the First Minister to meet him, but without any acceptance of the challenge, and he had repeated his charges, showing that the pretended answer was no answer at all.

Mr. Paterson said not only had charges been made by Mr. Cameron, but he (Mr. Paterson) himself had made charges against the Department, proving every one by evidence in the public documents of the officers of the Department themselves, proving there had been incapacity and neglect, resulting even in the sacrifice of human life. The First Minister had definitely promised a commission, and the people had a right to look for it. The First Minister did not stand in an enviable position, having failed to keep that promise.

Sir John Macdonald said the discussion on the subject should not take place now, but if a member would bring it forward when it could be fully discussed he would meet him.

Mr. Paterson—All right.

Sir Charles Tupper said he had a return, corrected by the Clerk of the Privy Council, showing the dates of those warrants incorrectly shown by this document to have been made after Parliament sat.

Mr. Mills said the return was correct at first, but this amended statement showed on what days the Orders in Council were passed on which the warrants were based. He contended that the issue of warrants after Parliament met was illegal, and if the House was to sanction such acts it might as well acknowledge itself to be a mere machine for registering the decrees of the Government.

Sir John Macdonald read a clause of the statute to show that if an Order in Council, on which a warrant was based, was passed before Parliament met, the transaction was legal, though the warrant was not issued until after Parliament met. The dependence of the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was upon mere technicality.

Mr. Blake said the Premier had said one point raised on the Opposition side was a technicality. On the contrary, it was a technicality for the Government to pass Orders in Council authorizing expenditure just before Parliament met. It simply meant that the Government chose to escape, by this means, the investigation of expenditures in the House. It was a prostitution of the powers of Government. The chief duty of the House of Commons was to guard the public expenditure, and that duty could not be performed efficiently if it were understood the Government might expend millions, of its own motion, on services wholly without limit. The expenditure for the Banff Springs was authorized by Order in Council the very day before the House met, and the Governor-General's warrant was not issued until the day after the House met. He denounced this conduct as unconstitutional and a violation of the rights of the people to have expenditures made only when authorised by the people's representatives, except in the case of the greatest public urgency.

The following private Bills were read a second time:

To incorporate the Goderich & Canadian Pacific Junction Railway Company.—Mr. Porter.

To incorporate the Kincardine & Teeswater Railway Co.—Mr. McCarthy.

Respecting the Ontario & Quebec Railway Company.—Mr. Patterson (Essex.)

To incorporate the Brandon, Souris & Rock Lake Railway Company.—Mr. Small.

To incorporate the Manufacturers' Life & Accident Insurance Company.—Mr. Brown.

To incorporate the New Westminster Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Chisholm.

To amend the charter of the Hamilton, Guelph & Buffalo Railway Company and to change the name to the Hamilton Central Railway Company.—Mr. McKay.

To authorise the Grange Trust (limited) to wind up its affairs.—Mr. Masson.

Mr. Edgar moved the second reading of the Bill respecting the discharge of insolvent debtors whose estates have been distributed ratably among their creditors.

Mr. Thompson said it would be well to allow the Bill to stand, as a case affecting the validity of the Ontario Act respecting the distribution of insolvent estates was now pending in the courts.

The Bill was ordered to stand.

Mr. Charlton moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act respecting public morals. He proposed by this Bill to restore the provisions originally introduced by him as to seduction under promise of marriage, and thus provide for the punishment of any person over 18 who seduces a female under 21, also to provide for the punishment of offences against insane women.

The Bill was read a second time, discussion being deferred to the committee stage.

Mr. McLelan's Bill to amend the Act respecting public officers was read a third time.

Mr. Thompson's Bill providing for the marking of public stores and punishment for larceny thereof was read a second time and passed through committee.

The House went into committee on the resolutions respecting the salaries to be paid to officers of penitentiaries, in charge of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Thompson). The resolutions were considered and explanations of their purport given, which is generally to equalize the salaries of these officers. The resolutions were adopted and reported.

Mr. Edgar asked—Has the Government expressed its willingness to contribute a subsidy in aid of the Pacific Mail service, as announced by Lord Onslow in the House of Lords on the 29th April? If so, to what amount? Is the proposed service to be fortnightly, tri-weekly or monthly? What are the proposed terminal ports for the line?

Sir John Macdonald—The Canadian Government has expressed its willingness to ask the Canadian Parliament to contribute £15,000 annually, on condition that the British Government contribute enough additional to make altogether £60,000. That is now under consideration. It is to be hoped that a tri-weekly service will be established. The terminal ports are Vancouver and Hong Kong.

The House went into committee on Mr. Charlton's Bill respecting public morals. The clause regarding insane women passed without amendment. The clause regarding seduction was amended so as to make the male liable from the age of 21 years and protect the female up to the same age.

The Bill thus amended was reported.

Mr. Edgar moved the second reading of the Bill to provide for the discharge of insolvent debtors whose estates have been already distributed among their creditors.

Mr. Fisher moved a resolution abolishing the office of Deputy Speaker. He contended that it was unnecessary and that the Government had itself admitted this by neglecting to appoint a Deputy Speaker this session, although a rule of the House required that he should be appointed after the adoption of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Sir John Macdonald said that the British House of Commons and the Legislatures of the Australian Colonies had Deputy Speakers and that it was better to have one person whose duty it would be to become thoroughly acquainted with the rules of the House than to call upon casual members of the House. He intended to move for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker to-morrow.

After remarks from Mr. Fisher and Sir Hector Langevin, the motion was put and lost—yeas, 66; nays, 109.

The following Bills were introduced and read a first time:

To incorporate the Alberta & British Columbia Junction Railway Company—Mr. Shanly.

To amend the Acts incorporating and relating to the British Canadian Loan & Investment Company—Mr. Small.

To reduce the stock of the Ontario & Qu'Appelle Land Company (limited)—Mr. Sutherland.

To incorporate the Kingston, Smith's Falls & Ottawa Railway Company—Mr. Kirkpatrick.

Sir John Macdonald intimated that the estimates would be laid on the table on Monday next, and the budget speech would be delivered on the following Thursday, on condition that Mr. Watson would postpone the consideration of his resolutions on disallowance, which were to be the first order for that day.

Sir John Macdonald said that a memorandum had been handed to him, signed by more than half the members, asking that the House should adjourn for a week from Wednesday next. There would be only two sitting days lost by the proposed adjournment. He merely threw out the suggestion for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Cargill introduced a Bill to repeal the Canada Temperance Act. He stated that the sentiment in his riding (East Bruce) was opposed to the introduction of the Act, and he was opposed to it himself. He believed the agricultural community was in a much better condition, financially and otherwise, where the license system prevailed than where the Scott Act is in force, and the loss to the municipalities of the revenue formerly derived from that source was very sensibly felt.

The Bill was read a first time.

The following Government Bills were read a third time and passed:

Act respecting the Banff National Park—Mr. White (Cardwell.)

Act respecting Public Stores—Mr. Thompson.

Act respecting the representation of the Northwest Territories in the Senate—Sir John Macdonald.

The Pope on Total Abstinence.

A Washington despatch says: The following passage occurs in the letter of Pope Leo XIII. to Bishop Ireland, of St. Paul: "Above all, we have rejoiced to learn with what energy and zeal, by means of various excellent associations, and especially through the Catholic Abstinence Union, you combat the destructive vice of intemperance. For it is well known to us how ruinous, how deplorable is the injury both to faith and to morals that is to be feared from intemperance in drink. Nor can we sufficiently praise the prelates of the United States, who recently in the Plenary Council of Baltimore with weightiest words condemned this abuse, declaring it to be a perpetual incentive to sin and a fruitful root of all evils, bringing the families of the intemperate into the direst ruin and drawing numberless souls into everlasting perdition. Hence we esteem worthy of all commendation the noble resolve of your pious associations, by which they pledge themselves to abstain totally from all kinds of intoxicating drink. Nor can it be at all doubted that this determination is the proper and the truly efficacious remedy for this very great evil; and that so much the more strongly will all be induced to put this bridle upon appetite by how much the greater are the dignity and influence of those who give the example. * * * Let pastors, therefore, do their best to drive the plague of intemperance from the fold of Christ by assiduous preaching and exhortation, and to shine before all as models of abstinence, that so many calamities with which this vice threatens both Church and State may by their strenuous endeavors be averted."

Latest News Notes.

An effort is being made with the Dominion Government to get another company of garrison artillery for Toronto.

Mr. John Kidd, of Mono Mills, is 84 years of age, and ploughed nearly 25 acres this spring.

Noxon Brothers, of Ingersoll, propose illuminating their agricultural works with electricity shortly.

A petition against the return of Mr. J. M. Platt, M. P. for Prince Edward County, was filed at Osgoode Hall yesterday.

A Mr. Johns, of Owen Sound, has been missing since the evening of Sir John Macdonald's meeting there in November. This mystery was cleared up this week by his body being found in the river.

The report of the Montreal Flood Commission was completed on Thursday and forwarded to Ottawa yesterday afternoon. The commissioners refuse to disclose its character until the Government has considered it.

Bradstreet's reports a total of 197 failures throughout the country during the week ending May 6th, against 178 for the week previous. Sixteen of the number were in Canada, four less than the preceding week.

At a meeting of the Montreal Citizens' Committee yesterday the opinion was almost unanimously expressed that the city would pay the cost of measures for preventing future floods if the Government would assume the Lake St. Peter debt.

A teacher's life in Alabama is thus partly described by a committeeman in a letter to an eastern friend: "She tries to make everything just as pleasant as she can. She doesn't mind work. She takes the ax and cuts wood—went to the woods one evening after school and helped to saw off two cuts after 4 o'clock. The people are very well satisfied with her."

Advices from Gambia say it is reported that the French have occupied Baddiboo, after a collision on the Koomboof River between the French troops and Sardemattie, son of the late King. After his defeat Sardemattie took refuge in British territory, and numbers of his subjects are fleeing from the French across the river.

There is no truth in the report that the German Government proposes to have a new spy law enacted in consequence of the Schnaebele affair. The police will be strengthened, and a detective force will be organized especially to watch spies. An official burgomaster will be appointed in each town containing over 10,000 inhabitants, instead of the present elective honorary incumbents.

THE CANADIAN MILITIA.

General Middleton Thinks the Force Should be Reduced and Better Drilled.

In his last annual report to the Minister of Militia, General Middleton says: "After another year's experience I beg leave again to urge the absolute necessity of reducing the strength of the force. It stands now on paper (including the Schools of Instruction) as consisting of 37,346 men. This is really more than the correct strength, as I fear the same men appear in more than one regiment, but still this is a much greater number of men than can be properly or usefully trained, considering the money voted for the purpose." General Middleton believes that in order to make the whole force efficient every soldier should be called out for at least sixteen days every year of his service, and this, he says, can only be done by reducing the force.

Storie of Ye Dogge.

Once, in ye very olden tyme a Merchantt fayd too an Eddytor, "I doan't thynke advertizing payes."

"Let me show yov," said ye Eddytor, "I will pvtte i lyne in my Papyr and not charge yov a pennie."

"All right," replied ye Merchantt, "and we will fee."

So ye Eddytor pvtte in his papyr:

WANTED, A DOGGE, JOHN JONES, 253 Olde St.

Now yt hapened that 400 Peple eache brovghte a Dogge on ye next days thereafter, fo that Mifter Jones (whych was ye Merchantt's nayme) was overrune with Dogges.

"Synce there are so manye Dogges," vayd he, "I thynke I myght make fome bvfinefs and will give you a pennie for eache Dogge."

Ye people tooke ye pennie eache for his Dogge becavfe there were fo manye Dogges and Mifter Jones skynned ye 400 Dogges and made bootes and gloves from ye 400 hydes and thvs mayd and thereafter added to yt by advertizing in ye Eddytor's papyr.

A Byg Fortvne,

Sullivan Has Had Enough Gore.

The Missouri Republican says: John L. is going to issue a proclamation soon announcing to all the world that he has decided to leave the ring forever. He has had enough glory for one man. But if any foreigner takes a cranky notion that he can lay out the champion he will be accommodated, on the condition that he first whip the next best man in America. Under no other considerations will Mr. Sullivan condescend to emerge from his retirement. He intends to make a trip around the world giving sparring exhibitions, and will sail for Australia about Sept. 1st, taking Sheedy, La Blanche and Taylor with him.

A Venerable "Rebel."

There died lately at his home in Pelham, Welland county, Mr. Drayton Holcomb, at the patriarchal age of 95 years. It was Mr. Holcomb who sheltered Wm. Lyon Mackenzie and saw him safe over the frontier, when the Government had set a price of $50,000 on his head. But Mr. Holcomb was one of the men produced by that stormy time, who were above price and whose patriotism gold could not reach.

The Raw Cutting Winds

Of winter bring to the surface every latent pain. It is one of the strange things associated with our physical well being that the very air, without which we could not exist, is heavily laden with the germs of disease. Rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago and other complaints of a similar character hold revel at this season of the year amongst human nerves and human muscles. There was a time when fortitude alone could make life tolerable, but now with the advent of powerful, penetrating and nerve soothing remedies pain becomes a thing of a moment. The best, the most powerful and most certain pain cure is Polson's Nerviline. Nothing equals Nerviline for penetrating power. Nerviline is beyond comparison the grandest discovery for the relief of pain offered to the public. Druggists sell a sample bottle for 10 cents; large bottles only 25 cents at any drug store.

Prince Frederick Leopold, grandson of Emperor William, was entertained yesterday by the German Consul at Chicago, Baron Von Nordenflycht. The Prince is travelling incognito. A special despatch from Galesburg, Ill., says: "A decided stir was created among railroad men here yesterday morning by the report that Prince Leopold refused to admit the rear brakeman into the car, thus compelling him to ride on the rear platform from Quincy to this city in a cold wind and rain."

The Cutest Little Things.

"Cute!" he echoed. "I don't know as the adjective would have occurred to me in just that connection. But if you mean that they do their work thoroughly, yet make no fuss about it, cause no pain or weakness, and, in short, are everything that a pill ought to be, and nothing that it ought not, then I agree that Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are about the cutest little things going.

A rumor, that smacks of the absurd, is current that the Pope will bestow the famous Golden Rose upon the Queen this Jubilee year.

Mild, soothing and healing is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

King Oscar opened the Rigsdag of Sweden yesterday. In his speech to the Deputies he laid stress upon the necessity of repealing the corn duty.

Three years ago I suffered greatly with rheumatism in my right arm. After trying remedies that failed, I took McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant and was entirely cured. I can recommend it highly. A. M. Bullock, Tilsonburg, Ont.

In the House of Lords last evening Viscount Cross, Secretary of State for India, announced that Lord Dufferin did not confirm the report that the Khyber Pass had been closed by the rebels. He added that the Government had no reason to believe that the forces of the Ameer of Afghanistan had been defeated.

Le Paris states that France has concluded a defensive alliance with certain other powers and that henceforth France will not be alone in the event of aggression against her.

Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets — The Original LITTLE LIVER PILLS. SUGAR COATED PELLETS

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache.

Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. Hausner, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

Thomas J. Rushing, Esq., 2902 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

Eli Robbins, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

D C N L, 20, 87.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

The Blueberry is a valuable fruit, and is a reliable fruit to grow in the Northern States, where the more tender varieties winter kills. It is perfectly hardy, will stand 40 degrees below zero without showing any injury to the most tender buds. Fruit ripens in this latitude about the first of July. Color, a bluish black, when fully ripened. The flavor is equal to the raspberry, a very mild, rich sub-acid, pronounced by most people delicious. The fruit is excellent for pies, or canned for winter use. It grows very stocky; the shining dark-green leaves and the blue fruit make a pleasing contrast. It seems to flourish in all soils and is a prolific bearer. One dozen plants by mail, carefully packed in oil paper, 60 cts.; two dozen by mail, $1.00; 100 by express, $2.50; 1,000, $15.00.

Address L. D. STAPLES, Portland, Mich.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Dufferin Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.25 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, MAY. 19, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Somebody sent us a story printed in German. The person forgot to enclose an interpreter. We did manage, however, to read the title.

The angler for speckled beauties gets lots of bites when he goeth forth on a fishing expedition at this season of the year. It is worthy of note, however, that it is chiefly mosquito bites he gets.

Its a mighty hard thing to steer clear of lightning rod agents, book peddlars, "yeller" dogs, "confidence" men, mosquitoes and dead-beats at this season of the year. The Advance is of the opinion that there's a bonanza awaiting the man who will invent a cast-iron reversible-double-back-action countenance!—to be put on and off at will.

One of our Flesherton youths, while out fishing the other day, drew a trout to the top of the water; but the fish escaped. "By George!" he exclaimed afterwards, "I wish I had hauled out that fish: it would have weighed two pounds—I know it would!" The reader has no doubt observed, that those "big" fish are rarely, if ever, "hauled out" on terra firma.

Tea peddlars occasionally visit Flesherton, although we have no use for 'em. Some of them are respectable; some are not. One fellow, who visited this town last winter, is likely to be invested with a neat suit of tar and feathers should he repeat his visit. In Texas they'd shoot him on sight; here we are good samaritans and clothe ruffians in warm suits especially if a match is applied after they are put on.

It is scarcely necessary for us to make the remark, that an elevator at our railway depot would give good general satisfaction. We have said something like this several times away back in the remote past. The reason we repeat it is because we are becoming more and more impressed with the necessity for such a structure. Of course we have no idea of trying to make people think as we do in this respect. They can think and act as they choose.

Sir Charles Tupper's budget speech last week outlined several important changes in connection with the tariff, the principle ones being the entire removal of the duty on anthracite coal and the increased protection of our iron industry—yet in its infancy—by raising the duty. Since the announcement of these tremendous changes were made, it is reported that a syndicate of New Yorkers, with a capital of $5,000,000, have landed on our shores with the object of developing the rich iron mines in central Ontario. The present Government bids fair to hold a life lease of the reins of power at Ottawa.

A clever gentleman of the cloth, whilst addressing a number of Sabbath School children here recently, said the spectacle of a man going along the streets with a lighted cigar in his mouth reminded him of a suggestion he once heard, that "the cigar had fire at one end and a fool at the other!" We are in a position to add some further testimony in this connection, viz., (1) Fools are not the only persons found smoking cigars, or pipes either. (2) There are quite as many fools (perhaps more) who do not smoke at all. (3) Many of the inhabitants of lunatic asylums are earnest and enthusiastic anti-tobbacconists. Its a poor rule that won't work both ways!

About a year ago we had a controversy with the member for South Grey in the House of Commons on the now defunct Riel question. The M. P. in question at that time stated quite positively that Gabriel Dumont had been amnestied and could at any time return to Canada and claim the rights of citizenship. We, at the same time, objected to the assertion as questionable. We were right. In fact we usually are. The following appeared in the Toronto World's parliamentary report on the 11th of this month:

"Mr. Prefontaine has a notice on the paper which in substance enquires of the Government whether Gabriel Dumont is included in the amnesty, and whether he will be molested if he returns."

We often hear people dismally reverting to the middle ages and sometimes to pre-mediaeval times, as though we had much to be thankful for in living in the "full blaze of nineteenth century civilization." We don't know about that. It is true there are more good people now than there were then but it is equally true that we are rapidly approaching a crisis in the world's history. And this crisis—a serious one—is being accelerated by the movements of such fanatical cranks as socialists, nihilists, communists, &c., &c. ad infinitum. Then we have would-be social reformers running away a century or so ahead of public sentiment. Then there are about a thousand creeds to distract and madden humanity, and blasphemous infidels raking in filthy lucre from people who were foolish enough to pay money to hear "glib little whiffets" rant over the "Mistakes of Moses," etc. We are crushed supporting societies for this purpose and societies for that. Thousands of people seem to have gone mad on this society question. They will join every one of them and forget to pay their baker's and butcher's bills. Then they "flight out" and their creditors get about one cent in the dollar. Can this overwhelming Niagara of humanity be stemmed in time to prevent the awful crisis impending? Can but, we will leave the balance over for some future issue of The Advance.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Wm. Buchanan jr. lost one of his horses last week from inflammation

David Johnson had a valuable cow who got her leg broken last Sunday morning by being chased over a pair of bars by a vicious dog.

Spring seeding is pretty well through with, fall wheat looks well.

Arbour day was duly observed by the teacher and pupils. Seeds were sown and trees planted. The Trustees should now get the fences and gates repaired.

Wm. Gilbert got one of his hands badly cut while working with a butting saw in the steam mill. He had to get part of one of them amputated.

"Grip" Premium Plate.

Grip, Canada's Comic Paper, has just issued a very fine lithographed group of Reform Politicians in Canada. This is a companion groupe to the Conservative Leaders issued from the same office last year, and is the same size 18x26 inches. When framed they make a handsome ornament for any library, dining-room or reading-room. The portraits are well executed, and the plates are a credit to Canadian enterprise.

They are sold separately for 25 cents each, or a copy of either plate is sent free to any one paying $2 for one year in advance to Grip, or subscribers sending $1.10 will receive Grip for six months and their choice of either Reform or Conservative groups. Address Grip, Toronto, Ont

This man smokes, but he got terribly frightened while listening to Rev. Mahood's talk on smoking the other day.
N.B.—Our artist is sick.

Horse Breeding.

From Forest and Farm.

We would again urge upon the farmer the necessity of improving the breed of horses upon the line laid down in our recent article upon the subject. It is announced that the British Government has given orders for the purchase of three hundred horses here within the present year for military purposes, and Col. Goldie is at present engaged in taking stock of our resorces in this respect. It is true that the amount at present involved is not enormous, but it is a beginning that may lead to great endings. We cannot see why Canada should not become the horse mart of the world. Fodder and land are cheap and all that is required is good animals to breed. Recognizing the importance of this subject, the department of Agriculture at Ottawa, has just issued for distribution a pamphlet containing a letter by Col. Ravenhill, R. A., on the conditions afforded by Canada for the supply of horses for the British cavalry service, and an address to the horsebreeders of Great Britain by the same authority. Col. Ravenhill advocates the establishment of horse fairs at central points, as in the present state of the Dominion no English or European dealer could afford the time or expense of moving about the country and taking the chance of picking up animals at long intervals of distance. while the artillery purchasers were in Canada last year they examined 7674 horses, out of which they purchased only 83. Col. Ravenhill also suggests that the Government should appoint an inspector of horse-breeding operations with a view to the improvement of the class of stallions in use. Over seventeen thousand horses are imported into England annually, and the European markets being closed, she will have to look further abroad for her supply. Here, then, seems to us Canada's opportunity if she will only avail herself of it.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf)

BEOS YOUR CLEARD. Don't allow a cold in the Head to Slowly and surely run into Catarrh when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 3 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS. Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind

Tenders

WILL be received up to Wednesday, June 1st, for the erection of a Brick School House at Flesherton Station, S. S. No 10. Plan and Specifications to be seen at R. H. Cook's.
Lowest tender not necessarily accepted.

JAMES McMILLEN,
Trustees R. H. COOK,
JAMES ASHEDOWNE.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W. M TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 85 to 0 85
Spring Wheat	0 85	0 85
Barley	0 00	0 00
Oats	0 25	0 25
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 12½	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 10	0 10
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 75	5 75
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	18	20
Sheepskins	0 40	0 56
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 35	0 35
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

TAMARAC ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY.
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
FOR ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
SENT ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton, Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

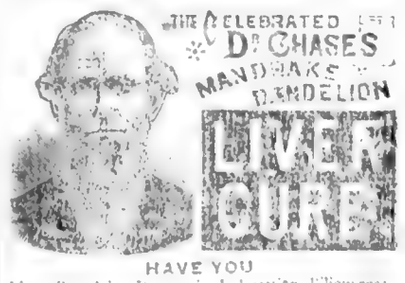
PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,
Photographer,
Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.



HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint is due only to the fact that it is compounded in accordance with how Liver regulates, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invigorating roots, herbs and barks, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500 000 SOLD

Over one half a million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada in one year. Is there any man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try it's excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (34 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA— Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

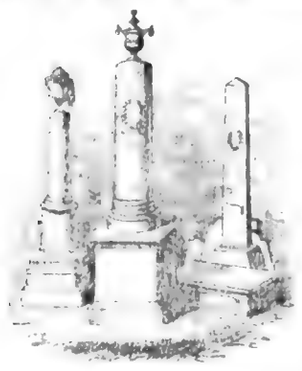
FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

And are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

40-39.

FARM for SALE

OR

TO RENT.

BEING Lot 170, Con. 1 West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Well watered. Orchard. About 2½ miles from Flesherton. For full particulars apply to the undersigned.

JOHN O'MELIA.
Flesherton.

FARM FOR SALE.

BEING Lot 158, 1st E.T. & S.R., Artemesia, one mile from Flesherton, containing 50 acres, all cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Never-failing stream of water runs across farm; also a never-failing spring of water. New bank barn 36x50, with stone stabling full size of barn, underneath Log House. Good soil and free from frost. Part payment down, time on balance. For full particulars, apply to

D. L. WHITE, Agt.,
Flesherton.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

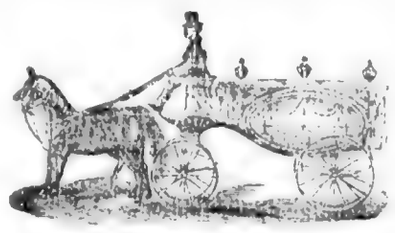
Cheap for Cash.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER, — THORNBURY



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, frame stable. Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

Ja mes Sulivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

Flesherton vs. Markdale.

A Rattling Game of Lacrosse Between the Above Teams.

Last Friday afternoon one of the hottest and most keenly contested Lacrosse matches we ever witnessed was played on the agricultural grounds, Flesherton, between the Markdale and Flesherton junior Lacrosse teams, resulting in a hard-earned victory for our home team.

The game commenced at 3.30 and lasted until 6.45 p. m. The Umpires were Messrs. Hill and Benson, for Markdale, and Messrs. Bates and Fawcett for Flesherton, with Mr. Stevens, of Markdale, as referee. Mr. J. Wilson, captained the Markdale juniors and Mr. Will. M. Sproule captained the home team. There was a fair sprinkling of spectators, who, of course, took a lively interest in the game. They always do. Sometimes their interest is too intense, however.

At 3.30 the ball was placed between the sticks, "Ready—play!" shouts the Referee and off they go—both teams cautiously measuring the strength of each other. Frank Sullivan was playing check to an equally sturdy young man from Markdale, Dinsmore, and the trials of skill—and strength!—between the two was amusing and sometimes very exciting. Once Dinsmore, while running ful tilt after the ball, suddenly came against Sullivan who adroitly got in one of those scientific "lurches" known only to players of the national game—and the former was shot up against the fence with such force as to hurl one of the boards from its place to the ground on the other side. Captains Wilson and Sproule indulged in some skillful fencing, both making dangerous goal shots. But it was reserved for our young fighting editor, John W. Field to make the first successful goal shot, which he did in a neat manner, thus scoring the first inning for Flesherton. Time ten minutes.

The second inning was a remarkably stubbornly contested one. The ball wavered around one goal, then took a wild harum-scarum trip around the field - East, West, North, South—then around the other goal, and then back to the place of commencement. In this inning the magnificent playing of Capt. Sproule undoubtedly the best player on the ground—was seen to good advantage, while the close goal shots by Capt. Wilson attracted general notice. But Willie Bellamy guarded the Flesherton goal in beautiful style. Matthews, the two Colmans, Blake Anderson and Tom Benson, of the visiting team, got in some smart clean work. Tumbles were of frequent occurance. Nobody minded them with you goal and victory in view. Wes. Armstrong was here, there and everywhere and made some of the finest shots of the day. Finally Tom Benson made a marvellously lucky goal shot and after an hour and twenty minutes of the hottest lacrosse work ever done in Flesherton, inning No. 2 wound up in favor of Markdale.

The third inning wound up somewhat abruptly. Mr. Benson claimed a goal shot for Markdale, but Mr. Bates objected. The Referee decided that the next inning should end the game both teams to be now considered as having won an equal number of innings. This decision was acceded to, and soon the clash of sticks told that the decisive encounter had commenced. A brilliant goal shot, at long field, by Wes. Armstrong, terminated this splendidly contested game in favor of Flesherton, after which both teams sat down to a fine spread at Munshaw's hotel, prepared by order of the home team.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices.

R. TRIMBLE. (tf.)

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent

Seeding operations with farmers is pretty well advanced and a few are about finished up.

We are glad to see Wm. Ferrier around again and seemingly none the worse of the dose of shot received two weeks ago. Thos. Blakely is at work again although his arm is somewhat sore from the gun shot.

Willie Long, one of the young men who went to Michigan some months ago has returned, having been sick for some time. We hope soon to see him in his usual good health.

Mr. Wm. Guy is again going strong into the bee business having lately purchased a number of hives.

Mrs. Richard Maxwell has been laid up very ill for some days.

Euphrasia.

SERIOUS RUNAWAY AT EPPING.

Last Saturday morning about ten o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Samuel McKnight and Miss McKnight, their daughter, met with a serious accident. It seems they had all got ready to go to Meaford, intending to make the journey in a democrat drawn by a span of young colts. Mrs. and Miss McKnight had got seated in the vehicle and Mr. McKnight was holding his colts by the heads before taking his place therein also when the colts became frightened and ran away, knocking him over into a waggon rack standing in the yard, and dashing on in the direction of a deep gully only a few rods distant. Before reaching the gully Mrs. McKnight jumped out of the vehicle and was seriously injured. Miss McKnight clung to her seat until thrown out down the gully, the democrat having capsized. Strange to say she escaped injury, but her mother was attended by two physicians on Sunday, having sustained very serious injuries. The rig was badly smashed but the horses were uninjured.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

31st Batt. Rifle Matches

Arrangements are being pushed forward for the annual matches of the 31st Batt. Rifle Association, which will take place in Meaford probably on June 9th. A very good prize list is being prepared and a successful meeting is anticipated. The matches will be: Regimental at 200, 400 and 500 yards; Extra Series at 200 yards, Team at 200, 400, 500 yards for the Cleland Challenge Cup and Civilians vs. Military at 200 and 400 yards, when a team from the 31st Batt. will meet a team of ten Civilians. Ammunition will be supplied at one cent a round. Among the donations to the prize fund so far received are $10 from Lieut. Col. Telford, Owen Sound, President of the association, and $5 from D. Creighton, M. P. P. Col. Telford, Lieut. J. B. McLean, Mail staff, Toronto, Sec.-Treas., or Capt. H. R. Cleland, Meaford, will be glad to receive further donations.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent

News scarce.

Mr. Clemis and his pupils spent a profitable time on Arbour day in cleaning up and beautifying the school grounds here.

The farmers are pretty well through with their seeding around here and nature seems to have come to life again with all its beauty.

The cheese factory is in running order to receive [illegible]. It is under the supervision of Mr. Cornet.

Mr. T. Talbot has placed a stone foundation under his barn.

Some of the Flesherton dress-makers has been making frequent visits around here recently and Maud is eagerly waiting for the result. MAUD.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

Manitoba.

"Winter lingers in the lap of spring. Sunshine and shower, frost and snow warm and cold, mud and dust—well, this is a fair sample of North West springs. Ontario need not fear "comparisment." This is the "merry month of May, but I cannot see where the "merry" comes in. Yes, we had some fine spring weather in March and April, but with the exception of early sowing of spring wheat, I think almost if not quite all other kinds of grain, garden seeds, potatoes &c., are awaiting favorable weather for planting.

Compositor, in one of my articles recently, made me say "Western affairs" &c. instead of "WEATHER affair," are not done by halves in the North West &c. I don't think Ontarians would like those everlasting (?) prairie winds, especially in cold weather.

"But there went up a mist from the earth which water the face of the whole ground." Genesis, 11 chap. 6 verse. Draughts are not so very injurious to vegetation in this country, where so little rain falls, because the earth freezes by the intense cold, four, to six feet deep, solid! Soon as the surface is thawed a few inches, by the warm, drying sun, seeding is attended to, and as the frost slowly melts underneath, there ascends a "mist," or dampness generally sufficient to nourish the farmers crops in the dryest times. In consequence of and other hindrances, I don't expect to be able to write but little more for public information. Perhaps a more competent correspondent will be found who will take my place. It is but seldom I feel a brief period of anything like ease. However, having noticed that you were being neglected in the matter of "Spring poetry" and feeling somewhat easier at present, I will try and console you a little. Wishing as ever prosperity to The Advance, prosperity to your readers, and peace and prosperity to the whole Dominion of Canada, "my own and native land."

CONTINUED ILL HEALTH

Explanatory remarks. The following appeared in the Nor' West Farmer (Winnipeg) copied from The American Poultry Journal, and thinking it better than a dose of physic for the Dyspepsia I copied it for The Advance, also composed another for amusement of your readers.

"THE CHICKEN'S SOLILOQUY."

"Turn backward, turn backward, oh time in your flight,
Make me an egg again, smooth, clean and white,
I'm homesick and lonely, and life's but a care:
I'm a poor chicken born in a "Hatching Machine."
Compelled in this cold world to roam
No mother to shelter, no place to call Home
No mother to teach me to scratch or to cluck,
I can hardly tell whether I'm chicken or duck."

ANOTHER CHICKEN'S SOLILOQUY

Original.

Go forward, not "backward, oh time in your flight,
Don't "make me an egg again, smooth, clean and white,"
Nor think me "chicken hearted," soft shell, or green,
Because I was born in a "Hatching Machine."

I tell you I'm glad, and think I'm in luck,
By having no mother to scold me or cluck
And say, "now come this way, you must not that,
And if I don't mind her, well, "hit me a spat

Bless the hatching machine, now I've my own way,
I'm not told to scratch for my food among clay
So I run about singing, enjoying the good,
For MAN is my servant, and he gives the food

No foolish old rooster, no silly old hen,
To make me afraid of hawks, foxes, bat what
Yes, there they are coming, I know what the mean,
Oh for a HEN Mother, blame the Hatching M[illegible]

Winnipeg May, 1887. WM. PURDY

P. S.—Domestic fowls of various kind do exceedingly well in this country. But great care is required to keep them from freezing to death in the winter. However, about thirty varieties of wild fowl and birds, remain here during the winter season. Thaws, rain, or sleet seldom occurs, consequently the atmosphere is dry and exhilarating. W. P.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the li[illegible]. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made especially for Liver and Kidney diseases and [illegible] centred here. Re[illegible] our name [illegible]. Sold by all dea[illegible]

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY positively cures for Catarrh, Diphtheria, Canker, Cough, Sold at Medical Hall.

HACKMETACK, a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp disease, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal. Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff. - Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain. — William L. Page, Richmond Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.,
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

MAURITIUS, 1886.

Essay on the Colonial and Indian Exhibition.

(By Thomas C. Watkins.)

This island, with the adjacent island of Bourbon, was discovered by the Portuguese under the command of Mascarenhas in 1505, and they were named the Mascarenhas Islands; but though the Portuguese took possession of the Mauritius in 1545, they appear not to have formed any settlement on it. The Dutch took possession of and surveyed it in 1598, and called it Mauritius, in honor of Maurice, Stadtholder of the Republic of the Netherlands. They did not settle there, however, until they had established a settlement at the Cape in 1640, about which time they founded a settlement on this island also. They abandoned their hold of it in 1708. From which time until 1715 it was inhabited only by a few negroes, who had been brought there as slaves, and had run away from their masters and had concealed themselves in the forests on the mountains. The French took possession of the island in 1715, founded a settlement at Port West, and named the island Isle de France. They held undisturbed possession of it until 1810, when it was taken from them by the British, to whom it was allotted as a permanent possession by the Congress of the Representatives of Europe, when they conferred the sovereignty of Elba on Napoleon Bonaparte, making him Emperor of a pretty island in the Danube, who was used to have the mightiest sovereigns of Europe to tremble at his frown—to accept their kingdoms or their empires from him on whatever conditions le Grande Monarche wished to impose. The British gave the island its former Dutch name of Mauritius. It is situated in the Indian Ocean, between 19° 45 min. and 20° 33 min. south latitude and 56° and 57° east longitude. From north to south (that is from Cap Malheureaux to the Bay of Lemon) its length is about thirty-six miles, and its extreme width from Point du Diable to the northern extremity of the Plaine aux Sables (or Plain of Sands) is nearly twenty-seven miles, though the general width is not much over eighteen miles. The circumference is about 124 miles. It is nearly of equal extent with the county of Worcester, the area being about 700 square miles. It is surrounded by a coral reef, running nearly parallel to the shores at from one to two furlongs therefrom. These shoals are mostly dry at low water. There are eleven gaps in these reefs, and ships of moderate burden can sail through the most of these breaks on up to the shore in high water. The water between the reefs and the shores being less affected by storms, being much smoother than the sea, affords easy communication all round the coast, which is a very important matter to the inhabitants, as the shore is very steep in many places and rises suddenly to a considerable elevation quite close to the water's edge, which is especially the case along the western coast. Along the eastern coast the surface in general is pretty level from Port Souillac to Grand Port, and from the latter to Port Louis, except just in close proximity to each of those places.

THE INTERIOR OF THE ISLAND

is very rough and uneven, rising frequently into lofty isolated hills, except between Cape Brabant and Port Souillac, where the hills form a chain, which runs from Mount Peter Botte to Carmoniere Point. Some of the hills tower aloft to a considerable height, especially the Brabant Mountains near Cape Brabant, and the Bamboo ridge near Grand Port, which rise to about 3,000 feet above the level of the surrounding sea. The origin of the island is undoubtedly volcanic, as shown by the irregularity of the surface and the presence of lava, pumice stone and other productions of volcanic force. In the mountains at the back of Port Souillac and Grand Port there is a small lake, which is thought to have been the crater of an extinct volcano. There are large numbers of loose rocks covering the ground, from the size of a cricket ball up to more than a ton weight, which are riddled with small holes. The soil is shallow and very dry, owing to the great drought which prevails, making the land rather barren and unfruitful. The soil consists chiefly of a lumpy reddish mould, which appears to be impregnated with oxide of iron, which on pressure crumbles to dust in a person's hand. The rainy season lasts from November to March or April. The rain pours down in torrents for several hours, accompanied by thunder and lightning. Hurricanes as terrific as those of the West Indies visit the island sometimes during the rainy season. These storms do not occur with regularity, but only once in from one to five years. During this season the wind changes frequently, and sometimes makes the tour of the horizon in a short time. In the dry season the wind generally blows from the southeast. It is strong during the day, but calm in the night. During June, July and August showers are frequent, but they last only a short time. The island is traversed by numerous water courses, which flow down in all directions from their common centres; but they are only filled during the rainy season, when they form numerous cataracts, and wear deep gullies down the sides of the mountains. During the dry season the rain is soon evaporated by the heat of the sun. The mean annual temperature is about 76° Fahrenheit. The annual rainfall may be set down at an average of thirty-eight to forty inches. The island was formerly covered with forests, and even now large wooded districts remain as ornaments around the plantations; and the hill country is covered with trees, but there is no timber suitable for shipbuilding. The ebony wood is inferior in quality, but the iron wood and red wood are valuable. The sago and cocoanut palms are common, as are also tamarind trees, mangroves and bamboos. Yams, cassava or manioc, which was imported from South America, and Indian corn, are cultivated as articles of food, as well as plantains, bananas and melons, also several European vegetables, as asparagus, spinach, artichokes, cabbages and peas. Wheat and rice are raised in small quantities, and both articles are imported; also wheat from the Cape of Good Hope and rice from Madagascar. They also cultivate mangoes, shaddocks and pine-apples. Oranges, grapes, peaches and apples do not do well, and their qualities are inferior. The French introduced the spice-trees of the Indian Islands, but they did not succeed well; even the pepper-vine remained barren; the clove was the only spice which succeeded. They cultivated the sugar-cane, indigo, coffee and cotton, but since the British took possession of the island all these branches of agriculture are almost abandoned, with the exception of sugar, the cultivation of which has increased rapidly. In 1830 more than 720,000 hundred weights were exported, and the business was prosperous until lately, when over-production over the world reduced the prices of sugars to about one-fourth of their value thirty years ago. There are very few horses, as they are not bred in the island to any extent.

MULES AND ASSES

are more numerous, and are used principally for the saddle, being more sure-footed in that rough and stony soil, where, in common with most Asiatics, their roads are to a considerable extent in quite a primitive state, not much better than bridle paths. Black cattle are scarce, for want of good pasture, as it does not pay to keep them and import fodder for them. Cattle are imported in great quantities from Madagascar; goats and sheep are kept in large numbers; hogs are very numerous, and form a large portion of the food of the people. The forests are the home of a considerable number of wild hogs and deer. Fish abound along the coast; the turtle has almost entirely disappeared from the island, but large numbers of them frequent the small sandy islets situated to the northwest of Mauritius, and afford a home to an abundance of fine large ones, which deposit their eggs in the sand of those islets, where they are hatched out by the warmth of the sun. There are enormous quantities of rats, locusts and ants, which are very destructive to the crops and to the produce in the storehouses. The population amounts to about 100,000; of which number 75,000 were negro slaves, or their descendants, originally brought from Madagascar and the eastern coast of Africa. The balance of 25,000 consist of over 15,000 colored inhabitants, amongst whom are Malays, fishermen from the coast of Malabar, Lascars and Chinese. The latter were brought over by the planters, and employed in the cultivation of the sugar cane, instead of the negroes, when the last-named were slaves. The number of whites amount to about 9,000 individuals, the greater part of whom are descendants of French families, whose progenitors settled there when the island was a French colony, and they still speak the French language. Port Louis, the capital and only town of the island, is situated near the northwestern extremity, on a small bay called Port Northwest, or Port Louis. This bay is a narrow inlet of the sea, a little over a mile in length, and about 500 yards wide. A reef runs out from its mouth, passing close to a small island called Tounelier Island, which is a coral rock, near which ships usually anchor, as the wind blows out of the harbor constantly. The harbor is sufficiently capacious for a dozen men-of-war and fifty merchant ships, and, during the fine season, perfectly safe. The capital (Port Louis) is situated at the extreme southwestern corner of the bay. The streets are straight, but not paved; the principal street runs parallel to the shore of the bay. The houses are built of wood, with only one floor. The town contains 26,000 inhabitants, of whom 1,570 were formerly slaves, or are the descendants of slaves; there are about 4,000 whites, and they represent various Oriental nationalities; one of the suburbs about 3,000 Malabar fishermen; and another nearly 7,500 negroes. There is a library containing over 60,000 volumes, mostly French books; a good botanical garden, and docks for the repair of vessels. Port Grand is situated on the windward coast, although large, the entrance being narrowed by several shoals. It can only be entered or left during a fair wind, by sailing vessels, as it is impossible to tack; therefore it is not much frequented except by steamers occasionally. Mauritius has commercial relations with Surat, Batavia, Bombay, Muscat, the Persian and Arabian Gulfs, the western coast of Africa, the Cape and Madagascar, but a large proportion of its produce goes to England. Sugar, coffee, cloves, indigo and some timber are exported to England; and in return the colony receives silk, woolen and cotton fabrics, wine, oil, hats, iron and steel utensils, and several articles of commerce. Arabia and Persia are supplied with sugar from Mauritius, and send back in return dried fruits and a few other articles. Madagascar sends her cattle and rice to Mauritius, and receives in return manufactured goods. Mauritius and its dependent small islands are distinguished for their

VALUABLE TIMBER,

which is much used for ship and house building and for making agricultural implements and all such articles as require great strength and toughness. The Tatamaca blanc is a large tree, with tough, curly grained wood; the seeds yield a valuable oil, and the gum that issues from the trunk is the tatamaca resin of commerce. The Colophane Botard is a small tree about twenty feet in height, the wood of which is used largely for palisades, and rafters in building shanties, and in fencing gardens, lawns, etc. The Bois de Nefle is a middle-sized tree, the timber of which planks, flooring and the boards for the insides of houses are made. It will not bear moisture. The Mokak is a tree which attains a large size, the wood is hard, durable, smooth, dark colored, takes an excellent polish and is very much used for shingles, frames of houses, boards for flooring, ship building, cabinet ware, etc. The Jamposa tree has strong, tough, elastic wood, resembling British ash in color and grain. It is used for handles of tools and for making charcoal. It is a small tree. The Bois Loustean is a small tree, the timber of which is used for palisades, and small timbers in house and shanty building. The Bois Colophane attains a great size, often measuring six feet in diameter. Canoes are frequently hollowed out of its trunk. Cinnamom is a small tree, the timber of which is little used. It is yellow, close grained, and the roots yield an excellent yellow dye. The Gayavier fleur arbre is an ornamental tree, very beautiful in appearance. The timber is tough and very durable under water. It is much used by the natives for building purposes, and for boat building, and in the manufacture of gun carriages, in felloes and hubs for carts, waggons and carriages, binders, ammunition box boards, etc. It is prized for fittings in boats, hulls of canoes, house posts, planking, beams and various other uses. The Bois Canelle is a middle-sized tree, the wood is even-grained, smooth, dark colored, finely veined, polishes well and is much prized by cabinet makers. The Bois Sandal is a large tree, highly valued by turners, house carpenters and wheelwrights; it takes a fine polish and is odoriferous, resembling sandalwood. The Sang Dragon is a large tree, very handsome, the timber is red, very valuable and beautiful. It is used for gun carriages, furniture and musical instruments. The Bois d'ebene tree yields the best kind of ebony, which usually turns black, but is sometimes streaked with yellow or brown. It is very heavy, close and even grained, and takes a high polish. It is used for inlaying, ornamental turnery and sometimes for furniture, canes, etc. The Bois noir, la graine rouge, is a large tree, the timber of which when first cut resembles the red sandals, has a strong, pleasant smell, is stiff, hard, strong, durable, tolerably coarse and even grained, takes a good polish, is of a beautiful red color, with streaks of a darker shade, which turn purple and resemble rosewood. The Lilas de l'Inde is a charming ornamental tree. The wood of the older trees is handsomely marked. It is rather durable and is used for furniture. There were specimens of seventy varieties of different species of trees shown in the court of Mauritius, most of which were very useful for the numerous purposes of

CIVILIZED AND BARBAROUS LIFE.

In the Botanical Gardens there was a most magnificent display of the flora and other productions of that far-off land. A great variety of plants, the fibres of which are used for making cloth and ropes, were exhibited. Tobacco, soap, cocoanuts, paper pulp made of megasse (a native fibre), india rubber tree, gum and a variety of articles made of the rubber, gutta-percha, fine samples of wheat, arrowroot, manioc flour, banana flour, sweet potatoes, cloves, starch, vanilla, coffee, nutmegs, mace, jams and jellies, eau-de-cologne, ink, sugars of various kinds and qualities, syrup, mineral waters, turtle oil, cinchona and other barks in different stages of preparation. A collection of minerals, plants, natural history, skeletons of the dodo bird, stuffed specimens of the fauna of the island, stags' heads, ostrich feathers and eggs, emu eggs and feathers, tortoise shell, coco-de-mer, shrimps, shells, ornamental seeds, Job's tears and bois noir-rouge. Rum and other liquors were also exhibited, as if to show the world that not one, even of the most remote colonies of Britain, has escaped the foul stigma of licensing the lazy and cruel part of their people to prey upon the young and inexperienced portion there and, like the vampires, they suck their blood in the night, entice them into their saloons, treat them to their distilled damnation, fire their brains with madness, imbrute them; yea, degrade them lower than the brutes—take their last dollar and send them off to beat their wives and children; to steal, to murder, to fill our jails, our penitentiaries, our lunatic asylums, to go to the gallows; to fill our cemeteries with drunkards' graves and to fill hell with their victims. O, that the numberless army of drunkards and those who only drink for company's sake, but are constantly, yet even to themselves imperceptibly, creating an appetite, a burning thirst, which, if they do not flee from the drunkard's haunts, will soon sink them into misery, shame, disgrace, early death, a drunkard's grave and eternal woe; O, that they, together with those who entice them to drink, may soon have their eyes opened to see the fearful precipice on the brink of which they are standing with unsteady steps, and resolve, in the name of God and by His strength, that they will never touch, taste, handle, buy or sell the accursed thing any more during their futures lives, and earnestly and conscientiously keep their pledge for the rest of their days.

THE SCYCHELLES ISLANDS,

which probably are not very well known by many, are an important appendage to Mauritius. The group is situated in the Eastern seas, a few degrees south of the equator, in latitude 3 degrees 31 minutes to 5 degrees 45 minutes south, and in longitude 53 degrees 15 minutes to 56 degrees 10 minutes east. They are exceedingly fertile, and possess great natural beauty. They were discovered by the Portuguese, afterwards the French held possession of them until 1814, when they were ceded to Great Britain by the Congress of Paris. They now form a very interesting portion of Her Majesty's vast possessions in the East. An interesting account of these islands has been published by Mr. Estridge entitled "Six years in Scychelles," where he resided at Mahe, the chief of the group. He has labored hard to gather together the chief objects of interest found in these islands, comprising many scarcely ever suspected to have existed there. Amongst the numerous articles placed on exhibition by this gentleman are specimens of the fruit of the coco-de-mer (a species of palm tree which grows only in these islands), and include a rare exhibition of that product in its treble development, and also some eccentric growths of the common cocoanut. There are also examples of the curious insect called the "walking leaf," of the Mille Patte, or thousand footed worm, and of a variety of scorpions, frogs and snakes. There were a large number of skinned and stuffed fish, amongst which were some very singular crabs, raytails and star fish There was a singular looking hawk, of which even the British museum, in the immensity of its collections, cannot boast of a representative. Some fine or enormous bats, were unique in appearance. The geological formations of the islands were represented by good specimens of black and amethystine quartz, nactrite and other stone. A charming specimen of a coral garden was also exhibited. Several handsome sketches of fruits, flowers, etc., were very interesting. There was a large variety of specimens of timbers, tobacco, soap, vanilla, cloves, gum kin co coa beans, kapok, chocolate, essential oils, dried papaw juice, raphia seed, leaf and tree.

FLYING FOXES,

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS AND PROTECTED MALAY STATES.

This little colony includes the island of Singapore, situated to the south of the Malay Peninsula; Penang, an island now known as Prince of Wales Island, on the west coast of that peninsula, and a strip of land opposite, named Province Wellesley; the Dindings, another group of islands with a piece of land along the coast of the mainland to the south of Penang; and Malacca, lying between the Dindings and Singapore. Singapore has an area of 206 square miles, Penang 107, Province Wellesley 207, Malacca 659, the Dindings, including the Island of Pankor, about 206 square miles. Malacca was taken possession of by the Portuguese in 1511, and remained in their hands until 1641, when it was taken by the Netherlands and held by them until 1795, when it fell under the power of Great Britain, but it was restored to the Dutch in 1818 by a treaty with Holland, dated March 17th, 1824. Malacca was again ceded to Great Britain in exchange for Bencoolen in Sumatra, when it was stipulated that the British should not attempt to form any settlement in Sumatra, nor the Dutch in the Malay peninsula. Penang was ceded to Great Britain in 1785 by the Rajah of Kedah. Province Wellesley was also acquired from the Rajah a few years later to enable the authorities to put down the prevailing piracy which caused great havoc amongst the European merchantmen. This latter territory is bounded by the Muda River, and by a line ten miles south of the Kryan River. Penang was the seat of Government of the Straits Settlements until 1832, since which date it has been carried on at Singapore. The Dindings were ceded to the colony by treaty in 1874. The chief productions of the peninsula consist of tin, sugar, spices, rice, tapioca, sago, hides, horns, gum, coffee, tobacco, but several of these productions are purchased from their neighbors, and are not grown in the colony. Trade is increasing fast, as will be evident by a comparison of the united imports and exports of the years 1859-60 and 1884. These were: Singapore in the former period, £10,371,300; in the latter year, £25,931,930; Penang, £3,530,000 against £12,066,267 in 1884, and Malacca's trade was £928,000 in the former year and £1,079,612 in the latter, making the united volume of trade for the whole colony £14,829,300 in 1859-60 and £39,077,809 in 1884. The Straits ports are entirely free from import and export duties. The total population in 1881 was 423,384 against 307,957 in 1871 and 273,000 in 1866. The nationalities were greatly mixed as follows: Singapore had 2,769 Europeans, 22,155 Malays, 86,766 Chinese and 12,058 natives of India. Penang was represented by 612 Europeans, 21,772 Malays, 45,135 Chinese and 15,730 natives of India. Province Wellesley had 76 Europeans, 58,723 Malays, 21,637 Chinese and 10,616 natives of India. The nationalities in Malacca were 40 Europeans, 67,513 Malays, 19,741 Chinese and 1,891 natives of India. Dindings had only two Europeans, 1,847 Malays, 466 Chinese and 37 natives of India.

THE REVENUE OF THE COLONY

is derived from land licenses, stamp duties, judicial fines, etc. The total revenue in 1868 was £276,612, and the expenditure £254,391. In 1884 the revenue had risen to £629,921, and the expenditure to £580,147. The colony has important political relations with the neighboring Malay countries, three of which are under British protection, and have contributed their respective shares to this great exhibition of Britain's offspring from every climate, from every country. The three protected States are Perak, Selangor and Sungai Ujong, which extend from the border of Province Wellesley to that of Malacca. They are governed by their native rulers, acting with the advice and aid of a British Resident, who is appointed by the British Government, and is under the control of the Governor of the Straits Settlements. Each State has its staff of European and native officers. Of the three States, Perak, with an extent of 7,949 square miles of territory, and a population of 118,000 people, is the most important. A Resident was appointed to Perak in 1874, under the Treaty of Pankro, and the State has made rapid progress since. The revenue has risen from £64,728 in 1877 to £238,749 in 1884; life and property are secure; a railway connecting Theripeng (the chief town) with the sea and a complete system of roads and telegraph lines have been constructed, bringing the different parts of the State, which previous to 1874 were only connected by rivers, into close intercommunication. Mining is the chief industry of the State. Agriculture has not been much developed yet. The soil is rich, and suitable for the production of nearly all kinds of tropical plants, and only requires capital to make it yield abundantly. Tapioca, pepper, rice, sugar, coffee and tea have all been successfully grown. Liberal land laws have been made by the State Government. Amongst the exhibits sent by this State is a full-sized Malay house, which has been erected in the Exhibition by Malay carpenters, and is built and furnished entirely with materials sent for the purpose, and in accordance with native customs. The State of Selangor comprises about 3,000 square miles. It lies south of Perak, the dividing line between them being the Barnam River. This State is chiefly dependent upon tin mining for prosperity, though small plantations of coffee, cacao and pepper have been established, and are doing well in many parts of the State. A railway twenty-two miles long connects Kwala Lumpor, the capital, with the sea. The revenue of 1876 was £32,246, and that of 1883 amounted to £75,110. The State contains a population of 46,568 persons. The area of Sungai Ujong is 660 square miles. It is situated to the south of Selangor, and northwest of Malacca. The population consists of about 14,000 people, and the revenue in 1884 was £20,196. Mining was largely carried on formerly, but for the last few years agricultural pursuits have taken the place of mining to a large extent; Arabian coffee and cinchona are grown extensively on the hills, and tapioca, Liberian coffee, cacao and pepper in the lowlands, are successfully cultivated. This colony and the Protected States made a most interesting exhibit of their various products, a few of which we name below: Model of a street in Singapore, model of a sea, with a native craft on it, model of a Chinese temple, models of native boats, a curious collection of native weapons, fishing apparatus, etc., musical instruments, a full sized jinricksha with a coolie to draw it. Opium smoking implements, blow tubes, with spears and shields attached, quiver containing poisoned darts used by the aborigines, or with tribes of the Malay Peninsula.

COUNTERFEITING INSTRUMENTS USED BY THE CHINESE

in Singapore for counterfeiting coin, water colors and drawings of fruits indigenous to the colony. Chinese state presentation umbrella. Photographs of scenery in the Straits settlements. Models of animals used by Chinese in lotteries, coins, bank notes and tokens now used in Penang. Albums representing Penang scenery and native life. Musical instruments used by aboriginal tribes of Malacca, model of a Malay Raja's state house, with figures showing wedding ceremony in progress. Collections of old and modern measures. Books on the meteorology of the Straits Settlements, native drugs, English and Malay vocabulary books printed and published in Singapore. Chinese drugs, native medicinal roots. Model of a Malay Rajah's reception house, with automaton figures showing wedding ceremony in progress, models of Malay household utensils, toys, games, etc., comprising 200 specimens; models of Malay houses with walls of bertram work, of nipah palm and of bamboo; carved wood work for doorway of Malay house, Malay bed hangings, Chinese bed and hangings; rattan articles in domestic use; model of Malacca house, models of Chinese furniture comprising forty eight different kinds of articles, 288 specimens of articles for domestic use, and toys and games; Chinese gold thread, scarfs used on great occasions; full dresses and ordinary dresses worn by Arabs and Chinese in this colony. Collections of indigenous fish, pheasants, snakes, butterflies, reptiles, fishing apparatus, sixty specimens of stuffed animals and birds, 68 bottles of preserved fish and reptiles; agricultural implements, thatches, gutta percha, timbers, spices, dried plants, sheets, seeds, gums, cordage, gambier and rattan, bertram plait work, Malacca walking sticks; food products, condiments, preserved fruits, sugar, tea, padi or rice, arrowroot, cocoanut, palm sugar, cigars and cigarettes, sago, honey, beetle nut varnish, essential oils, hair dye fibre, bark for tanning, bricks, indigo, mangroves, tiles, tin ore, plumbago and limestone, Malay and aboriginal weapons, Chinese and Malay weights and measures, resins, coffee, buffalo baskets or paniers, buffalo bells and carts, Malay elephant goads, baskets, hoods and bells, ferns, Malay river boats and bamboo rafts, Malay dwelling houses, snares and traps, Malay dresses of silk and gold thread; looms and spinning appliances, bees' wax, edible birds' nests, pottery, Malay silverware and weapons, gold bearing tin sand, Malay fishing boats and native tools, native foot balls, spurs used by Malays in cock-fighting, poisoned arrows and quivers used by the Sakeis, curtains made of attap leaves, model of a Sakei house, native hats, cloth made of bark by the Sakeis, sleeping mats, sandals, gold and tin ornaments, elephant's head shot in Selangor, bison's head from Malay, sweetmeats, sugar cane juice, tin, shells, bat guano, water wheel, drugs, cinchona bark, rum and spirits. Alas! alas! Rum, spirits, alcohol, introduced everywhere Britain's sons plant their feet. Could the British nation see the fearful crimes they are the direct authors of? Could they see the raving maniacs in our insane asylums? Could they see the ragged, starving children, the miserable, gaunt, thinly-clad, heart-broken wives, the bright eyes of youth dull and sunken in their sockets, the hopeful, brave spirits of early wedded life crushed to death and buried in the deepest anguish, misery and woe, the imbruted husband, in early days of his accelerated fall, enticed into the taverns and saloons to drink that distilled damnation which at first elevates man and makes him feel rich and great, but a deeper draught drowns his reason, corrupts his mind, implants disease in his system, makes him cruel to his wretched wife and children, to whom he is a terror? Turned out of every bar-room, ordered away from every saloon, the wretched victim of intemperance goes home and takes the last chair, the last morsel of food, even the last blanket, and leaves his miserable wife and children to perish with hunger and cold, while he goes forth to pledge the last remnant of comfort which he has just stolen or torn away from his broken-hearted wife to the saloon or hotel keeper for the accursed poison, which is fast sinking him into his grave—the dark, hopeless, drunkard's grave. Every glass of alcoholic liquor which a man or woman drinks has an influence to lead them to desire more when the excitement caused by that glass dies away—hence the danger of taking the first glass. With the brightest and most gifted the descent from position, rank and respectability is frequently very rapid, and often ending in degradation and infamy. The once happy wife, murdered by inches, dies and leaves helpless orphans to be cared for by the charitable, or to become the thieves and vagabonds and prostitutes of society. The wretched father, only the semblance of a man, craving for whiskey, commits theft to get money to buy the poison, is arrested and goes to jail, where he dies, the wretched victim of the saloon-keeper.

The only woman cab driver in England has just died. Visitors to Epping Forest will recall, as one of the peculiar institutions of that vicinity, the female Jehu, who for many years wore conspicuously the badge of a driver, and held the reins in skilful competition with the men, who, no doubt, vociferously denounced at cab stands and railway stations this demonstration of a woman's rights.

The Naval Lifeboat Board, of London, report that none of the models submitted are suitable as lifeboats for men-of-war.

A gentleman coming down Chenneville street, Montreal, between 10 and 11 o'clock last night witnessed one of the saddest scenes he ever saw. He met an aged woman with a crying baby in her arms, and followed by a little girl who carried a pillow on her head. On inquiring where they were going, the gentleman was informed that the old woman was the grandmother of the two children and was taking the baby to its mother, her daughter, who had been arrested for drunkenness and placed in the cells of the St. George street police station. The little girl had taken a pillow to lay the unfortunate baby on in the cell. It appears that the wretched mother had been out of jail only a few days.

THE NANAIMO CALAMITY.

Scarcely Any Hope of Saving the Imprisoned Miners.

AGONIZING SCENES ABOVE GROUND.

A Hundred and Fifty Miners at the Bottom of the British Columbia Mine —No Hope of Safety—Heart-Rending Scenes.

A Nanaimo, B. C., despatch says: A terrible explosion of gas took place on Tuesday evening in the No. 1 shaft of the Vancouver Coal Company's mines, in which there were upwards of one hundred and fifty miners at the time. The first intimation those on the surface had of the explosion was a terrific shock, followed by an outburst of thick black smoke through the air shaft. This was quickly followed by a second one stronger than the first, carrying pieces of wood, miners' lamps, etc., hundreds of feet into the air. In a few minutes flames commenced to issue through the air shaft with a loud, roaring noise. In a short time the fanhouse caught fire and was quickly consumed. In the meantime nine white men and four Chinese were brought out through the hoisting shaft. Rescuing parties attempted to reach the entombed men, but have been unable to rescue more than fifteen up to this hour. The rescuers were overcome with the after-damp and had to be rescued themselves by others. Sam Hudson, one of the rescuing party, succumbed to the effects of the deadly after-damp. The scene around the shaft head is most heartrending, the air being filled with the lamentations of the friends of those imprisoned below looking for the missing. At this hour, 2 p.m., but little hopes are entertained for the safety of the imprisoned men. The fire is still raging, but it is thought it will soon be got under control. The rescuing party will again attempt to go below.

Our Ottawa correspondent telegraphs this (Thursday) afternoon: Mr. Gordon, M.P., British Columbia, represents the district where the explosion took place at Vancouver Coal Company's mines. Every miner in the pit, he tells me, was a personal friend of his own, and consequently he feels very ill over the calamity. The mine belonged to an English company and was worked by a perpendicular shaft. Two small explosions took place at this mine before. There were also several casualties. It is understood that the Davy lamp only is to be used but as miners can see better and consequently do more work with a naked light, it is just quite possible that some Chinaman disregarded the rules and caused the explosion. Gibson, the underground manager, who had so narrow an escape, was Mayor of Vancouver. The explosion evidently took place in the air shaft, thus destroying the van, so that no pure air could be sent into the mine. Gordon has telegraphed for further particulars.

Latest Particulars.

A despatch from Nanaimo, B.C., this afternoon, says: Jules Michael, who was injured in the explosion in No. 1 shaft of the Vancouver Coal Co.'s mine, says he was sitting in the cabin at supper in No. 2 shaft when he felt the concussion. All scrambled out, but became insensible, and only one was saved of his four companions whose dead bodies came up in the cage with him. Several could hardly appreciate their miraculous escape, owing to the dazed feeling which all felt who came out from the deadly pit. He represents the explosion as having been terrific. Everything became dark at once. John Lynch, who was badly injured about the face and head, and had his hip fractured, has been demented ever since the explosion occurred. His talk is about work in the pit. It is thought he will not recover, having inhaled gas. The others were not injured seriously, though all were badly shaken up. Samuel Hudson's heroic death is unaccountable. He was a miner of great experience, while those who went down with him to rescue their fellows were comparatively inexperienced. He died from the effects of after damp. His brave deed was one of the bright things in the carnival of misery. All day yesterday gangs of men endeavored to extinguish the flames in No. 1 shaft, and it is believed the fire is under control. The Merryweather steam fire engine did good work in pumping water from the harbor down the air shaft. It is absolutely impossible to think of getting at the imprisoned men until the fire is subdued. There is danger of the gas being driven into the fire and a second explosion. Even now fears are entertained that the whole place will be blown up. If it should occur the catastrophe would be the greatest recorded in the history of coal mining.

All hope of rescuing any one in the mines has been abandoned. It was proposed to cut a ditch to the salt water so as to attempt to put out the fire in No. 2 shaft by turning a stream of water into it, but the scheme was abandoned. The mines extend out from the shore more than a mile beneath the waters of the harbor, and as one looks over the waves it is hard to imagine that beneath are imprisoned many dead fathers and sons of this city.

AROUND THE SHAFT THE SCENES ARE HARROWING IN THE EXTREME.

Mr. Ridene and Mr. Scott, of the Wellington mines, went down yesterday afternoon, at the risk of their lives, in an endeavor to make an investigation as to the manner of procedure. Mr. Chandler, of the Wellington mines, has been indefatigable in his efforts to assist in the work of rescue. Several physicians are in attendance tendering all the assistance in their power. The business houses are closed. The collieries are shut up and the entire population is gathering at the scene of the disaster. Wives, terror stricken, crying children and sorrowing fathers hover in the vicinity and mourn their terrible affliction. Occasional showers of rain cast a dreariness over the ghastly scene.

The imprisoned miners were all old settlers, their faces were familiar on the streets, and there will be a void in many homes. The cause of the explosion is unknown. It is generally supposed to have been an explosion of coal dust. The tale will probably never be told.

A last (Friday) night's Nanaimo, B. C., despatch says: One more body has been brought up, that of Andrew Hunter, mule driver on No. 1 level. Six other bodies were seen there. Scott, of Wellington, has been carried out and is doing well. Samuel Hudson was buried at 3 p. m. by Rev. Mr. Good, the Odd-fellows and the Masons performing the ceremonies. There is no hope of saving any more of the men.

This is the saddest day ever known in the history of British Columbia. There are very few people in the city that have not lost relatives or friends. One lady lost husband, father and brother, and is frantic with grief. All she wishes now is to see her dead husband's face once more. He was to have taken a holiday that day and gone off bicycle riding, but being a rainy day he postponed his pleasure trip and went down into the fatal pit, never to return alive. One gentleman from Victoria has five brothers, a brother-in-law and an uncle imprisoned in the mine by the deadly gas.

There are 101 white men and 50 Chinese still in the mine. Forty-seven of the whites are married men with families. Some of the young wives with small children are frantic with grief, standing around the mouth of the fatal shaft. Others are dazed with weary watching and tears, silently watching the cage ascending from the depths below, where their dear ones are. Dense volumes of smoke continue to ascend from this shaft. A large gang of men, principally sailors, are down this shaft fighting the fire with desperation. It is hoped the fire will soon be under control. One thousand five hundred feet more fire hose are being sent by special train from Victoria, which will be let down the cage shaft and salt water pumped down. The bodies of William Campbell and Michael Lyons were recovered to-day horribly mangled. The latter was discovered 700 yards from the shaft. Other bodies were seen a little further in, but could not be reached. The men are working in four hour shifts. All posible is being done. It would be madness to penetrate the mine, as another explosion might occur. The mine extends for miles under the harbor, and looking at the peaceful water it is difficult to imagine the frightful catastrophe enacted a few hundred feet below. The worst has yet to come, when the bodies are brought up. People do not yet realize the dreadful catastrophe that has blighted the city. The mouth of the shaft is eagerly watched hour after hour by an eager crowd of men, women and children, Chinese and Indians, all too terrified to talk above whispers. Relief is much needed and cannot come too soon, as the destitution will be terrible. Many of the men leave large families, who have not the necessaries of life.

The Ladies' Favorite.

The newest fashion in ladies' hats will doubtless cause a flutter of pleasurable excitement among the fair sex. Ladies are always susceptible to the changes of a fashion plate, and the more startling the departure, the more earnest the gossip over the new mode. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for the ills which afflict females and make their lives miserable. This sovereign panacea can be relied on in cases of displacements and all functional derangements. It builds up the poor, haggard and dragged-out victim, and gives her renewed hope and a fresh lease of life. It is the only medicine for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. Read printed guarantee on bottle wrapper.

Modern Newspaper Regulations.

Editor—Your spring poems have not been printed, sir, because you did not comply with our regulations.

Spring poet—May I ask where I failed?

"Certainly. The poems were signed with an assumed name. Contributors of spring poetry are required to enclose their real name and address, birth record, baptismal record, police court history, marriage certificate, divorce proceedings, if any, together with a full and frank confession of all the evil they ever did in their lives."

"My gracious! Do you need all that as a guarantee of good faith?"

"No; we want it for publication."

The Gamut of Theft.

(Washington Post.)

Taking	$1,000,000	is called Genius.
"	100,000	" Shortage.
"	50,000	" Litigation.
"	25,000	" Insolvency.
"	10,000	" Irregularity.
"	5,000	" Defalcation.
"	1,000	" Corruption.
"	500	" Embezzlement.
"	100	" Dishonesty.
"	50	" Stealing.
"	25	" Total depravity.
"	one ham	" War on society.

A Novel Easter Egg.

The Pope received a novel Easter egg. The egg was of ivory; the interior was lined with white satin upon which nestled a magnificent ruby and diamond ornament. The offering, the value of which is about £2,000, was made by Lady Herbert, of Lea.

It is expected that Michigan Central freight trains will be running into London by the end of next week.

The Queen's Jubilee was celebrated in Teheran on Friday night with unwonted splendor. The buildings of the British Legation were splendidly illuminated.

The total number of persons known to have perished in the mining disaster at Nanaimo, B.C., is 189, of whom 82 were Chinamen and 107 whites. More than half of the white men leave families.

The triennial election of a chief and two councillors among the Muncey Indians took place at the Council House on the Caradoc Reserve on Saturday, Mr. Thos. Goodon, Indian agent, presiding. Mr. W. J. Waddilove was chosen chief for the next three years by a large majority, and Messrs. Charles Timothy and Josiah J. Wilson councillors for a similar term.

The case of Jones against the Grand Trunk Railway, tried at the London Assizes on Saturday, was an action for damages brought by the widow of the late J. F. Jones, who was killed last January by shunting engine No. 18 while crossing the track at Point Edward by the plank road to the ferry landing. Train No. 22 was across the road and the deceased had to walk around the last two cars upon the line to get past. It was while doing this that he was struck. After a lengthy trial the jury found for the plaintiff and $2,000.

WATCHING THE FISHERIES.

The Canadian Cruisers Find No Trouble in Looking After the Americans.

A Halifax despatch says: The cruiser Triumph, on the station occupied by the Terror last summer, called into Barrington yesterday. She has visited within the past few days all the harbors and usual resorts of fishing craft between Liverpool and Barrington, and is now on her way to Pubnico, the western limit of her beat. Capt. Lorway reports having boarded and hailed fifty American schooners since he assumed his present command. All these vessels came in for the purpose of shelter or repairs. The crews always manifested the utmost willingness to comply with the regulations, and in every instance so far had promptly carried out their instructions. The recent rough weather had caused an unusual number of American fishermen to seek harbors along the section of the coast, but all took the first opportunity of proceeding to sea and required no extra warning. All intercourse between such vessels and the shore is carried on strictly by day and subject to the excellent rules adopted by Capt. Lorway, of having the boats row alongside the Triumph and report both going and returning. No dissatisfaction was ever expressed at this plan, which prevents all possibility of violating the customs laws. Capt. Lorway had seen no disposition on the part of fishermen to create any trouble. The station was a difficult one to oversee, on account of its great extent and numerous harbors. After the cruise to westward is finished the Triumph will proceed to prospect the eastern boundary of the patrol, in order to look after vessels in want of bait.

THE RIDGWAY TRIAL.

The Publisher of the Black Pamphlet Assessed in £500 Damages.

A last (Tuesday) night's London cable says: The trial of the suit of Sir John Brennon against Wm. Ridgway, the publisher, for libel, in accusing the plaintiff of being a Fenian and a former ally of the Invincibles, was continued to-day. Mr. Ridgway then stated he was unable to call witnesses who could prove his charges, because the disclosing of the name of the writer of the Black Pamphlet, in which the charges were made, would endanger his life. Neither could he call in the detectives from whom he obtained the information, to substantiate the allegations against Mr. Brennon, because it would involve a disclosure of secrets of the profession. The plaintiff had been brought into court as a stalking-horse for others, who dared not appear. Counsel for Mr. Ridgway declared that the Black Pamphlet was written by a Fenian whose destruction would be certain if his name became known. Mr. Brennon's evidence showed that he associated with and assisted the worst dynamiters in Paris. Counsel held this to have proved the case against him. The Judge, in charging the jury, said the defendant had not proved justification. The jury awarded the plaintiff £500 damages.

To-Day's Church News.

Rev. L. Newton, a graduate of McMaster Hall, has accepted the pastorate of the Victoria Baptist Church.

The total amount paid in to the endowment fund of Knox College to date is $152,135.88. The total amount subscribed is $198,095.17.

The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Fisherville village will shortly be furnished with a new pipe organ, built by Mr. Spencer, of Hamilton. It will be 10x6x13, containing 416 pipes, and will cost $600.

Among the prominent clergymen who are mentioned as likely to succeed Right Rev. Dr. Binney in the Bishopric of Nova Scotia the name of Rev. John Langtry, rector of St. Luke's Church, Toronto, appears. Mr. Langtry was Prolocutor of the Lower House at the last meeting of the Provincial Synod.

Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, is one of the youngest prelates in this country. He is now 47 years old, but was only 33 when made Bishop of Newark. His manner resembles that of the late Cardinal McCloskey. He is an indefatigable worker and is quick to make decisions and put them into execution.

The Vatican at Rome has 25 chief courts, 8 principal stairways, 200 minor stairways and 30,000 windows in its 11,000 chambers. The library has on its shelves 26,000 manuscripts. Of these 16,000 are in Latin, 500 in Greek and 3,000 in Oriental tongues. The printed volumes in the library number about 100,000.

It Didn't Take.

A Sunday School teacher asked a little girl of her class if she had been baptized.

"Yes," said the little girl, "two times."

"Two times? Why, how could that be?"

"It didn't take the first time," said the little girl.—Wide-Awake.

An Editor's Experience.

"What is the question that we are asked oftenest in life?" demands a writer. The question most frequently asked in life, we should say is: "Are you sure that you love me?"—Boston Courier.

Veterans of the army and navy in Montreal district, about 1,000 in number, are making arrangements to parade with the volunteers on Jubilee day.

The magnetic power of soft iron is more than twice that of lodestone and 1000 times that of ferric sulphate.

Miss Marjory Kennedy, second daughter of the late Scottish vocalist, is now Mrs. Alexander Yule Fraser. Mr. Fraser is mathematical master in the Edinburgh High School. Long life to them!

"Yes, my child, yes; dun is the future tense of due."

Picot-edged ribbons are the most fashionable for all sorts of trimming.

A writer says: "When you have occasion to say no, make it positive." Can't; no is negative.

Brevity produces some very remarkable specimens of what the philosophers call nominalism. One of our correspondents had occasion to go into a store to inquire for Dr. Abercrombie's works, "The Intellectual Faculties," and "The Philosophy of the Moral Feelings." When asked for them the bookseller solemnly replied: "I know I haven't any moral feelings, and I doubt whether I have any intellectual faculties!"—Christian Advocate.

A good organist will know how to tune his reeds and read his tunes.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

Archibald Connell, a farmer of South Dorchester, on Tuesday assaulted his family and destroyed the furniture. Last evening he was arrested on a charge of insanity and lodged in Elgin jail.

So far thirteen dead bodies of the victims of the British Columbia colliery explosion have been recovered, and six injured. All hope of rescuing alive the entombed miners has been abandoned, and fears are entertained of the whole place being blown up by a second explosion.

Constable Lipsit, of Bayham, arrested on Wednesday night a young man named Thomas Boughner on suspicion of being one of the noted Bayham lambs. Five other members of the gang await trial in the jail in St. Thomas. Other arrests are on the tapis.

The London Fair Grounds Committee have decided on a main building 200 by 80 feet to be built of wood with stone foundation. Competitive designs will be called for. The first prize includes 4 per cent. on the outlay and the superintendence of the building. The second prize is $200.

On Wednesday evening four suspicious characters, Frank Pearson, W. Arnold, G. Hill and G. Woods, were arrested for trespass on the Michigan Central property at St. Thomas and placed in the cells. In the night they picked the lock and escaped. No trace of them has since been seen.

A young man named Preston, residing at Frankford, Ont., who had lately returned from Michigan, where he had been placing his brother in a lunatic asylum, cut his throat with a razor on Tuesday, whilst laboring under a fit of insanity. Dr. Rockwell, who is in attendance, considers there is no hope of his recovery.

While Mr. S. Lindsay, a clerk in the Almonte branch of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. Ernest Stephenson, son of Rev. F. Stephenson, were canoeing at Almonte on Wednesday afternoon their boat was capsized at Caldwell's saw mills. Mr. Stephenson was rescued by the men at the mills, but Mr. Lindsay was drowned, his body being recovered about an hour afterwards.

As already reported, $120,000 is the estimated loss to the steamship Barcelona and cargo through grounding in the Traverse at Montreal, caused by neglect on the part of the marine authorities in not having the lightships and buoys placed in position. Captain Williams, of the steamship Oregon, the first ocean steamer to arrive, never had such difficulty in navigating the river for want of signals and buoys.

On the shore of Simcoe Island a bottle was picked up. It contained a piece of paper on which was written in pencil: "April 26th.—Afloat on Lake Ontario in a heavy sea. John Thompson and I am together. We will never see to-morrow. The sea is too high and we are lost. The last place we know of is Pigeon light. Whoever finds this bottle have it copied in the Brockville Recorder. We will drown before morning. Hy. (or Wm.) B. Reas. John Thompson." A telegram from Brockville reads: "Know of no such men here. The affair is probably a hoax."

The Colonial Delegates will address a meeting to be held in the London Mansion House on Monday on the question of British trade with the colonies.

The steamer Asie, from Barcelona for Marseilles, has been sunk in a collision with the French steamer Ajaccio, from Cette for Algiers. Several passengers were drowned.

The Pope has summoned three cardinals to confer with him upon the question of reconciliation with the Italian Government and to arrange the conditions upon which the Vatican will consent to negotiate.

A Russian fanatic ran amuck at Odessa yesterday and stabbed six Jews, killing two of them. He was arrested in a restaurant, where he attacked and injured a Jewish waiter. A mob of Jews tried to lynch him.

The English Board of Trade returns for April show that the emigration from Great Britain reaches the enormous total of 56,955, against 40,719 last year, and of that number 7,312 went to British North America, compared with 3,963 in 1886.

The croupiers implicated in the recent gambling swindle at Monte Carlo have been tried in open court and the one who dealt the cards has been sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment, the others being severely reprimanded.

The Prince and Princess of Wales and their daughters, the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise and the Comtesse of Paris, accompanied by brilliant suites, visited the Wild West show and the grounds of the American exhibition at London yesterday. Buffalo Bill and his company gave a special performance for the benefit of his royal guests.

Rev. Charles W. Ward the Englewood rector accused of attempting to murder his wife, was found dead at the home of Judge Drew, his counsel, at Rockland, N.Y., yesterday afternoon. It is supposed he took an overdose of chloral.

Queen Kapiolani, of Hawaii, and her suite, escorted by the representatives of the State, War and Navy Departments, paid a visit yesterday morning to the Washington barracks, where a special review of the troops was held in their honor. In the afternoon the Queen received the representatives of foreign governments in Washington.

Yesterday morning six negro boys, 13 to 17 years old, were at the wharf of the Wilmington, N. C., Compress preparing to go across Cape Fear River to shoot rice birds. One named Grant Best had borrowed a double-barrelled gun from a negro man, which he says had no caps on. An accidental discharge of the weapon caused the death of four of the boys and badly hurt a fifth, Best alone escaping injury.

It is understood that the opponents of the sympathizers of Mr. O'Brien have engaged every hall in Ottawa for the night Mr. O'Brien is here, with a view of preventing him from speaking. The weather, however, is fine and Mr. O'Brien can speak in the open air.

To get the oil out of a grindstone make the stone as hot as safety will permit, and then cover it with a paste of whiting and water. The mixture will soon become filled with oil, when it may be scraped off and the process repeated until all the oil is extracted.

Disillusion.

(London World.)

will seek the woman I loved (no
Long ago in life's fortunate da
I am tired, discouraged and sic rt,
And my thoughts wander back embered ways
To the woman I loved in days l ead,
And I long for the sight of he said).

She was strangely faithful and (he said),
With the gentlest heart, and the st eyes,
That clung to one's gaze in a pa way;
And I was a fool to be cold and
And relinquish such love—see stead,
And leave her alone to despair

I will go to her now at once (he
For life is discordant and out of tune
And I need her love and her symp s.
I loved her too lightly and left on;
But the future shall live, and the p ead,
And my heart yearns back to her he said).

I am here at last in her home (he
Here all alone in the twilight
I wait for the sound of her st on the stair,
As I sit in her dear familiar ro
With all her sweet flowers, and h s on the shelf;
For nothing is changed here—exc myself.

I heard her voice. I remember
Her voice like a child's with its s tone,
But then came a pause, and a wh d word—
A laugh—that seemed turning my heart to stone;
The door opened wide, and my hopes fled,
For a new love was there by her s said).

STRANGLED TO DEATH.

Russian Noble Alleged to Have Murdered His Parisian Paramour.

A Paris cable says: A most horrible murder has been committed in this city by a Russian at one of the principal hotels. As in the case of Pranzini, the woman who was the victim belonged to the frail sisterhood which abounds in Paris. Had she discovered some terrible secret of her lover? Up to the present there seems no motive for the crime, since her lover was a man of immense wealth and very high position, both in social and official rank. Whatever be the cause, she was discovered in his rooms at the hotel, her neck showing indubitable traces that she had been strangled. The Lothario was arrested, but was released after a few hours' detention. The reason publicly given for not proceeding against him was that there was not sufficient evidence to hold him. The real reason, however, was that immediately after his arrest one of the highest officials of the Russian Embassy called on the Procureur-General, the Jude d'Instruction and the Prime Minister. At the present moment the Russian alliance is of more value to France than the life of a mere cocotte, hence the murderer has been allowed to go scot free and to leave for Italy, although his name and rank and his crime are on everybody's lips, both in France and in Russia.

A Birthday Compliment.

Jones—"This is my birthday, Smith." Smith—"Indeed! How old are you?" "Just 40 to-day." "H'm! Forty? Well, there is an old saying that every man at 40 is either a fool or a physician. You are not a physician, I believe."—Boston Courier.

To Be Settled Later.

"Doctor," said the sick man, "the other physicians who have been in consultation over my case seem to differ with you in the diagnosis."

"I know they do," replied the doctor, who has great confidence in himself, "but the autopsy will show who was right."

She Had a Motto Too.

"I am very sorry, Mrs. Hardtack," said the new boarder, "but I'm a little short this week, and I'll have to ask you to wait a little for my board, though my motto is 'To pay as I go.'"

"Can't do it," replied Mrs. Hardtack. My motto is, 'Pay or go.'"—New York Sun.

His Future Career.

"And what do you expect to be when you grow up, Bobby," asked the minister; "a lawyer like your father?"

"No," Bobby replied. "Ma says I'm too much like pa to make a successful lawyer. I did think I'd be a drum major, but I guess I'll be a lion tamer."

—Miss Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, sister of the President, has accepted a place as first assistant in a school for young ladies in New York city.

—The longest continuous run on any railway in the world is that made by the new Saratoga limited train on the road from New York to Troy, which runs the entire distance—148 miles—without a stop.

Mr. Joseph Dennis, an engineer on the Michigan Central, at St. Thomas, has invented a fire-proof and safety stove for railway coaches and applied for a patent for Canada and the United States. The stove is so constructed that in case a collision occurs hot water passes into the fire box, extinguishing the fire.

THE ECONOMICAL GIRL.

She's a dashing little student
Of economy and prudent,
In a most painstaking fashion,
I would really have you know;
And she looked up with her eyes unglancing,
Most bewitchingly entrancing,
And my thoughts flew back to courtship,
Many happy years ago;
Soon her gaze grew fond and fonder,
And I then began to ponder
Some sweet words I'd whisper to her
Of a liberty I'd take;
But she smiled a smile platonic
And she said in words laconic:
"What a splendid lot of carpet rags
Your overcoat would make!"

M. Zola, who held for some years the pen of a dramatic critic, always persistently maintained that the stage ought to be an exact copy of real life and that it was quite as possible to be true to nature in a theatre as in a book.

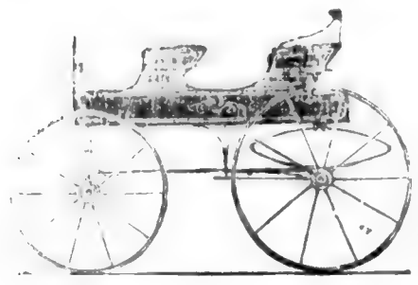
—A medical authority says that in warm weather people will find their systems cleaned and cooled very comfortably and beneficially by swallowing a goblet of fresh water, not iced, with a little table salt dissolved in it.

The threatened insurrection by the Greek population of Crete against the Porte's authority has quieted down.

"'It is the little things that tell,' says an old adage. Yes, especially the little brothers."

An old man named James, who is alleged to have wandered away from the London hospital and to have suffered greatly from exposure, owing to his family not having been informed of his escape from that institution, died last night. It is probable an inquest will be held into the affair.

Flesherton Carriage Works!



W. A. MILBURN,

Proprietor.

In returning thanks to the public for the patronage extended to him during the past three years, the undersigned wishes to inform the people that he is in a better position than ever to turn out all work in his lines of business, such

—AS—

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons, &c.

on short notice, in a workmanlike manner and at reasonable prices. All kinds of Repairs,

HORSE-SHOEING, AND GENERAL JOBBING

will receive equally prompt and careful attention. Works, next to Planing Factory, Flesherton.

Respectfully Yours,

W. A. MILBURN,

Proprietor Flesherton Carriage Works.

Methodist District Meeting.

Ministerial and Lay Brethren in Session at Flesherton.

Tuesday and Wednesday of this week the Methodist District meeting- announced last week was held here. Owing to the experience and ability of those who usually take part at such meetings, much interest is excited and considerable good accomplished. Especially was this noticeable in connection with the spirited discussions, anent Sunday School work, on Tuesday afternoon—although the weather was certainly not of a nature to impart elasticity of spirits to the various speakers.

TUESDAY MORNING

was devoted to the settlement of connexional accounts and business of a financial and generally.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

After devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. W. Ayers, District Secretary, a short but practical address was delivered by Rev. G. H Cornish, Chairman of the District. In the course of his excellent address the speaker said, that "during the last conference year there was an increase throughout the connexion of 142 schools, 1,349 officers and teachers, and 10,785 scholars. But that rate of progress might be greatly increased." "Our Church," said he, "has already more Sunday schools, more teachers and more scholars than all the other Protestant Churches in the Dominion put together. Her duty to the young people committed to her care is not fully accomplished while there is a single Methodist preaching appointment where there is not also an efficient Methodist Sunday School."

The work was not to end here, however, but to go on and on until all are brought to a saving knowledg of the truth as it is in Jesus. There were 181 Sabbath School scholars on his own circuit last year, while this year they had 264 an increase of 83. Financially successful in fact progress was being made all along the line.

Rev. A. J. Parker, of Priceville, made some apt remarks relative to the frothy American literature now finding its way into our Sunday Schools on account of the cheap quotations given by American publishers. Our own literature was so pure, that excellent selections could almost be made in the dark. He thought they might look forward to a successful future in connection with Priceville Sabbath School work.

Rev. A. Thibadeau, of Holland Centre, reported progress, and in the course of his remarks said that when he first went on his present circuit he found one Sunday School run on the old-fashioned principle of selecting lessons anywhere throughout the Bible; but a different order of things prevails now.

Rev. R. Johnsom, of Walter's Falls, reported a considerable increase in Sabbath School work during the past year.

Rev. J. S. Corcoran, of Eugenia, reported progress on his circuit, both financially and numerically.

At this juncture a spirited discussion took place on the subject of Union Sabbath Schools, in which Rev. R. Johnson, Rev. A. Thibadeau, Rev. G. H. Cornish, Rev. Dr. Strongman and Rev. W. Ayers took part.

All present then joined in singing "I Need Thee Every Hour."

Rev. A. Thibadeau next delivered his address on "Home Influence on Sunday School Work." Sabbath School work was calculated to make the home better, and it often transpired that home influence was detrimental to the work of the S. S. Parents should sympathize with and assist their children in this great work. The address was short and pointed.

Dr. Christoe thought the old method of Sabbath School teaching was a good one. It seemed to him, that when that system was in practice there was more enquiry and research and less formalism. Questions and answers are now given so fully, that there was not the same incentives to study there once was.

Rev. G. H. Cornish replied to Dr. Christoe, re International Lesson leaves, which he said had given rise to a vast amount of biblical research and critical investigation.

Rev. A. Thibadeau said he did not think Dr. Christoe intended them to swallow the whole pill, re international leaves. (laughter)

Rev. R. Johnson said many teachers would carry out their own respective modes of teaching, no matter what lesson helps might be provided for them. The Berean Leaf and Banner often confused teachers as well as pupils on account of the multiplicity of divisions made in the lessons.

Rev. J. W. Mahood said all great minds were agreed that the International Lessons were great helps—only to be used, he thought, at home, while preparing lesson, and ought not to be brought to the Sabbath School.

Rev. A. J. Parker thought they had drifted away considerably from the subject, viz., "Home influence on Sunday School Work." He thought it was the influence at home that made the Sabbath School. You'll not have much of a S. S., said he, if the home influence is unfavorable.

Dr. Christoe thought he ought to congratulate himself on the lively discussion which had arisen from his remarks in reference to the present system of S. S. teaching. He was strengthened in his position by the discussion he had listened to.

MASS MEETING.

Quite a few children, as well as a fair sprinkling of adults, attended the mass meeting, Squire Armstrong, the Superintendent of the Methodist Sabbath School, marshalled the little folks of his own and the Presbyterian church S. S. as well. Several pieces were sung by the children, with Miss Christoe accompanying on the organ.

Rev. Mr. Mahood delivered a very aptly worded address to the children, taking for his text the single word "Watch," which he divided into five "heads," thus;

Watch your Words.
Watch your Actions.
Watch your Time.
Watch your Company.
Watch your Heart.

The speaker put his thoughts in such simple, graceful language, that the smallest child could have very little difficulty in understanding every word he uttered.

Rev. E. A. Shaw, of Montreal, next delivered a brief but excellent address—also to the children—after which came announcements by Rev. W. Ayers, singing by the children and the benediction by Rev. Dr. Strongman.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The evening session was largely attended by townspeople and others. Rev. G. H. Cornish occupied the chair in a most creditable manner. The District Chairman filled his position throughout patiently and with true dignity—occasionally interlarding the exercises with brief and fitting remarks. The choir, under the able leadership of Mr. C. J. Sproule, furnished vocal and instrumental music for the occasion.

Rev. Dr. Strongman read an elegantly worded address on "The Relation of the Sunday School to the Church." It was a masterly production, full of spicy gems of thought and well rounded periods. Although scarcely within the ken of juvenile minds, it held the close attention of mattured intellects throughout.

Rev. Mr. Ayers paper on "The Aim and results of S. S. Teaching as found in Individual Experience," was delivered with much vim and earnestness. It abounded in practical suggestions and bristled with appropriate Scriptural quotations, such as "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven;" "Except ye become as little children," &c. The Lord cares for the smallest child as much as he does for those more advanced in years.

Rev. G. P. Cornish delivered a good address on the "Essentials of a successful Teacher in our Sunday Schools." It was practical and edifying. Constant and persistent effort, unceasing effort and unwavering fidelity to the Master were amongst the essentials necessary to achieve success. So also was common sense, and personal knowledge and experience. Motto of every Teacher should be: "All my class for Jesus." No S. S. Teacher will be successful unless he recognizes everything from Genesis to Revelation as the revealed Word of God.

[Report of yesterday's proceedings will be published next week.—ED. NOTE.]

NOTES.

Increase of membership on District during past year 177. Also an increase in all connexional funds.

Dr. Christoe was elected Circuit Representative to Conference for Flesherton.

Mr. M. Richardson was elected District Representative to Conference Missionary Committee.

Rev. W. Ayers will go to Conference this year as District Representative to the Stationing Committee.

Mr. W. A. Brown was elected Circuit Representative to Conference for Markdale.

In Memoriam.

[The following verses were handed us for publication in memory of the sad and sudden death of the young man, Connell. Ed.]

Remember, death may find you
When you' e young;
For friends are often weeping,
And stars their watch are keeping,
O'er the grave where sleeping
Lie the young.

O, seek the path to glory
While your young;
And Jesus will befriend you,
And peace divine will send you,
And from danger will defend
While you're young.

Volunteers.

No. 6 Company, 81st Batt. will meet at the Drill Shed, Flesherton, on Saturday evenings for drill, until further orders. 25 young men wanted to fill up the above company. Apply to J. J. Field, Lieut., No. 6 Company, Flesherton. t.f.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE.

Court of Revision, Township of Osprey.

The first sittings of the Court of Revision, on the Assessment of 1887, for the Township of Osprey, will be held at MAXWELL on TUESDAY, the Thirty-First Day of MAY, 1887. All persons interested will govern themselves accordingly.

WM. MILNE, Tp. Clerk

May 12th, 1887.

Auction Sale

—OF—

VALUABLE FARM

—IN THE—

Township of Artemesia.

Under and by virtue of the powers of sale in certain Mortgages made by John Fisher and David White, to the Vendor's which will be produced at the time of sale and on default in payment of the money's thereby secured. There will be offered for sale by Public Auction at MUNSHAW'S HOTEL, in the Village of FLESHERTON, on

Monday, 30th day of May, A.D., 1887,

1887, at 2 o'clock, p.m., by A. S. VANDUSEN, Auctioneer, the following property, viz.: Lot number 158, in Concession 1, N.E.T. & S. Road, in the Township of Artemesia, containing 50 acres more or less nearly all of which are said to be cleared. On the premises are said to be a frame barn nearly new and a log house. Lands are well watered, by a small spring Creek. There is a small orchard on the premises which are well fenced and are on a good gravel road within about one mile of Flesherton.

TERMS:

Ten per cent. at time of sale, fifteen per cent. within one month, balance to remain on Mortgage for five years with interest at 6½ per cent. yearly, or such other terms as may be arranged with the purchaser at time of sale.

For further particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Esq., Flesherton, or to

MOSS, FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK,
Vendor's Solicitor's.

Toronto, May 10th, 1887.

MAIL CONTRACT!

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the Postmaster General, will be received at Ottawa until noon, on 27th May, 1887, for the conveyance of Her Majesty's Mails, on a proposed Contract for four years, 3 times per week each way, between Dundalk and Maple Valley from the 1st July, next.

The conveyance to be made in a vehicle or otherwise via., Badjeros and Shrigley. The Mails to leave Maple Valley every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 8 a.m., and travelling via., Badjeros and Shrigley, arrive at Dundalk at 11:30 a.m., or in time to connect with the Mail train passing North. To leave Dundalk as soon as possible after exchange of Mails and arrive at Maple Valley within three hours and ten minutes afterwards.

Printed notices containing further information as to conditions of proposed Contract may be seen, and blank forms of Tender may be obtained at the Post Offices of Dundalk, Maple Valley, Badjeros and Shrigley.

DANIEL SPRY,
Post-Office Inspector.

Post-Office Inspector's Office, Barrie, April 18th, 1887

THE ROADSTER STALLION,

BILLY V.!

Will leave his own stable in Flesherton, on MONDAY, MAY 2nd, 1887, at 12 o'clock noon, and proceed to Linley's hotel, Maxwell, where he will remain over night.

TUESDAY, will proceed to Jonathan Irish's, Wareham, for noon, thence to Johnston's hotel, Dundalk, where he will remain till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY, will return to Flesherton for the night.

FRIDAY, will proceed to Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, for noon, and return to his own stable for the night.

SATURDAY, will proceed to Marsh's hotel, Markdale, for noon, and return to his own stable in Flesherton, where he will remain till the following Monday.

The above route will be continued during the season, health and weather permitting.

Description and Pedigree:

BILLY V., foaled June 18th, 1883, is a dark dappled bay, stands 15 hands 3 in., weighs 1150 pounds, and for bone, muscle, style and action, cannot be surpassed, was sired by Clear Grit jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger.

TERMS:

To insure a foal $10.00, payable March 1st, 1888. Season mares $8.00, payable last round of horse, or not later than July 12th, 1887, if not then paid said mares will be charged as insured mares. Single leap $6.00, payable at time of service. All mares not returned regularly to horse will be charged as insured mares. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Owners trying their mares to said horse and knowing them to be afflicted with any contagious disease, will be liable in damages. Groom's Fee 25 cents.

A. S. VANDUSEN, Owner. GEO. GLASSFORD, Groom.

PUBLIC NOTICE!!

To all whom it may Concern.

Know ye all men that I, W. S. CHRISTOE, the Druggist of Flesherton, have the agency for JOHNSON'S celebrated TONIC BITTERS and NERVINE, JOHNSON'S little Pink Tonic Liver Pills and the ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

—THE—

TONIC BITTERS

are confidently recommended as the VERY BEST in the market for Nervousness, Hysteria, General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Complaints common to the female sex. PALENESS of complexion and for diseases caused by poverty of blood. In conjunction with the Tonic JOHNSON'S Little Liver Pills are the very best for liver complaint and general desarrangements of the stomach. The All Healing White Ointment is the very best for skin diseases of a scrofulous nature. Burns, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Chilblains, &c., &c.

You have only to try these great remedies to be satisfied. Sold by

W. S. CHRISTOE,
The Druggist, Flesherton.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's.

Dentistry.

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S

DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. I. B. & C. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN

At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

ANDREW McGIRR,

Issuer of Marriage Licenses,

FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY.

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—:FROM:—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

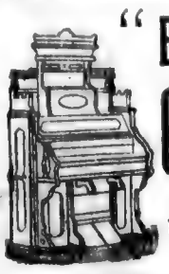
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VI., NO. 310. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, MAY 26, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

W. A. BROWN,

—THE—

PEOPLE'S JEWELLER,

Keeps the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, Wedding Rings, Spex, etc., between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden Watches, my own name on, accurately timed, 2 and 3 years warrants, $8.50 to $28.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto Cases. 2 to 5 oz. Waltham, P. S. Bartlett's, 3 oz. coin case, $17.50; Ellery's, $14.50, lower grades, $8.00, to $13.00; Elgins if preferred. Ladies 10 & 14 k. Watches, and Gent's 10 & 14 k. filled cases always in stock. It is safe to buy Watches from me because I do business for myself, in my own name, and can be held to my warrants. 34 Seth Thomas, New Haven and Ansonia Clocks now in stock, bought close.

They will be sold below the "Terrible Bargains," prices at least 15 per cent.

At is easy to come down when goods are away up. I don't do a catch business.

Straight dealing ensures success.

I shall stay on that line. Small profits, modest prices. I secure patronage through low prices. Assortment Complete. Send for quotations. If I do not save you money I will make other Jewellers take cost. 18 years at the trade.

SPECIALTIES:
Watch Repairing, Fitting Spex.

Address Box 5, MARKDALE, ONT.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inepect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Advance till 1888 for 50 cents.

We regret sincerley to learn of the severe illness of Mrs. Alfred Ward, of this Township.

Nobody should be allowed to go in bathing inside our town limits unless bathing suits are used.

Tenders for the erection of a Brick Schoolhouse at Flesherton Station will be received up to June 1st.

Mr. T. W. Wilson paid Flesherton a flying visit this week. He returned to Detroit on Tuesday evening.

Mr. Buckingham's barn in Osprey township was struck by lightning on Monday and burned to the ground.

Let your eyes gaze on Russell's new advertisements on this page of The Advance. You will see something that will interest you.

THE ADVANCE balance of this year for 50 cents. Best local and family paper in Grey with but one exception. Of course this is a strictly cash offer.

Why is it that Russell gets all the watch repairs in this section of country? Because the public recognize the fact that he is the only watchmaker that can do their work right.

TAMARAC.—Tamarac Elixir is a preparation containing great curative properties for Coughs, Colds, Influenza and Throat and Lung complaints.

Joseph Rorke, Esq., M. P. P. for Centre Grey, has been gazetted Major of the 31st (Grey) battalion. We congratulate our worthy member upon his promotion.

Another new stock of Watches &c., arrived at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, direct from the factory, at lower prices than other dealers can sell them to you.

The regular monthly Open Division of the Sons of Temperance, Flesherton, will not be held next week, on account of the grand Jubilee celebration occuring in the same month.

South Grey Teachers' Association will hold its annual Convention in Flesherton, on Thursday, and Friday June 2nd and 3rd—next week. Let our citizens extend a right hearty welcome to the visitors.

Rev. Mr. Ayers has gone to Galt to attend the annual meeting of the Guelph Methodist Conference. Messrs. Armstrong, Richardson and Christoe, of Flesherton, District Representatives, will probably go next week.

Mr. Smyth, our handsome and urbane barber, has had his shop fitted up very neatly, and intends keeping the best Tobaccos and Cigars for sale. He is really a first-class and steady workman, well-deserving an extensive patronage.

Mr. H. Bull, the celebrated Thornbury pump manufacturer, was in town last Thursday and did quite a rattling business in his line. On Thursday, June 2nd, he will be in Flesherton again to attend to those requring his services.

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON,

Has the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewelery, Wedding Rings, Spex &c. between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden, Columbus, Waltham, Elgin, and Swiss Watches, bearing warrants from 2 1-2 to five years from $7.50 to $25.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto cases 2 to 5 1-2 oz. We never ask any more than $16.00 for a P. S. Bartlett 3 oz. coin silver case, some dealers have the check to ask $17.50. Ellery's $13.25, while other dealers ask $14.50. Lower Grades from $6.90 to 11.50. Ladies & Gents Gold Watches. All kinds of American Clocks at lower prices than elsewhere. The fact is, other dealers cannot begin to compete with us notwithstanding the fact we do not sell at auction or trade on the church. A fine Stock just arrived at lower prices than ever. Always take your Watches, Clocks, & Jewelry to RUSSELL to repair, the only genuine Watchmaker & Jeweler in this section of country. Come right along and secure some bargains. It will pay you to come 20 miles to deal with us. You can save 25 per cent. by dealing at

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Mr. Broughton, D.D.G.M. of A.F. & A.M., and Editor of the South Simcoe News, Bradford was in Flesherton week before last. We had a pleasant chat with him, being introduced by our genial Postmaster, Mr. R. J. Sproule.

Next week we will publish the Sons of Temperance program for the grand Jubilee entertainment to be given by them here on the 20th of June. It is also their purpose to have a series of athletic games, &c., during the afternoon.

We hasten to correct an omission in last week's "Methodist District Meeting" notes. Besides the names given, we should have added that of our highly esteemed townsman, Squire Armstrong, as District Representative to Conference. The omission was an oversight pure and simple.

Our readers are asked not to forget the public lecture (free) next Thursday evening, in the Town Hall, Flesherton, by Mr. J. J. Tilley, Director of Teachers' Institutes. Subject: "Success in life; with special reference to young men." The young people especially are cordially invited to be present.

The beautiful barns and stables belonging to Mr. Soudan Tuplin, 14th line Osprey, were burned to the ground on Monday of last week. The buildings caught fire at noon by sparks being blown from a neighbor's bush which was on fire. The loss will be heavy as he had no insurance on them.

The heavy draught stallion "Knight of the Realm," owned by R. J. Ferguson, Thornbury, broke through a stable floor on Saturday last and received some very serious injuries. The horse lay on the sleepers for 1½ hours and when taken out it was half an hour before he could be made to stand on his feet.

It is scarcely necessary to draw attention to the full page announcement of Messrs. M. Richardson & Co. in this issue of The Advance. The stock carried by this popular firm is probably unequalled in this county, in quantity, quality and prices. Further comment would be superfluous. Call and see for yourselves.

We had a pleasant call from Mr. C. R. Philips—formerly of Flesherton but now of Dundalk—on Saturday last. Mr. Phillips manufactures Cylinder, Check Valve and Cistern Pumps in first class style and solicits a trial order from those requiring anything in his line of business. Orders by mail will receive prompt attention.

A statement was made in last week's ADVANCE, to the effect, that a bridge in the Stinson neighborhood was in a "very bad condition." This gave a wrong impression: the well known "cranberry marsh" was referred to, in connection with which our Township Council are taking active steps to effect much needed improvements.

A number of recruits are wanted for Flesherton Volunteer Company. This is one of the best officered companies in the Province and there ought to be little difficulty in filling vacancies. Neat Scotch forage caps and tunics have just been received. Thanks to the excellent care of Lieut. Field, the arms and other accoutrements are in prime condition.

The 24th was celebrated in Markdale by athletic games, &c. The Owen Sounders sent down one of their base ball teams to play a game with the Markdale nine. The former had what might be termed a gentle "walk-over." We sigh for the times when Will Vokes, Flesherton's old lightning catcher, Will Clark, the same club's lightning pitcher, and other swift boys used to make the dust fly around the diamond. But coming back to the subject, Markdale played gallantly against very heavy odds and may be able to make things interesting for the Owen Sounders in the near future,

Mr. W. H. Flesher has leased the Flesherton Woollen Factory for a term of years, and is in a better position than ever to carry on the business. During the eighteen months he has been in the woollen business, there has been only one complaint, which is a remarkable record. He will pay the highest possible price for Wool and keep a good reliable class of goods to sell or trade, as he uses no rubbish in the manufacturing of Tweeds, Flannels and Yarns. Special satisfaction in roll carding.

David Bates handed a shot-gun to Joseph Field on Monday afternoon last, near the Flesherton Drill Shed. The gun was loaded—heavy. Master Field pointed it at a bird and pulled the trigger. The bird was blown to pieces, and to was the gun. The shock caused by the explosion made Field spin around somewhat after the manner of a top. When he stopped spinning, it was observed that he was clinging to about a foot of stock while the balance of the gun was scattered around on the ground. The barrel was twisted and torn into short pieces. Strange to say, nobody got hurt.

The Annual Report of the Markdale Methodist Church shows an encouraging increase in the membership and connexional funds. During the year there have been received by letter 25 and on trial 61 making a total of 86, so that after making up for a loss of 40 by removals, deaths &c., there remains a net increase of 46. The present membership is, Markdale 178, increase 29; Town Line Church 55, increase 12; Pleasant Valley Church 37, increase 5. Total 265. The amount contributed for the Missionary and other Connexional funds is as follows:—Markdale $161.74, Town Line 29.08, Pleasant Valley $24.18. Total $215.00, an increase for the year of $48.44, while the monies raised for all church purposes aggregates the magnificent sum of $2098.35

In chronic diseases, medicines should be restoring, and debilitating, in their action. The wonderful strengthening and curative effects, realized from the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, sustain the reputation of this remedy as the most popular blood purifier.

Through the generosity of Mr. W. H. Flesher, we are enabled to announce that Flesherton is now in possession of the finest and most extensive public school site in the county of Grey. Besides the 2½ acres purchased from Mr. Flesher at the school meeting, last Saturday afternoon, for the remarkably low sum of $250, the gentleman named made a free gift of 1½ acres of land in rear of the school lot. This latter, although to be fenced in with the 2½ acres school ground, is specially reserved for the use of our townsmen as a public park. The whole covers an area of nearly 4 acres, occupying a very commanding position—overlooking, the greater part of the town in fact. A handsome schoolhouse is to be erected forthwith. It is almost needless to add that Mr. Flesher's generosity is appreciated at its true value.

RELIABLE TESTIMONY.—Mr. John R. Wright, representing Messrs. Evans, Sons & Mason, wholesale druggist, Montreal, says—Nasal Balm cured me of a long standing case of Catarrh after many other remedies failing.

Birth.

WATSON.—In Flesherton, on Her Majesty's birthday, May 24th, the wife of Rev. Thos. Watson, Baptist minister, of a daughter.

Malarial poisons contain the germs of dangerous diseases. If the poisons accumulate in the system, Typhoid, Bilious, Intermittent or Chill Fever is sure to follow. Ayer's Ague Cure is a warranted specific for malaria.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

NOT GLAD, NOR SAD.

You sang a little song to-day,
It was not sad, it was not gay,
The very theme was nigh out-worn;
Two lovers met, as lovers may,
They had not met—since yesterday—
They must not meet again—till morn!

And did they meet again, my dear?
Did morning come and find them here
To see each other's eyes again?
Alas! on that you are not clear,
For hearts will shift as winds will veer,
And love can veer like any vane!

Ah, no! I think some sudden craze,
Some bitter spite befell their days,
What was that plaintive minor for?
No more together lie their ways,
Remote perhaps the lover strays,
Perhaps the lady comes no more!

So strange the numbers sob and swell;
No, there's no guessing what befell;
It's the sweetest song you sing!
Not sad, and yet—I cannot tell—
Nor glad, and yet—'tis very well—
Like love, like life, like anything!

THE SHEPHERD OF THE SALT LAKE.

A Story in Three Chapters.

CHAPTER I.

He was known to have been a convict, and to have served out his time at Macquarie Harbor, though in his old age there was little or nothing in his manner or appearance to indicate anything of savagery or vice in his disposition.

Twenty years of his life had been spent in profitless labor with pick and shovel and cradle on the diggings that broke out in endless numbers throughout the length and breadth of Australia after the gold discoveries of 1851. During the "fifties" he was in Victoria; first at Bendigo, then at Ballarat, McIvor, Maldon, the Ovens and other places of promise. The "sixties" found him in New South Wales, still leading the romantic life of a digger. The "seventies" saw him shepherd, stockman, station cook, timber-feller and hutkeeper, and in 1880—an old broken down man—he was shepherding sheep in Queensland.

No life could have been more forlorn and desolate than his during those latter days of his travelling. His hut was distant some 20 miles from the primitive head station on which his employer lived. From week end to week end he saw no living soul except the black boy who brought him his rations, and, at rare intervals, the sheep overseer or manager, who rode out to count his flock.

His solitary bark hut was erected on the edge of the basin of a dried up salt lake, such as are found frequently in the interior of Australia. It was nothing but a depressed hollow, treeless and grassless, covered with a salty incrustation, and at the edges with a sparse growth of creeping pig weed and dwarf ti-tree. There was something unutterably melancholy in this vast expanse, gleaming with a dirty white lustre under the sun's rays—silent, lifeless and desolate. It was the home of no living thing; even its scanty covering of vegetation only extended its straggling growth along the edges, choked back by the salty, dust-like soil. The very birds seemed to avoid it, and fly in other directions; the chirp of the crickets and grasshoppers, sounding incessantly from the grass all about, never broke the mournful stillness that brooded over the salt lake. It might have been blighted by some awful curse, so lifeless, so lugubrious a thing was it. It lay in the heart of mulga ridges, rising in gentle slopes all around, green where covered with grass, dirty red where the friable earth lay unhidden. Toward the spot where the old shepherd's hut was erected a low outcrop of rock formed the northern boundary of the lake; behind this was a clump of gidyea trees, and stretching back from it a wilderness of wattle and wild hop vines.

In this melancholy retreat old Scotty passed many a long and weary year. So isolated was it, and so deeply did his nature become imbued with the callousness of his surroundings, that time passed over his head almost unheeded. The days brought nothing to him but the dull routine of his duties; the weeks fled; the months slipped by; and he neither noticed nor cared to mark their flight. His dog and his quiet flock were his only companions. He had no thought for anything else; they made the sum total of his existence. He almost knew every individual sheep by sight, and they, in turn, exhibited no fear of him, so accustomed were they to his voice and presence. Every morning, when he let them out of the "yards," they would slowly wander across the ridges, feeding as they went; every evening they would as slowly make their way back again, without effort or direction on his part.

The months came and went, and brought no change in the lonely life of the old shepherd. The stony, grass-covered slopes of the mulga ridges surrounded him, cutting him off from the outer world by a motionless billowy sea of green; the Salt Lake, gleaming with saline incrustations, was ever before his gaze, benumbing his mind with the mystery of its lifeless solemnity.

One evening, at the close of a long summer day, when the wattle blossom and the wild hops made the languorous air heavy with their subtle perfume, three horsemen suddenly appeared before the lonely shepherd. It was the owner of the station, accompanied by two bush hands.

"Good-day, Scotty; sheep all right?" said the farmer, reining up and dismounting.

"Aye, boss."

"That's right. We'll camp here to-night, and I'll go and have a look at them. I'm going to start fencing in this end of the run. We've come to mark out the line. I suppose the gibbera hole's full?"

"Aye, pretty well."

"Then we'll take the horses down and give them a drink."

The four men, leading the horses by the bridles, walked to where the outcrop of white limestone rock formed a natural barrier to the Salt Lake. A broad sheep track led them down to a narrow gully that split the rock almost at its centre. Hidden in this ambush, and overhung by an immense block of limestone, was a small, dark-looking pool, not more than three to four feet in width, Some troughing, rudely constructed from the hollowed-out trunks of trees, lay on the ground near by. The horses drank from the troughs, whilst the men dipped their pannikins in the pool.

"The water's cold as ice," said Scotty's master. "It makes your teeth tingle."

"It's always the same," answered the shepherd, "even on the hottest day."

"It's a regular God-send, this gibbera hole," said the squatter. "The only water for ten miles round. It must be a spring; it doesn't seem to go down at all."

"No, it never alters."

"I wonder if it's deep," said one of the men.

"Deep? It is so," answered Scotty. "I cut a sapling 20 feet long, but I couldn't bottom with it."

Their thirst satisfied, the men made their way along the gully out on to the small plateau of rock that commanded the Salt Lake. The vast expanse stretched away before their eyes desolate and lifeless, and the three visitors gazed at it for a long time in silence.

"It's a strange place," said the squatter at length, speaking softly, as though loth to break the curious stillness. "It's enough to give one the horrors."

"Horrors!" exclaimed Scotty, with sudden vehemence, "you're right. It do give the horrors. It's always the same summer and winter, weighing down and crushing the heart out of a man. It's a dreffal place. There's a curse hanging to it, and those who live nigh it get the curse in them, too. I know it. Night and day for four years I've been watching it, and it's blighted me the same as it is itself. There's no livin' thing goes near it but me and the sheep. It's only me knows what a cursed thing it is."

The squatter and his men exchanged a quick look of surprise. The old shepherd's manner had suddenly changed. He had been dull, impassive and silent. Their unexpected arrival had aroused in him no surprise, had given rise to no sign of welcome or pleasure. But when he spoke of the Salt Lake, his manner was wholly changed. His sunken eyes gleamed with excitement, his voice was raised, his hands and arms moved restlessly.

"I know it," he continued, with still greater vehemence, pointing toward the lake with shaking finger. "I've watched it for days and days together, feeling it weighing me down more and more. This is what it's done." He motioned with one comprehensive gesture toward his furrowed face, his sunken eyes and trembling limbs. "It's broke me down. It's made me like this. It's blighted me the same as it blights everything that goes near it. There's no escaping from it when once it's got hold of you. It'll be the death of me in the end. There's no getting away from it now—not for me."

His arm sank to his side, the light died away from his eyes, and he relapsed into silence, standing there gazing vacantly at the funereal waste.

His three companions exchanged a second look of meaning, and one of the men whispered to his mate, "He's clean off his head."

"Oh! it's not so bad as that, Scotty," said the squatter, soothingly. "It's a dull place to live in, and it's terribly lonely, too. If you like, I'll move you to another part of the run."

But the old shepherd shook his head.

"No," he answered listlessly, "I'm not wanting to go away. I've been here for four years, and I'll leave my bones here. I can't get away from it. It's got hold of me, body and soul, and I'll stand by it till it finishes me. I don't want to go away."

"There seems to be a bit of feed on it," continued the other, anxious to change the current of the old man's thoughts.

"Aye," he answered dully. "The sheep's fond of pig weed, and I let 'em run along the edge sometimes. "But it ain't over safe in the middle."

"How?"

"In summer it's all fine sand and drift; but in winter, after the rain, it's nothing but a bog."

"It's a fearful place, altogether," said the other, with a slight shudder. But let's get back and hobble the horses out."

The three visitors spread their blankets under the shelter of old Scotty's hut that night, and on the next day set themselves to the duty of driving in pegs and blazing the trees along the projected line of fencing. A compass placed on a stake driven in the ground was the sole instrument used; by its aid the long line, running due east and west, was roughly marked out, with sufficient accuracy, for the purpose of guiding the fencers in their subsequent work. For three days the marking out of the line was continued, and for three nights the workers camped with the old man; then they took their departure, and the solitary shepherd of the Salt Lake was left once again to his wonted isolation.

But the visit of the squatter and his men was but the herald of a greater change. A month passed, and the old shepherd, pursuing his weary round of duties, had wholly forgotten the circumstance, when on returning with his flock one day toward sundown, the white gleam of a tent close by his hut caught his eye. So broken was he by his long enforced solitude, so apathetic, so insensible to every outward influence, that even that unusual sight failed to arouse in him the slightest interest. He followed his sheep toward the brushwood yards, and it was not until two men, emerging from the tent, accosted him, that he seemed to be alive to the fact of there being intruders on his solitude.

"Good evening, mate," said one of the newcomers.

"Good evening," Scotty answered.

"We've come here on that job of fencing," continued the man, seeing that the other asked no questions.

"Have you?"

"Aye. Me and Larry here have taken the contract for it. I've got the missus inside, and a youngster. We camped here for the water. We found the sheep tracks goin' down to the spring."

"Yes," answered Scotty. "You'll get plenty of water at the gibbera hole."

He did not speak as though he resented the intrusion of the fencers, only as though he were wholly indifferent to it. His dog, however, used so long to his master's company only, barked furiously at the strangers.

"Lie down, Jerry," said the old man listlessly, and then stood silently regarding the two men.

"It's pretty lonely here," observed the one referred to as Larry. "That's a rum looking place, that there swamp."

"Aye; it's got a curse on it."

Both the fencers looked curiously at the old man, but he offered no further explanation.

"How d'ye mean?" asked one of them at length.

"There ain't no livin' thing on it. It's got a curse on it."

The men looked at one another meaningly, and then again at the old man. They forebore to make any further allusion to the Salt Lake, however, and the one who had spoken first, whom the other addressed as Duke, knocking the ashes out of his pipe, said:

"Well, I expect we'll be camped here some time, seein' that this is the only water for ten miles round. I hope we'll hit it right. We won't interfere with the sheep further than getting one now and again for rations. Them were the arrangements with the boss. We'll kill to-night if you'll put us on to a good fat 'un."

"All right," answered Scotty, slowly. "Take what one you've a mind to."

He watched the men while they clambered over the hurdle gates of the yard and secured one of the sheep. Then, when they had carried it away to kill, he retired to his hut to prepare his poor evening meal. Entering, he seated himself on the edge of the bunk, gazing through the open doorway at the Salt Lake, visible in all its hideous desolation. Then he rose and proceeded to busy himself in a dull, spiritless way with the wood ashes on the hearth. He fanned the still smouldering embers into a flame, and, filling a billy with water, put it on to boil. That done, he reseated himself on the bunk and gazed out once again at the desolate landscape spread out in front of him. He sat here for some time, silent and meditative, when a slight noise caused him to lower his gaze.

A little girl was peeping through his open doorway. Scotty looked at her without speaking, and the child returned his gaze with grave scrutiny. At last, emboldened by his silence, she stepped into the hut, and going up to him, laid her hand fearlessly on his.

"What's your name?" she asked.

Scotty recovered himself with a start at the sound of her voice. The dreary expanse of the Salt Lake was before his eyes, the thought of it in his mind, and the little figure, coming before him so suddenly, seemed in some way to have a mysterious connection with it.

He gazed at her with a sudden, newly awakened interest. She was a thin, delicate looking child, with a pale, clear complexion, and a pair, of deep, large, dark brown eyes. She was dressed in a dirty white frock, and her legs and feet were bare.

"What's your name?" she asked again, after a pause of silent observation.

"Scotty."

"My name's Lizzie—Lizzie Duke. I'm nearly 6. Do you think that's being quite old?"

"Yes," he answered mechanically.

"So do I. Mother don't, nor father. But I do. I want to be old."

"Do you? he said in the same way.

"Yes. Of course. I don't get any girls and boys to play with, so I want to be old—like mother. Have you seen mother?

"No."

"She's here, you know, with father and Larry. They've come to do the fencing, and I'm going to help them. Do you live here?" she continued, looking round.

"Yes."

"It's a nice place, but I like a tent better. Don't you? There's so much room in a big tent."

Her eyes wandered slowly round the humble dwelling place. It was poor enough, the whole structure being of bark and wood. The framework of saplings was visible from inside, the sheets of bark that did for walls and roof being fastened on the outside. The floor was simply the earth beaten hard, the open fireplace a protection of bark and clay. A rude table, made out of roughly adzed slabs, stood against one wall; opposite it was the bunk on which the old man was seated. A block of wood near the fireplace was the only substitute for chair or form, while over the bed was fastened a shelf, on which lay a few tattered volumes, a couple of tin pannikins and a few odds and ends. Hanging from the roof was a clean flour bag, tied tightly at the neck. It contained the shepherd's rations of tea, flour and sugar, and was placed there for protection from the ants. The hut was miserable enough, and hideous in the dingy brown of bark and wood and earthen floor, the only gleam of color being in the blue blankets that covered the bunk.

"I think I like a tent better," repeated the child, gazing at old Scotty gravely. "It's lighter, and there's more room. Don't you think so?"

But the old man did not seem to hear the question. He was gazing out through the open doorway on the darkening face of the Salt Lake. Almost wholly hidden by the crepuscular shadows, its saline incrustations still dully gleaming, it looked more grotesque, more solemn than in the daylight.

"What is that?" said the child, following his glance.

"It's the Salt Lake."

"What a funny place! It's all flat, and there aren't any trees on it. Why is it like that?"

"Because there's a blight on it that destroys everything that goes near it," he answered, almost unconscious of whom he was addressing.

"A blight? What's that?"

"A curse, that withers and chokes and sucks the life out of every living thing."

The child uttered a cry of fear.

"Oh, it's wicked to say that," she cried, "and I'm getting frightened. Why do you say such naughty things? They can't be true."

"Aye, but it's true enough," he answered, wagging his head solemnly. "It's done it to me, and, if you stop here, it'll be the same with you."

"No, it won't," she answered, breaking out into a fit of childish weeping, "and you're a bad man to frighten me so. I shall tell mother."

The old shepherd gazed at her in surprise. Tears were so new to him that the sight of them made him actually tremble. He was moved with a strange agitation. For the first time during all those years of loneliness a feeling of pity and tenderness thrilled him. A curious trembling took hold of him as he laid his hand tenderly on the girl's head and drew her to him, and in his own eyes glistened a moisture that the long, callous years had not seen before.

A weeping child had reopened the springs of human sympathy so long dried up.

Then half an hour later the mother came to look for her little daughter. She found the child in the old shepherd's hut. The billy had boiled itself out, the fire was low, the place was dark; but seated motionless on the bunk was old Scotty, with little Lizzie sound asleep in his arms,

(To be continued.)

DROLLERIES OF THE SCHOOL.

Putting Children on Tip-Toe to Reach the Top of the Tree.

Here are some notes made by a teacher, who has kindly placed them in our hands. They show that instruction in the public schools must be made to conform to common sense. Here are some of the children's exercises:

"There were some virgils who could tell whether any one was going to die. One of them married. It was not right for virgils to marry, so they put them in a basket on the Tiber. When they grew up they built Rome and restored the throne to their grandfather, Alba Longa."

Christ was crucified at Antioch, in Syria.

Christ was crucified in the 19th year of his age.

Christ was crucified nineteen years B. C.

Christ was born at David (Luke ii. 11).

Christ was crucified in the reign of the Roman Emperor Pharaoh.

He (Julius Cæsar) conquered all the known world—There was more known than when Augustus reigned—He crossed the Rubicon to Alexandria—He made a conspiracy against Rome, but was successful—He came into Spain and to Rome—At the Senate they pulled their cloaks around him and he said, "What Brutus! thou too Casca?" And in the year 27 B. C. in the 44th year of his reign and the 76th of his life he left a wife.

The fable of the "Fox and the Grapes" was read, with the exception of the moral. The pupils were asked to write the story and supply the moral.

A horse passing along saw some lucicious grapes hanging. He picked two then threw them down and went away saying "The grapes are sour." The moral is—he got the grapes.

Cleopatra was a very wicked woman. She was persecuted by Antony and died of the bight of an asp, or the prick of a poisonous needle, and then she found she had to go to Rome in chains.

Moore's "Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea" was read, and the cause of rejoicing explained, and the pupils were requested to write the substance of the stanza.

Moore has beautifully pictured in verse how Jehovah and his people escaped from Ferro by crossing a sea. He says thus sound the loud tymbal Jehovah has escaped from the army of Ferro by crossing the sea thus separating themselves from Ferro and his army by the sea; both men, horses and chariots of Ferro went down. When the tempest sounded over the sea the people cried Jehovah is free.

"Miss ——, I cannot understand the lesson."

"What is the matter?"

"I have looked out the word c-e-l-i-b-a-c-y in the dictionary, and I don't understand the lesson. It says the monks made a vow of celibacy—that means they musn't get married—but I don't see how that could be, for it says they were of great value to the land for (reading from the book) 'they raised nurseries and became excellent husbandmen.'"—Harper's Weekly.

Sam Jones Answers Questions.

A gentleman who recently met Sam Jones on a railway train repeats part of the conversation as follows:

Said I: "Adam and Eve were the first two people on earth. According to the Bible they had two sons—Cain and Abel. Cain slew Abel and then fled to the land of Nod and took unto himself a wife. Adam and Eve, the first Cain and Abel, next Cain fled. We understand from 'fled' that he ran and got away from his awful crime as quickly as his legs would carry him. Then," I continued, excitedly, "right in the same sentence the Bible says he took unto himself a wife. Where did she come from?" I sank back, thinking I had given him a poser.

His eyes twinkled, his lips parted in a smile.

"An' nary one of them preachers could tell you?" he asked.

"No, sir; not one."

"Well, he continued, "that's funny, for that's a mighty easy question." He smiled again, and said: "Why, Cain got his wife from his father-in-law."

I was done up.

"Where is hell, that you preachers talk so much about?" I asked.

"I dunno," he said. "I don't want to know. I ain't headin' that way. I'm going to let them fellers as are goin' thar find out."

"What's your idea of blacksiders?"

"Well," he said, "thar was a man walkin' along a country lane in Arkansas once with a pitchfork on his shoulder, and a very vicious dog jumped over the fence and made at him. He jabbed the pitchfork through the dog and impaled it to the earth. The dog's owner came runnin' out: 'What d'ye mean, sir,' he shouted, 'by stickin' yo' pitchfawk through my dog?' 'He was goin' to bite me,' said the other. 'Why didn't you hit him with the other end then?' 'Why didn't he come at me with the other end?' was the answer."

After I had ceased laughing the Rev. Mr. Jones said:

"Just like the dog, backsliders are goin' wrong end to and consequently get into trouble."—Kansas City Times.

This is Called "Business."

Bank President: Sorry, but I can't accommodate you; your paper is not good.

Indignant customer: I remember when you were a poor man, twenty years ago, I lent you $1,000 without security.

Bank President (pleasantly): I remember the circumstances, and I also remember how I wondered at your greenness. You probably have more sense now, and so have I. Good morning.—Philadelphia Call.

A Society Girl's Summer Outfit.

A society girl showed the other day her summer outing outfit. There were pale pink and green ribbed silks vests and silk stockings to match, and white china silk night gowns with lace frills. The latter are so like nothing on a hot summer night that one is glad to spend a superfluous $15 on each just to keep cool. The other sets were of fine linen cambric and nainsook with a narrow edge of lace on the neck, but a flounce on the bottom, by order of the extravagant wearer.—New York Letter.

One of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's whims is to wear nothing but white in the house. She is usually seen in a white satin Kate Greenaway robe, high-necked and long-sleeved.

EXPERTS WITH CHLOROFORM.

Swell Criminals who Administer Anæsthetics to their Victims.

The chloroformists, says M. Macé in his recently published book on the police department of Paris, may be justly considered the aristocracy of the criminal class. They are mostly recruited from the ranks of the best and most highly educated classes of society, and their favorite fields of operation are the railway carriages and the hotels. Their method of procedure in case of the former is as follows: They go to the railway terminus of one of the long lines, and wait near the ticket office until they catch sight of some traveller who, on opening his pocketbook to pay his fare, shows that it is well stocked. The chloroformist buys a ticket for the same destination, takes a seat in the same compartment, and, after getting into conversation, either asks his victim to join him in a lunch, which he produces from a well-filled basket, or offers him an excellent cigar. Both the lunch and cigar have been carefully "prepared" with a strong narcotic, and if either are accepted the unlucky traveller is soon plunged into a heavy stupor. The chloroformist then opens a little phial, which he generally keeps hidden inside his hat, and places it for a few moments under the nostrils of the sleeper, gently applying to the mouth at the same time a sheet of fine parchment, having the shape of a carnival mask, for the purpose of excluding fresh air.

The victim is thus quickly rendered wholly insensible, and the thief is able to commence his operations in perfect safety. He takes possession of the pocket-book and empties it of all its contents except a few notes of small value, and then replaces it in the pocket from which he has taken it, leaving the victim's jewellery and coined money untouched. Having removed the parchment mask from the face of the sleeper, he then leaves the train at the next big station. The traveller on awakening and finding himself alone in the compartment, instinctively looks to see if his watch and chain and coined money are all right, and on finding them so, does not usually take the trouble of investigating his pocket-book, so that the theft has a chance of remaining undiscovered for several days. Frequently, however, the victim does not awake at all, but dies from the effect of the anæsthetic. The authorities, finding themselves in the presence of a corpse which does not present the slightest traces of violence and with the money, papers and jewellery apparently undisturbed, can only attribute the death to natural causes, and as a rule do not insist on an autopsy. It is a very startling fact that cases of sudden death in railway compartments have become exceedingly numerous the past two years, and M. Macé is convinced that crimes of this nature will, owing to the very impunity by which they are attended, go on increasing from year to year.

Brilliant Definitions.

Gems of composition from aspiring London school teachers undergoing examination:

Cricket.—This game consists of six stumps, two bats and a ball. Nor should we omit the bails, which are four in number.

Walking.—My favorite walk is when I do not have far to go to it.

The Beautiful.—It is beautiful to sit upon a stone in the middle of hoary ocean.

Joan of Arc.—She was rather pious and very genteel.

Samson Agonistes.—Samson in agony. He dealt doles with the jawbone of a dead ass.

Monastery.—A place for monsters.

In the line from "Lady of the Lake"—"Fierce Roderick felt the fatal drain"—the last word was defined "a sewer or conduit."

Comments are unnecessary.—St. James' Gazette.

The Sweetest Girl in School.

"She's the sweetest girl in school!" enthusiastically exclaimed one young miss to another as they passed down the street together. "Edith is so kind and gentle and unselfish, every one likes her. And she has lovely golden hair and pretty eyes. Isn't it a pity her complexion is so bad; it spoils her looks. And then she has such dreadful headaches!" The girls skipped along, but it happened Edith's mother had heard what they said. It set her thinking. What could be done for those headaches and the rough, muddy complexion that was such a trial to her gentle daughter. She recalled what she had read of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and on the spur of the moment she slipped into a drug store and bought a supply. Edith took it faithfully, with the result that it cleared her disordered blood, relieved the headaches, made her skin soft, fair and rosy, and now she is not only the "sweetest girl in school," but the most beautiful.

The Range of Miss Abbott's Voice.

I asked Miss Abbott to tell me the range of her voice.

"I can sing three notes higher than any living prima donna, except Sembrich," she replied.

"And how high is that?" I asked her.

"To F altissimo. Listen," she added, and raising her head slightly, she sounded the note "a" above the staff lines, ran easily up the scale to C, and then with no apparent exertion struck C sharp, D, D sharp, E, and finally F, holding the last note long enough for me to turn to a piano, and, striking the same note, test the correctness of her voice.

I expressed delight at her performance, when she laughed and said: "You may be surprised when I add that I have transposed the score of 'Il Trovatore' up in order that I may sing it with greater ease."—Washington Post.

Was Willing.

When Vincent, the defaulting Treasurer of Alabama, was brought back he explained that he began the downward career which ended in his stealing $212,000 by gambling. He lost and lost, but kept on in hope of winning.

"Didn't you know," asked one, "that you only had about ten chances in a hundred of winning?"

"Oh, certainly," was the reply; "but being as it was some one else's money, I was perfectly willing to take the chances."

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE.

Royal Pageant on the Opening of the Palace by Her Majesty.

THE CEREMONY AND THE BUILDING.

A last (Sunday) night's London cable says: London was all ablaze with excitement yesterday afternoon, the occasion being the visit of the Queen for the purpose of opening the People's Palace at Mile End. The route selected for the Royal progress extended from Paddington station in the western portion of London to Mile End at the extreme eastern limit, a distance of about eight miles.

The buildings along the entire way were gaily decorated with banners, wreaths, colored trophies and flags, the Irish colors and the Stars and Stripes being conspicuous in many places. Whitechapel road presented in perspective from almost any point a long vista of triumphal arches. The carriages were escorted by a troop of cavalry. The line of the procession was guarded by 10,000 volunteers and 5,000 regular troops, comprising artillery, infantry and cavalry, all selected largely with a view to the brilliancy and contrast of their different uniforms as additions to the pageant.

The Lord Mayor and the municipal officers of the city of London went in carriages from the Mansion House to the city's boundary line at Holborn. They alighted and awaited the Queen, who was in an open carriage. At the Queen's approach the Lord Mayor received the pearl sword from the swordbearer. His Worship lowered the point and congratulated Her Majesty on coming to the most loyal city and presented the sword to the Queen. She took it and returned it. The Lord Mayor and retinue then placed themselves immediately in advance of the Queen's carriage and escorted her across the city to the eastern boundary at Aldgate. There they bade her farewell for a brief time, and repaired to the Mansion House to await Her Majesty's return.

The Queen proceeded to the People's Palace and ascended to the dais, where the Prince of Wales, the Marquis of Lorne, the Duke of Cambridge and the Archbishop of Canterbury were assembled, the choir singing the National Anthem. The Queen then received the gold key, Mme. Albani sang "Home, Sweet Home," and the Prince of Wales declared the People's Palace open. The announcement was greeted with a great flourish of trumpets, followed by a grand chorus rendering "Old Hundred." Subsequently the Queen laid the first stone of the foundation for the technical schools attached to the People's Palace. The Archbishop of Canterbury prayed for and blessed the people and pronounced the benediction.

Upon the conclusion of the ceremonies the Royal procession started on its return. By command of the Queen the longest route back was taken, the procession moving off into Burdette road, going thence along Commercial road to Aldgate. This deviation was ordered to please the citizens, who requested it. Arriving again at the city limits the Royal carriage was met by the Lord Mayor and civic officials and escorted back to the Mansion House, which the Queen entered in state for the first time in her life. The Lord Mayor wore crimson and ermine robes, only assumed when the sovereign visits him. He conducted the Queen to the tea room. The weather was fine all day. The Queen subsequently returned to Windsor. Her reception all along the route was most enthusiastic.

After the Queen and the Prince and Princess of Wales had taken tea at the Mansion House two gold teaspoons were missed. They were probably taken as mementoes of the occasion by some of the attendants.

The People's Palace is the first result of a bequest made nearly half a century since by Barber Beaumont. The Drapers' Society and others have contributed largely, nearly half a million dollars having been raised within a brief period. Mr. Walter Besant is credited with giving a powerful impulse to this generosity, having for its end intellectual improvement, rational recreation and the amusement of the people of the East end. Mr. Besant's literary genius and sympathetic studies of life in his novel, "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," got a just tribute in the Times and elsewhere. He had a place of honor in to-day's ceremony, and was presented to the Queen. Lord Rosebery, who has given $15,000, was Chairman of the Board of Stewards, and Sir Edmund Currie Chairman of the Board of Trustees.

As much of the palace as is already done consists of a large, finely proportioned hall, decorated in light blue, pink and gold, stone color predominating. An Italian coffered ceiling presents, in an oval arch, some stained glass which, besides the Royal arms and monograms and Prince of Wales feathers, depicts the escutcheons of Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Canada, Australia and the Star of India, giving an Imperial character to the general design of the roof. At the back, where meet the galleries, curved into bays, and supported by sculptured caryatides, are statues in Roman carton, which is used in the sculptures on the Hotel de Ville, in Paris.

Twenty-three great queens are represented beginning with Esther, of Bible fame, and ending with Victoria. Each statue occupies a niche between two Corinthian columns. These statues were executed by the sculptor Ver Heyden. It was he, it will be remembered, who, in the case of Belt vs. Lawes, was disbelieved by a jury when he said that he and not Belt had done certain sculpture in dispute.

Seance of Hypnotism.

The operator has rendered his subject insensible. He then drops molten tallow into each of his eyes, places a lighted match in each ear and then pours a bottleful of assafœtida into his mouth. "Tell me what you feel now?" he asks. "Unspeakable joy!"—Paris Figaro.

Sir Arthur Havelock, the Governor of Natal, has been instructed to proclaim Zululand, excepting that portion constituting the New Boer Republic, a British possession. The New Boer Republic occupies the western part of Zululand and does not reach the coast. Its area is about 1,800 square miles. The capital is Vryheid.

"It's all very well," said the gravedigger, "to advise a young man to begin at the bottom and work up, but in my business it ain't practicable."

A PENNY POST.

Proposal for a Universal Penny Postage Rate.

A London cable says: Hamilton Heaton, member of Parliament, who is advocating a universal penny post, has addressed a letter to the Postmaster-General of Great Britain, from which it appears that a penny post could be established between Great Britain and America even without any increase in the volume of correspondence. His letter shows that in the year ending the 31st of December, 1876, there were despatched from the United Kingdom to the United States 116,444 lbs. of letters and 1,031,908 lbs. of newspapers and other articles. During the year ending the 31st of September, 1886, no less than 337,855 lbs. of letters and 2,780,625 lbs. of newspapers and other articles were despatched, so that the quantity of mails has more than doubled in these ten years. The total sum paid for the sea conveyance of all mails sent to New York in the year ending the 30th of September, 1886, was £99,927. This year the cost, under the new arrangement, will be £80,000, but the income will be £197,979, against an expenditure of £80,000, showing a profit of £117,979. An increase being certain in this as in former years, Mr. Heaton takes the actual profit roundly as £120,000. From this £20,000 may fairly be deducted as the cost of taking the mails to Cork and putting them on board the steamers, so that the net profit becomes £100,000. Now, if the 337,855 pounds of letters were carried for 1d. instead of 2½d. per half-ounce (again reckoning thirty-five to the pound), they would yield only £49,428 of income, a decrease of £73,059, so there would still be a profit of £26,941. But of course that calculation assumes that the number of letters would not increase, whereas they would not improbably multiply tenfold.

A MURDEROUS CAT.

It Tries to Suck the Breath of a Young Child and Fights With the Mother.

A Pittsburg, Pa., despatch says: Mrs. Atkinson, of Alleghany, entered her nursery yesterday and was horrified at what she saw. The family cat had attacked her 6-year-old child, who was lying sick on the bed. The cat was sitting on the breast of the boy. Each of its fore paws was firmly fixed in the child's cheek and its mouth was glued to that of the boy. He was struggling as much as he could, and with one hand was trying to push the cat away. As soon as the animal saw the lady it showed fight. It scratched the child's face in a terrible manner, and springing upon the mother bit her on the shoulder. She finally beat it off by stabbing it with a pair of shears. The mother found the child unconscious. Her cries brought assistance and after restoratives had been administered the child was able to talk. He knew nothing except that the cat had wakened him up, trying, as he said, "to take my breath." The little fellow is in a precarious condition.

Late News Notes.

It is believed that the Manitoba Government will refuse to entertain Mr. Sutherland's proposition to issue Provincial debentures in aid of the Hudson's Bay Railway, and that a collision between the Opposition and the Government over the question is probable.

Canon Wilberforce, of England, now travelling in this country, is a man of compact build, about five feet nine inches in height. His face is cleanly shaven and his features are rather sharp. He has a high, retreating forehead, about which clusters abundant hair, rapidly growing gray. His face is extremely intellectual and his eyes are clear and penetrating. He always wears a blue ribbon in the lapel of his coat to signify his advocacy of the temperance cause.

Lieut.-Col. Fynmore, of the Royal Marines, whose death at the age of 93 has lately been recorded, was the last surviving officer who served at Trafalgar. On that glorious day he was a middy on the Africa, a seventy-four of Collingwood's squadron. During the battle Capt. Digby found him at work on the most exposed part on the upper deck and ordered him to a safer place below. "O, sir," replied the little fellow, "I could not do that. What would my father say?"

The Way of the Girls.

Girls all have a kind of secret code. You know how it is. You are introduced to a girl. She invites you to call. You call. She invites you to a party. You go. She introduces you to a whole circle. That whole circle discusses you, calmly apportions you to three or four; they gradually reduce themselves to one. Then you're lost. She wearies of you and you get kicked out of the circle. Well, all of those girls have discussed every one of your young men friends the some way. This is what a cynical girl told me. I don't know of my own knowledge. But talk of trades unions and Knights of Labor! Their organization dwindles into absolute crudeness when compared with the U. O. M. G. (United Order of Marriageable Girls.)—Chicago Tribune.

A Prohibition Incident.

A tall, lank, red-nosed man came into a country store with a large jug, which he placed on the counter with the remark: "I want a gallon of rum—baby's sick."—Boston Gazette.

Good Boy.

"I see," said the new minister, meeting one of our best young men, "that you smoke cigarettes."

"Yes," replied the noble youth, "I promised my mother that I would never use tobacco in any form."—Burdette.

The death is announced of Lieut.-Col Osborne Smith in England.

A Missouri girl waved her hand at a stranger and in three days they were married. Two days later the young wife waved a flat-iron at her husband and the next evening he came home waving a divorce. What are the wild waves saying?—Burlington Free Press.

Krupp is again making what will be the largest gun in the world. It comes in good season. The mosquito promises to be more like a winged mastodon than ever, judging from the size of limb and voice of the advance guard.—Memphis Avalanche.

CHANGES IN MUNICIPAL LAW

Which Affect the Electors of City, Town and Township.

The following is a summary of the more important changes made in the municipal law at the late session of the Legislature:

The qualifications of mayors, reeves, aldermen and councillors in the various municipalities is reduced to $200 freehold or $400 leasehold in villages; $400 or $800 in townships; $600 or $1,200 in towns, and $1,000 or $2,000 in cities.

In municipalities where electors are disqualified unless they have paid their taxes by the 14th of December, those on the defaulters' list are to be permitted to vote if they have paid their taxes any time before they vote, and produce a certificate to that effect.

Section 138 of the Municipal Act is amended to make it clear that an elector must vote for Mayor in the polling division he resides in, or, if not qualified there, then where he first votes in the municipality.

In the case of a tie in the election of Warden, the municipality having the greatest equalized assessment is to have the casting vote, instead of the one having the greatest number of ratepayers.

In case an Auditor appointed by the County Council refuses or neglects to act, the head of the Council is given authority to nominate another.

A change is made in the returns to be made to the Government, so that Auditors and Treasurers transmit information to the Bureau of Industries.

Where from money on hand, or increased value of property liable to assessment, it is not necesary to raise the full rate under a by-law, Councils are given power to pass a by-law reducing the rate for future years, instead of having to pass a by-law annually, as at present.

The powers Councils have hitherto had in regulating size and number of doors, etc., in churches, theatres, halls or other buildings used for places of worship, public meetings or places of amusement, are extended to hospitals, schools, colleges or buildings of a like nature; and the strength of walls, beams, joists and their supports are to be subject to regulation; and power is given to compel production of plans of all such buildings for inspection.

When a polling place, fixed by by-law, cannot be obtained, or is found unsuitable, the Clerk is given power to choose the nearest suitable building available for the purpose, giving due notice to the voters.

The Council of an incorporated village is given power to purchase land for a cemetery within the village, on approval of the Local Board of Health, ratified by the Provincial Board.

Power is given to charge a license fee on circuses, etc., up to $500, instead of $100, as at present.

By-laws changing name of streets are made subject to approval of the County Judge.

Power is given to license and regulate shops where tobaccos and cigars are sold, and to prevent the sale to children under 14, unless on the written order of parents or guardians.

Where an action is brought to recover damages from a municipal corporation on account of an obstruction, excavation or opening in a street or bridge, the corporation is to have a remedy over against the person who caused the obstruction or opening.

The legislation of last year on the "bridge" question is repealed, and the law is left as it was previously. Where a Council, by a two-thirds vote, decide that the constructing or erecting of any bridge, culvert or embankment, is for the general benefit, and that it would be inequitable to assess the whole cost on the locality, they may pass a by-law and borrow money to pay one half by the municipality.

Two hundred electors in towns, or a hundred in villages and townships, are given power by petition to compel Councils to submit by-laws for the construction of waterworks.

Ten Rules for Bathers.

1. When suffering from violent excitement do not bathe.
2. When suffering from suddenly occurring or from continued illness, do not bathe.
3. After sleepless nights or excessive exercise, do not bathe, unless you first rest a few hours.
4. After meals, and especially after taking alcoholic liquors, do not bathe.
5. Take your time on the way to the bathing house or beach.
6. On arriving at the beach inquire about depth and currents of water.
7. Undress slowly, but then go directly into the water.
8. Jump in head first, or, at least, dip under quickly, if you do not like to do the first.
9. Do not remain too long in the water, especially if not very robust.
10. After bathing, rub the body to stimulate circulation, and then dress quickly; then take moderate exercise.

—In dealing with a cellar in springy ground, the first thing to be done to make it dry, says the Sanitary Engineer, is to provide some chance for the water to run away before getting into the cellar. This may be done by laying a two-inch tile drain pipe in a trench dug all around the foundation outside of the walls, and from one foot to two feet below the cellar floor. Put this pipe together without mortar and cover it with cobblestones to keep out the dirt and sand. If it be not practicable to lay the drain outside it may be laid inside of the cellar-walls, directly in the cellar floor; but the operation of such a drain is less efficient. The back-filling of the cellar walls should be porous enough to allow the water to go directly into the drain.

The wharves at Montreal are still submerged, causing considerable delay and inconvenience to shipping. The river is still rising.

Mr. Gladstone's friends have revived Carlyle's characteristic criticism of the fleshy poet who recently grossly misrepresented the great statesman: "Swinburne, Algernon Swinburne, wishes to be introduced to me. What, that young man who sits in a cesspit and adds to its filth? No, thank you."

Scales are now made so delicate that the signature on a piece of paper with a soft lead pencil can be weighed.

A coquette is like a war veteran—She goes through many engagements.

ENGLAND'S LAST JUBILEE.

George the Third's Absence from the Royal Fetes.

At Windsor the day was passed in the humdrum, staid style which one would have expected under Farmer George. A whole ox was roasted, and the Queen with four dandified sons and one rosy-cheeked daughter, went to inspect and taste this delicacy. The cooks wore new blue suits and white silk stockings, which appear to have created an immense excitement among the good people of Windsor. They cheered Her Majesty, the silk stockings, the bowing Princes and the roasting ox, and every one was exceedingly jubilant, says a writer in the May "Cornhill." The one touching incident in this somewhat prosaic picture is the absence of the good old King himself. It was only a year, remember, before his insanity was again openly declared, and the courageous little Queen had probably good reasons of her own for keeping him not only from the metropolis, but also as far as she could from the Windsor gossips upon such an exciting day as that of the jubilee. He was visible at chapel, and again when they fired a feu de joie in the Long walk and he rode past the men and responded silently to their salute, but this was all. Even at the grand fete which Queen Charlotte gave at Frogmore, where for once the etiquette-loving woman laid aside her notions of what was permissible, and invited not only the nobility but the tradesmen and their wives; and where for once, too, her sons merged their horror of the slowness of the court in hearty enjoyment of the novelty—even at Frogmore the King did not put in an appearance. This unexplained absence is the one touch which redeems the whole useless and resultless pageant; and the thought of the old man wandering alone through the rooms of his palace holds more poetry than any or every grandiloquent verse which was written for the occasion and echoed across the dinner tables of enthusiastic and toast-loving subjects.

SOMETHING LIKE A SENSATION.

A Hypnotised French Young Lady's Frolic with the King of Beasts.

A Paris cable says: A highly sensational hypnotic experiment was achieved at a private performance yesterday at the Folies Bergere. The curtain rose and revealed a large cage containing three lions. Signor Giacometti, the lion tamer, then entered the cage and made the lions jump about and roar. Then a pretty young lady in a white dress appeared and was hypnotised by M. de Torcy according to the methods of Dr. Charcot. De Torcy and his hypnotised young lady entered the cage, the animals being kept in check by the lion tamer. De Torcy compelled the young lady to fall on the lions' backs, and to place her head in a lion's mouth, held open for the purpose by the lion tamer. The seance wound up by the young lady—who had been put in a rigid acute cataleptic state—resting with her head on one stool and her feet on another, while the lions jumped over her. One lion placed its paws on the patient's thighs and caught in its mouth a piece of meat attached to a cord, thereby firing a pistol fastened to the roof of the cage. The lions all jumped about and roared furiously, and in the midst of the excitement De Torcy brought the patient out of the hypnotic trance and removed her from the cage. The Prefect of Police has not yet allowed this performace to be given in public, but the private performance was so vociferously applauded that it is believed the restriction will soon be removed.

Red Men With Sky-blue Eyes.

Along the Red River Valley is to be found one of the most curious populations to be found anywhere in the world. I refer to the half and quarter bands, the descendants of the Scotchmen who came to this country in the days of the Hudson's Bay Company and their Indian wives. They present a most peculiar combination of the Scotch and Indian types, the dark skin and high cheekbones of the Indian with the light hair and blue eyes of the Scotchman. Physically, they are a splendid race, being lithe, tall and muscular, and are the best and most enduring runners I ever saw, travelling hundreds of miles through the woods in the dead of winter with incredible rapidity. All speak French, but the broad Scotch burr is perceptible in their pronunciation, making their language a most remarkable one. They are famous hunters and trappers, and, when not drunk, very peaceable. They took no part in the recent uprising in the Northwest, as they have no affiliations with the French half-breeds or Indians, but form a little community by themselves. As voyageurs they are unequalled and are the happiest beings I ever saw. They do not take kindly to life in villages or towns and are fast moving away before the advance of civilization, but I fear that those who take their place will not have their virtues. —Washington Star.

A Division of Labor.

He—Where are you going, my pretty maid?

She—I'm going a-milking, sir (she said).

He—Can I not help you, my pretty maid?

She—You can work the pump handle, sir (she said).—From Puck.

Science shows that a man is 90 per cent water. That is why it never does any good to tell a bore to dry up.

Always stranded on the same rock—A baby who has but one cradle.

—The reason of "the sun putting out a fire" is thus explained: At the time of day when the sun shines into a room the fire is often allowed to get dull, and the sun's rays warm and rarefy the air in the room as much as the fire warms the air passing over it up the chimney. Hence the draught ceases, and the fire goes out. To remedy the inconvenience open the door or the window to let the warm air out and cold in.

The Government telegraph line in the Northwest is being built west from Battleford to Edmonton with iron poles.

A New York young lady of fashion who received a little silver flatiron as a german favor asked what it was. She never saw the real article.

In London the other day the Prince of Wales christened the $5,000,000 diamond from the Cape of Good Hope "The Imperial." It outshines the Koh-i-noor.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

Owing to grave charges alleged against the Montreal city police patrol, the force has been disbanded.

F. Payne, of Southwold, while forking hay, fell from a mow, seriously injuring his hip and side and dislocating his wrist.

Intelligence has been received in Ottawa that the Batoche half-breeds have refused a load of seed grain, and will not cultivate their land this year.

Last evening Bishop Cleary, of Kingston, in his sermon, denounced strongly the wording of an advertisement announcing the visit of certain American doctors to that city.

Mrs. Aurelia Tazer, of Malahide, aged 70, while crossing a field to a neighbor's on Friday placed her pipe in her pocket. Her dress caught fire, and when found her clothes and hair were burned off and her flesh burned to a crisp. She cannot survive.

J. Jacques, of Cornell station, visited St. Thomas on Friday, leaving four small children with a hired girl. They found a revolver, and one boy, aged 8, shot his brother, aged 5, in the head. The ball has been extracted, and hopes of the child's recovery are entertained.

At a barn raising at John Lyle's, Southwold, on Friday evening, a timber fell from the top of the building. James Lawton and Wm. Somerville, who were underneath, ran to escape. The timber grazed the head of the former, but Somerville tripped and fell, the timber falling across him. He sustained serious and painful though not fatal injuries.

A team of horses belonging to John Fisher, of Murray, ran away on Saturday morning on Coleman street, Belleville. The waggon upset and a three-months'-old child, which Mrs. Fisher carried in her arms, was so seriously hurt that its recovery is doubtful. Mrs. Fisher was badly bruised about the face.

Samuel Macdonald, of Muirkirk, was taking bricks out of an old well. When eight feet down the suface caved in, carrying him half way to the bottom, where he remained wedged, surrounded to the neck in loose earth, with fifteen feet of water beneath, till a neighbor gave the alarm. The village turned out en masse, and with great difficulty rescued him from going to the bottom.

A a conference of citizens in Montreal on Friday to discuss the question of protection from floods, a resolution urging the city to grant at once the $178,000 for the construction of a temporary dyke was adopted, and an influential deputation was appointed to proceed to Ottawa to lay before the Government other resolutions adopted by the meeting for the better protection of the city.

The freshet in the river St. John, N. B., is falling rapidly and Fredericton is out of danger. The gas works and waterworks will resume operations in a few days. At Woodstock the waterworks and electric light stations are also once more free from the flood. The suffering along the flooded district in Sunbury and Queen's is still intense. Communication with the high land has been opened by steam ferry boats, and relieve parties are actively succoring those most in distress. The New Brunswick Railway will start trains on schedule time to-morrow, and unless heavy rain falls there will be no further interruption. The damage to the Intercolonial about Rothesay will reach $20,000, as a large piece of the track will have to be rebuilt. Latest estimates put the total loss at considerably over a million dollars.

Several earthquake shocks have been felt at Smyrna during the past week.

Sheik Abou Henda has been exiled from Turkey for conspiring to dethrone the Sultan. He was for a long time an intimate adviser of the Sultan.

The proceeds from Saturday's sales of the French Crown jewels amounted to 672,000f. The agent of the Duc d'Orleans bought a chain of brilliants for 181,250f. Mr. Gall, an American, bought a cincture of brilliants for 132,500f.

A striking Methodist revival is proceeding in Saxony, having its centre in Schwarzenberg, where the Methodists have collected funds for the erection of a large church. They have established a chapel at Scheneeberg, and are sending preachers throughout the country.

Empress Augusta left yesterday for Baden. The Emperor goes to Kiel on June 9th to be present at the ceremonies attending the beginning of work on the North Sea and Baltic Canal. Prince Bismarck, a number of the members of the Bundesrath and the President of the Reichstag will accompany him. The Emperor, after his stay at Kiel, will take a course of water at Ems. He will not revisit Gastien in the autumn.

Professor Goldwin Smith is again expressing in the London Times his views on things Canadian and American. Commercial men, the chiefs of industry on the American continent, are in his opinion equal in probity and every moral quality, while superior in energy and enterprise, to their rivals in any other country. But the American and Canadian politician is in most cases a political slave. The Irish vote is largely responsible for this. The Irishman is the worst of citizens in the United States, and Canada is becoming politically an Irish Republic. The moral of Professor Goldwin Smith's long letter is: Pay no attention to anti-coercion resolutions passed by servile politicians or corrupt Legislatures. They do not represent real American or Canadian opinion.

An Imaginative Visitor.

Councillor Butler, of Goderich, in describing his recent visit to London, Ont., said at a recent meeting of the Council: "Down in London they run the Crooks' Act by electricity. The bar-rooms are lit up by electric light, and at 11 o'clock p.m. the light is shut off, all around is thrown into darkness and the fellows in the bar-room become paralyzed. (Loud laughter.)" The councillor's guide is yet to be heard from.

Two French men-of-war are reported to have been sent to Hayti to enter an official protest against the seizure of Tortuga Island by the British Government in settlement of its claim of about one million dollars against Hayti.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S, - FLESHERTON.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

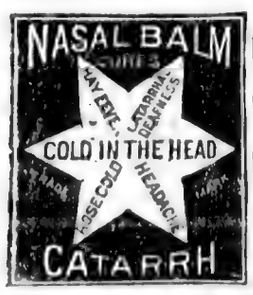
FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

304-320.



A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

J. B. SLOAN

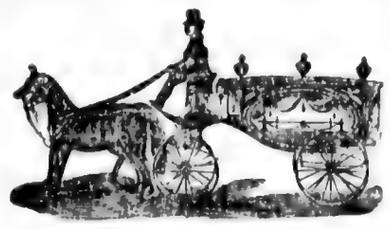
Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W. M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - - ONT.

FARM to RENT.

ADJOINING Holley's farm, Artemesia. About 80 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Frame house, frame barn, framestable Small orchard. Well watered. Plowing nearly all done in the fall. For terms and full particulars apply to ROGER LEVER, Flesherton.

Also a Farm for Sale.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable a never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it in NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance $1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, MAY. 26, 1887.

In glancing over a miscellaneous pile of pamphlets in our office the other day, our eyes fell on one, the title page of which read as follows,—"Papers read on Sabbath School Work before the Sabbath School Convention of the Owen Sound District of the Methodist Church, held at Owen Sound in May, 1884. Published by Request of the Convention." One of these papers caught our attention. It was entitled, "The Relation and Duty of the Church to the Sabbath School. By Rev. W. A. Strongman, Ph. D." It struck us we had read or heard it read before. Let us see—ah, yes! to be sure! The self-same "paper," word for word, letter for letter, was read in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Tuesday evening, May 17th, 1887! What a remarkable co-incidence!!!

The many warm friends of Prof. Morgan and Miss Fairy will be pleased to learn that they have been carrying city audiences by storm with their beautiful singing since their visit to Flesherton last winter. The Prof. and Fairy sang at a Temperance meeting in the city of Guelph, on Monday evening of last week, before a very large and select audience. The Guelph Daily Herald thus speaks of the singing:

"The earlier part of the evening was devoted to a musical program, consisting of solos and duets, by Prof. F. H. Morgan, a blind artist, and his daughter, Little Fairy, a bright child of eleven years. This portion of the proceedings excited great surprise and admiration. Few were prepared for such a treat. While Prof. Morgan pleased, Fairy delighted everyone with her singing. She is possessed of phenomenal powers of song. Her voice is of marvellous compass and sweetness and under thorough control."

OUR ARTIST'S CORNER.

This man does not smoke—in fact he never had a pipe in his mouth in his life. He abhors the very thought of the "nauseous weed." He says the use of tobacco makes people sallow—and ugly! Of course he is a beauty himself! Just closely observe his photograph given above and you will be ready to acknowledge as much.

"Young Climax."

This noted prize-taking young Trotting Stallion, the property of James T. Wilson, Esq., Egremont, will make the season of 1887 as given below. "Young Climax" is a handsome animal, four years old, sired by the celebrated stallion, "Valentine," dam by the equally noted "Old Warambia," (imported). It will thus be seen that he comes from a long line of illustrious ancestors. Following is the route:—

Monday, will proceed to John Weir's for one hour, thence to Albert Bell's, Egremont for noon, thence to Peter Reid's for night.

Tuesday will proceed to John Dobson's for noon, thence to Noble Wilson's for one hour, thence home to his own stable for night.

Wednesday, will proceed to John Batchelor's for noon, thence to the McCullough House, Dundalk, for night.

Thursday, will proceed to Mr. Scott's, Proton, for noon, thence home for night.

Saturday, will proceed to Lamont's Hotel, Priceville, afternoon, thence home to his own stable.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf)

BEAR YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to	4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 85 to	0 90
Spring Wheat	0 85	0 90
Barley	0 00	0 00
Oats	0 25	0 25
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 12½	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 10	0 10
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 75	5 75
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	20	20
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 35	0 35
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton, - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED Dr CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is composed from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton

Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

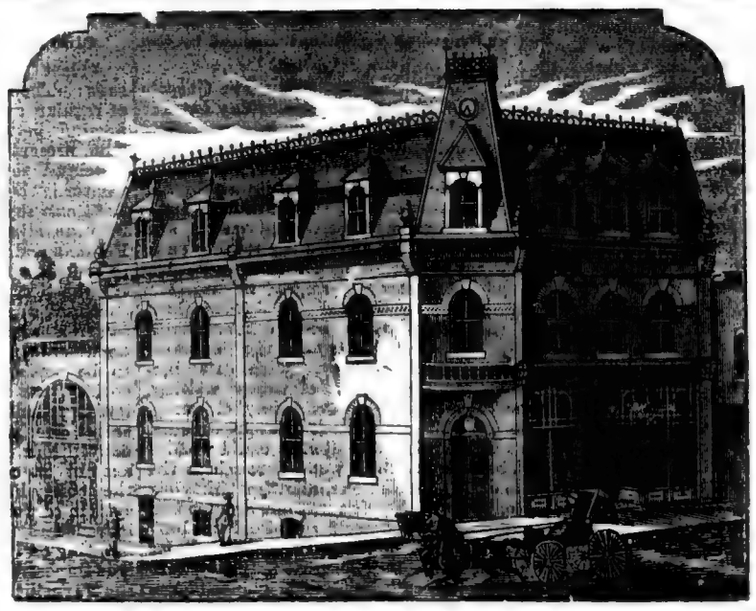
CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

THE LARGEST GENERAL STORE



IN THE COUNTY OF GREY!

OWING TO HAVING MADE EXTRAORDINARY

Large Purchases of TWEEDS!

For the Spring and Summer trade, in anticipation of the certain advance in manufacturer's prices. Our stock is still heavy and we propose to REDUCE it in June by OFFERING LIBERAL DISCOUNTS!

—WE OFFER—

All-Wool Tweeds From 30 Cents per Yard up!

A Man's Suit Length for $2!

We have a range of 150 patterns to select from, embracing the Newest Styles and finest textures made for this season's trade. Our

READY-MADE CLOTHING, HATS AND CAPS!

And GENTS' FURNISHING Department is now admitted unequalled in this County. We carry a large range of Children's Clothing.

In extent and variety our General Dry Goods stock exceeds that of any former season and we offer Extra Values in Prints and Dress Goods!

OUR MILLINERY DEPARTMENT is crowded with customers daily. All are pleased who come to buy, and the general Verdict of the Ladies is, "A splendid stock and prices low!" All departments, including

Boots and Shoes, General Groceries, Hardware, Glass, China, Crockery, and Wall Papers,

Are constantly kept assorted with seasonable goods and can give special low quotations for building contracts for NAILS, GLASS & other Hardware.

We buy Butter, Eggs, Wool and Grain for Cash.

And to those who prefer trade our extensive stock offers the most favorable conditions to our customers for profitable exchange.

We thank our old customers, with many of whom we have had constant and most pleasant business relations for over twenty years, and we ask their continued confidence and patronage. We solicit a trial from new customers. We are here to serve the public to the best of our ability, and our experience, judgement, time and means will be devoted to that end.

M. RICHARDSON & CO.

FLESHERTON, May 25th, 1887.

O'BRIEN ON LANSDOWNE.

The Home Ruler's Terrible Arraignment of the Governor.

WHY HE COMES TO CANADA.

A last (Wednesday) night's Montreal despatch says: Mr. O'Brien lectured to-night in Albert Hall before a very large audience. Representatives from Ottawa and Kingston were present. At the outset the lecturer said he had come to address the people of Canada on the subject of Irish evictions. It was because the humble homes of the poor tenantry of Luggacurran were at that moment desolate, and why? Because the man who is responsible for these desolate homes, these evicted and cruelly suffering people, to-day held the highest position in Canada. He was sorry to have to come to this land with the cruel story of the wrongs and sufferings of the afflicted tenantry of Luggacurran. He was but a humble citizen; Lord Lansdowne was a rich and powerful Lord. Where else were they to turn for help and sympathy if not to the people of this fair land? The Irish tenantry were an unarmed people, while Lord Lansdowne had thousands of armed soldiers and armed policemen to fulfil the cruel work of eviction in the fair valley of Luggacurran, and thus to drive the aged and infirm and helpless babes to the ditch, the wayside or starvation. Even at that moment the Government were endeavoring to pass a Bill to prevent them having a peaceable organization for mutual help, or for even making public to the world the story of Ireland's wrongs. To whom then should the people of Ireland turn, if not to their fellow-countrymen in Canada, who can alone save them by the might of their opinion from a fate equal to that of slavery in its worst and most degrading form. He had not come to appeal to the passions, but to the reason and humanity of the free and liberty-loving people of Canada. It was the Canadian Parliament that in 1879 voted £20,000 to buy bread for the starving women and children—starving in the midst of that beautiful and fertile land. This must never happen again. Charles Stewart Parnell said that never again would he go begging alms for the victims of landlordism. This time they did not ask for £20,000, but desired Canadians to know the use which Lord Lansdowne makes of the £20,000 he receives from them, and if it were found he had been making a bad use of it to ask them to pass their condemnation on their acts. The Canadian Parliament struck at the root of the evil in Ireland when they passed the resolution in favor of Irish Home Rule. Even recently the Parliament of Canada had endeavored to stand between the Irish people and coercion, as they did between them and starvation long ago. Personally, Mr. O'Brien had no ill-feeling against Lord Lansdowne, but the Irish people could not be content to lie down like whipped hounds at his feet without telling to the world the story of their wrongs. The day that the condemnation of the Canadian people is passed on the acts of Lord Lansdowne that day will have nerved the arm of William Ewart Gladstone in his great battle for the right of suffering Ireland. It was not his intention to make any personal attack on Lord Lansdowne. He would not call up the ghostly memories, but he would tell how Lord Lansdowne was laying waste that fine estate and carrying out the work of depopulation as if the Angel of Death had knocked at the door of each humble cabin, and still the processes were not half served. If Lord Lansdowne or his agents were let alone, there was not a man, woman or child on the estate of Luggacurran but would be banished from the houses of their fathers and either compelled to starve on the roadside or seek homes beyond the sea. Mr. O'Brien then read extracts from the Freeman's Journal, which described terrible eviction scenes. In the four days the work of eviction lasted on the Lansdowne estates 120 persons had been turned from their homes into the roadside. Old men and women of 80 and helpless babes only a few weeks old suffered alike, and this too in the severe weather of March, and in the face of a pitiless hail and rain storm. These scenes were witnessed by the speaker, and he had seen a Catholic priest, Father F. Meagher, and Mr. McBride take off their coats and give them to cover the shivering babes at their mothers' breasts. It was because of such scenes that he looked to the people of Canada for their condemnation of Lord Lansdowne. It was Canadian money that paid the officers who carried out these cruel evictions. Lord Lansdowne had tried to explain by interviews in the press that these people owed a year's rent. They only owed half a year's rent, and the law said that a whole year must be owed before a tenant could be evicted. The other half year's rent was called the hanging gale. This was simply a lawyer's fiction, and had been instituted years and years ago, in the early days of the century, to enable the other landlords to evict their tenants whenever they would be half a year behind in their payments. The tenants of the Lansdowne estate were the most punctual and peaceful in the whole of Ireland. Not a murder had been committed in the vicinity of Luggacurran for years. The only crime of which the people were accused was wishing for some reduction in the rack rent. This was a reduction of 30 per cent., which was even less than Lord Cowper and the Land Commission had offered on other estates, and these very reductions had been approved of by Lord Lansdowne. The tenants on the Lansdowne estates were of two classes. The first were leaseholders, who were not as yet entitled to go into the courts, and the other class were the judicial tenants, who have already had their rents fixed by law. The leaseholders asked for a reduction of 30 per cent. If these tenants were free to go into the Land Courts, as the Government propose to allow them, they would, according to the decision of the Land Commission, get a reduction of 40, 50 or 70 per cent. The speaker then referred to the estate of Lord Castledown, where two tenants had been given a reduction of 45 per cent., and it should be remembered this had not been made by the "Plan of Campaign" but by the Land Commission. The speaker declared that he had thus shown out of the months of the Government and the Land Commission that the object of Lord Lansdowne and his agents was to crush the tenants and drive them from their farms and not to give them any just reduction. The speaker said that he would say a few words about judicial rents, but he found it hard without passion to characterise the arrogance that Lord Lansdowne had shown towards these unfortunate people. In spite of the Commission he had refused to reduce the rents a single farthing, and he is fast transforming Luggacurran into a wilderness. Since the Land Commission had fixed the rents the earning power of the tenants had been reduced fully 40 per cent. The speaker quoted a number of the landlords who had reduced their rents, and, continuing, he said that the only one who had not complied with these just demands was Lord Lansdowne, and he, too, must be compelled to reduce the rents. Mr. O'Brien then quoted from the statement made in the Imperial House of Commons. He also referred to the acts of Mr. Townsend Trench, who was the agent of Mrs. Adair as well as of Lord Lansdowne. On the very day that he had collected the rents from the tenants of Luggacurran without permitting any reduction, he had given the tenants on the adjoining estate a reduction of 15 per cent. What was the Plan of Campaign? It was an organization of the oppressed, who would stand side by side like soldiers in battle until the victory was won. The time would come when there would be no more fear of the crow-bar brigade to turn the fertile valleys of Luggacurran into desolate waste. In conclusion, Mr. O'Brien asked their sympathy with a suffering people. He promised them that when the great work begun by Charles Stewart Parnell and Gladstone was accomplished and the happy hour came when once more a free and untrammelled Irish Parliament could assemble in College Green, they would have the prayers and heartfelt gratitude of the Irish people.

A resolution was passed condemning Lord Lansdowne's actions.

The meeting was most orderly and no hostile demonstrations were offered at any time through the day or evening.

THE ARMY BIG GUNS.

The Duke of Connaught Gets Leave of Absence After a Grumble.

A London cable says: In the House of Commons yesterday Sir John Gorst, Parliamentary Secretary to the India Office, moved the second reading of the Bill granting leave of absence to the Duke of Connaught, commander of the forces in India, in order that he might attend the jubilee festivities.

Mr. Lewis Dillwyn, member for Swansea, the uncompromising doyen of the old school of Radicals, moved to reject the motion. He said there was a strong feeling in the country against the appointment of exalted personages to positions of command over the heads of others. If appointments were to be given on account of relationship to the Throne, the persons so appointed ought to be under the same conditions that applied to others.

Sir John Swinburne, member for Lichfield, a retired captain of the Royal Navy, and a Liberal, whose late election was left entirely in the hands of a bona fide workingman, seconded the motion. He condemned the system under which royalties had the choice of the best places in the army and navy without having passed through the different grades. There was the Duke of Cambridge, now Field Marshal, who had never served either as ensign, lieutenant, captain, major or lieutenant-colonel.

The Speaker, interrupting, said the member was travelling beyond the question. The Bill only concerned the return of the Duke of Connaught.

Sir John Swinburne, continuing, said it would be a graceful act on the part of the Duke of Connaught to retire in order that some distinguished officer might take his place. There was an enormous amount of ineffective service and waste of money in consequence of exalted persons holding high rank.

The Speaker here ruled Sir John Swinburne out of order.

Mr. Labouchere denounced the Bill as obsequious and servile.

A division was taken, resulting in a vote of 318 for and 45 against the Bill.

The New Brunswick Floods

A St. John, N. B., despatch says: A heavy gale last night intensified the effects of the floods along the St. John river. The swollen tide swept away hundreds of barns and houses through Sunbury, Queen's and King's Counties. Nerepis bridge, the longest in the Province, was carried away this morning, one piece four hundred feet long floating down almost to St. John. Five thousand cords of firewood have been swept away in Queen's County alone. Fredericton is in darkness to-night, and special policemen are patrolling her streets to guard against fire. The flood to-day submerged the Intercolonial track near Rothesay and all freight trains are cancelled. The Quebec express left to-night and crossed in safety, but with the present wind a big washout is feared. Communication by rail with the United States is still suspended. The floods are the most destructive ever known, and the loss will reach over one million dollars in the St. John valley alone.

A Business Homily.

"James," said the milkman to his new boy, "d'ye see what I'm a doin' of?"

"Yes sir," replied James; "you're a-pourin' water in the milk."

"No, I'm not, James; I'm a-pourin' milk in the water. So if anybody arsks you if I put water in my milk, you tell e'm no. Allers stick to the truth, James; cheatin' is bad 'nough, but lyin' is wuss."—Harper's Bazar.

Interpreting the Scriptures.

"Mamma," said Flossie, who had been to church for the first time, where she had listened with more or less attention to the sermon, "I know what the minister meant by 'children's children.'"

"Yes?" said mamma.

"Yes; he meant dolls."

Reasoning from Analogy.

A scientist explains that tight hats cause baldness. There is many a young man, however, who never wears his hat on his upper lip, and who yet knows that his lip remains presistently bald.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HER MAJESTY'S RECEPTION.

Scenes at the Queen's Third Jubilee Drawing-Room in London—Dresses Worn by Ladies Present—Beautiful Creations of Dressmaking Talent Ruined by the Crowd.

A London cablegram says: The Queen's third Jubilee drawing-room to-day did not in general differ from the two preceding ones recently minutely described in your columns. The Lord Chamberlain's book showed that cards had been issued for 511 new presentations. The additional number of chaperones, privileged guests and gentlemen escorts swelled the total so as to make it a reception larger than any other during the present reign, as veterans assure me. Several of those held in past years have been unmanageable from overcrowding; but the unprecedented crush to-day, with its inevitable accompaniment of weary waiting, disarranged attire, unmannerly elbowing, loss of temper and final disappointments, was all that the most cynical could wish.

The presentations went through at the rate of 100 in an hour, allowing thirty-six seconds for each. It must not be supposed that the Queen herself sustained the burden; after an hour the Princess of Wales took her place. The great majority were disappointed of even a single glance of the queenly approval or a single hurried touch of the royal hand. The trials and tortures the poor victims of this ceremony go through before arriving at the ecstatic half minute is known only to themselves; but as they voluntarily undergo it all for the sake of the reward, in their case, as in that of the fakirs, there is no room for argument.

Mrs. Phelps, wife of the American Minister, wore a petticoat and bodice of white and black striped velvet and a train of black velvet. She presented Mrs. Horton, wife of the well-known New York banker, Henry L. Horton, who was also present in the ante-room in velvet Court dress and sword. Mrs. Horton seemed to attract the attention of many of the English dowagers for the sumptuousness of her costume. The material of her dress was white satin silver brocade; the front of the skirt was trimmed with pearl in the pattern of antique silver point lace; the corsage, which was cut V shaped with stomacher, was embroidered in the same way; the train, of silver brocade on poult de soie, was trimmed with white ostrich tips at bottom; the train had a blue satin lining and was fastened at the right shoulder with a plume of feathers; in the hair were the traditional court feathers, tipped with diamond aigrettes. Mrs. Horton's ornaments were diamonds in necklace and ear-rings.

OTHER RICH COSTUMES.

Following is one of the dresses that attracted attention: Petticoat of rich resida satin, the front and sides draped with embroidered lisse echarpe in oriental colors; the edge of the petticoat arranged with resida tulle and satin rosettes; corsage to match the petticoat, trimmed with embroidered lise and tulle, with plumes of shaded green ostrich feathers; train of bronze velvet lined with poult de soie and draped with a flounce of point d'alencon, caught up with shaded green ostrich feathers; ornaments, rubies.

Another dress was a golden brown velvet trimmed with old Brussels lace. There was also a brocaded train of buttercup, trimmed with Carrickmacross lace over a white satin and tulle petticoat. Also a dress of vieux rose, with panels of velvet and old duchesse lace, with a train and bodice of gray brocade to correspond. Also a dress of pink crepe mogul, draped with Brussels lace, with brocaded bodice and train lined with green and pink shot silk and tulle ruching.

WORKS OF ART.

Also a golden brown brocaded velvet, train lined with blue satin merv, with blue ruchings and plumes of feathers; petticoat of blue satin merv, draped with lisse, tablier embroidered in gold and blue.

THE QUEEN'S DRESS.

The Queen's sombre dress in the throne-room fully set off all the toilettes this afternoon. The Queen wore a train with bodice of black satin broche, trimmed with jet and tulle, over a skirt of black merv, covered with tulle embroidered in jet; a white tulle veil, surmounted by a coronet of diamonds; necklace, brooch and earrings, amethysts and diamonds. She also carried a dozen ribbons, stars and orders in superb array.

WHAT THE PRINCESS WORE.

When the future Queen took the royal place she wore resida Lyons velvet, resida and gold brocade, draped with volant Irish lace, looped with bunches of shaded anemones and leaves; corsage and train to correspond; headdress, a tiara of diamonds and feathers; veil; ornaments, diamonds and pearls.

Sir Donald Smith's Gift

A Montreal despatch says: Another meeting of the trustees of the Trafalgar Institute was held last evening, when Sir Donald Smith supplemented his previous gift of $25,000 by a further donation of $5,000, making a total of $30,000, on condition that the institute affiliate with McGill. The offer was accepted, and the institute will be opened next autumn on the fine property purchased from Mr. Alexander Mitchell at the head of Simpson street. The institute properties left by the founder, the late Donald Ross, are estimated at present value at over a quarter of a million dollars. The original donation was made several years ago towards the cause of the higher education of women, but until now the matter has taken no definite shape. Sir Donald Smith's gift will place it on a working basis. The executive trustees are Rev. J. Edgar Hill, of St. Andrew's Church, Alex. Macpherson and Mr. A. T. Drummond.

Solid with the Old Lady.

Successful suitor—You have not told me yet how your parents feel about our engagement.

"Well, pa says he will see me in my grave before he will allow me to become your wife—"

"Merciful heavens!"

"Oh, don't bother about him. Ma says I can marry you."—Omaha World.

A committee composed of several public officers in Nebraska report, after investigation, that the Times' Parnell letter was written by one Richard Piggott, a man who tried to blackmail the National League.

AFFAIRS IN IRELAND.

The "Times" and Parnell Once More—Parnell a Very Sick Man—The Eighty Club and Chamberlain.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: The Times has resumed publication of regular articles intended to show a connection between Parnellism and crime. The present series of articles is entitled "Behind the Scenes in America." The matter is the result of an inquiry which the Times says it instituted last summer into the relations between the American Fenians and the Parnellites, and purports to contain a number of the secret records of the Clan-Na-Gael Society, obtained through a schism in the society and quarrels among its leaders. Among the documents published are what are alleged to be copies of the constitution of the society, lists of its officers at various epochs, letters from its past and present leaders, secret circulars and reports of the society's conventions. The Times says its inquiries are not yet complete, for the reason that the society has been reorganized so that its system of working has become a seemingly impenetrable mystery. Editorially commenting on its revelations the Times says it is impossible to doubt that the policy of the Parnellites, and therefore of Mr. Gladstone, is ultimately directed by the heads of the society and by Mr. Patrick Ford.

Mr. Parnell's health has become worse since his journey yesterday from Ireland to London. By his physician's advice Mr. Parnell proceeds at once to Bournemouth, where he will remain until Tuesday, at which date he expects to be able to attend Parliament.

Mr. Edward Samuel Norris, Progressive Conservative member for Limehouse division of the Tower Hamlets, asked the Government in the House of Commons to-day whether in the event of the passage of the Coercion Bill they would consider the question of recommending to the Queen as one of the features of her Jubilee celebration the granting of a general amnesty to all prisoners in Ireland under detention of agrarian crimes, but not guilty of personal violence. Mr. Smith, answering for the Government, said they were not in a position to make any such engagement.

The Executive Committee of the Eighty Club has negatived a proposal to invite Mr. Chamberlain to attend the club's monthly dinner. In consequence of this action the Unionist members of the club have called a general meeting, at which they will propose to observe neutrality on the Irish question. If the meeting rejects the proposal the Unionists will resign from the club.

A London cable says: Mr. John Bright writes as follows about the Parnell-Dillon-Times affair: "All the Times' charges consist of evidence contributed by the rebel conspirators themselves, and statements drawn from United Ireland, the Irish World and other papers edited by or the property of active conspirators. The facts are their own facts. The Times did not invent them—it only arranged them so that the public could understand the case. Parliament should have nothing to do with the matter. These conspirators and their papers charged Earl Spencer and Mr. Forster with murder in knowingly hanging innocent men. Parliament did not interfere then to protect Lord Spencer and Mr. Forster. Why should it interfere now to defend Irish writers and speakers and assume the duties and labors of courts of justice?"

When Mr. Gladstone made his proposal at the Rev. Dr. Parker's luncheon for getting the Crimes Act through, few people supposed he meant business. The suggestion to omit the provisions against boycotting and the Plan of Campaign was regarded by the Government as a suggestion to emasculate the Bill. Mr. Gladstone's friends now say he did not expect this to be accepted, but it was really meant as the first bid. He feels that present tactics are likely, if prolonged, to make a bad impression on the country. The average minds fails to perceive a distinction between opposition as now carried on and obstruction. Closure has only varied the form, instead of everlasting speeches on one amendment, short speeches on innumerable amendments are the game. Time is wasted just as effectively now. Mr. Gladstone neither likes to see Parliament paralyzed nor believes the country will like it. His supporters in the Provincial press are already hinting that compromise is possible. The Government are asked to insert a clause ensuring that the Bill shall not be used to prevent legitimate combination. The permanency of the measure to which Mr. Gladstone referred will not be sacrificed by the Government, but this is not really very important. When a Liberal Government comes in they can practically annul if unable immediately to repeal the Act. Other alterations will be suggested, but the probability that the Gladstonians and the Government will come to terms is exceedingly remote.

There is another reason for Mr. Gladstone's anxiety to come to some arrangement. He foresees a serious conflict in the House of Commons if these nightly wrangles and collisions are allowed to continue, to be followed probably by suspension of the Irish members. A large contingent of Radicals also will in that case get themselves suspended, and no man can say where the disturbance will stop.

The Mayor of Cork, replying to an invitation from the Lord Chamberlain to assist in the Jubilee festivities, said that in view of the Crimes Bill the invitation is little short of an outrage upon the self-respect of the Irish people.

Mind-Reading and Pocket-Books.

Lady—"Here you! Thieves! Murder Pickpockets! Police!"

Mind Reader—"Beg pardon, mum: had a bet with a friend that I could discover the whereabouts of a hidden pocket-book and my mind placed it in this locality Excuse me: I thought I had struck a meal bag in a feed store."—Harper's Bazar.

Right You Are, My Dear.

He (at dinner)—May I assist you to the cheese, Miss Vassar.

Miss Vassar (just graduated)—Thanks, no! I am very comfortable where I am! But you may assist the cheese to me, if you will!—Puck.

A Dresden journal devoted to household matters and philosophy says children should never be put into a cradle, as the rocking of the young brain has a tendency to stupefy it.

A WOMAN'S DEVOTION.

How She Stuck to Her Convict Lover for Many Years, and Now Applies For His Pardon.

A Nashville, Tenn., despatch says: Eighteen years ago the doors of the State prison closed upon Frank Riddle, of Maury county, who had been sentenced to life imprisonment for murdering a German peddler. There were doubts as to the guilt of Riddle, who, refusing to acknowledge the crime and accept a term of fifteen years, insisted upon a plea of not guilty. The trial resulted in his conviction, and the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court, which granted a new hearing. A second verdict against Riddle was rendered and he was sent to the penitentiary. Year after year passed. One after another of the life convicts died, and Riddle almost abandoned hope of obtaining his freedom.

While Governor Taylor was seated in his office yesterday a woman walked into the apartment, and presented to the Governor a petition for executive clemency, signed by the lessees and every officer of the prison, who stated that Riddle's long incarceration had served the ends of justice. Accompanying the petition was a letter written by the woman who bore it. After the Governor had read the document the lady rose and said: "Governor Taylor, when that man was accused of murder I was engaged to him. I did not believe him guilty, and did not break the engagement. During the two or three years that the trial was pending I still believed in him. During the eighteen years of his confinement I stuck to him. His parents have died. His brothers and sisters are all dead except a sister who lives out west. The people who were interested in the case then have forgotten him. I am the only friend he has in the world. My life has been wrapped up in him. I believe in him, and have loved him through all these long, weary years, and I want you to pardon him. I do not ask you to think him an innocent man, but for the sake of two lives that may yet be happy I implore you to set him free."

Without waiting to hear the Governor's decision she arose and left the office and the capitol. When the Governor had cleared his eyes of tears he said to Bishop Granberry: "Such devotion and constancy I have never seen, and whatever Riddle may have deserved it does look as if that woman ought to have a chance at happiness."

The prisoner will be pardoned.

THE FISHERY CRUISERS.

The New Commander of the Flagship—Good Behavior of American Fishermen.

A Halifax despatch says: Lieutenant Gordon, of the Royal Navy, commander of the recent Government expeditions to the Hudson's Bay, arrived to-night to take command of the fishery protection flagship Acadia. Captain Scott, her late commander, will hereafter devote his time to superintending the movements and doings of the whole fishery fleet.

The cruiser Triumph has arrived at Shelburne from a nine days' cruise. She visited all the resorts of American fishermen from Liverpool westward to Pubnico. Captain Lorway reports that the American fishermen conduct themselves to the entire satisfaction of the customs authorities along this coast. On arriving at Shag harbor Captain Lorway found that the American schooner Legal Tender, which attained celebrity last fall for alleged treaty violation, had left port in a hurry an hour before the cruiser's arrival. Captain Devine, of the Legal Tender, who is a Nova Scotian, shipped two men at Shag harbor last August, and when the customs officers boarded her for the purpose of taking a formal seizure for the offence, Skipper Devine coolly proceeded to sea with the Canadian officers on board, and they were forced to jump into their boat or be carried as prizes to Uncle Sam's territory.

FOR HIS CHILD'S SAKE.

A Father Maimed for Life in saving His Child From a Cruel Death.

A Chicago despatch says: The heroism of John Vorbanck in saving his infant child from certain death nearly cost him his own life on Saturday afternoon. His eighteen months old babe had toddled down to the railroad track near his house and sat down between the rails to play. The whistle from an approaching switch engine attracted the attention of the father, who was at work in the yard, and glancing up he was horrified to see the child sitting on the track watching the swift approach of the locomotive. After an instant of mute terror the father rushed toward the track, and throwing himself in front of the engine, seized the child with both hands and threw it safely to one side. He had no time to save himself, but was caught by one of the wheels and thrown across the rail. His left leg was horribly mangled, and it was afterwards necessary to amputate it. He also received injuries about the hips and head. Vorbanck is a young, hard-working man, and has been married about three years.

Gen. Middleton at Kingston.

A Kingston despatch says: The anniversary of the battle of Batoche was celebrated on Thursday night at Tete du Pont barracks, and in it the commander of the forces, Lieut.-Col. Montizambert, of "B" Battery, and others participated. Sir Fred. Middleton, in his speech said, among other things, that the suppression of the rebellion in the Northwest was the only event of the kind in the history of the British Empire which had been put down unaided by Imperial forces. The services of the Canadian volunteers had been eminently appreciated by the presentation of medals. They were at first refused because there was no Imperial troops in any of the engagements, but the authorities decided that this was a good reason why they should be given, and they were granted accordingly.

Lost His Boots in Church.

John Robinson, of Creek Centre, Warren County, last Sunday arrived at church rather late wearing a pair of new boots which squeaked frightfully. Not wishing to disturb the congregation, he left the boots in the vestibule and entered in his stocking feet. Upon looking for the boots after service he found they had been stolen. He heard the sermon, but lost his boots.—Cobleskill (N. Y.) Index.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

The Budget.

Sir Charles Tupper rose amid applause to make his financial statement. He said that recognizing the great ability of Sir Richard Cartwright and the manner in which he had discharged his duties, and the manner in which those duties had been discharged by his successors in office, he asked for the considerate indulgence of the House. Under a comparatively low tariff Canada enjoyed marked prosperity for the first seven years of Confederation, but Canada then enjoyed the advantage of the dislocation of the labor market in the neighboring Republic. When that period came to an end the industries of Canada began to languish and hon. gentlemen opposite, then in office, were urged to adopt a policy of protection, but refused. He believed the Finance Minister of that day came to that determination with many misgivings. When the Conservative Government came into power they adopted the policy of protection. That policy had been attended with marked success, and now had the endorsation of a large majority of the Canadian people. He contended that a remarkable change of opinion had taken place among political economists as to the question of protection. The principle of protection was now held with greater tenacity than ever by the economists of the United States. It was growing in favor in European countries, and even in England, where a distinguished professor of Cambridge University had written a work in favor of protection, and where, although the Commission to inquire into the state of British trade had in its reports adhered to the principle of free trade, yet a minority of that Commission had reported in favor of fair trade. He was further relieved from the necessity of entering into arguments on the abstract question of free trade and protection by the circumstance that during the recent elections the distinguished leader of the Opposition had announced his entire conversion to the principles the Conservative party had so long maintained. His re-election to the high position of leader of the Reform party was an evidence that at last the time had come when this country might congratulate itself upon the fact that great capitalists might put their money into Canadian industries without fear of disturbance. The principles of protection being thus agreed to, they had only to discuss the method of the application of those principles. He then took up the question of receipts and expenditure. The estimates of the receipts for 1885-6 made by the late Finance Minister were $33,500,000, while the result actually was $33,177,000, the falling off being mainly in excise. Though it was the bad fortune of the gentlemen opposite to be in power during a very great depression all over the world, it must not be lost sight of that there was now quite as great a depression as that of 1873-77 in other countries, but Canada had escaped in great measure. The depression last year would not have been so great in Canada had it not been for the rebellion in the Northwest—a perfectly unexpected calamity—and the floods of Montreal, which, of course, could not have been foreseen. For the past year the estimate of expenditure made last year was $38,126,000. As a matter of fact it would be about $39,011,000, the increase being due mainly to the expenditure on the rebellion, that being $8,177,122, or about $800,000 more than was expected, and an additional $200,000 more than was expected on the Mounted Police. This left a deficit of $5,834,000. The estimated revenue for the current year made last session was $34,500,000. As a matter of fact, there was every indication that it would reach $35,300,000, although there was a million less from excise than was anticipated. The expenditure would probably be about $35,600,000, leaving an apparent deficit of $300,000, or practically a balance between income and expenditure. For 1887-88 the estimate of receipts made by the Government was: Customs, $22,500,000; inland revenue, $6,400,000; miscellaneous, $7,500,000; total, $36,400,000. It was not probable that the supplementary estimates would greatly increase the amounts shown by the estimates already before the House. He expected to spend $200,000 on the Franchise Act instead of the $100,000 voted last year. He came to Canada last fall to discuss the question of the Imperial Institute and the question of the proposed treaty with Spain, and it was when he landed in New York that he learned for the first time that a general election was to take place. (Ironical applause.) He was surprised at that news because of the result of the Ontario elections. When he had once arrived the Premier laid an embargo upon him and he was persuaded to return and take part in the elections. He explained that the increase of $235,000 in the expenditure on railways was chiefly owing to the necessity for the purchase of additional rolling stock for the Intercolonial. The House would grant this sum willingly, because it was an evidence of an increase of the business of the railway. He then took up the question of

NATIONAL DEBT.

On the 1st of this month the gross debt of Canada was $270,072,000 and the net debt was $225,105,000. He thought that they might fairly deduct from both these sums $10,000,000 represented by a thoroughly good asset, namely, lands obtained from the C. P. R. in part payment of debt. At Confederation the net debt was $75,750,000, and it had increased since that time by over $149,000,000. Everything, however, depended upon what the country had to show for this increase. Since Confederation the following sums had been expended on capital account: Allowance to Provinces, $30,743,000; Dominion lands, $2,566,000; Eastern Extension, $1,286,000; Intercolonial, $31,226,000; canals, $32,132,000; Public Works, including departmental buildings, Esquimault graving dock, land and cable telegraph lines and harbors at Cape Tormentine and Port Arthur, $2,947,000; Northwest Territories, $2,920,000; Canadian Pacific Railway (including lands), $71,053,000; P. E. I. Railway, $212,000; Short Line Railway, $184,000; general subsidies to railways, $3,312,000. These were the expenditures up to the close of the last fiscal year. Since the close of last year there had been expended under these various heads $4,750,000, making a total expenditure on capital account from Confederation to the present time of $183,292,000. The increase in the net debt during the same time was $149,377,000. That is to say, Canada had expended on capital account nearly $34,000,000 more than was represented by the increase in her debt. If they struck off the subsidies to the Provinces from both sides of the account and allowed for expenditure only on the three great items of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Intercolonial Railway and the canals, they would find that Canada had in these three great works an expenditure amounting to $15,000,000 more than the increase in the public debt. Great as was this expenditure, once done it would not require to be repeated. Referring to the Canadian Pacific, he said that the receipts had increased from $5,750,000 in 1884 to $10,081,000 in 1886. High as was Canada's credit, he did not expect to have to use it. There was no floating loan, and he did not expect to have to call upon the capitalists of Europe to advance to Canada a single dollar. He was glad to say that the deposits in the savings banks were expected to pay the New Brunswick loan. He had been asked to reduce the rate of interest paid on deposits in the Government Savings Banks, but he did not intend to yield to that request. Though it would be a benefit to the banking interest, there was something higher than this—the interests of the industrious and economical working people of this country, to whom the high rate of interest was a special advantage and encouragement. There was but one cloud on the horizon—threatened non-intercourse with the United States. Gentlemen opposite and their press had urged even more strongly than the press supporting the Government that the admitted rights of Canada in the fisheries should be maintained. The people were united on this point, and the time had not come when any Government in Canada would be permitted to shrink from temperately maintaining those rights. But even at the risk of exposing themselves to the criticism of their opponents, this Government had proposed to give American fishermen the free use of the Canadian fisheries for a year after the abrogation of the fishery clauses if the United States Executive would propose to Congress a commission, after the manner of enlightened nations, to settle the existing difficulties. Before becoming High Commissioner he had gone on a confidential mission to Washington and had a long communication with Secretary Frelinghuysen. He regretted the defeat of the Administration of which he was a member, because he believed otherwise a commission would have been appointed. He (Tupper) did not express a higher regard for one American political party than the other in this, but there being a Democratic Administration and a Republican Senate, the proposal for a commission was not accepted by the Senate. As High Commissioner, he had come in contact with the leading statesmen of Britain, and on both sides of politics they were ready, though most anxious to maintain cordial relations with the United States, to give every weight to the representations of Canadians as to their rights in this and every other matter. Canada had the right to expect that she would receive a better return for her neighborly offers than the refusal of a commission. It was well known that the position taken by those connected with the fishing interest in the United States declared that the fish were coming into American waters, that they wanted no commission, no arrangement, but merely that each country should keep to itself. The interests of both countries would be promoted, in his opinion, by extended reciprocal trade arrangements. It would be a calamity if the proposed non-intercourse were carried out. He dwelt in this connection upon the advantages to both countries of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, and quoted statistics to prove that much more benefit had accrued to the United States than to Canada. Lord Salisbury, when assured that the bounty-fed sugar of the Continent was injuring the sugar-producing interest of Britain, said that, though a strong free trader, he thought it would be right to discriminate against the importation of such an article. They had only to carry that policy a short step further to declare that if such a policy as this were adopted against Canada, Great Britain would deem it due to herself and due to Canada, knowing the importance of Canada to the Empire, to give this colony some advantage in the grain markets at home, and this would result also in giving due impetus to the grain-growing industry of India, which would induce competition, causing the new policy to become hardly felt as increasing the cost of bread to the consumer of Britain. With the sentiment in Britain as he knew it to be, he believed the Mother Country would take this view. He had, however, no idea this policy of non-intercourse would be adopted, but if it were he was sure Americans would find Canadians, regardless of politics, a united band of patriots, though only five millions, strong in the justice of their cause and in the belief that they had as large and valuable a portion of the North American continent to develop as their neighbors to the South, and determined to maintain to the utmost their just and admitted rights. The stimulus given to manufacturing industries by protection had enabled them to overtake the consumptive power of the country, and thus to enable them to sell as cheaply as if the protective policy had not been enforced. The Government of Canada, with a view of developing the great traffic of the East, have agreed to give £15,000 per annum to secure fast transit between Vancouver, Yokahama, Shanghai and Hong Kong, provided the British Government gives £45,000 per annum. We have also agreed to give £25,000 per annum, provided £160,000 per annum are raised by England and Australia, to have a rapid line of steamers between the terminus of the C.P.R. and the islands of Australasia.

Sir Charles Tupper said he would consider what was the reason for the state of affairs he had shown to exist. He contended that the cause was to be found in the National Policy. He was glad to say that every branch of industry specially affected had been improved and the channels of foreign trade opened everywhere. He was glad to say that a strong French company would agree for the bonus offered to place a line of steamers on the route from Canada to France. In the cotton, sugar and other industries the National Policy had produced greater results. But the greatest industry of all was the iron industry. In the United States, after full investigation and consideration, they had adopted a scientific plan of giving protection in proportion to the labor employed, ranging from $6 a ton on pig iron up. But in Canada we had given $2 a ton duty and $1 a ton bonus, while on bar iron we had only a duty of $1.70, giving the greater duty on the coarser articles. The production of iron depended upon the proximity of the ore and the coal and the presence of the fluxes. But care must be taken of this industry. In Britain, though coal and iron were found in close proximity, enough ore was imported from Spain, a thousand miles away, for the production of all the steel of England. In France they actually imported 35 per cent. of the iron ore produced. He contended that the prosperity of Britain and the United States had as its foundation the iron industry, which had been fostered and made possible by the protective system. In other countries, like Belgium, France and Germany, the same facts in a large degree manifested themselves. If the protection given to cotton, woollens and sugar, were given to iron, the charcoal iron industry would soon be in full blast. No country in the world enjoyed such facilities for the consumption of charcoal iron as Ontario and Quebec. The establishment of this industry would allow of the utilization of the great forests which were now only an obstruction in the way of the settler. Valuable iron ore had been discovered along the line of the Central Ontario Railway, and under a proper policy of protection to iron the ship which now conveyed iron ore across the lake to the United States would be carrying the finished product. He proceeded to say that a large quantity of machinery had been imported into Canada free in order to encourage the sugar, cotton and woollen industries, and entered into the question of the relative importance of these industries as compared with the iron and steel industries. He arrived at the conclusion that the iron industry far eclipsed all the rest in number of persons employed and in the value of the product. Canada had imported since Confederation $253,000,000 worth of iron and steel, which would account for almost the entire balance of trade against Canada. Place the iron industry of Canada on a firm foundation and you at once sweep away the entire adverse balance of trade. He next referred to the coal industry, which, he said, lay in close proximity to the industry of the manufacture of iron. There had been great development in the coal trade of Canada, but a great many mines were closed for half of the year. The development of the iron industry would give a great impetus to the production of coal. The principle of the United States was to give protection to iron in proportion to the number of days' work expended upon it. Our policy in Canada had been the very reverse. It was impossible to read the two tariffs without seeing at a glance why we had been left so far behind. Imagine the helpless position that Canada would be in in the event of war if she had no iron within her bounds. Canada was now at the mercy of the iron-producing countries, although she had within her bounds bountiful supplies of iron, coal and timber for charcoal only awaiting a reasonable protection to create a great industry. A policy of protection to iron would be not only a rational but a national policy. He proposed to except steel rails from increased duties in view of the importance of railway development, but he believed Canada would soon be able to manufacture steel rails. He proceeded to speak of the great quantities of iron ore in Canada. He proposed to ask the House in further pursuance of the policy of encouraging the iron industry to take the duty off anthracite coal. In our own Northwest there were unlimited quantities of lignite coal, and on an island in Lake Winnipeg there was a large quantity of iron ore. There were similar facilities for the manufacture of iron in British Columbia. He estimated that if the 250,000 tons of pig iron, now imported annually, were manufactured in Canada it would give employment to 20,000 workmen. The increased duty necessary to carry out the policy of protection to iron would amount to about half a million dollars per annum, and this sum would all be given back to the people by the abolition of the duty on anthracite coal. They had adopted the plan of imposing on the various manufacturers of steel two-thirds of the duty imposed by the American Government. For instance, the duty on pig iron would be raised from $2 to $4 per ton, in addition to the bounty.

Latest from the Northwest.

The Provincial Legislature reassembled to-night.

An appeal to the Imperial Privy Council will be taken by this city in the case of Wright vs. Winnipeg, just dismissed by the Supreme Court at Ottawa.

The Indian "John" who killed another Indian named "Yanken," near Deloraine, has skipped across the line.

Half a dozen boarders in a city hotel have been poisoned through inhaling red precipitate, which had been placed upon the beds to kill bugs. Some of them had a narrow escape. The doctor when called in at first reported them to be cases of smallpox.

Mr. Shepherd, the C. P. R. operator at Regina, has skipped out with some $400 of the company's funds.

Benjamin Aherne, an insurance canvasser for the Mutual Accident Association of New York, has been arrested on a charge of taking policies for insurance companies which had no license to do business in Canada.

It is said there is to be a general reduction of employees not only in the C. P. R. shops but also in the general offices of the company here, as the official staff is much too large for the requirements of the road.

Dr. Dodd, coroner, started from Regina this morning for Salt Plains, north of Touchwood, to hold an inquest on the body of Robt. Smith, found in his shanty. Suspicion is entertained as to whether he was murdered or not. Smith's shanty is close to the scene of the late Prince Albert mail robbery, and he was once suspected of being the robber.

Eleven mounted policemen under the command of Inspector Gibbon left Regina this morning for Moose Mountain district to patrol the boundary line during the summer. Major Jarvis will leave for Wood Mountain District with thirty men in a few days.

One of the first evidences of a high civilization is good roads.—Rutland Herald.

Given a young man who has been accustomed to having his own way from his early childhood, and you have one who is apt to get into the clutches of the civil law at a very early period in his career.

A MANIA FOR PRETTY GIRLS.

Suppressing a Detroit Lawyer Who Wanted to Marry All He Met.

The marriage Thursday night of Rev. Wallace Radcliffe to Miss Jessie Walker, daughter of a prominent citizen of Detroit, has brought to public notice G. H. Woodruff, a lawyer, who has been remarkable for his disposition to volunteer his affections when they were not wanted. He has within the last few months laid distant siege to the hearts of several young ladies of the Forth Street Presbyterian Church, over which Dr. Radcliffe presides, carrying his attentions so far as to write letters warning and threatening those whom he believed stood in his way. He seems to have had a mania for loving every pretty girl whom he could see as often as services were conducted in the church.

Dr. Radcliffe received a letter threatening him with dire vengeance should he attempt to carry out his purpose of marriage, and other persons in the church being similarly annoyed the trustees forbade Woodruff the church and employed a policeman to insure obedience. Mr. Woodruff admitted his shortcomings, promised that no attempt to carry out his threats would be made, and the shadow which he created has been dispelled by the happy outcome.

Conversation with Dr. Radcliffe developed the fact that he does not regard the clerical white necktie as a badge of universal peace, and should Woodruff suffer a relapse he would probably receive the vigorous attention from which dread of publicity had heretofore saved him.

Old World Presbyterianism.

The financial year just closed has not been a prosperous one for the churches in Ireland. Some of the denominations have suffered more, some less. As an example, it is stated that the Sustentation Fund of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church is short this year as compared with last $9,080. The receipts this year are $99,885, as against $108,965.

During the month of May the Scottish Church courts have been in the habit of assembling from time immemorial. The Synod of the United Presbyterian Church met on Monday, May 2nd. The Free Church Assembly and the General Assembly of the Church meet a week or two later. According to latest accounts there were two nominees for the office of Moderator of the United Presbyterian Synod—Dr. Robert Drummond, of Glasgow, and the Rev. I. B. Smith, of Greenock. Among the new schemes of the Free Church is the commemoration of the Queen's jubilee by wiping out the debt on all the property of the Church. The sum aimed at is $250,000.

"Gold Mining Fever" in British Columbia.

An amusing incident lately occurred at a placed called Kamloops, B.C., by which an unexpected addition was made to the Government treasury. It was reported that gold had been found during an excavation on the side of a hill, and the most popular implement of trade for a time was the miner's pan. The gold fever raged like an epidemic. The sequel, however, is soon told. Gold was not found in paying quantities, and it transpired that some wag had "salted" the spot and stood off and hugged himself while watching the eager seekers after lucre. The Government is the only gainer by the joke, as "claims" were for a time in much demand.

C-h-o-o! C-h-o-o!! C-h-o-o!!!

Don't sneeze, sneeze, hawk, hawk, spit, blow and disgust everybody with your offensive breath. If you have acrid, watery discharge from the nose and eyes; throat disease, causing choking sensations, cough, ringing noises in head, splitting headache and other symptoms of nasal catarrh, remember that the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh remedy offer, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. The remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents.

In a lecture before a New York medical society, Dr. George T. Jackson, of Boston, said one cause of baldness was great intellectuality, and in illustration said that 50 per cent. of the men to be seen at the operas and the churches in Boston are bald, while no more than 25 per cent. of those who visit the cheap museums are thus afflicted. Another cause, he thought, is stiff hats, which compress the temporal arteries and render the circulation of the blood sluggish.

Oft obscure the road that leads to health,
Unmarked by board or sign;
Wisdom avails not, powerless is wealth
To sooth those aches of thine.
But do not despair, with life there's hope;
The cloud conceals the sun;
With Pierce's Favorite Prescription at hand
Your life's full course may run.

More truth than poetry in these lines, as thousands of ladies all over the land now blooming with health testify to the great curative powers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription adapted by much research and careful study to the happy relief of all those weaknesses and ailments peculiar to females. All druggists.

A more disappointed and dejected lot of people than the spring poets in this latitude could not well be imagined. They have not been able to float more than 2 per cent. of their output owing to the backwardness of the season. But it looks as if balmy days had come at last.

I had inflammatory rheumatism several years ago, and suffered excruciating pain. Doctors could not relieve me. I took McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant. The next week I was able to walk, and within three weeks was entirely cured. C. S. Graves, Langton, Ont.

Mr. J. H. Shackleton, a native of Jordan, and who left there when a small boy, is now Mayor of the flourishing city of Saginaw, Mich., and does business there as a flour and grain merchant.

Tender Corns,

Soft corns, corns of all kinds removed, without pain or sore spots, by Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Thousands testify that it is certain, painless and prompt Do not be imposed upon by substitutes offered for the genuine "Putnam's" Extractor. Sure, safe, harmless.

The Duke of Devonshire, father of Lord Hartington, entered on his 80th year on Wednesday, April 27th.

The Santa Catama mountains in Arizona are covered with petrified turtles, lobsters and clams. The mountains are 10,000 feet above the level of the sea.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

DON L. 21. 87.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

The Blueberry is a valuable fruit, and is a reliable fruit to grow in the Northern States, where the more tender varieties winter kills. It is perfectly hardy, will stand 40 degrees below zero without showing any injury to the most tender buds. Fruit ripens in this latitude about the first of July. Color, a bluish black, when fully ripened. The flavor is equal to the raspberry, a very mild, rich sub-acid, pronounced by most people delicious. The fruit is excellent for pies, or canned for winter use. It grows very stocky; the shining dark-green leaves and the blue fruit make a pleasing contrast. It seems to flourish in all soils and is a prolific bearer. One dozen plants by mail, carefully packed in oil paper, 50 cts.; two dozen by mail, $1.00; 100 by express, $3.50; 1,000 $15.00.

Address L. D. STAPLES, Portland, Mich.

I CURE FITS!

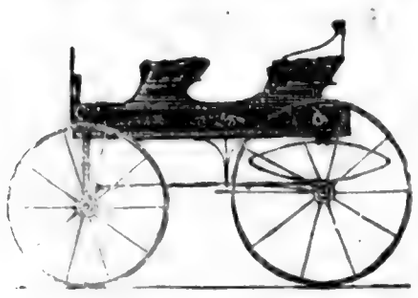
When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND.

Flesherton Carriage Works!



W. A. MILBURN,

Proprietor.

In returning thanks to the public for the patronage extended to him during the past three years, the undersigned wishes to inform the people that he is in a better position than ever to turn out all work in his lines of business, such

—AS—

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons, &c.

on short notice, in a workmanlike manner and at reasonable prices. All kinds of Repairs,

HORSE-SHOEING, AND GENERAL JOBBING

will receive equally prompt and careful attention. Works, next to Planing Factory, Flesherton.

Respectfully Yours,

W. A. MILBURN,

Proprietor Flesherton Carriage Works.

Methodist District Meeting.

Mr. A. J. Irwin, a candidate for the ministry, delivered a sermon in the Methodist Church here on Wednesday evening of last week, to a fair congregation. Mr. Irwin is a young man scarcely out of his teens, but he promises to be an able exponent of the doctrines of the church of his adoption at no distant date. His sermon, at the "wind-up" of the proceedings of the District Meeting and Sabbath School Convention, was a good one and was listened to with marked attention. His description of the grandeur and magnificence of Babylon, its hanging gardens, the immense area of ground covered by it, the tower of Babel, &c. was graphic and interesting. Equally graphic but perhaps more interesting was his description of the characteristics of the great Hebrew captive, Daniel. Altogether Mr. Irwin deserves to be congratulated most heartily on the success of his first pulpit effort.

W. C. T. U.

Mrs Hannah Whitall Smith, of Philadelphia, Sec. of the World's W. C. T. U., has sailed for England. The W. C. T. U. of Fort Worth, Texas, has opened a house for homeless women.

The W.C.T.U., of New Zealand, has just held its second annual convention. There was a large delegation present, and all reports were encouraging.

Mrs. Fannie Leiter, a leading white ribboner of Ohio, recently addressed fourteen hundred convicts at the State penitentiary, Columbus, upon Gospel Temperance. COR SEC.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

A testimonial, already amounting to $5,000 is to be presented to Mr. Robert Rae, the long time efficient Secretary of the British National Temperance League.

A Temperance alliance, similar to that in Great Britain, is being formed in New England by Sir Wm. Fox.

If men will engage in this destructive traffic, if they will stoop to degrade their reason and reap the wages of iniquity, let them no longer have the law-book as a pillow, nor quiet conscience with the opiate of a court license.—Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen.

The Devil always comes out ahead in a compromise.—Voice.

Detroit, May 3rd.—Alfred Arnold was killed by lightening at Whitemore lake. A hotel was burned by the same agency, and one Leun Schlemmer was fatally injured.

Imported Sherry retailing for $5 per bottle is made in New York at the cost of 62 cents per quart. The man who wants what he pays for will drink butter milk. —Detroit Free Press.

The Musical Journal.

This is a bright instructive monthly, for all lovers of music, amateur or professional, pupil or teacher. It is well printed, ably edited, and adapted to the wants of musical people who seek enlightment and entertainment. Each number contains 8 pages of new and mostly original Music, and pages Articles, Sketches, Letters and Reports. The publishers seek to cultivate a love for the pure, beautiful and instructive. The subscription price is $1.00 per year, single copies 10 cents. Address Timms, Moor & Co., Publishers, Oxford Press, Toronto, or order through your news agent or music dealer.

Kimberley.

From our Correspondent.

Mr. G. L. Thompson has been to the city for his new summer's stock of goods.

Master Fred. Thurston has accepted a situation in Toronto,

The Orange Hall, Kimberley, is being greatly improved by having a splendid stone wall built under it. Mr. Wm. McConnell stone mason.

Squire Stuart will soon move into the village.

The Ball Club is now practicing for a big rally.

T. B. Carruthers has purchased Mr. Howe's property in the village.

Kimberley can now boast of two Temperance Houses, as Friend Condy keeps a good Temperance House instead of an hotel.

Volunteers.

No. 6 Company, 31st Batt. will meet at the Drill Shed, Flesherton, on Saturday evenings for drill, until further orders. 25 young men wanted to fill up the above company. Apply to J. J. Field, Lieut., No. 6 Company, Flesherton. t.f.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,

Tin-Smith, AGENT,

FLESHERTON.

PUBLIC NOTICE!!

To all whom it may Concern.

Know ye all men that I, W. S. CHRISTOE, the Druggist of Flesherton, have the agency for JOHNSON'S celebrated TONIC BITTERS and NERVINE, JOHNSON'S little Pink Tonic Liver Pills and the ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT.

—THE—

TONIC BITTERS

are confidently recommended as the VERY BEST in the market for Nervousness, Hysteria, General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Complaints common to the female sex. PALENESS of complexion and for diseases caused by poverty of blood. In conjunction with the Tonic JOHNSON'S Little Liver Pills are the very best for liver complaint and general derarrangements of the stomach. The All Healing White Ointment is the very best for skin diseases of a scrofulous nature, Burns, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Chilblains, &c., &c.

You have only to try these great remedies to be satisfied. Sold by

W. S. CHRISTOE,

The Druggist, Flesherton.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices.

R. TRIMBLE. (tf.)

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

CATTLE FOR SALE.—Two steers two years old, two heifers two years old one cow in calf, cheap for cash. R. TRIMBLE.

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's block, Flesherton. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and in a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

IMPROVED

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored. —C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

Money to Loan.

At 6½ Per Cent. Interest on Straight Loan.

WITH Interest paid yearly, not in advance. No commission charged. Apply to

A. GRIER. — THORNBURY

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Court of Revision!

Township of Artemesia.

First sitting, in the TOWN HALL, FLESHERTON, on WEDNESDAY, 15th JUNE, 1887, at 10 o'clock a.m. Any appeals intended for hearing at this Court to be placed in the hands of the Clerk, on or before 10th June, 1887.

W. J. BELLAMY,
May 25th, 1887. Clerk.

NOTICE.

Court of Revision, Township of Osprey.

The first sittings of the Court of Revision, on the Assessment of 1887, for the Township of Osprey, will be held at MAXWELL, on TUESDAY, the Thirty-First Day of MAY, 1887. All persons interested will govern themselves accordingly.

WM. MILNE, Tp. Clerk.
May 12th, 1887.

Auction Sale

—OF—

VALUABLE FARM

—IN THE—

Township of Artemesia.

Under and by virtue of the powers of sale in certain Mortgages made by John Fisher and David White, to the Vendor's which will be produced at the time of sale and on default in payment of the money's thereby secured. There will be offered for sale by Public Auction at MUNSHAW'S HOTEL, in the Village of FLESHERTON, on

Monday, 30th day of May, A.D., 1887,

1887, at 2 o'clock, p.m., by A. S. VANDUSEN, Auctioneer, the following property, viz.: Lot number 158, in Concession 3, N.E.T. & S. Road, in the Township of Artemesia, containing 50 acres more or less nearly all of which are said to be cleared. On the premises are said to be a frame barn nearly new and a log house. Lands are well watered, by a small spring Creek. There is a small orchard on the premises which are well fenced and are on a good gravel road within about one mile of Flesherton.

TERMS:

Ten per cent. at time of sale, fifteen per cent. within one month, balance to remain on Mortgage for five years with interest at 6½ per cent. yearly, or such other terms as may be arranged with the purchaser at time of sale

For further particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Esq., Flesherton, or to

MOSS, FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK,
Vendor's Solicitor's.
Toronto, May 10th, 1887.

MAIL CONTRACT!

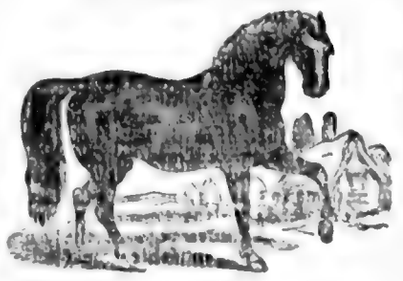
SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the Postmaster General, will be received at Ottawa until noon, on 27th May, 1887, for the conveyance of Her Majesty's Mails, on a proposed Contract for four years, 3 times per week each way, between Dundalk and Maple Valley from the 1st July, next.

The conveyance to be made in a vehicle or otherwise via., Badjeros and Shrigley. The Mails to leave Maple Valley every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 8 a.m., and travelling via., Badjeros and Shrigley, arrive at Dundalk at 12:10 a.m., or in time to connect with the Mail train passing North. To leave Dundalk as soon as possible after exchange of Mails and arrive at Maple Valley within three hours and ten minutes afterwards.

Printed notices containing further information as to conditions of proposed Contract may be seen, and blank forms of Tender may be obtained at the Post Offices of Dundalk, Maple Valley, Badjeros and Shrigley.

DANIEL SPRY,
Post-Office Inspector.
Post-Office Inspector's Office, Barrie, April 18th, 1887.

THE ROADSTER STALLION,



BILLY V.!

Will leave his own stable in Flesherton, on MONDAY, MAY 2nd, 1887, at 12 o'clock noon, and proceed to Linley's hotel, Maxwell, where he will remain over night.

TUESDAY, will proceed to Jonathan Irish's, Waroham, for noon, thence to Johnston's hotel, Dundalk, where he will remain till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY, will return to Flesherton for the night.

FRIDAY, will proceed to Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, for noon, and return to his own stable for the night.

SATURDAY, will proceed to Marsh's hotel, Markdale, for noon, and return to his own stable in Flesherton, where he will remain till the following Monday.

The above route will be continued during the season, health and weather permitting.

Description and Pedigree;

BILLY V., foaled June 18th 1883, is a dark dappled bay, stands 15 hands 3 in., weighs 1150 pounds, and for bone, muscle, style and action, cannot be surpassed, was sired by Clear Grit jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger.

TERMS:

To insure a foal $10.00, payable March 1st, 1888. Season mares $8.00, payable last round of horse, or not later than July 12th, 1887. If not then paid said mares will be charged as insured mares. Single leap $6.00, payable at time of service. All mares not returned regularly to horse will be charged as insured mares. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Owners trying their mares to said horse and knowing them to be afflicted with any contagious disease, will be liable in damages. Groom's Fee 25 cents.

A. S. VANDUSEN, Owner. GEO. GLASSFORD, Groom.

Maxwell Carriage Works.

Thos. A. Blakely,

Carriage and Wagon Maker, Painter, &c., &c.

Wishes to announce to the public that he has started in the above business. All orders promptly and neatly attended to. Repairing and Painting a specialty.

Shop next door to J. Little's blacksmith shop, who will do all work in connection to the above shop. THOS. A. BLAKELY.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S

DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property,

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton

ANDREW McGIRR,

Issuer of Marriage Licenses,

FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY.

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &c.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance affected in first-class companies. Money to lend at owest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

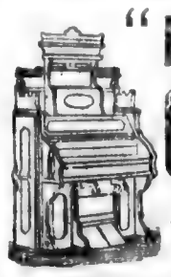
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 311. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, JUNE 2, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

W. A. BROWN,

—THE—

PEOPLE'S JEWELLER,

Keeps the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, Wedding Rings, Spex, etc., between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden Watches, my own name on, accurately timed, 2 and 3 years warrants, $8.50 to $28.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto Cases, 2 to 5 oz. ½ Waltham, P. S. Bartlett's, 3 oz. coin case, $17.50; Ellery's, $14.50, lower graden, $8.00, to $13.00; Elgins if preferred. Ladies 10 & 14 k. Watches, and Gent's 10 & 14 k. filled cases always in stock. It is safe to buy Watches from me because I do business for myself, in my own name, and can be held to my warrants. 34 Seth Thomas, New Haven and Ansonia Clocks now in stock, bought close.

They will be sold below the "Terrible Bargains," prices at least 15 per cent.

It is easy to come down when goods are away up. I don't do a catch business.

Straight dealing ensures success.

I shall stay on that line. Small profits, modest prices. I secure patronage through low prices. Assortment Complete. Send for quotations. If I do not save you money I will make other Jewellers take cost. 18 years at the trade.

SPECIALTIES:
Watch Repairing, Fitting Spex.

Address Box 5, MARKDALE, ONT.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit - Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Alabastine & Wall Papers in great variety at Richardson & Co's.

Mr. James Bell, of Bell's Lake, is the guest of Wm. Strain, Esq., Flesherton.

J. G. Anderson, Markdale wants 20,000 lbs of Wool.

Mrs. C. J. Leitch, is visiting friends in Owen Sound.

4 lb pure uncolored Japan Tea for $1 at J. G. Anderson's, Markdale.

Mr. Theakson, jr., of Collingwood Township, called on us last Monday.

Kimberley correspondence and other matter left over for next week.

The best 10 & 12½c. Prints in Canada at J. G. Anderson's, Markdale.

Mr. M. Richardson is having a neat double verandah added to his residence on Sydenham street.

Mr. Fogarty, of Toronto Township, was visiting at Mr. Wm. Petch's last week.

It will pay you to go 10 miles to get 10 lbs of J. G. Anderson's famous 40c. Tea, 33c. lb in quantity.

A brother of Capt. Sproule of our junior lacrosse team has been spending a few days in Flesherton. He lives a short distance south of Barrie.

White and cream Oriental Flouncing with other goods to match at J. G. Anderson's, Markdale.

One Cask Rockingham Crockery ware one Case Table Cutlery just in at M. Richardson & Co's.

Bro. C. W. Rutledge, of the Markdale Standard, gave us a pleasant fraternal call last Tuesday.

You can buy Factory Cotton for 3c. and print for 4c. a yd. at M. Richardson & Co's.

Mr. Harry Thompson, of Copp, Clark & Co., Toronto, spent Sunday with his sister-in-law, Mrs. S. Good, of Flesherton.

The Medical Hall, Flesherton, has just received a fine stock of Paints of all colors and other goods. See column announcement elsewhere.

IF YOU WANT FIRST-CLASS ROLLER FLOUR GO TO KEEFER'S FLOUR & FEED STORE, STRAIN'S BLOCK.

Mr. Wm. Guy, of Maxwell, and Mr. Jas. Beecroft, of Flesherton, will accept thanks for bunches of fine rhubarb sent to our office since last week's issue.

Great SMASH in CROCKERY prices. Complete Tea Sets in White Stone Ware 44 pieces for $1.95. It beats creation how they do at Richardson & Co's China Hall.

The Valley Road is now an accomplished fact. The next thing is to see to it that the road is ready for general traffic by winter time.

APPLES, DATES & FIGS, BISCUITS & MEALS OF ALL KINDS ALWAYS ON HAND AT KEEFER'S FLOUR AND FEED STORE.

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON,

Has the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewelery, Wedding Rings, Spex &c. between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden, Columbus, Waltham, Elgin, and Swiss Watches, bearing warrants from 2 1-2 to five years from $7.50 to $25.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto cases 2 to 5 1-2 oz. We never ask any more than $16.00 for a P. S. Bartlett 3 oz. coin silver case, some dealers have the cheek to ask $17.50. Ellery's $13.25, while other dealers ask $14.50. Lower Grades from $6.90 to 11.50. Ladies & Gents Gold Watches. All kinds of American Clocks at lower prices than elsewhere. The fact is, other dealers cannot begin to compete with us notwithstanding the fact we do not sell at auction or trade on the church. A fine Stock just arrived at lower prices than ever. Always take your Watches, Clocks, & Jewelry to RUSSELL to repair, the only genuine Watchmaker & Jeweler in this section of country. Come right along and secure some bargains. It will pay you to come 20 miles to deal with us. You can save 25 per cent. by dealing at

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

1,075 doz. of New Dress and Coat Buttons, good patterns all colors, from 2 to 5 cents a doz. at M. Richardson & Co's.

Mr. J. H. Campaigne got his eye blackened at Flesherton Station on Thursday evening, while practicing base ball.

We had a very pleasant call from Mr. Abbs, of Stayner,—son of the esteemed Methodist minister there—on Saturday last.

Great bargains in Dress Goods at J. G. Anderson's, Markdale. 15c. Dress goods for 10c. 22c. Dress goods for 15 cents and other lines equally as low.

We were shown some stalks of grass this week three feet in height, grown on the farm of Mr. Jas. Beecroft, near Flesherton, and taken therefrom on the 28th May.

Rev. Mr. DeMill, of Oshawa Ladies' College, preached in the Methodist Church here last Sunday morning. Mr. H. D. Irwin preached in the same place in the evening.

M. Richardson & Co. have received another lot of that famous 30c. Tea which they will now sell for 25c. a lb., and a new Nugasaga worth 35c. to be sold at 30c. a lb. Call and get samples.

It was Joseph Fi[illegible] himself who loaded the gun just [illegible] exploded, and after it was handed to [illegible] by David Bates. We are asked to make this correction re gun explosion in [illegible] st week's ADVANCE.

South Grey Teachers in session here to-day and to-morrow. Splendid program. Don't fail to hear Mr. Tilley's lecture to-night. Especially should there be a large turnout of young people. Free admission to all.

One Cask Biscuit Stoneware, Dinner and Breakfast Setts from 85 to 108 pieces per sett, one Cask Toilet ware 4, 9 and 12 pieces per sett, direct importation, M. Richardson & Co.

The woollen business is bound to boom, this summer in Flesherton, as we have the statement from W. H. Flesher, that he is determined to give everybody satisfaction—especially in custom work, and is reducing prices from last year.

The best brands of Roller Flour, Feed, &c. that can possibly be obtained are kept for sale by Mr. W. W. Trimble, Flesherton, next door to Clayton's boot & shoe store. Look out for announcement in these columns next week.

One Cask of French China Tea Setts, Gold lined and beautifully decorated, direct Importation, M. Richardson & Co.

It is a well known fact, that Wm. Richardson has been and is at present time the most successful seedsman in this section. He buys nothing but the best in the market. Call and see him. I have had satisfactory evidence of my success in the seed business for years. —R.E.W.

The tramp season is upon us. As soon as you perceive one of those fellows open the front gate and lumber along in the direction of the front door, let "loose the dogs of war upon him." The Advance keeps a shot-gun loaded to the muzzle with buckshot for the benefit of those rascally nomads.

A large stock of New Cashmeres in Black and Colors 36 to 42 inches from 20c. a [illegible] up at M. Richardson & Co's.

We have much pleasure in noting the fact that the Deemerton Creamery was awarded a Medal and Diploma, from the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, London, England, 1886, for buttter exhibited and manufactured by them. We have no doubt the patrons of the company will be greatly pleased at the good news, likewise Mr. Daniel Schmidt manager of the Deemerton Creamery. "Rah" for Carrick.—Walkerton Telescope.

One Cask of English Colored Tea Setts, beautiful new patterns, direct importation, M. Richardson & Co.

Just received at R. Trimble's, 1 Car of Fine Salt, a quantity of Potatoes, and a case of Long Clear Bacon.

An Editor's labors are seldom esteemed or compensated. A lawyer will give you five minutes' advice on a topic and charge you $5 for it. An editor will give you advice on a hundred topics and charge you 5 cents a copy for his paper. And very often 5 cents given to an editor would save $5 given to a lawyer. In fact no other business men are so universally robbed and swindled out of their labor and capital as the country newspaper publisher.—N. Y. Sun.

In our story columns last week appeared a short sketch titled "A Backwoods Story," the scenes and incidents connected therewith being laid in the neighboring townships of Euphrasia and Collingwood. Since the appearance of the story in the Mirror we have been creditably informed that it is the production of Mr. A. R. Fawcett, the editor and proprietor of the Flesherton Advance. Such being the case we desire to acknowledge our indebtedness to that gentleman, and also to compliment him on his ability as a delineator of pioneer life and character. The story, we are informed, was written for "Forest and Farm," in which journal it first appeared, and from which it has been copied into nearly all the papers in Ontario. We trust this apology may be satisfactory to that journal as well as the author.—Meaford Mirror. Thanks, brother, for the correction; also for your generous criticism of our humble effort in the line of story-writing.

English Church Service.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Sir,—On Sunday 29th inst., Divine service was held in the Orange Hall, Flesherton Station at 8 p. m., by the Rev. Mr. Edgerton, of Dundalk. The hall was well filled and a very appropriate sermon was delivered by the Rev. gentleman. The chants and hymns were sung under the leadership of Mr. F. Gee, Mr. Geo. Moorhead presiding at the organ. The music was well rendered considering that only one practice had been had previous to the service. The Rev. gentleman announced that service would be held at the same time and place each Sunday in the future. A vestry meeting is announced to be held at Mr. Cole's house, Flesherton, on Monday the 6th May, to which members of the congregation are cordially invited. Meeting at 2 o'clock, p. m.

CANADIAN CLIMATE.—The Canadian climate is particularly productive of Cold in the Head and Catarrh. In fact Catarrh to-day is more prevalent than any other disease. The discovery of Nasal Balm places within the reach of all a certain means of cure.

FARMERS!

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., CARDING, ROLL-CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 30th, 1887.

THE CRIME OF POVERTY

Private Ownership in Land the Root of all Poverty.

THE LABOR QUESTION A LAND QUESTION.

Tax the Land Instead of Industry and Enterprise, and

WAGES AND WORK WOULD BE PLENTIFUL.

Mr. Henry George, who was received with loud applause, said:

Ladies and gentlemen,—I am to lecture to you to-night on "The Crime of Poverty." I hold that poverty is a crime. Not that it is a crime to be poor necessarily. There may be cases in which even that is true—cases in which a man is poor from his own fault. But the greater portion of the poverty that exists all over the civilized world to-day I hold to be a crime, not of the individuals who suffer, but of society at large. Two or three weeks ago there was started at a great meeting in New York an Anti-Poverty Society; and the Chairman of that meeting is a priest who, during a long life in the ministry in that city, has been known for his charitable deeds and good works—Rev. Dr. McGlynn. (Applause,) That society proclaims its desire to abolish poverty. That man, like many other men who have done what they could to alleviate poverty by charity, has become satisfied that charity—the mere giving of alms—could do practically nothing to meet the case. It is necessary to go to the root of the evil, and for that reason he has lifted up against crime—the social crime of poverty—and called together a great body of earnest men and women who, like him, believe that it springs from a wrong, and the only way to successfully deal with it is to abolish that wrong. (Applause.) In commenting upon this society and the part taken in it by Dr. McGlynn, a prominent Catholic clergyman of New England in a recent sermon declared that the very attempt to abolish poverty was wicked—that poverty was ordained by God, that Christ came upon the earth and blessed poverty and did nothing whatever to remove it. If this preacher is right, if poverty is caused by the laws of God, if poverty is in the scheme of the Creator, then all efforts to abolish it are futile. If it is not, if it exists in defiance of God's laws, if it exists because we don't observe those laws, then poverty is a crime, and the crime must meet its punishment. (Applause.) I contend that there is in the laws and in the providence of the Creator nothing to produce the widespread poverty that exists to-day even in the very centres of the world. On the contrary, it is due to the injustice of man—to the fact that we have ignored and do ignore the laws of God. Look over the civilized world to-day. Everywhere there is looming up what we speak of as the labor question. Everywhere men who earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brows are becoming dissatisfied with the existing order of things. Everywhere there is complaint of men willing to work with difficulty finding the opportunity to work. Everywhere there are those who even with the hardest toil can only make the barest living. I read to-day in Mr. Goldwin Smith's paper, the Week, an item stating that a Durham engineer had made a discovery by which the same amount of steam could be produced as now with 70 per cent. less coal, and the article went on to say how this invention would enable steamships to cross the ocean at a speed of thirty miles an hour, without increase of running expenses—how it would decrease railway expenses, and at the same time effect a sufficient saving to

THE CROSS OF THE NEW CRUSADE

CLOTHE EVERY NAKED BACK

and fill every hungry stomach. That was the dream of men some decades ago, when the grand era of modern discovery and improvement was first entered upon. It is a dream which has not been realized. Invention upon invention and modern improvement upon modern improvement have been made, yet where our inventions provide the world with the greatest abundance there seems to be the most poverty. In spite of all the powers which human ingenuity has called to the aid of human muscles in their produce of wealth, the struggle for existence becomes more intense as time passes by. In civilized lands insanity is steadily on the increase, and while we have on the one hand fortunes being amassed that seem monstrous, we have on the other the pauper and the tramp. What can we hope for from future inventions if this is the case? Before we can hope that mere invention will do away with poverty we must find out why it is that all the great powers which have come already have not sufficed to do so. All over the world the labor question is arising. There are combinations of capital, strikes, boycotts on all sides. This labor question is the great matter to be settled in the future. What is at the bottom of the labor question? Simply this: that there are now, in the best of times, among us a certain number of men who find it difficult to get employment. They are constantly met with the statement that there is either a surplus of products of labor or too little work to furnish employment for all. Even in our newest States to-day there are men idly tramping about looking for employment. Our great cities are full of them. An advertisement in the New York Herald—and the Herald is in the habit of boasting about it—asking for help will meet with 200 or 300 responses. Thousands of people are landing upon our shores every week, driven from Europe by the harder conditions of older settled countries, and trying to improve their fortunes here, and yet all over our country there

SEEMS TO BE TOO MANY PEOPLE.

Great combinations of labor are formed to keep down these conditions, and it has gone so far into our every day life that we are accustomed to regard work as a boon. Our newspapers talk of the man who furnishes work as a benefactor, and our public policy, in important respects, is based on this idea. We maintain tariffs to keep work in our country—to, in our idea, keep foreigners from doing work that we think should be done here. It is not natural for a man to want to work; on the contrary, the natural impulse of a man is to allow others to do work for him. You may make work for a housewife by dropping grease on her kitchen floor or spilling coffee on her carpet, but she will not thank you for it. (Laughter.) Yet vast expenditures have popular support, because it is said they are going to furnish work—to make employment, to give people something to do. Now, when you come to think of it, there is no natural surplus of labor. The relations between the demand and the supply of labor are fixed. What is the demand? It is the satisfying of human wants. And the supply of labor are those powers which a man brings into the world with him. So long as for every mouth that is brought into existence there come two hands, the relations between demand and supply must be the same, no matter how the population increases. And if it seems, as it does seem to-day, that there is a discrepancy, it is simply that there is something that prevents the supply from satisfying the demand. (Applause.) This notion that there is a surplus of labor—too many people in the world—has been developed into a philosophical theory, and it has been attempted to throw upon the Creator the responsibility for the want and suffering which prevail among men. It has been held by certain philosophers that there is a tendency to multiply population faster than subsistence. That is

THE MALTHUSIAN THEORY.

There are in reality no facts anywhere in the civilized world that can support that contention. There are certainly none in a new country like this. Yet we are asked to look on the phenomena in this new land that these theorists have attempted to account for—too many people. The thing is preposterous! And to-day if there is one theory more than another that is believed in, that theory is over-production. The thing is transcendently preposterous! There can be no such thing as over-production in any general sense until all human wants are satisfied. Over-production! Too many new clothes! And women who would like a new dress have to turn their old ones! Too many shoes! And children have to go barefoot! It cannot be over-production. It must be unjust distribution. (Applause.) Over-production? I read in a newspaper when the last spasm of hard times was coming on, an item about a cotton manufacturer in an Eastern State, who called his work girls together and explained to them that in consequence of over-production he would have to do something. He said he was aware they were only getting enough wages to enable them to live in comfort; he would not reduce these, but would allow them to come to his assistance by working two hours more a day for the same pay. And that little thing is typical of larger things. Talk of over-production! While all over the world there are millions of men who would work if they could find anything to do, great numbers of children are sent to work when they ought to be at school. (Applause.) Women who ought to be at home are forced to toil all day in our factories. Over-production! when we are pressing men, women and children into the workshops to toil for something to save them from starvation. Over-production! when parents are forced to overstate the ages of their children to get them employment despite the laws of the State, so that they may be enabled to get food and raiment. It is not over-production. The whole question of this industrial problem comes down

TO THE UNEMPLOYED MAN.

It is he who forces all this competition in the avocations of all civilized communities. This competition, which runs through all branches of business, originates with the unemployed man. A number of men are working together in a common, unorganized trade. Along comes an unemployed man asking for work. The employer tells him he hasn't any work for him. The man says, "I am tired and hungry and must get work. What wages do you pay?" "Three dollars a day," responds the boss. To this the seeker after labor says, "Well, I must have work. I will work for $2.50 a day." The employer says "All right." He then goes to one of his employees and says he must discharge him. "Why," asks the man, "don't I do my work all right? What have you against me?" "Nothing," replies the boss, "only I can get a man who will do the work for less wages." The employee thinks he might as well work for the $2.50 as be discharged, and the boss goes around his men in the shop and finds all would rather accept the reduction than make way for the unemployed man. And this one unemployed man may under free conditions lower the price of labor of twenty men. It was cases like this which caused the inauguration of labor unions. Still this competition grows, and though unions may fight it out now and then they can never destroy it as long as large numbers of the community are out of employment. It is like rowing against the tide. Get rid of the idle man and

POVERTY WILL BE ABOLISHED.

There will then only remain the poverty which results from vice. The Bible says: "He that will not work, neither shall he eat." But the curse of the present state of society is that the men who are anxious to work so that they may eat are unable to find the opportunity to do so. No man has the right to compel another to employ him; but every man does have a natural right to employ himself. Now what is the natural opportunity for employment? How did the first man who settled in this new country get employment? There was simply the land waiting for him to labor on for it to produce all human desires, and he went to work. That was all. Where men can find access to land there men can always find employment. That is why in new countries labor is easier to find than in older ones. Over on our side of the line a delusion has been fostered that a protective tariff raises wages in the United States. Why, wages in the States were higher in old colonial days, before a tariff was raised at all, than they are now. Adam Smith declared that when land was easy to get a man would not work long for small wages. But as these opportunities for self employment have been curtailed we find that fringe of unemployed labor increasing, and competition becoming more and more bitter? They talk about labor being the creator of all wealth. Labor can create nothing. God Almighty alone can create. Man is not a creator, he is a producer only. The whole human race could not create the tiniest spot on the surface of the sun. Man produces fish by taking them out of the water. He produces coal by digging it out of the bowels of the earth. He produces houses by getting together the brick and mortar and wood, and produces cloth by weaving the material, etc. All our productions are simply the changing in place or in form which nature produces. Labor alone can accomplish nothing. Without the land it is helpless. It can only be of service in working up the raw material already in existence. So it is that the man who has only his labor at command is absolutely helpless, and cannot use his labor until he can attain access to the raw material. Man is a land animal. We are just as much children of the soil as are the flowers or grass. The man who has only the power to work under conditions in which material for work is owned by somebody else is a mere dependent. The man who owns the land is virtually his master and he his slave. You may call them free men, but they are not so. The owner has the power of life and death over them. In a community where one class of people own the land and the other has no legal right to any portion of the earth, there must serfs be found. The landlord! That is a title the Bible gives to Deity. Tennyson says:

OF THE RAW MATERIAL

The God Almighty of the country side,

He having power over the elements furnished by God can compel them virtually to do his will. They are his slaves. What is slavery? It is compelling a man to labor without giving him in return an adequate reward for that labor. Is not this industrial slavery just as much slavery as that which was abolished at the end of the great war? The slaves had to be fed and clothed to keep them alive, and the children had to be reared to be healthy men and women. Now, you take the older countries, and there are great populations there who get no more than the wages of the slave. Even in our country men and women are working in our factories among machinery that has produced untold wealth, yet they are miserably poor. Is not the reason that we have made

LAND THE PRIVATE PROPERTY OF A FEW.

That we have enabled men, by virtue of their ownership of slices of this planet, to live in idleness, while others have to buy permission from them before they can go to work. We talk about there not being work enough. Take the great city of New York. Go there and you will see the great mass of the people crowded so close together that the very decencies cannot be observed. So close that the children die by the thousands in their infancy. So close that only about 4 per cent. of the people live in separate houses. Yet there are lots of people there who have too little work. Is there no opportunity there for building operations? Why are there not more houses built? Bricklayers and carpenters and material could be had at any moment. But you must get part of the surface of the land there to build upon. You cannot build houses in the sky. And there is plenty of land. About one-half of the area of New York is yet vacant. Why don't they build more houses then, when they are so much needed? Simply for this reason: that the land is held at enormous prices by speculators. Go into Pennsylvania and you will find coal miners who are in a condition little better than serfdom, working for poor wages and only able to get work about two-thirds time in the year. Work, too, is often shut off entirely on account, the mine owners say, of over production of coal, while at that very time thousands of people in New York, Boston and Chicago want more coal and are not able to get it. If enough coal is not produced to supply these people it is not because there is not sufficient coal land. The reason is that the lands are held by a few men, some of them residing in New York, some in Chicago, or perhaps in England, and the miners are not allowed to work. The owners shut down just when they like and up go the prices of coal. If the men could dig down and bring out the coal that God planted there they would have plenty, and having plenty they would make work for others—they would buy more dry goods and groceries, and the whole community would be benefited. (Hear, hear.) Go into agriculture and you see the same thing. People are coming over the seas to our country and the population is streaming across the continent. From the east they are pushing west looking for land. It is a good deal like swimming a river to get a drink. You go out from New York and see

GREAT TRACTS OF UNOCCUPIED LAND,

but you must go a very long way before you see any that is unclaimed, or that you dare set a foot upon without paying some speculator or mortgaging your labor for years. Thus the cities are crowded. Open the natural opportunities for labor and none need lack employment. The primary occupations are those on which all others are built and the remuneration on primary occupations regulate that on all others. No wonder wages are low and are only kept up to about half what they should be by combinations, strikes and fighting when you see farmers in the Western States being obliged to give one-half of their crops in order to get at the land. When men can get only one-half of the product of their labor on farms how must it be in all other classes of labor? Then look at the booms you have all over the country. You have had some in Canada and some pretty respectable ones, I believe, in the Northwest. (Laughter.) In New York land is continually going up in price and in Kansas City to-day, or ten miles out of the city, you will see them making streets by running a plough along the land, dividing the property off into lots and selling the lots at $250 each. A great deal of that is wild-cat speculation, but as population increases land goes up in value, and the man who gets the land, though he does nothing, can grow rich by compelling others to pay high prices before they can use it. When any man can thus get rich on the product of labor, the man who does the laboring must get less in proportion. This is the

FUNDAMENTAL CAUSE OF THE DEPRESSION,

over production and poverty that fester in every centre of population, and it is a cause that is a crime. Take the coal of which I spoke. Before man came upon this earth the forces of nature were at work producing this coal. For what? Evidently to furnish a store of heat and light and power for the dwellers that were to dwell upon the earth; for the beings that differ from all others in their ability to use what has been placed upon and in the earth. What, then, was coal made for? For this corporation or that body of men? Or was it for all men? Is it not a manifest truth of natural as well as of revealed religion that it was made for all the people of the earth? (Applause.) God is no respector of persons, and that which denies to any his right is an injury and a crime. Just think of it! Little children to-day toiling in the factories in New York, Glasgow, London and all big cities, and growing up in such a way that it is little less than a miracle to keep them pure. Are they not the children of God? Are they not entitled to an equal share in His bounty, and are they not robbed when disinherited of their right? When the English went to New Zealand and bought the land from the natives the women would come back to them and ask for more money. They replied, "Why, we bought this land from you and paid you for it, and why do you come back wanting more?" Then the women replied, "Yes, yes, but you didn't pay this baby its share; this baby was not born then." Isn't the New Zealander's system a truer one than ours? Why should a father be allowed to SELL THE RIGHTS OF HIS CHILDREN?

Take England, Ireland and Scotland, for instance, and there you find that the vast part of the population come into life with no right to live and no right to use the land except they purchase it from another. Where one comes into the world the possessor of vast lands one thousand are born with no right except what they get by paying the one. Is not this preposterous and absurd? (Hearty applause.) Where can any man get the right to deed away slices of this earth? There certainly is a right of property recognized, and a right which is absolutely indispensable. That which a man makes is his. It is his against all the world so long as by the use of it he does not injure any one. That is clear, and rests upon the right of every man to enjoy the fruits which his labor produces. But who can have the right to the possession of any acre of land? Man takes a fish from the ocean and it is his, being the product of his own labor. No man has the right to come up and lay claim to or take that fish; but that is different from the right of ownership of the ocean, whereby any man should say no one else shall take out fish without permission from me. If you will go to Londonderry and stand on any of the bridges there you can see the salmon in the streams, but you can't touch them—they all belong to a man who lives in London. (Laughter.) In all the places over there it is the same. All the salmon and the trout and the catfish, if there are any, are owned by men, just as if they were produced by some man who lives and enjoys himself in London or Paris. As for a common man, he would no more think of catching one of these fish than he would of catching a hornet. (Laughter.) Where did that man in London get the right to those salmon, you ask, and he replies that he got it from his father, who is now dead. Where did his father get it? Why, from some other person who is dead. And where did he get it? Why, it has come from some king who died hundreds of years ago. Now, how did any man who is dead get the right to give away all the salmon that are in these streams now?

THIS IS NOT A WORLD FOR DEAD MEN,

it is for the living, and what rights have the dead in this world? When men die they go to another world and have no rights here. Then, you ask, how did the owner of this land on which this building stands get the right to it and if you look back you will find it came from some dead man. A week or two ago there was some land sold in New York for $4,500,000 an acre, and when it was traced back it was found that it came from some dead Dutchman who died about 300 years ago. On Long Island two or three years ago all the fishermen paid rent in a percentage of all the fish they caught, to some one who called himself owner of the right to fish on the island. At last some one questioned his right and looked through the records for a trace of it. The man claimed that he had got a right from James the Second, but the fishermen could not find any papers and would not pay any more. If they had found the papers they would have gone on paying—men in the nineteenth century paying the descendants of another man who had died years before for the right to catch fish. Isn't that absurd? It is like getting on a train and finding all the seats vacant but claimed. You ask how they are claimed and a man tells you he holds the right to the seats, having got it from a man who got off at the last station. Why should any man now hold rights to lands, which rights were got from a man who got off this world a good many stations back. It is absurd, and no one can in justice dare to defend the system of private proprietorship in land. All they can do is to say that that is the only way that land can be put in use—that we must have private proprietorship in order to have it well used. What does that statement mean? It means that the law of right cannot be carried out. Don't believe anything of the sort. What is RIGHT CAN ALWAYS BE CARRIED OUT.

You need not ask what is expedient or what is wise if you ask what is right. Do justice; and there must be a way of doing justice to every one that comes into this world. What is necessary in order to secure a full and proper use for the land is secure possession, but not the right of ownership. You want it to be so arranged that he who sows the seed shall have the right to reap the crop, and that he who works in the mine shall have the fruits of his labor, but not the right of absolute possession that gives one man the power to be a dog-in-the-manger, and that makes vacant places in land and cities crowded with men who can't find employment, though all around them are the opportunities of plenty of work. Go to London, or Chicago, or New York, and you will find corporations and individuals who can hold any amount of land, and if they can why cannot the community be the possessors of the soil? The rights of ownership are not necessarily to the improvement and use of the land. Men plant that they may reap a crop. Secure to them the right to reap the crop and that is all that is necessary. By that means land becomes a thing in which all have an equal share during their life. Equal rights will thus be secured, and an opportunity given to all men to get ample employment. It will

OPEN TO ALL MEN THE LAND,

and a vast fund can thus be raised from a tax upon the land which can be used for the good of the community. It is not necessary that we should call the land our own. It is not necessary that we should rent it out. The easier way is simply to increase taxes on land and abolish all other taxes. Remove the taxes on everything that bears on capital and labor, and put the burden on the value of the land, and the fund can be used in ways immensely beneficial to the country. It is to my mind the clearest evidence of design of creation that such a system should prevail—that land values should increase with the growth of society; that the one thing which should increase is the value of land. And what does this mean? That as men come closer together they can use the increasing funds for common purposes. It would have the effect of bringing them to an equality, and do away with differences between the strong and the weak. Here is a vast field that could be entered upon. A poor, struggling widow needing help—an old man, crippled, needing assistance—could be relieved without recourse to what is called charity. A painter falls from his ladder and is seriously hurt, a miner is crushed by falling mineral, a fisherman goes out and never returns. In the present state of society their widows and children are left to get along as best they can. Such a state of things is a

DISGRACE TO CHRISTIANITY,

for every man should feel assured that in a Christian country his wife and children would not need if he were called suddenly away. (Applause.) In the city of New York, in the city of Glasgow, in other large centres of population there are immortal souls growing up in worse savagry than the world knows. All this might be obviated if the land reform I urge was brought about In the city of New York alone the fund would amount to $100,000,000 per year. What vast improvements, what stately buildings, what magnificent avenues, what comfortable dwellings for the poor would not this procure. Why, even your own delightful city could be vastly beautified by the amount which would accure therefrom. (Hear, hear.) Now is it not a stupid thing the way the taxes are imposed? A man spends a lot of money in building a house which adorns the thoroughfare and increases the value of adjacent property, and a tax is immediately imposed on him. The lazy, good-for-nothing fellow who left his lot lie idle, reaps the advantage. It looks like a tax on thrift and encouragement of the spendthrift. Surely it was a good thing to make two blades of grass to grow where one grew before. No sooner does the farmer, however, build new buildings, put his fences in repair and generally improve his place, than down comes the tax gatherer and

FINES HIM FOR MAKING IMPROVEMENTS.

(Applause.) The custom in too many instances was to tax the farmer's bare land that he is trying to make an honest living from up to a figure very much higher than that paid on exactly similar land held for speculative purposes. Would it not be wise to take off these taxes? However, these would be light benefits in a community in comparison to the choking off of these "dogs-in-the-manger" individuals who hold property for speculation. In the new state of things, which I hope to see come to pass, there will be a thinning out of dense populations, no one need be idle who want work, leisure could be taken advantage of, the hell of greed would be extinguished and God would be worshipped instead of the golden calf. (Applause.) It is not the human muscles that are the great producing power. It is the brain of man that makes him the master of the beasts and products of nature. If the new land system were in vogue all might be rich. Not that we will be richer than our neighbors, but there will be no more of that degrading poverty which prevents many from enjoying the advantages of civilization. (Applause.) It was a fact that now men cannot find time to enjoy the privilege of self-development. There is no necessity for there being any poverty. We might be rich—I mean have leisure and all the ordinary luxuries of life and comfortable homes—if we would but

DO SIMPLE JUSTICE.

(Applause.) Christ struck right at the root of poverty when He said "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." If this golden rule was carried out in our institutions and laws poverty would be abolished. (Cheers.) What was the prayer he taught: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, ON EARTH, as it is done in heaven." All we have to do to make this a heaven in earth is to carry out the principle of doing unto others as we would that they should do unto us. (Applause.)

After referring to the new Anti-Poverty Society in New York, and appealing to the audience to give heed to the arguments he had used, if not for their own sake for the sake of others, Mr. George took his seat amidst applause.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Chairman then rose and stated that if any one desired to ask any questions they might do so.

A gentleman in the audience, who said he had come from Toronto and was a stranger in the city, said: "Is it any sin or crime on my part in saving part of the wages I earn, or was it wrong for me to purchase the house I own in Toronto, that when I go hence I may know that my wife and family are provided for?"

Mr. George—It is certainly no crime or sin for you to buy a home if you can, but you should also do something to make it easier for others to buy homes, too.

The gentleman said he thought the evil was caused by the abuse of the rights of property owners more than by anything else.

Mr. George replied that under the present system a great majority of the people have no homes. In New York probably not 2 per cent. of the population own their homes, while a great majority of them were living in rack-rented tenements. Under the system he proposed others would be enabled to get homes. By making the land unprofitable to speculators, it would pass into the hands of those who would use it and all would have some spot they could call home.

THE SHEPHERD OF THE SALT LAKE.

A Story in Three Chapters.

CHAPTER II.

The mulga ridges round the Salt Lake—before so silent—resounded with the ring of the axe, the thud of the mawl, the metallic clink of hammered wedges, and the dull grating of the crosscut saw. Fallen trees marked the line of fencing; then the square post-holes, dug out at regular intervals, showed a further stage of progress; and then the short posts themselves sprang into existence in a long, straight line, which every day was added to and lengthened.

During two months of hot summer weather the work was carried on bravely, and Scotty's solitude was shared by the fencers and the mother and child. The long summer days, odorous with the breath of the hops and wattle blossom, fled by; the mulga ridges lost their green, and assumed a sober brown hue more in harmony with a dark red soil; the dark-hued mulga trees dropped listlessly before the remorseless heat; the giant box tree exuded a dark crimson gum that hung in semi-transparent drops like clots of thickened blood; and still the white tent of the fencers and the hut of the shepherd stood near together by the edge of the Salt Lake.

And the long days had not fled by without bringing other changes in their train. To the lonely life of poor old Scotty they brought a fresh interest—a new experience. He learned to love the little being who had come and awakened him by her childish presence and her young grief from his long lethargy. He came to love the sound of her voice, the sight of her thin figure, the touch of her hand. And, strange to say, the little girl returned his liking. She was never tired of wandering with him behind the straggling rock, talking in a quaint way to the quiet sheep, who grew to know her. Oftentimes she would pass the day with her father and Larry at their work; but she did not like the noise of the chopping and hammering. It made her head ache, and she was always glad to get away from it. She liked watching her father dig the square post holes, and passed many an hour counting the mulga posts and taking long glances over their tops to see if they were quite in a straight line. She liked being with her mother, too, when she did not make her do lessons, and when she was not ill. But it was always one thing or the other

When her mother was well enough she would invariably set her to spelling and reading; and then, when she was ill and lying in bed, it was so dull in the tent little Lizzie was always glad to get out into the fresh odorous air. Yes, she liked best of all to accompany old Scotty in his slow wanderings with his flock, resting with him in the shade, talking to the sheep, listening to his rambling stories, which she would hardly understand, but which exercised a strange fascination over her, for they were all of the old convict days. That was what she liked best, for they were days full of novel experiences for her. At first, aroused by the new element that had entered into his life, the old shepherd had thrown off in some measure the apathy and supineness that characterized him. In his companionship with the little girl he became more animated than he had been for years. He tried to amuse her to the best of his powers. He puzzled his failing memory for recollections of past experiences to tell her; he got her bush flowers and pretty heaths; dug up edible roots for her; took her to where quandong and chucky-chuckles grew, and helped her to fill her apron with the priceless fruits. He had acquired, during former years of his lonely life, something more than an ordinary skill in carving with his clasp knife, and this he returned to, after many years of disuse, cutting out for her all manner of curious toys and knick-knacks. He even deftly carved the quandongs ones and made a necklace of them for her—a task of the utmost delicacy, that took him almost a month to accomplish. It was no wonder little Lizzie liked being with Scotty and his sheep. Nobody was so kind to her as the old shepherd; nobody knew how to amuse her so well.

And so the days fled, and the golden wattle and the hop blossoms began to fall, breaking out a sweeter fragrance in dying; and the peppermint trees, and the resinous pines, and the bleaching gum leaves, loaded the summer air with a pungent redolence. The spicy air of the mulga ridges had brought something like a flush of health to little Lizzie's pale cheeks dnring those two months; the evening breezes, sweeping across the Salt Lake, and laden with its saline emanations, had not carried a blight with them, but had strengthened the weakly child and benefited her.

"I'm not frightened of the Salt Lake now," she said one day to old Scotty, when both were reposing under a clump of emu-bush near its edge, idly watching the camping sheep. "I don't think there's a blight on it now. Perhaps it's gone away."

"No, no," he answered, shaking his head. "It's here, sure enough."

"But mother says it's making me strong."

"Aye; it did me good at first, too. But it got hold of me and broke me down afterward."

The child looked curiously at him.

"Mother said I wasn't to believe it all," she said, after a pause. "She says its wicked to talk like that."

"May be," he answered, shaking his head a second time. "I don't know. But there's a curse on it for all that."

He gave way to the child in everything, but on that one point nothing could make him speak differently.

"I'm not frightened of it then, see," exclaimed little Lizzie. And, rising from her shady seat under the emu-bush, she ran down toward the lake.

"No, no, don't go there," he cried.

But the child shook her head merrily, and, followed by the old shepherd's dog barking joyously, walked out on to the flat expanse. A little cloud of acrid dust rose at every footstep, and she sank up to her ankles in the light, pervious soil. As she walked out further she went still deeper, and even the dog, bounding ahead of her, light weight as he was, sank up to its knees in the yielding mould.

"There, you see," she said, returning breathless with the exertion, "I'm not frightened of it a bit."

"You shouldn't have done it," answered Scotty, shaking his head in a troubled way. "It won't lead to any good. You shouldn't have done it."

Toward sundown the two companions made their way back to the camp at the tail of the slowly-moving flock. The sun going down at the far end of the Salt Lake cast a blinding glare over the treeless waste. The salty incrustations the spread in dirty white patches over its surface flashed crimson, as though the earth were stained with blood; the glaucous pigweed and the darker ti-tree bushes took a strange unnatural brilliancy; even the discolored limestone rocks at the edge became sublimated by the crimson glamor. Slowly the bleating flock made its way homeward over the mulga ridges, the man and the child following with the dog at their heels. The glowing sunshine transfused the long avenues of the bush with a soft radiance; the birds and insects, rousing themselves after the heat of the day, filled the air with sound; the spicy odors distilled by the heat from tree and flower made the air languorous and heavy; from the dried herbage, crushed by the feet of the moving sheep, arose a fainter perfume.

"Oh!" sighed the child, half unconsciously, as the white gleam of the tent was seen in the distance, "what a long, long, beautiful day! The sun's nearly down How beautiful it all is! Oh, I wish it could go on like this for ever and ever!"

That same evening, as old Scotty sat alone at his solitary hearth, the two fencers entered the hut.

"We've just been putting little Liz to bed," said Duke. "She was that tired, happy-like, she could hardly hold her head up."

"She do enjoy herself all day long," said his mate. "It's wonderful what she finds to amuse her. She was singin' away like a young chirrup, almost until she went off."

"Yes?" said Scotty, eagerly. "She's asleep, is she?"

"Sound as a bell."

"Ah, that's it, that's it," he murmured. "She'll be awake and bright to-morrow."

"See here, Scotty," said Duke, thoughtfully, "Larry and me have come because we've something to tell you. We're goin' away."

"What? Going away?" he cried, letting his pipe fall to the ground in his sudden dismay. "No, no; you're not going to take the child. You won't take her from me."

"We must go. Leastways I must, and it's no good Larry stopping alone. My missus has been ailin' a good bit since we came here, and she's close on her confinement. I won't risk it without a doctor this time. If she'd been all right she'd have got through it well enough, but she ain't. I'm going to take her in the dray to Gidanga, where she can be attended to. It wouldn't be any good Larry stopping alone—he couldn't do much, so he's coming along."

"But the child!"

"Well, it's this way," said Duke thoughtfully. "It'll be a rough journey to the township, It must be nigh on 80 miles, and there ain't a track till we get in the river road, you know. She's a delikite little thing is Liz, and I don't much like the idea of her havin' to rough it. We mean coming back, of course, and finishing the contract; so seein' as you've grown so fond of her, and she having a liking for you, I thought, if you wanted her, as you might take care of her till we come back. But the misses don't like to part with her, and so we're in a bit of a taking about it."

"Leave her with me," exclaimed Scotty, eagerly. "I'll take care of her. She shan't want for nothing."

"That's what I said," interjected Larry. "These mulga ridges is very healthy, and they're doing Liz a tremenjis lot of good. There's no use draggin' her to the township. It's a bad place for children, and the journey'd knock her up. We'd be back in a month or six weeks most like, and so, if Liz is willing to stop, I ses 'Let her.'"

"Don't take her away. For heaven's sake don't take her away," cried Scotty.

"Well, I'm for leaving her," answered Duke, "though the missus isn't. We've been talking over it, and we made up our minds—if you were willing to take charge of the child—to leave it to little Liz herself. If she wants to stop she can. If she wants to come with us, well, then, we'll take her along."

"No, no; she must not go. I'll take care of her. No harm shall come to her. I'll look after her morning and night. See here, I'll give you this if you leave her with me," he cried, fumbling amid the blankets on the bunk. "It's all I have. But here; you shall have it all if you'll leave her."

"Put up your cheque, man," returned Duke, with good nature. "I dont want it. If the child likes, she shall stop with you. I'll leave you plenty of rations for her, and you can look after our camp for us, for we'll leave the tent standing and the tools."

"Yes, yes. Only leave the child with me, and I will do anything you want."

The old shepherd passed a sleepless night. The fear of losing the child worked upon his feeble mind to such an extent that during the whole of that warm summer night he walked restlessly to and fro in the hut in a fever of hope and fear. With the earliest streak of dawn he was out, waiting impatiently outside the tent of the fencers. An hour later Duke emerged from it.

"You're early," he said.

"The child!" exclaimed Scotty feverishly.

"Well, I've been talking it over agen with the missus, and she agrees to leavin' Liz here if she wants to stop. So we'll just ask her."

The girl, bright and rosy from her long sleep, emerged from the tent at that moment.

"Come here, little Liz," said the father gravely, "I want to ask you something. Mother and me's going away for a time—going a long way all through the bush. Mother's ill, you know; and I'm going to take her to the doctor's. But we're coming back again soon. Would you like to go with us, or stay here along with Scotty and the sheep?"

Lizzie's glance wandered from her father's face to the old shepherd. He stood feverishly, tremblingly expectant of the coming answer, with such a look of entreaty in his eyes that her gaze was for the moment arrested. He seemed about to speak, but no sound came from him, only his lips moved convulsively. The child's glance wandered from the shepherd's face to the golden wattle gleaming in the early sunlight, and the hops on their pendent branches waving a mute greeting. The sheep camped in one corner of the bush yards attracted her attention for a moment, but her gaze wandered away to the park-like avenues of graceful mulga trees, to the bright green clumps of emu and apple bush, to the dark green of the pines and tall peppermint trees, and to the red mulga ridges. At last her wandering glance rested on the Salt Lake—silent, lifeless, gleaming white and burnished. She gazed at it for a moment in silence, and then she said with strange quietness:

"I'd sooner stay by the Salt Lake, father."

The next day the fencers took their departure, leaving little Lizzie under Scotty's care. Early in the morning the two horses were harnessed to the dray, one in the lead, one between the shafts. Mother and father embraced their daughter for the last time; then Larry cracked his long whip lustily, the harness strained, the heavy wheels creaked slowly round, and Scotty and his little charge were left to the solitude of the Salt Lake.

"Oh, mother! mother!" sobbed Lizzie, as the dray moved off, burying her face in her hands. "I wish I'd gone too."

"No, no," said Scotty, holding her hand tight in his, "you will stop with me and the sheep. We shall be so happy together. And they'll be back soon—very soon." But under his beard he muttered to himself: "She couldn't go. No, no; the Salt Lake has got her the same as me. She can't get away from it."

(To be continued.)

Bits About Names.

Anglo-Saxons appear to have first given surnames indicating some moral or mental attributes, as, for instance, Wise, Good, Swift, Jolly, Merry, Meek, Gay, Goodman, Makepeace, etc. Then we have names indicating real or fancied resemblance to some animal, such as Bear, Lion, Wolf, Hogg, Hart and Hare. From physical characteristics or peculiarities must have originated such names as Long, Short, Black, Brown, White, Whitehead, Cruikshank, Strong, Armstrong, Longfellow and Greathead. A nickname kept in a family for a generation or two becomes a patronymic. Hence such names as Hopper, Jumper, Springer, Daddysman, Poor, and Rich.

The Mc and O of the Irish and the Mac of the Scotch indicate descent. There is another way in which the same thing is shown: Adam's son becomes Adamson, David's son Davidson; Thompson, Wilson, Williamson, Donaldson, Anderson, and many other names are similarly derived. Localities or places of residence usually gave rise to such names as Hill, Dale, Wood, Green, Greenwood, Heath, Rivers, Waters and Parks. Such names as Welsh, French, Irish, Ireland, English and Scott may perhaps be traced back to the nationality of some remote ancestor.

Some of the Pennsylvania Dutch names which have been partly transformed into English are queer enough. In Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, there are several families by the name of Schreckengeist, which signifies in German a ghost or spectre of terrible appearance. One would think the name could be made no worse, but some of the people have succeeded in transforming it into Shriekingghost. Milliron, Morningstar, Rodheffer and Barndollar are other German names which have been partly translated.

The inns of old England are probably responsible for many names. For instance: John of the Rose became John Rose; Thomas of the Bell, Tom Bell; Richard of the Hawk, Richard Hawk; Henry of the "Greathouse" became Henry Greathouse, and so on, until there is scarcely a bird, animal or other device that ever figured on a signboard that is not perpetuated as a family name.

There are, perhaps, as many queer names among the English as among any people on earth. Dickens' stories abound in them, yet very few of his names were manufactured. Such names as Slaughter, Startup, Gotobed, Deadman, Churchyard, Dogberry and Fudge are found in English dictionaries.

The Romans had double, triple, or even quadruple names, as, for example, Caius Julius Cæsar, Tarquinius Superbus, and Quintus Fabius Maximus. Frequently an honorary name wasadded to commemorate some warlike achievement; Fabius was called Cunctator, and Scipio Africanus.

Sometimes the very queerest of names get coupled together as the title of a firm. Here are a few specemens: Hook & Ketch, Cobb & Hay, Peacock & Sparrow, Fox & Crane, Singer & Hooter, Drake & Gander, Fisher & Fowler, Goslin & Pond, Wild & Free.

Dunseith Turns Up.

A man named S. J. Dunseith, who was lately said to have been drowned off a ferry boat at Detroit, and whose beneficiaries sued the A.O.U.W. and the Ontario Mutual Life for insurance money, has been found alive and in a good state of preservation not far from that city. It is needless to say that the authorities will take measures for his further preservation so that he cannot repeat the experiment.

A bald-headed Italian and a red-headed negro were among the curiosities in an Albany police court a few days ago.

The Indianapolis grand jury has returned indictments against thirteen politicians and election officers for irregularities in connection with the counting of the vote last fall. Eleven of the parties indicted are Democrats and two are Republicans.

Capt. L. W. Cole yesterday took a party of friends for a sail on Traverse Bay, Mich. The yacht was struck by a squall and capsized. D. G. Stark, Geo. Wise, Capt. Cole, Fred. Cole and Marion Trip, of Harbor Springs, were drowned. Three others were saved.

In Chesterfield county, Virginia, recently a colored candidate for office was defeated because he wore a white shirt. It was the only immaculate rag of that kind in the district, but it was too much for his fellow-citizens, and they "scratched" him.

James Manning, a middle-aged man, was killed by the accommodation train on the Grand Trunk Railway, five miles west of Chatham yesterday forenoon. He was walking on the track and failed to hear the whistle. Papers found on the body show that he belonged to Detroit.

The Queen of Denmark is visiting her daughter, the Duchess of Cumberland, at the asylum at Dobling. The Duchess pregnancy delays her restoration to sanity.

A VISIT TO GLENBEIGH.

Touching Scenes of Poverty in the Kerry County Evictions.

Edward Heritage writes to the London Daily News: The concert given at Victoria Hall, Waterloo road, on March 7th last, proved a success. We cleared £25 6d. therefrom, together with £10 collected, making a total of £35, which, by the authority of the committee, I took over to Glenbeigh. I visited the four villages and the schools, Glenbeigh, Coomasherni, Runalagane, Keelnabrack and others whose names I do not mention. In those four places the people were in a far worse condition than I was prepared to expect. In Glenbeigh I found some of those houses which were burned were still in the same condition; but the house from which that poor woman who was in a dying condition was brought has been repaired, as well as some others which were only leveled, but they were in hourly expectation of a visit from the bailiff. They have till latterly adopted the plan of blowing a horn, and warn the people to come out of their houses before the authorities arrive; the practical result has been no trespass. But the landlord has altered his tactics. He comes at night when he can't be seen approaching. They then retake possession, turn the family out and march the tenant off to jail, and he is in due course sentenced to six months' hard labor. The tenants tell me that owing to rack rent and the poorness of the soil they are at present unable to do anything. There is but one horse in Glenbeigh, no plough, nor could they use one, as the stones are as thick in some parts of the land as cabbages. I walked a distance of ten miles, from Killorglin to Rossbeigh, and I saw thousands of acres of land were covered with stones varying from fifty pounds to several tons. Now, as to the houses. It is a shame to use such a term about one in thirty that has no more than one compartment. They are about twelve feet by ten feet. Earth unlevel floor, no windows; for the most part a hole in the wall, about fifteen inches square, to be stopped up with a square piece of wood at night. In one of these I saw twenty people, who had to pig in; besides that there were two donkeys. In another place the ground would L-shape about 32 to 36 feet superficial. No light except by the door. That had to suffice for a window, a baby a few months old, another 2½ years, and an old man, the grandfather, about 80 years. The woman was almost naked, and looked bewildered. I ordered two petticoats and a shawl to be given her, out of about one hundred-weight which I took over out of my own pocket. Next I went along the road, and went to examine what I thought was an evicted house, when a voice came from a hut like some you see on the railway with earth roof. There was a sick man there; no window, no fireplace; smoke had to come out at door. The poor fellow had been there four years. At Runalagane there are a few cockles, and when they are fortunate they may get as many as will bring 6d. in a day, and they have to boil, prepare and take them to Killorglin, ten miles, or Killarney, twenty-one miles. Father Quilter addressed two young girls who stood away from us. They could not approach us as they had not enough to entirely cover their nakedness. Many instances in the case of grown men, as well as women, in fact, I could give them by the score, but I fear I shall trespass too far. Kerry is, unfortunately, not the only county where dire distress exists, but at present that is all I have to deal with.

There were 29 cases of smallpox reported in New York city last week.

A PARADOX.

The bachelor's lot is lonely and sad,
Poor man!
He hasn't a wife to make his heart glad,
He doesn't know how he'd be blest if he had;
Nor can
He conceive what it is he has lost;
He thinks he has only escaped "being bossed"—
Poor man!

Oh, the bachelor's heart is sorry and sore,
Indeed!
He knows he can never know joy any more,
And he looks upon life as a terrible bore,
Agreed
With the croaker that life doesn't pay,
And to all thoughtless lovers impatient to say—
"Take heed!"

Yes, the bachelor's lot is a desolate one,
And yet
There are girls who think it would really be fun
To share it with him, after all's said and done;
Forget
All his miseries many, and pleasures so few;
I know lots of girls who would do it—don't you?
You bet!

Yesterday afternoon a party of eight people started out from Port Richmond in a row boat for a ride on the Delaware river. On the return trip, when near Market street wharf, the boat capsized. The names of those drowned are: Kate Murphy, aged 21, the wife of Timothy Murphy; Jerry Murphy, aged 19, and Thomas Murphy, aged 16; Dennis Clemens, aged 25, and Maggie Haney. The other three, including Timothy Murphy, were saved by a tug. All were said to have been somewhat under the influence of liquor.

While standing on the platform of a crowded Chicago street car, Daniel Mackey, a teamster, was fatally shot yesterday afternoon by the conductor of the car, James English, a cripple. Mackey's brother was recently discharged by the Street Car Company for calling English a scab. Yesterday afternoon, in retaliation, English was assaulted by Mackey and knocked off the car. English pulled a revolver and fired at Mackey, who was in the midst of a group of passengers on the moving car. A wild scamper to vacate the conveyance ensued in which Mackey, though having received a bullet in the abdomen, endeavored to join. As he ran English again snapped the trigger, and Mackey dropped dead, shot through the back. English surrendered himself.

A peculiar storm occurred at Bedford, Pa., one day last week. For fifteen minutes, hail, rain and grasshoppers fell together, and in such quantities that the earth was covered for nearly a mile square.

Mary Stewart, a negro woman of Taliaferro county, Ga., has invented a car coupler that is said to be simple and about perfect. She says that the idea came to her like a dream and she made a model, according to her vision, out of old "oyster cups." Mrs. Stewart was the first slave born to Alexander H. Stevens.

A violin said to be 286 years old is owned by Louis Dutrow, of Franklin county, Pennsylvania.

Latest Fashion Notes.

The newest summer gloves are in dark shades of bronze green stitched with pale green, and old pink stitched with white.

Courent cloth has a crape-like weave, and can be used by ladies in and out of mourning; while armure effects are seen in the silk warp feather-cloth, which is very light, but not quite so delicate as the gypsy cloth.

Basques are cut very much longer upon the hips than formerly, and Parisian bodies have an extremely long, sharp point in front, and the edges are finished with a double cord. When they are made in this way they hook, instead of buttoning up the front, as the point is too sharp to admit of button-holes.

Caps are little used by old ladies who have abundant hair, but for morning there are little round crown-caps of mull, with Oriental lace in two scantily-gathered bows lying flat on the head. For dress caps, point d'Alencon is made up with fine net and narrow moire ribbon loops of white, pale blue, mauve or Pompelian red.

Striped and colored lingeries are fashionable again; some of the waistcoats of the basques are cut in a U like the waistcoats of men, and show pleated linen bosoms in which are set tiny pearl studs. Cuffs are worn with all street dresses, and fastened by a single button, as the sleeves are too narrow to admit of buttoning the cuffs with linked studs.

Pretty and inexpensive wedding dresses are of white crepe de chine. These are ivory white and made up over satin, trimmed with fringes of orange blossoms and many bows and loops of wide ivory satin ribbon. These lend themselves readily to the multitudinous draperies so fashionable and have a soft, clinging effect. The scintillating white of the crepe with the dull white of the satin is very much admired.

A useful waist of velvet, to wear with different skirts. A pretty one was shown by a French modiste of dull olive-green velvet, with puffed sleeves and fichu of pale-blue crape. The waist was open at the throat and the fichu crossed over the bust. Below the left breast was set on a pale blue moire ribbon five inches wide, that crossed over diagonally and fastened on the waist at the right, giving a picturesque short-waisted effect.

Gray hair is usually dressed with a good deal of elaborateness. The three puffs on the side are still much liked for slender faces, and for women who have pretty heads and the hair still abundant it is parted, waved from the forehead and wound in a braided coil on the back of the head, not too far down on the nape of the neck. The French twist and four loops on top of the head, held in place by small shell tucking combs, is extremely becoming to some.

A Woman's Sweet Will.

She is prematurely deprived of her charms of face and form, and made unattractive by the wasting effects of ailments and irregularities peculiar to her sex. To check this drain upon, not only her strength and health, but upon her simable qualities as well, is her first duty. This is safely and speedily accomplished by a course of self-treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a nervine and tonic of wonderful efficacy, and prepared especially for the alleviation of those suffering from "dragging-down" pains, sensations of nausea, and weakness incident to women—a boon to her sex. Druggists.

Love's Labor Lost.

He had taken her to hear Patti at $7 a seat, and afterwards to Delmonico's, where the two together ate up $9.75 worth. As he reached for his hat later that same night she said:

"I am sorry, Mr. Sampson, if my refusal will cause you pain. I esteem you highly as an escort, and in that capacity I will always be a sister to you, but your wife I cannot be. You are too extravagant."—N. Y. Sun.

Popular Science.

Susie—Oh! Mamma, I'll never disobey you again.

Mamma—Why, Susie, what have you done?

Susie—Well, I drank my milk at lunch and then I ate—a pickle; and the milk said to the pickle, "Get out;" and the pickle said, "I won't;" and they are having an awful time!

Always Rewarded.

When any one is missing in Chicago the authorities go fishing in the river. They don't always find the man they are after, but they are sure to recover a body of some kind.—Peoria (Ill.) Transcript.

THE STEPMOTHER.

First she came into our house,
Tommy run and hid,
An' Emily an' Bob an' me
We cried jus' like we did
When Mother died—an' WE all said
'At we all wish't at we was dead!

An' Nurse she couldn't stop us,
An' Pa he tried an' tried;
We sobbed an' shook, and wouldn't look,
But only cried an' cried!
An' nen Someone—we couldn't jus'
Guess who—was cryin' same as us!

Our Stepmother! Yes, it was her,
Her arms around us all—
For Tom slid down the banisters
An' peeked in from the hall!
An' we all love her, too, because She's purt nigh good as Mother was!

—JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

—Winnipeg City Council is seeking legislation to enable it to elect the Mayor, instead of by the popular vote.

—Magistrate to a witness—"What is your profession?" "A lawyer." "Well, try to forget it while you are giving your testimony."

The heaviest locomotive in the world weighs 160,000 pounds, and is on the Canadian Pacific. The next heaviest is the Southern Pacific's, 154,000 pounds; the third weighs 145,000 pounds, and is on the Northern Pacific; and Brazil owns the fourth, weighing 144,000 pounds.

An 8-year-old boy, while flying a kite near Maidstone, England, a few days ago, stepped backward into a quarry forty feet deep, and the passers-by expected to see him dashed to death. But the string of the kite was around his waist at the time, and the kite, acting as a parachute, so broke the violence of his descent that he was only slightly bruised.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

VOLUME VII! THE ADVANCE enters volume seven this week with the consciousness that its eye teeth are cut. It looks back upon the past with feelings of pride, that it has been enabled to steer clear of sunken rocks upon which many a noble journalistic vessel has stranded and gone down into oblivion. THE ADVANCE, from first to last, has simply endeavored to do its duty faithfully, fearlessly and unflinchingly. Hopefully and earnestly it will continue to pursue the same course in the future, confidently relying on the support and patronage of its many warm friends throughout the county.

We commend the well written letter of Mr. Thos. Kells in this issue, on the subject of Commercial Union with the United States, to the careful consideration of ADVANCE readers. Mr Kells condemns hasty action in this matter and he is right. A "leap in the dark" is usually attended with disastrous consequences.

It is passing strange, that while a number of Canadian parliamentarians have been raising a great outcry about the alleged cruel evictions constantly taking place in Ireland, they are as dumb as statues concerning the evictions which occasionally take place in "this Canada of ours." Are they ignorant of the fact, that right here in Ontario the eviction laws are much more severe than they are in Ireland? Not a bit of it; it's votes they're after, as the Week very truly observes. But we trust the day is not far distant when the people will give our legislators distinctly to understand, that they exceed their duties when they attempt to legislate for any other country than their own. We don't want to get mixed up with other people's squabbles: we have enough to do to mind our own business.

It is interesting to observe how suddenly the stern parent assumes an upright position when he chances to sit down on the business end of a crooked pin. The interest lessens considerably, however, when the mischievous small boy is marched by the ear out into the woodshed and gently laid over the parental knee. There is a thorn in every rosebush!

Editor O'Brien's mission to Canada has been a failure. But there is balm in Gilead! Uncle Sam has received him with open arms and poured thousands of dollars into his fathomless money bags for alleviating the miseries (!) of tenants who are better treated than any of the same class to be found in North America! When will the last act of this miserable farce be reached?

We want some of our subscribers to whack up the dimes. Those who have promised us to do so time and again are the ones we more particularly allude to. The next time we address any remarks to them it will be through the medium of the Division Court Clerk, Squire Armstrong. Our patience is about exhausted. Fair warning!

If some people's religious principles were measured in the same manner in which they pile wood, what a lot of big holes there would be!

Grand Jubilee Celebration!

Under the Auspices of Sons of Temperance, Flesherton.

The Flesherton Division of Sons of Temperance, will hold a Grand Jubilee Celebration on Monday, the 20th June, 1887, in the afternoon, at 2 o'clock, in The Grove (kindly lent for the occasion by W. K. Flesher, Esq.) when together with other attractions, there will be music by Flesherton Brass Band, Athletic Sports, Games etc. Refreshment Stall, and an Open Air Meeting of which full particulars will be given in next week's issue. The Celebration will be continued in the evening, in the Town Hall, when W. K. Flesher, Esq., will preside and the following programme rendered:—

1.—Temperance Jubilee Anthem, (written for the occasion by a member of the S. of T.) Brief Prayer.
2.—Chairman's Address.
3.—Instrumental duet, Park Brothers.
4.—Recitation, Miss Fawcett.
5.—Tableau, Coronation.
6.—Song, Miss Leitch.
7.—Dialogue, Master Legard, and others.
8.—Duet, Miss Christoe and Mr. Sproule.
9.—Short Speech, Rev. A. Wilson.
10.—Duett, The Misses Beecroft.
Seven minutes interval during which lemonade will be served.
11.—Duett, The Misses Richardson.
12.—Recitation, Mr. A. R. Fawcett.
13.—Charade in three acts (written specially for the occasion) 1st act.
14.—Song by request, Master R. Smith —2nd act of Charade.
15.—Duet, The Misses Nickolson—3rd act.
16.—Song, Miss Ayers.
17.—Short Speech, Rev. Mr. Ferrier.
18.—Tableau, Sweet Home 100 years ago.
19.—Humorous Reading, Mr. A. R. Fawcett.
20.—Song, Miss Christoe.
21.—Recitation, Miss Hopkins.
22.—Reading, Miss Brown.
National Anthem. (Positively no response to encores.) Admission 25 cents; children under 12 years of age, 15 cents. Doors open at 7:30, to commence at 8 p.m. sharp.

P.S.—Parties from a distance will find ample facilities for obtaining meals etc. at a most reasonable cost.

BLACKBOARD SKETCHES.

KINGS OF FINANCE.

The above represents a bloated Canadian capitalist on his way to the railway depot. He is in a hurry to catch the train. He will buy a ticket for New York, Chicago, or Buffalo, and it is just possible he will not tell his bosom friends where he is going. Those b. c. hardly ever do. When he arrives at his destination it is not improbable he will inform his creditors in Canada, that they need not "weep for him who has gone before," for he is enjoying good health and doing well—in fact he has laid up treasures "where neither moth nor rust can corrupt nor creditors break through and steal." And so the world wags.

The Old Flag!

(The Poet Becomes Truly Royal Again.)

The felon flag of England
And has it come to grief,
The flag that braved a thousand years
The traitor and the thief!
The hireling alien now is heard,
Big with Canadians woes,
While traitors thunder loud and long,
And Rastus Wiman blows.

The felon flag of England!
Is that a name to call,
The flag that keys the universe,
And crushes ev'ry thrall?
Shall we exchange the banner old,
Give sirloin steaks for tripes,
And spurn the grand old Union Jack
For the upstarts Stars and Stripes?

The Red Cross flag of England,
Shall traitors it oppress,
And shall they tear it from the mast?
Erastus answers "yes!"
You lie! the flag stays where it is,
The Jack shall never go,
Tho' traitors murmur loud and long
And Windbag Wimans blow.

The meteor flag of England,
God bless each silken fold,
And may it wave as ever
In the splendid days of old.
Unfurl it to the breeze—the flag
That puts the wrong to rights
As once it did at Chateauguay
And again at Queenston Heights.

—The Khan in Toronto World.

MATHEMATICS.

During the month of June 20 questions will be submitted and in the first issue in July the answers to the whole will be given as well as the names of those who sent in correct solutions. This department will then likely cease until after midsummer vacation. In order to induce competition a copy of The Advance will be given for six months to the pupil sending in the greatest number of problems neatly and correctly solved. Every Competitor must remember that we have to trust entirely to his honor and we hope that the work in every case may be the result of the competitors' own knowledge. Open to all pupils who have attended school during one month of the present year.

COMPETITION SERIES.

1.—A, B & C are joint owners of a ship. C's share is valued at $2000, A's share is ⅓ of B's and the sum of their shares ¾ of the whole value of the ship; find the value of A's share.

2.—Divide $144 among 24 men 36 women and 72 children, so that the shares of 2 men shall be equal to that of 3 women and each womans' share equal to that of two children. What will be the share of each?

3.—A rectangular piece of land is 3 chains 6 links wide how long must it be to contain an acre? (Answer in feet and inches.)

4—Telegraph poles are placed 60 yards apart; how far per hour is a train going if it pass one every 3 seconds?

5.—Find the P. W. of a note of $30 due in 3 yrs. 8 mos., money being worth 9% compound interest.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

CATTLE FOR SALE.—Two steers two years old, two heifers two years old one cow in calf, cheap for cash. R. TRIMBLE

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

The Best Remedy

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

J. B. SLOAN
Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.
Cheap for Cash.

FOR SALE.

9½ acres 1½ miles from Flesherton. Good warm frame dwelling, 7 rooms, good cellar, good stable & never-failing spring creek. Terms easy. For particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Flesherton, or to C. W. BELLAMY, Markdale.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

SEEDS, SEEDS, SEEDS!

Received this week, a large supply of first class Clover, Timothy and Garden seeds, which will be sold at bottom prices at R. TRIMBLE'S. (tf)

B ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

SCROFULA

Humors,

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

Erysipelas,

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Canker, and

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

Catarrh,

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 85 to 0 90
Spring Wheat	0 85	0 90
Barley	0 00	0 00
Oats	0 25	0 25
Peas	0 47	0 47
Butter	0 12½	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 11	0 11
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 75	5 75
Hay, per ton	8 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	20	20
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 06	0 06
Turkeys	0 10	0 10
Chickens per pair	0 35	0 35
Ducks per pair	0 50	0 50

AT GORDON'S
HARNESS SHOP
FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,
Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S
HARNESS SHOP!
FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS
HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

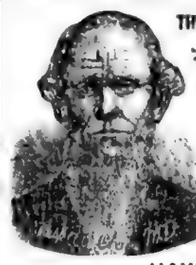
R. J. WATSON.
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,
Photographer,
Flesherton, - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,
MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.



THE CELEBRATED DR CHASES MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 800 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS, 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton
Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—
Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith,

THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

204-320,

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W. M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

Jubilee Temperance Anthem.

For the Advance.

God bless the Temperance cause,
May just and righteous laws
From it proceed.
The drinking vice declare,
Till all mankind shall dare
Unto the tempters snare
No more give heed.

Oh make Thy servants brave,
Through them the fallen save;
Give strength and will
That pledged through help divine
They ever may combine
As living lights to shine
Through good and ill.

This year of jubilee
In special presence be
Our God and stay,
O Lord, our Monarch shield
Do Thou our rulers wield
Till all shall gladly yield
To Thine own sway.

Each heart to-day inspire
With ardent strong desire
To be made wise;
Then when the conflict's o'er
And strong drink known no more
Aloud from every shore
Thy praise shall rise.

Flesherton, May 25th, 1887. T. W.

Gossip About Flesherton!

Promiscuous Pencillings by the Sporting Editor.

Of course nearly everybody knows that THE FLESHERTON ADVANCE enters upon the seventh year of its existence this week. Now, to prevent confusion, we wish it to be understood, that it was six years ago first of April last since we opened our printing office in Flesherton; two months later the first number of THE ADVANCE was issued to the public: hence last week just completed volume six and this is the first number of volume seven. A couple of months ago we drew a faint outline of the difficulty in connection with the establishment of country newspapers. This time we propose to speak of Flesherton as it was, Flesherton as it, and Flesherton as it may be (under certain circumstances) in the near future. First, then, let us take

FLESHERTON AS IT WAS.

A quiet little village of not more than three hundred population. Let us not be misunderstood: when we say quiet we mean the absence of drunken revellers at night, and drunken, quarrelsome charact'rs fighting and making things "lively" on the streets by day. We found, instead, an hôtel so remarkably well conducted, that we mistook it at first for a private residence. We had never seen such a well conducted public house before; we have never seen its equal since. There were not half a dozen brick buildings in the place, among them being the Methodist church, Squire Armstrong's residence, also that of Mr. N. Campbell. There were four general stores, one drug store, two shoe shops, one harness shop, tannery, one furniture factory, one furniture store, woollen mill, grist mill, saw mill, shingle mill, two tailor-shops, hotel, one tin shop, three millinery stores, bakery, two butcher shops, two carriage factories, photograph gallery, jewelry store, three blacksmith shops, and other minor places of business.

FLESHERTON AS IT IS.

A flourishing place, with brick residences and business blocks galore. Within its borders are to be found the largest general store as well as the largest carriage factory in Grey. Temperance principles still predominate and there is but one hotel as before, conducted, however, on the same principles as it was six years ago. Streets clean and neat as a "new pin;" backyards ditto. Flesher's park is still open to the public—through the kindness of the founder of Flesherton, W. K. Flesher, Esq.,—and on these beautiful Sunday afternoons its shady groves are much frequented by our citizens.

Great improvements have taken place during those six years. The population has doubled, and the following additions have been made to the business part of the town, viz., a first class planing mill, a cheese factory, a broom-handle factory, a marble factory, a new drug store, a new harness shop, a lawyer's office, a shoe shop, feed stores, restaurants, a second doctor, dressmakers shops, &c., &c. Three handsome three-story brick business blocks have been erected, a beautifully designed Presbyterian church (brick), a neat Baptist chapel, and this summer will see the erection of a handsome and commodious schoolhouse, situated on the finest site in the county. A brickyard has been established on one corner of the town, which supplies bricks at the rate of 10,000 per day if need be. In short, so great has been the change wrought in Flesherton during the past half decade, that the traveller who chanced to pass through it in 1881 for the first time would scarcely recognize it as being the same place if he postponed his second visit untill this year of grace, 1887.

FLESHERTON AS IT MAY BE.

It may become one of the most flourishing places in the county. Charmingly situated in the midst of a fair agricultural district, with leading roads second to none in the county, superior natural facilities, good water privileges, a pure, bracing and healthy atmosphere, a central position in the county, with splendid postal facilities and scores of other advantages, it would seem as if everything conspired to make it what it should be, viz., a leading county town. All that is wanted in order to accomplish this desideratum is the hearty, unstinted, and united action of the citizens themselves. They must be fired with that zeal and energy, however, which arises from an almost unbounded confidence in their town: otherwise the important and neccessary improvements yet to be carried to a successful issue—before we can hope to reach the goal indicated above—will be accomplished in a half-hearted, unsatisfactory manner. But we believe they are too much alive to their best interests to bungle things in that style.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

The 5th Division Court holds its regular quarterly sessions here. The Division Court Clerk's office, and that of the Bailiff also, are located in Flesherton. Squire Armstrong, Div. Court. Clerk; A. S. VanDusen, Esq., Bailiff.

Artemesia Township Hall and the Clerk's office are both located here. The Reeve, Dr. Christoe, and the Clerk, W. J. Bellamy, Esq., both reside here. Important improvements are now being made in the Hall, which will increase its seating capacity, and improve its appearance outwardly and inwardly.

The East Grey Agricultural Society's grounds—covering eight acres—are located here. The Sec.-Treas., S. Damude, Esq., resides in Flesherton.

The Township and County Reform Associations hold their meetings here.

Societies.—Masons, Oddfellows, Orange. A. O. U. W., R. T. of T., S. of T., W.C. T.U., L. A. P. C., and L. A. M. C.

Churches.—Baptist, Rev. Thos. Watson, pastor; Presbyterian, Rev. A Wilson, pastor; Methodist, Rev. W. Ayers, pastor.

We might go on in this way for some time but space will not permit at present.

Backache, stitches in the side, inflation and soreness of the bowels, are symptoms of a disordered state of the digestive and assimilative organs, which can be corrected by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills.

"Non Compos Mentis."

Mrs. Leppard, a woman pretty well advanced in years, came to Flesherton last Thursday possessed with the idea that a pit of gold belonging to her was buried or secreted somewhere in the neighborhood of our hotel. She wandered about the corridors of that house, and made so many apparently insolent and impertinent remarks that the landlord finally ejected her. In an aimless but vigorous sort of way she thrust the point of her parasol in the immediate region of one of Deputy-Sheriff Moore's optics, smashed a pane of glass, and in short became so unruly, if not positively dangerous, that detective VanDusen was obliged to enclose her restless hands in a neat-fitting pair of iron bracelets. She was then placed in one of the sample rooms and kept there until evening, when Mr. VanDusen brought her by train to Owen Sound and lodged her in gaol, pending the action of the proper authorities.

The unfortunate woman seems possessed with the idea,—to use her own words—that she has been robbed of "millions and drillions of gold, and revolvers, and cannons, and pistols, given to me by me uncle, an officer in the British army!" She said Queen Victoria owed her a lot of money, and that the people of Artemesia had "gold watches and millions and drillions of money belonging to her." She regarded our reporter with grave suspicion and hinted that he wore a false face. Then she suddenly became possessed of the idea, that somebody wanted to kill her. "But if they do," she said, "mind ye I'll have all their names writ on the sky in the morning!" But uppermost in her thoughts was the opinion that she had been cheated out of untold quantities of precious metals, and that her life was threatened in consequence. She is the same Mrs. Leppard, who gave testimony before a coroner's jury a few years ago, and also at Owen Sound Assize Court a few months later, in connection with one of the darkest tragedies in the annals of crime.

Wheezing, gasping sufferers from Asthma receive quick and permanent relief by using Southern Asthma Cure. Sold by druggists or by mail on receipt of price.

Medical Hall,

—A NEW—

DEPARTURE!

Customers

WILL FIND A PRIME LOT OF

MIXED SEED!

Paints

IN A VARIETY OF COLORS.

BEST WHITE LEAD

IN TINS.

Red Lead,
Venetian Red,
Yellow Ocre,

AND OTHER COLORS.

GLUE.

BRUSHES

Tubes

OF A VARIETY OF COLORS.

PENCILS.

FURNITURE VARNISH!

Boiled & Raw

LINSEED OIL!

ALSO IT KEEPS

ASBESTINE!

IN COLORS; THOSE

Prince of Washes

FOR WALLS. IT IS THE VERY LATEST AND BEST PREPARATION OF ITS KIND. SOLD IN 5 lb PACKAGES. IT WILL PAY YOU TO Call and see the Attractive Tints,

In these as well as in our

PAINTS.

TURNIP SEED

Of different Varieties and Good.

WALL PAPER, DRUGS, LEMONS FOR INVALIDS.

As well as the usual supply of Proprietory Medicines all Cheap for Cash.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Mr. Hall moved the extension of the time for the reception of reports of the Committee on Private Bills to the 24th June.

After some discussion the resolution was adopted.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the items of the tariff not yet passed.

On the item "builders', cabinetmakers' and carriage hardware and locks, 35 per cent.,"

Mr. Taylor moved to include saddlery and harnessmakers' hardware, mechanics' tools and a variety of other articles.

Sir Charles Tupper said he could not see his way to acceding to this request at this time, because it would involve other changes in order to prevent bearing unjustly upon some established industries, and this change, if made, would therefore lead to confusion.

Mr. Taylor said that if this change were not made it would work injustice to an important industry in his own town (Gananoque) which employed 100 hands. The factory was devoted to the manufacture of saddlery hardware, largely hames, which, being part wood and part iron, would come in at 30 per cent. These goods had to be made in Canada in the face of the competition of American prison-made goods, the chief place of production being Auburn, New York.

Mr. Mills said such a resolution as this could not be introduced at this stage. It would seem from what was said by gentlemen opposite that every article mentioned in this tariff was in danger from the competition of prison labor. One would suppose that nearly all the manufacturing industries of the United States were to be conducted in the penitentaries.

The item passed.

The House went into committee on several items which had not been dealt with, Sir Charles Tupper explaining that he desired also to make some additions. The duty on floor oil-cloth was raised to five cents a yard and 15 per cent. ad valorem, the duty on oil-cloth in the piece reduced from five cents specific and 20 per cent. ad valorem to five cents specific and 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir Charles Tupper next announced that the duty on paper of all kinds would be 25 per cent., instead of 22½, as mentioned in the resolutions. The clause referring to tissue paper (which is included in the item "paper of all kinds") was struck out and the following substituted: "Manufactures of paper, including ruled and bordered papers, papeterie, box papers, envelopes and blank books, 35 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. Wilson (Argenteuil) spoke strongly in favor of an increase of the duty on tissue paper to 25 per cent.

Mr. Casey pointed out that the member for Argenteuil owned the only tissue paper factory in Canada.

Mr. Wilson (Argenteuil) said he did not see any crime in a man being a member of Parliament and a manufacturer of tissue paper, nor did he see any reason why an industry in which a member of Parliament is interested should not be promoted.

Mr. Casey said there was no crime involved in the position mentioned by the member for Argenteuil, and he admired the frankness with which he had stated his case. It was no doubt perfectly proper for the hon. gentleman, who was not only interested in the tissue paper industry but was actually the sole representative of the tissue paper industry, to vote to put a sum of money into his own pocket, but it was a grand illustration of the principles on which the tariff was framed.

Mr. Mills objected strongly to the increase of the duty on paper. It would place heavier burdens on those who conducted newspapers, which even now were far from being paying enterprises. Mr. O'Brien (Muskoka) said there was a curious inconsistency in a tariff which, while it taxed blank paper 25 per cent., imposed only the same tax on partially printed newspapers.

Mr. Mills said there was not a proprietor of a paper factory in the country who was not receiving from 25 to 30 per cent. more than American manufacturers were receiving for the same article. The duty was placing Canadian publishers at the mercy of a few Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. White (Cardwell) said that the increase of the duty would not increase the price in the slightest, that up to this point the duty on paper had reduced its price, and that the change was merely for the purpose of simplifying the duties and facilitating entries.

Mr. Mitchell—If putting up the duty does not increase the price of an article, why don't they increase it to 50 per cent.? He had been informed by a Canadian manufacturer of paper that he could buy paper in New England, pay duty on it and sell it in Canada as cheaply as he was selling his own.

Sir Charles Tupper thought this illustration showed the absolute necessity for a duty on paper.

Sir Charles Tupper proposed to strike out item 40, imposing 7½c per lb. and 20 per cent. on wool, worsted and alpaca goods, by restoring item 473 of the revised tariff and changing item 475 as follows: "All fabrics composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, hair of the Alpaca goat or other like animal, not otherwise provided for, 22½ per cent. ad valorem; on all similar goods costing 10 cents per yard and under, 22½ per cent. ad valorem; over 10 cents and under 14 cents per yard, 25 per cent. ad valorem; 14 cents per yard and over, 27½ per cent. ad valorem." He explained that this would do away with the specific duty altogether.

Mr. Mills said this was a gratifying change. He had a letter from a leading merchant of Toronto stating that with a specific duty as proposed the duty on goods costing in England 2½ pence would be 57½ per cent., and on goods costing 3½ pence 49 per cent.

Sir Charles Tupper said he proposed to provide that articles partly of iron and partly of steel, not specially provided for, should be charged 30 per cent. ad valorem.—Carried.

He proposed also to strike out "sledges, track tools, wedges and crowbars of iron and steel, 1½ cents per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem," as being included under "broad and ship axes, etc., $3 per dozen and 20 per cent.," and substitute the following: "Screws, commonly called wood screws, two inches and over in length, 6 cents per pound; over one inch and less than two inches, 8 cents per pound; less than one inch, 11 cents per pound; other screws of iron, brass or other metal, 35 per cent. ad valorem."—Carried.

He proposed, also, "iron or steel rivets, bolts with or without threads or nuts or bolt, blanks less than ⅜ inch diameter, 1½c. per pound, and 30 per cent. ad valorem." He explained that this would be about 35 per cent. on the highest values.

Mr. Mills—And about 75 per cent. on the lowest.

The item passed.

Sir Charles Tupper proposed to strike out the item, "Horseshoe nails, etc., 2½c per pound," and substitute, "Nails and spikes, and brads, galvanized or not, horseshoe nails, hob nails and wrought nails of all kinds, and horse, mule or ox shoes, 1½c per pound, but not less than 35 per cent. ad valorem."—Carried.

He proposed also to repeal clauses 57, 135, 143, 344, 345 and 369 of the Customs Act relating to clothing, etc., and substitute others. First, all clothing made of cotton or other material not otherwise provided for, including corsets or similar articles made up by seamstresses or tailors, also tarpaulins, plain or coated with oil, paint, tar or other composition and cotton bags made up with the needle, not otherwise provided for, 35 per cent. ad valorem. He explained that this added 5 per cent. to these articles.—Carried.

He proposed also to provide that drain pipes and sewer pipes, glazed, should pay 35 per cent., the present rate being 25 per cent.—Carried.

He proposed also the following: "Square pianos, round-cornered or not, under seven octaves, $25 each; all other square pianofortes, $30 each; upright pianofortes, $30 each; concert, semi-concert or parlor grand pianofortes, $50 each, and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem." He explained that this involved no change in the specific duties and an addition in ad valorem of 5 per cent. Parts of pianofortes were raised to 30 per cent. ad valorem. They are now 25.

He also proposed: "Clothes-wringers, specific duty $1 each and 30 per cent. ad valorem." This he explained would be about 35 per cent.

He proposed also to add to the free list redwood planks and boards sawn, but not further manufactured. This was to encourage the manufacture of cigar boxes in this country.

Mr. Mills contended that there were other woods than redwood that could be used to make cigar boxes. Not many years ago Canadian sycamore was imported into the United States to make cigar boxes. This item simply meant that the principle of protection was abandoned and other woods allowed to come into Canada to compete with those of native production.

The item carried.

Mr. Baker said that these changes would interfere very seriously with contracts already made for pipes for gas and waterworks in Victoria, Nanaimo, Vancouver and New Westminster, and asked if the Government could not allow those goods contracted for and in transit to enter at the old duties.

Sir Charles Tupper said he would add a clause to the Bill giving the Government discretion to grant concessions in cases of hardship growing out of the changes as affecting contracts already made.

The committee reported and the resolutions were received and read a first and second time.

A Bill to amend the tariff in accordance with the resolutions was presented, read a first time and ordered to stand for its second reading on Wednesday next.

The House adjourned at 5.30 until Wednesday next.

AN IMPERIAL FETE.

The Russian Royalty Receive a Hearty Welcome from the Cossacks in Novo Tcherkask.

A St. Petersburg despatch says: Yesterday was another fete day among the Don Cossacks at Novo Tcherkask. The Czarina entered the town in state. She rode alone in an open carriage, drawn by four white horses. The Czar and his suite followed on horseback. The Czarina rode through the main avenue of Novo Tcherkask, the thoroughfare being decorated with mottoes, banners and flags, and spanned by triumphal arches. Masses of people lined the route, and all greeted the Imperial family with enthusiasm. The Imperial party went to the palace, where they received bread and salt on a silver dish from the delegates representing the nobility, the artisans and the factory and railway employees. The colliery owners presented to the Czarina a vessel fashioned out of anthracite coal and mounted with silver, the whole weighing two pounds. The Kalmuck clergy after this offered the Czarina a dish depicting a Buddhist sacrifice, and also a chalice. In the evening the town was illuminated and the streets and gardens were thronged with people cheering for the Imperial family.

A Walking Pill-box.

For the last day or two the household of Mr. T. L. Hoyt, of the M. C. R., has been employed in endeavoring to restore to his normal condition the little 2-year-old scion of the house. The young hopeful, while wandering around the other day, came across a bottle of pills, and rather liking the sugar with which they were coated, proceeded to swallow the whole lot, numbering about twenty. The earthquake that came to pass when these pills found that all tradition had been ignored, and that they were all imprisoned in one small stomach, instead of helping to improve the physical condition of a large number of worthy citizens, beggars description. Master Hoyt might be able to do the subject justice, but he won't. He has acquired an aversion to pills that will last him all his life.—St. Thomas Journal.

Berlin's population increased 48,000 during the past year.

Claus Spreckels, the 'Frisco sugar king, intends to purchase a lot and build a villa in Paris.

Raising peppermint for making oil is increasing in Allegan and Wexford counties, Michigan. In four towns in the latter county there are over one hundred acres planted in peppermint, and many new plants are being set out.

The boys in the Duquesne school at Pittsburgh, Pa., struck for fewer hours Tuesday. The girls will join in the movement this week unless their parents take a hand in the matter. The School Board seems inclined to listen to the strikers' demands.

THE QUEEN'S BALL.

How Fashion Turns to Laces, Fruit Scents and Flower Trimming—Chloroformed Cologne in Vogue—Dresses Worn by the Princess of Wales and her Daughter

A London cablegram says: The first Jubilee ball at Buckingham Palace was kept up this morning till the struggling sun shone in on the fagged revellers. It was a most fashionable and successful function, the only drawback being the absence of the Queen, who was too fatigued, not having recovered from her long drive through the city on Saturday, to attend. The Princess of Wales performed the duties of royalty in opening the ball, the Prince assisting.

THE DRESSES.

The Princess wore a dress of pale gray satin and silver brocade, veiled in crepe and looped with marabout feathers, corsage to correspond; headdress, a tiara of diamonds; ornaments, pearls and diamonds and her usual orders. Her daughter, the Princess Louise, wore a dress of white broche and tulle; corsage, white satin brocade, trimmed with tulle and bunches of pink roses, forget-me-nots and mignonette, over a jupe of tulle in draperies and plisses, caught up with bunches of the same flowers; ornaments, pearls, rubies and diamonds. The Princess Victoria wore a dress of white broche and tulle, the corsage being of white broche, trimmed with bunches of shaded mauve auriculas, over a jupe of tulle over faille, looped with bunches of the same flowers; ornaments the same as her sister's.

FASHION'S CHANGES.

It was the subject of universal remark at the recent drawing-rooms and this evening how the greatest attention in many years is now shown to the profusion of laces; to the new fruit, more than floral, perfumes; to the variety of bouquets, each composed of one species of flowers, and to the skill and taste displayed in the coiffures, not of one or two fashionable stereotyped styles, but adapted at caprice to the carriage of the head and its shape and to the stature of the wearer. Old rose point, old Venetian point, old Flemish, old Brussels, Limerick, old point d'Argenton, point de gaze, duchesse, biscuit, d'Alencon, black Spanish, point de Venice, Chantilly and old Honiton laces of quality and patterns not to be readily purchased by the nouveaux riches, were seen everywhere. Cherry blossom and apricot perfumes outscented, so to speak, the florals, although white lilacs and heliotropes still held their favor.

CHLOROFORMED COLOGNE.

Not a few dainty bottles at the waist confessed to holding the new fad of slightly chloroformed cologne. Although not even Parisian auctions seem to shake the supremacy of diamonds for wives and matrons, pearls are now as much a necessity to maidens as are feathers in royal circles to all women. More emeralds, rubies and torquoises are noticeable than in previous years, and the Queen has made amethysts fashionable by wearing them lately.

STYLES OF COIFFURE.

Amid one group could be noticed in coiffures a French twist at the back, forehead fringes continued in marteaux; also knots on the top of the head, with a few light curls on the brow, Pompadour, Watteau and Recamier styles; and in loops and bows high in front and continued to the nape of the neck. Indeed many were dressed according to whim, but each and all contrasted whimsically with the bandeaux of 1839, seen in a portrait of Victoria as a bride in one of the rooms of the palace.

FASHIONS IN FLOWERS.

In posies the run seemed to be upon lilacs, Marguerites, meadow daisies and snowflakes for the young, and mauve orchids, lilies, gladioli and azaleas for budding, middle age and blossoming grandmotherhood, where roses hold their own. These are the Catherine de Mermet, or the Guelder, or the Gloire de Dijon, or what are known as souvenir d'un ami—roses that florists in Nice and other points on the Riviera generally now make a thriving business in skilfully expressing at moderate expense. Flowers now hold a closer ornamental connection with trains than formerly. These are more commonly water lilies and roses of all hues that have displaced themselves from the traditional bouquets.

The music was regarded as exceptionally fine in selection and execution. There was more waltzing than if the Queen—who dislikes "the muse of the many twinkling feet"—had been present.

Evading the Collector.

Bill collector (to little girl at the door)—"Your father promised to pay this bill today."

Little girl (timidly)—"I know it, sir, but you will have to excuse him."

Collector (sternly)—"What excuse can there be for this neglect? What is his excuse?"

Little girl—"It isn't his fault, really sir, you see he went and died yesterday."

Canadian News Notes.

An official letter was received yesterday at Port Arthur from the Ontario Government, promising an immediate investigation and settlement of all claims in the disputed territory.

Rev. J. Trotter, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Woodstock, was married last week to Miss Freeman, late lady principal of Woodstock College, at Canning, Nova Scotia. The newly wedded couple will visit Europe.

A Literary Test.

Two girls are talking of what they read. "Oh, I choose a novel easily enough," one said, "I go to the circulating library and look at the last chapters. If I find the rain softly and sadly dropping over one or two lonely graves I don't take it; but if the morning sun is glimmering over bridal robes of white satin I know it's all right, and take it and start to buy caramels to at while I read it."—Youth's Companion.

—Two hundred and sixty-two pairs of twins were born in Chicago during 1886.

Lord Edgar Cecil, younger son of the Marquis of Salisbury, has been admitted to the English bar.

A circus ticket-seller earned his "salt" in Philadelphia, Pa., the other evening, by selling seats to ten thousand persons in fifty minutes, a feat which involved the handling of two hundred tickets or $100 a minute.

O'BRIEN AT KINGSTON.

He Receives Quite an Ovation—A Noisy Crowd on the Streets.

A last (Friday) night's Kingston despatch says: There was not an insulting word uttered toward Mr. O'Brien in leaving Ottawa. The way to Kingston was almost unmarked by special incident. At Sharbot Lake W. Robinson, ex-M. P. P., met the train and begged to be introduced to Mr. O'Brien. This was done and for some time the two complacently chatted. Mr. Robinson was formerly a prominent Orangeman, but has entirely withdrawn from the organization. Sir Leonard Tilley, Lady Macdonald and Senator Sullivan were also on the train.

There was a large crowd of Irishmen at the K. & P. station as the train whizzed in on time. Messrs. Behan and Neville had proceeded to Sharbot Lake, where the agitators were heartily greeted, and their appearance on the platform of the coach was the signal for hearty cheers. Mr. O'Brien stepped off quietly and was handed over to the kind offices of John Murphy, who drove a span of blacks. Mr. Kilbride was also cheered as he was elevated into a second carriage. The pressmen of New York, Chicago and Dublin were fired into other carriages. There was little opposition offered. On the outskirts of the crowd was a little band who cheered for Lord Lansdowne and sang "God Save the Queen." Enthusiastic young Irishmen climbed into the carriages with the visitors and the procession went up King street and turned down Clarence street to the Burnett House, where cheers were again given for the editor. The company rushed into the hotel. After the new arrivals had registered they were conducted to the parlor, where a reception followed. Many citizens were introduced to O'Brien and Kilbride. A number of ladies also attended the reception and were introduced to the visitors.

Mr. O'Brien said that it was with overflowing heart that he accepted their welcome. It was a surprise to him the way he had been received here. He was not here to pick a quarrel with the Orangemen or to arouse their feelings, but his desire was to bridge the gulf of prejudice and blend the Orange and Green in the struggle for Ireland's freedom. (Cheers.) He claimed that the Irish party were fighting the battle of the friends of Orangemen in Ireland. He was told to-day that Kingston was known as the "Derry of Canada." Well, this might be an omen for good, for in his land, in the words of the song, "Derry is our own, boys." (Cheers.) Was this the case in Kingston? He claimed that the pestering of Canadians with what was termed "The Irish nuisance" was created by the abuses of Irish landlords. The graves of thousands of evicted tenants in Canada testified to this statement. He then proceeded to discuss the attitude of Lord Lansdowne towards his tenants at Luggacurran. At frequent intervals he was enthusiastically cheered, though he urged the people not to act in an excitable manner, but to show common sense. Mr. O'Brien says that he is suffering from an injured rib caused by the attack made upon him by the hoodlums in Toronto. He is satisfied with his tour in Canada, and while he does not think the people will publicly announce themselves, yet he believes the statements he has made and which remain uncontradicted, will be discussed and create an impression. Lord Lansdowne, he said, had only to agree to the terms arranged by his agent in Ireland and they would leave for home without a harsh thought for the Governor-General. The mention of Mr. Gladstone as with the Irish party in advocating Home Rule was the signal for a great outburst of applause. The speaker declared that Canadian fair play had been accorded him and that a cry of execration would go up from Canadians against the practices committed in Ireland. (Cheers.) He concluded amid great applause at 9.15 o'clock.

Mr. Kilbride was given a great ovation. He had been given to understand that the people of this city would use the same intelligent methods that had characterized the "intelligence" of Toronto, that the arguments used would be the cobblestones of the street. But he was agreeably surprised at the calmness and fair play accorded so far. (Cheers.) Just at this moment a mighty shout arose outside, showing that a vast crowd were surging through the streets. A whole posse of policemen guarded the building and patrolled the streets. Mr. Kilbride's address was somewhat wearisome. It was a repetition of what he had said at other places. Many in consequence retired at once. He concluded at 10 o'clock.

There was an immense crowd in front of the rink when the meeting concluded. J. G. Behan announced that it was rumored that threats were being made outside. He urged the people to act temperately, to offer no offence, so that no odium or responsibility would attach to them. The police force, with Chief Horsey and Mayor Carson at their head, kept the crowd back, who groaned for O'Brien and cheered for Lansdowne. A moment afterwards O'Brien's tall hat was seen in the middle of the crowd. "There he is," was the cry and the crowd surged ahead. A few stones were fired. Sergt. Nesbitt was hit behind the ear and Officer Craig had his hat knocked off. With a roar the great crowd rushed ahead and in a flash O'Brien was hurried around a corner. The roughs followed hotly and oaths were heard.

"KILL HIM!"

was the cry. The mass of humanity followed down Wellington street, but lost sight of O'Brien. "To the Burnett House!" was the word of the leader, and they swept down to the hotel. O'Brien did not appear and no one could tell where he went to. The police cleared the walk and awaited the coming of the agitators. Here again groans were offered for O'Brien and cheers for Lansdowne. The hour of 11 o'clock arrived, but O'Brien had not turned up and no one seemingly knew of his whereabouts. Several of the hotel windows were broken. Mayor Carson says the people were very boisterous. They were incited by drunken men. Stones whizzed past his ears. Messrs. Harland and R. J. Gardiner were struck.

A correspondent afterwards found O'Brien. Accompanied by Mayor Carson and an alderman, he traced his location down. He was found in a friendly house, quite agitated. He said: "As I came out of the rink the cry went up 'Here he is!' 'Go for him!' 'Down with O'Brien!' 'Give it to him!' There was a most deliberate onslaught, and the crowd surged and rushed about me. A big brute with a bludgeon had raised his arm to strike me, when in a flash my hat was changed, and the blow fell upon some other person. I was rushed around the corner and stones flew about. One struck me on the head. There were not as many stones thrown at me as in Toronto. Near St. Patrick's Hall a big fellow shoved me in a gateway and the gate sprung back. As soon as the crowd fled I came over here." The Mayor offered to call the troops, who had been in barracks since 5 o'clock, to take him to the hotel, but O'Brien declined. The time for their appearance had passed. They should have been called out to disperse the bloodthirsty crowd. O'Brien leaves in the morning via Cape Vincent for Niagara Falls.

At 11.30 the front of the office of the Canadian Freeman, the Roman Catholic paper, was broken in and a mob of over 1,000 gathered around it. The police made one arrest, but could not hold the man. The citizens at that hour were becoming seriously alarmed.

ON THEIR MUSCLE.

Illinois Senators Fight it Out on the Floor of the Senate.

A Springfield, Ill., despatch says: The dignity of the State Senate was sacrificed yesterday by two Chicago Senators, who allowed their passions to lead them into a personal encounter upon the floor of the Senate. During the session an altercation arose between Senator Crawford and Senator Gibbs in regard to the former's position in regard to the Drainage Bill. There had previously been some disagreement between them. But few words were passed. Each called the other hard names, which could not without offence to propriety be published. Senator Gibbs walked immediately behind the seat of his antagonist and Senator Crawford replied to an opprobrious epithet with a blow. The Senators then clinched and were about to indulge in a regular knockdown fight when several colleagues interfered and separated the combatants. Each made an apology to the Senate for the disgraceful proceedings. Senator Crawford's recital of the circumstances seemed to netttle Senator Gibbs, and he made an amendment to his apology in which he said he regretted that the scene had occurred upon the floor of the Senate, but that he was glad he hit Crawford.

There was another scene of a partially similar character enacted in the rear aisle of the Senate about the same time between two other Senators, but the interference was prompt and it failed to attract attention.

FATALLY SHOT.

Killing of a Drunken and Abusive Sailor by a Captain.

A Charlottetown, P. E. I., despatch says: A shooting affray attended with fatal results occurred here last night. About midnight a drunken sailor named Thomas Ottree, an Irishman, 30 years of age, belonging to the barque Moselle, went aboard the barque Clairebelle and created a disturbance. He was promptly put ashore and retaliated with abusive language and a shower of stones upon Captain Walsh, of the Clairebelle. Intending to frighten him away, Captain Walsh fired off his revolver, and although it was pitch dark the bullet struck Ottree in the breast. Captain Walsh heard the wounded man fall, and exclaiming, "My God! I didn't intend that," ran down the gangway, had him brought on board and did everything possible to relieve him, but in vain. After half an hour's excruciating agony Ottree died. Captain Walsh, who is one of Prince Edward Island's best-known skippers and has a large family, immediately surrendered himself to the police. An inquest is progressing.

"MY TIME HAS COME."

Last Words of a Burglar Killed While Stealing Crackers and Cheese.

A Binghamton, N.Y., despatch says: Lester Clark, a clerk of Smith & Webster, general dealers, at Ninevah, this county, shot and killed a supposed burglar this morning between 1 and 2 o'clock. In the store is an electric alarm that runs to Mr. Smith's house, where Clark also lives. When it sounded an alarm Clark jumped out of bed, dressed himself and, seizing a double-barrelled shotgun, hurried to the store. Clark saw a man in the store helping himself to cheese and crackers, and, raising the gun, he deliberately fired at the intruder, emptying twelve buckshot into his stomach. The man staggered back, exclaiming, "My time has come," and was dead in five minutes. He is not known in that locality and has not been identified. It looks as if his object in entering the store was simply to procure something to eat.

Protection from Fires.

In putting out ordinary fires it is a golden rule to use as little water as possible, for the latter often does more damage than the former. The jet of a powerful engine is as destructive in its way as fire to all perishable articles within a room, such as furniture, pictures, and bric-a-brac. And that brings us to another part of our subject. Fire protection, like charity, should begin at home. However efficient may be the public service against fire, a single bucket of water properly administered may stop a fire that all the efforts of the brigade would be unable to quench.—All the Year Round.

It Doesn't Look Like a Poem, But it Is.

How dear to my purse is the new fashioned bonnet, the hat that I bought as a gift to my wife; a small piece of straw with an ostrich plume on it, the last that I'll buy while I still have my life. The hat with a brim and a big swinging feather, and foldered traps that I can't even name, with stuffed birds and roses, and pieces of heather, and a bill from the dealer as long as my frame; that stylish spring bonnet, that new fashioned bonnet, that fancy-priced bonnet that knocked my purse lame. —Minneapolis Tribune.

The Queen, who has left for Balmoral, is in a very delicate state of health, and very serious fears are entertained as to whether she will live through the year. She has become exceedingly enfeebled and resembles her uncle, King George IV., in her aversion to any kind of exercise, and in her intense dislike to appear in public. She has lost much of the nerve for which she formerly was remarkable, and is altogether displaying painful symptoms of breaking up.

THE NEW CONSUMPTION CURE.

How it Works in the Hospitals of Pittsburg—An Ultimate Triumph Predicted for the Newly-Discovered Remedy.

Within the last week or two, says the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette, all the city hospitals have adopted the new treatment for consumption. At the Mercy Hospital Dr. Mayer has under treatment a young man, 21 years of age, named John Baker, who was brought to the hospital to be treated for pneumonia. Afterward he was found to be in an advanced stage of consumption. The new treatment was tried, and after the first trial his symptoms began to improve and his temperature became normal. His general appearance is now becoming better each day and he sleeps well at night. Dr. Mayer, resident physician, says that while the treatment is as yet but an experiment, it has given great satisfaction and wonderful results will be attained after it becomes known. The other resident physician, Dr. Brumbaugh, has two cases in the hospital on whom he is experimenting. When spoken to he said: "When the new treatment was first brought to my notice I was very sceptical about it. I did not think that the gas upon introduction would pass through the intestines and then find its way into the lungs, but after such authorities on chest diseases as Dr. Bruin and Ellsler, of Philadelphia, had taken hold of it I took some interest in it.

"One of my patients named Manning," continued Dr. Brumbaugh, "whom I am treating for consumption has a very acute abscess of the liver, and I cannot tell yet if the new treatment will be successful. Another case is Mary Kruder, who has been receiving treatment for consumption by the old remedies for over a year. She was brought here about three weeks ago. She was very low, her temperature high and she was expected to die almost every night. After the first administration of the new treatment the gas could be detected on her breath, and after the third application her temperature got lower, her appearance changed, her sleep at night was unbroken and she had no more night sweats."

At the Homeopathic Hospital Dr. Wilcox has secured an apparatus and tried it on the only case of consumption in the hospital. The patient objected at the second administration and the doctor had to drop the experiment. He has had no outside patients to try it on, and of course could not say much about it, but from what he has heard he predicts great results from its administration.

At the West Penn Hospital the new treatment for consumption was commenced four days ago on eleven patients, who are in various stages of the dread disease. Several of them are also suffering from a complication of other maladies. August Biestrom, a patient who entered the hospital March 17th, 1887, was at that time very low with consumption, and has as yet shown no signs of improvement. James Joint, also a consumptive, and old soldier, who entered Dec. 23rd, 1885, shows a decided improvement and insists that the treatment is beneficial. Mr. Joint has sat up each morning and afternoon since the treatment began, and on Sunday night last he coughed less than he had done for a year past. Henry Anderson, consumptive, entered last February. A decided improvement is noticeable in his case since the new treatment, and the patient has been able to sit up during part of the morning and afternoon. Lewis Boenovitz entered last month suffering from consumption and some other affection. He claims he is much improved and able to sleep better. The physicians, however, see but little improvement in the consumptive disease, and think the apparent benefit is derived from an improvement of the other disease under its own treatment. Samuel Stokes entered last December. A very slight change for the better in his symptoms is noticeable. Samuel Williams entered last April. Mr. Williams claims that he is much better since the new treatment, but no decrease in coughing has been noticed by the physicians.

James King, consumptive, who entered last month, is very low, and shows no improvement whatever. Nicholas Greer, who entered in January, is suffering with spinal troubles in addition to consumption. The new treatment has produced no change for the better in his case. John Girty, entered June 7th, 1886. His condition remains unchanged. James Graham entered April 12th, 1883. His trouble is asthma and chronic bronchitis. Mr. Graham had himself weighed when the treatment began, and weighed again yesterday, and declares positively that the new treatment has gained him five pounds in weight already. On George Kountzler, a consumptive, who entered July, 1884, the new treatment was only commenced yesterday, and no change in condition is apparent.

"It is almost too soon to look for results," said the superintendent of the hospital, "but we are giving the treatment a fair trial, for we know it will not harm, even though it should fail to benefit. The patients, though, are greatly encouraged about themselves, and the majority are in high spirits. How much imagination or this beautiful weather has to do with it we cannot say, but one and all hope for success. No; we are not treating any female patients with the new method."

At the Allegheny General Hospital the new cure has been experimented with for two months. Dr. Williamson, under whose direction the cure is used, said: "I can scarcely give an answer now as to permanent results. We have had no patients under treatment long enough to give definite opinions, but I must say there has been a marked improvement wherever it has been used. We have three or four cases under our direct charge and some six or seven from the outside. We cannot claim a positive cure yet, though, as I said, there have been most beneficial results.

"There is one case which has been under treatment for the last two months. The name of the patient is Ella McCarthy. She was brought into the hospital over a year ago. She was expected to die within a few weeks, for had not this been the case we would not have taken her. She had a very troublesome cough, large cavities in both lungs, was very emaciated, weighed but seventy-nine pounds, suffered great pain, and was troubled with heavy expectorations. She was only able to be out of bed for a day at a time. We kept her alive by the usual methods until the new cure was tried.

"In a few days after its first use she began to improve. She slept better, gained in weight, her cough was less severe, the pain was diminished, and she was able to be up and around the house. The improvement in her case has been gradual, and we hope permanent. The cases of the other patients are not so well defined as this. Patients are more liable to be permanently cured if the lungs are not injured. In the case of Miss McCarthy the treatment has done much good. Some of the patients complain that the treatment is unpleasant."

A Pretty Story.

Miss Linwood had the privilege of copying any pictures in the gallery in Belvoir Castle, the Duke and Duchess of Rutland being her kind and intimate friends. It must have been about 1825 or 1826 that she had just finished her copy of a precious landscape by (I think) Poussin when a friend of the Duke, a great connoisseur, visited him and desired to see this picture He came with the Duke to Miss Linwood's house for the purpose. The landscape was brought into the room and carefully placed in a good light. The art critic was delighted and voluble in his admiration, but when he arose and approached for a nearer view Miss Linwood ordered "the other picture" to be fetched and placed beside the first one, which was then found to be her own work, so perfect were her imitations.

The Dowager Duchess of Rutland had been a renowned beauty, as a most lovely engraved portrait she gave to Miss Linwood bore witness. One day when Her Grace's little granddaughter was with her she, stroking the pretty young cheek, exclaimed with a sigh: "Ah! my dear, what would you not give to be as beautiful as I was."

The young lady was equal to the occasion, and, raising the fair jeweled old hand to her lips, replied: "Just as much, grandmamma, dear, as you would to be as young as I am."—London Queen.

Titles in Kansas.

"About these titles, now," said a new resident of Kansas to a native, "I want to know something about them. There's Colonel Woodchuck, for instance; how did he get his title?" "Don't know; but he registered that way at the hotel when he first came, so we suppose it's all right." "And Captain Duster?" "He's captain of a baseball nine." "There's Judge Snoozenbarry?" "He was judge in a hog guessing match once." "Commodore Sandbar?" "He runs a ferry boat." "How about Professor Bilk?" "He's a pugilist." "And Senator McTuff?" "Oh, he gets mad and wants to fight if we don't call him that." "And the Hon. McBride?" "He ran for the Legislature once." "And General Carpetbag?" "Well, you see he is a leading citizen, and we kind o' give it to him in recognition of his public services. Oh, we came by our titles honestly. They call me captain because I have lived in the State twenty-five years, and if you'll just walk around sort of straight and give it out that you're major, it will be all right."—Ex.

How to Get Rich.

A land speculation: "But," said the would-be purchaser, "they tell me that the land is covered by a swamp."

"Swamp? why, of course. It's the richest land in the world."

"But how am I to get rid of the water?"

"Pump it off."

"Yes, but then it will be on some other man's land."

"That's all right. Let him pump it off on to someone else's land. My dear sir, you should never be bothered by what is on some other man's land."

"Yes, but won't he pump the water back on my land."

"The very thing you want. The best crops in the world are raised that way. Pumping from first one field to another brings about a mutual system of irrigation. I got rich that way.—Arkansaw Traveller.

Rapidly Mastering English.

The Boston Budget tells of a lady in that city who is much interested in the spiritual welfare of Chinamen. Among the Celestials is one whose progress has not been such as to greatly encourage his teacher. Therefore, when she called upon him the other day at his laundry and inquired how he was getting along, she was very much pleased with the prompt reply, "Pletty good." Happening to notice the absence from the shop of one whom she was accustomed to meet on previous visits there, she asked what had become of him, whereupon her protege dumbfounded her and still further emphasized his own progress in the mastery of English, by his response, "Klicked tlee blucket."—New York Tribune.

A Slight Misunderstanding.

Tough (in apothecary's shop)—Say, young feller, gimme ten grains o' strychnine, right away, in a big hurry, and don't you forget it.

Clerk—Rats?

Tough—Now, look a-here, I don't want any o' your slang, or I'll jump over there and spoil that dude collar o' yours in 'bout four seconds.

He was waited on immediately.—Harper's Basar.

She Would Keep.

Young man (to sexton, at a church door)—Isn't the sermon nearly done?

Sexton—About an hour yet. He is only on his "Lastly."

Young man—Will it take him an hour to get through his "Lastly"?

Sexton—No; but there's the "One word more and I am done," and the "Finally," and the "In conclusion" to come yet. Don't get impatient, young man. Your girl won't spoil!

A Work of Art.

Young Lady (in the country)—And did you really paint the barn yourself, Uncle James?

Uncle James—Yes.

Young Lady—By hand?

Uncle James—Sartin.

Young Lady (fetching her breath)—Think of it, a hand-painted barn!

A San Francisco man is suing Actor Booth and his managers for $10,007.50 damages. Several weeks ago he paid $7.50 for three seats at one of Booth's performances, and when he went to the theatre he found they were portable chairs, and in different parts of the house. The next day he began the suit.

DROLLERIES OF THE SCHOOL.

Putting Children on Tip-Toe to Reach the Top of the Tree.

Here are some notes made by a teacher, who has kindly placed them in our hands. They show that instruction in the public schools must be made to conform to common sense. Here are some of the children's exercises:

"There were some virgils who could tell whether any one was going to die. One of them married. It was not right for virgils to marry, so they put them in a basket on the Tiber. When they grew up they built Rome and restored the throne to their grandfather, Alba Longa."

Christ was crucified at Antioch, in Syria.

Christ was crucified in the 19th year of his age.

Christ was crucified nineteen years B. C.

Christ was born at David (Luke ii. 11).

Christ was crucified in the reign of the Roman Emperor Pharaoh.

He (Julius Cæsar) conquered all the known world—There was more known than when Augustus reigned—He crossed the Rubicon to Alexandria—He made a conspiracy against Rome, but was successful—He came into Spain and to Rome—At the Senate they pulled their cloaks around him and he said, "What Brutus! thou too Casca?" And in the year 27 B. C. in the 44th year of his reign and the 76th of his life he left a wife.

The fable of the "Fox and the Grapes" was read, with the exception of the moral. The pupils were asked to write the story and supply the moral.

A horse passing along saw some lucicious grapes hanging. He picked two then threw them down and went away saying "The grapes are sour." The moral is—he got the grapes.

Cleopatra was a very wicked woman. She was persecuted by Antony and died of the bight of an asp, or the prick of a poisonous needle, and then she found she had to go to Rome in chains.

Moore's "Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea" was read, and the cause of rejoicing explained, and the pupils were requested to write the substance of the stanza.

Moore has beautifully pictured in verse how Jehovah and his people escaped from Ferro by crossing a sea. He says thus sound the loud tymbal Jehovah has escaped from the army of Ferro by crossing the sea thus separating themselves from Ferro and his army by the sea; both men, horses and chariots of Ferro went down. When the tempest sounded over the sea the people cried Jehovah is free.

"Miss ——, I cannot understand the lesson."

"What is the matter?"

"I have looked out the word c-e-l-i-b-a-c-y in the dictionary, and I don't understand the lesson. It says the monks made a vow of celibacy—that means they musn't get married—but I don't see how that could be, for it says they were of great value to the land for (reading from the book) 'they raised nurseries and became excellent husbandmen.'"—Harper's Weekly.

Hard Lines for the Wife.

(Scene—Highlandmen's Cross, Broomielaw. Dramatis personæ: Donald and Dugal.) Donald—Is it no possible? Is eat you, Tugalt? Man its a lang langt time sin I'll didna sat ye pefore. Dugald—Ooh, aye, Tonalt, lad. Man, did ye'll ken I've got marit? Donald—Marit! Dugald—Aye, marit, and what for no? Donald—That's goot. Dugald—Na; not so goot neithers. Donald—Aye; whey's sat? Dugald—Oh, she's got a deevil of a temper. Donald—Aye; that's pad. Dugald—No; na sa pad neithers. Donald—Aye; whey's sat? Dugald—Man, she has sillars and we poucht a hoose. Donald—Och, aye man; that's goot. Dugald—Na; not so goot neithers. Donald—Aye; whey's sat? Dugald—The hoose wis burnt. Donald—Och, man, that's pad, pad. Dugald—Na; not so pad neithers. Donald—Whey's sat? Dugald—Man, the wife wis purnt wis it, and she'll got tae insurance sillars to her nainsell, forpy.—Scottish American.

A Constitutional Ailment.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, a great big man like you, to be a beggar and a tramp. You oughtn't to be afraid of work."

"I know it, mum, but I can't help it. You see, my nurse frightened me once in a dark room when I was a baby, and I have been timid ever since."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Didn't Wait to "Grow Up."

This has been found on the wall of a deserted shanty in the heart of Dakota: "Fore miles frum a naber; sixteen miles frum a postoffis; twenty-five miles frum a raleroad; a hundred and atey frum timber; half a mile frum watter; God bless our home. We're gone East to get a fresh start."

It is said that a shop on any of the main thoroughfares of London can afford to cheat every customer, because the crowd of strangers passing the door will continue to furnish new victims year after year.

—The short veils worn by the ladies, reaching just below the eyes, may protect gentlemen from their dazzling glances, but they make the ladies' foreheads look dirty.

A talking canary has been discovered at Lowestoft, England. It belongs to a lady who has taught it to repeat several words and phrases, and to imitate successfully the notes of other caged birds.

—Texas Siftings: "Among the Zulus young people fight and get married. Here they get married and fight."

The Maros River, in Transylvania, has overflowed its banks, flooding the town of Karbburg and interrupting the railroad traffic. Rain is still falling. Troops are engaged in rescuing property in the flooded territory.

It's an awful thing, force of habit. It's accountable for a great deal of misery and a great deal of happiness. Most things are done from force of habit. Swearing, drinking, loving, hating all become habits, and can't be got over. A fellow goes courting, and it's awfully pleasant. At first it's novelty and fun, then it becomes habit, and they think it is love. The girl goes away for a month. He pines for a week, and when she comes back she's got out of the habit, and he's got into the habit of courting another girl, and it's all up.

A THERMOMETER'S STORY.

Odd Facts Revealed Concerning the Temperature of Dwellings.

Rev. D. Benjamin, of Camden, N. J., has made some observations regarding the subject of the varying temperature of our dwelling-rooms which will be found of much practical importance, says the Philadelphia Medical Record. Every one knows, in a general way, that the air of rooms is colder near the floor and near the windows, but the very exact differences of temperature as obtained by Lr. Benjamin are very striking. For example, in a room ten feet high, twelve feet wide and twenty feet long, with a good stove and steady fire, the temperature in the centre was found to be 78° F.; 4 feet from the window it was 70°; 1 foot from the window 54°, and at the window 40°. At the height of the head the temperature was 75°, at the floor 50°, a difference of 25°. At the ceiling the temperature was 90° when the temperature at the height of the head was 70°. The experiments cited above were made in the three-story brick house of twelve rooms, with a warm cellar. It was further observed that when the three floors were as nearly as possible evenly heated the second floor had a much more uniform temperature than the first or third. The fact that the temperature of dwelling-rooms varies is widely explains, no doubt, the frequency with which young children, and even adults, take cold in the house. A child sitting on a nurse's lap in a temperature of 70° gets down and plays on the floor in a temperature of 10° or more lower, or runs to the window, a change of 20° or 30°. The habit which ladies have of wearing slippers or light shoes in the house is the cause of many troubles for these same reasons. The temperature of a room should be about 70° F. The hot furnace-heated houses of our cities cause a vast deal of nervous and respiratory trouble. The thermometer should be hung at about the height of the person's head, and, of course, not near the window or the stove.

Dr. Benjamin adds: "Some years ago I devised a contrivance to protect children from the death-dealing windows in cold weather, which has given me, as well as parents, much satisfaction. It is simply a fender of metal—also made of wood—about three feet high, and extending out from the window fifteen or twenty inches. In some families where I have had these screens arranged to the windows for one or two years I have reduced the medical attendance very greatly, as my books will show."

A Bloody Affray

is often the result of "bad blood" in a family or community, but nowhere is bad blood more destructive of happiness and health than in the human system. When the life current is foul and sluggish with impurities, and is slowly distributing its poisons to every part of the body, the peril to health, and life even, is imminent. Early symptoms are dull and drowsy feelings, severe headaches, coated tongue, poor appetite, indigestion and general lassitude. Delay in treatment may entail the most serious consequences. Don't let disease get a strong hold on your constitution, but treat yourself by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and be restored to the blessings of health. All druggists.

A man has been sentenced to ten days' imprisonment for kissing the fat girl at a circus. This adds a new peril to circus going.

Jenks' Dream.

Jenks had a queer dream the other night. He thought he saw a prize-fighters' ring, and in the middle of it stood a doughty little champion who met and deliberately knocked over, one by one, a score or more of big, burly-looking fellows, as they advanced to the attack. Giants as they were in size the valiant pigmy proved more than a match for them. It was all so funny that Jenks woke up laughing. He accounts for the dream by the fact that he had just come to the conclusion, after trying nearly every big, drastic pill on the market, that Pierce's tiny Purgative Pellets easily "knocked out" and beat all the rest hollow!

—How to raise young lambs is a question for discussion at a farmers' meeting. Our way would be—ewes' milk.

They Speak for Themselves.

PICTON, Feb. 17.—This is to certify that I have used Polson's Nerviline for rheumatism, and have found it a valuable remedy for all internal pain, and would greatly recommend it to the public.—N. T. KINGSLEY.

LEEDS COUNTY, Jan. 9.—We are not in the habit of puffing patent medicines, but we cannot withold our testimony as to the great value of Nerviline as a remedy for pain. We have pleasure in recommending it as a never-failing remedy. REV. H. J. ALLEN, BENJ. DILLON, and many others.

P. A. Churchill states: There seems to be no end to the success of Nerviline. I send you a few testimonials, and can send you plenty more if of use to you.

Sold everywhere.

In the French Academy of Sciences a paper was read the other day on an absolute unity of time. An electrical apparatus was described which gives results more accurately than those of the best-constructed astronomical clock. It has also the advantage of indicating, recording and automatically correcting its own variations of velocity.

McCollum's Rheumatic Repellant is recognised by leading druggists as the standard remedy for rheumatic affections. It is for internal use only, has been tested thoroughly for many years and is known to be reliabl

The Railway Commission opened its meeting in London on Saturday.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

There is a curious law in vogue in Switzerland which compels every newly-married couple to plant trees shortly after the marriage ceremony. The trees ordered to be planted on wedding days are the pine and weeping willow, but on natal days the suggestive birch tree is selected.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,

663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D C N L. 22 87.

BILLIARD AND POOL TABLE.

FOR SALE—A COMBINATION Pool Table with full equipments, only two years in use. And in good condition. Apply to ROBERT JAHN, corner John and Main Streets Hamilton, Ontario.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

The Blueberry is a valuable fruit, and is a reliable fruit to grow in the Northern States, where the more tender varieties winter kills. It is perfectly hardy, will stand 40 degrees below zero without showing any injury to the most tender buds. Fruit ripens in this latitude about the first of July. Color, a bluish black, when fully ripened. The flavor is equal to the raspberry, a very mild, rich sub-acid, pronounced by most people delicious. The fruit is excellent for pies, or canned for winter use. It grows very stocky; the shining dark-green leaves and the blue fruit make a pleasing contrast. It seems to flourish in all soils and is a prolific bearer. One dozen plants by mail, carefully packed in oil paper, 60 cts.; two dozen by mail, $1.00; 100 by express, $2.50; 1,000, $15.00.

Address L. D. STAPLES, Portland, Mich.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

A Chapter on Spring Poets.

By The Fighting Editor of the Flesherton Advance.

I'm the Fighting Editor of the greatest local journal in this country I am. Have been in the business six years to day. Fact. What local journal do I mean? Why the FLESHERTON ADVANCE of course. You must be a greeny, you must, not to know that. Well, well! it doesn't seem like six years after all. And yet it is, for up above the great and only "Tit-Bits" column the "boss" has planted "Vol. VII" as plain as the nose on your face, that is if you've got a nose. I don't say you all have noses, for I once saw a man whose proboscis had been bitten off by a brute, who probably had been a boy once but degeneration "sot" in and developed brutal instincts. Its often the case.

But I've been drifting away from the subject—knocked out on the first round, no, paragraph I mean. But it doesn't signify if you follow Marquis of Queensbury rules—the ordinary rules of letter writing is what I really do mean; anyway, as the immortal Toots put it, "its of no consequence."

I see I can't evade it any longer. Its Spring Poets the editor-in-chief has instructed me to write about, although I,d a blamed sight rather club the whole tribe, than stick 'em in print. I hate 'em—most of 'em, I mean to say. Takes me all my time

WATCHING FOR SPRING POETS.

They crop up when least expected. Sometimes I've caught 'em hanging 'round the office in June and even in July. They expect to find me "napping," but bless you I'd get unto them with both feet if they came fooling around with their Spring Poetry nonsense in December! In fact I'm always on hand, like a corn or bunion, only they are generally always on the feet.

Six years unceasing warfare has developed my muscle considerably: besides my accoutrements are more numerous now than they were the first year. How well I remember that first Spring songster who awoke me in my lair six years ago this blessed day! I was a "leetle" green then. He fooled me real bad. His hair was as short as my own, and he hadn't a big roll under his arm. He walked in quietly.

"Is the Editor in? said he.

"Just gone to the Post-Office," said I indifferently.

"Ah! then I'll see him there," said he.

Then he was gone.

Less than five minutes afterwards the "boss" came in looking awfully mad. He held a small roll of manuscript in his hand.

"You fool!" he roared, "why didn't you mash that poet when he called a few minutes ago!"

"What" shouted I, "was that a poet?"

"He was," said the "boss" scornfully, "and confound his impudence I've agreed to publish his rubbish in next week's ADVANCE."

I felt like kicking myself at first, but at length concluded it wiser to husband my strength.

The following day a suspicious looking stranger called with a roll of paper in his hand and a bland smile hovering over his countenance. I sized him up and quietly reached under the counter for my club.

"Are you the Editor?" he asked.

"I am," said I savagely.

"O, yes, I see; well I've got a little—"

I raised my club and let drive at him. He dodged the blow and shot out of the office as though hurled from a catapult.

When the boss came in I discovered to my horror that the man I attempted to club was a respectable lawyer who wanted to insert a legal advertisement in the ADVANCE. Next week the "ad" adorned the columns of a neighboring contemporary.

Next spring I was not much more succesful, and did not make things as hot for all Spring Poets who favored The ADVANCE office with a call as I might have. I well remember one old gentleman. He called and commenced talking about the crops, weather and everything but poetry. By and by he suddenly placed a bundle of papers in my hands. He had gray hairs, so I did not club him on the spot.

"What's this piece of poetry about," said I placing my index finger on a piece of well worn and faded yellow paper.

"Oh," said he, clasping his hands, "that's a beautiful piece!"

"I suppose its original like all the rest—in other words, you wrote it all yourself and didn't steal it from some hymn book or tract?" I mildly enquired,

He raised his hands in pious horror and seemed bereft of the powers of speech for a time.

"Me and me sisther writ that betwixt us when we wor childher in the ould counthry," said he in a slightly reproachful tone.

That settled it. I was at once interested and took the faded paper tenderly in my own hands. The title of the poetry was, "Father, dear Father, Come Home with me Now." When the boss came in I handed it to him, saying as it was strictly original it would create a sensation if published in THE ADVANCE before envious and jealous rivals got wind of it. To my amazement the boss lit his pipe with it!

I'm more experienced now and can spot a poet half a mile off. Within the last four years I've clubbed about three hundred and forty-six—sometimes, of course, I've made mistakes and mashed lightning rod agents, tea peddlers, book peddlers and such like; but of course it was of "no consequence." At the present time my accoutrements or accessories—whichever you like to call them—consist of one Enfield-Snider Rifle, one Colt Revolver, one ferocious Dog and one large healthy Club. I am thinking of adding an 80-ton Cannon and a Shot-gun!

A sound body and a contented mind are necessary to perfect happiness. If you wish to possess these, cleanse your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is perfectly safe to take, and is a thoroughly reliable, highly concentrated, and powerful blood purifier.

To the Members of Centre Grey, Farmer's Institute.

Gentlemen,—On reading the Kimberley correspondence in the Markdale Standard of last week, I find some statements made with a vengeance against myself, for voting against a resolution seconded by D. R. Ellis at a meeting of the Provincial Farmers Institute held in the city of Toronto on the 28th of April last, and for this great sin I am to suffer at the hands of the correspondent. Now, I do not purpose losing any time contradicting the above statements, but shall give you the motion as it reads, and my reasons for opposing it. It was moved in an amendment to a motion which appears in the Mail of the 28th of April, by Mr. Hunter, seconded by D. R. Ellis, That in the opinion of this Institute a removal of all restriction on trade between the Dominion of Canada and the United States, is desirable either by reciprocity or otherwise as may be agreed upon by the Governments of the respective countries and that the officers of the executive committee of this Institute are hereby authorized to take such action on the premises as shall best promote the object of this resolution. My first objection to this resolution was that it never had been discussed in any of our Institute meetings therefore I was not prepared to state what you desired regarding the above resolution. Second, I was of the opinion and still entertain the opinion, that the action taken regarding reciprocity and the publicity given to such action throughout the Dominion and United States will have a tendency to thwart a speedy and satisfactory settlement of this very important matter as the Americans will take advantage of the strong desire expressed in the above resolution as representing the feeling entertained by the agriculturalists of this country, therefore this hasty action is only playing into the hands of the Americans and will no doubt cause them to ask for better terms, while it is weakening the hands of the government of Canada to accomplish what they desire to do.

Now suppose the object of Mr. Hunter's resolution was attained, it means free trade between Canada and United States to all intents and purposes. Then how is the revenue to be raised to meet the liabilities of the Dominion, while there are only three ways by which it could be raised. First, by buying on the rateable property of the Dominion; we think this would be objectionable to the farmers, especially in Ontario under the present assessment law, as amended during the last session of our local Legislature. Secondly, by levying an inland revenue tax on all or whatever part of the articles consumed, the Government thought proper to levy. Will you agree to this? We think not. Thirdly, by placing a high tariff on all foreign goods almost to the exclusion of all commercial intercourse with Great Britain. Do you think, gentlemen, this country is prepared to do such a thing as true Britons? You will most assuredly say "no we cannot afford to do anything that will cause the old flag of England to desert our shores."

But by the by, I wish to remind you further, Mr. Cochran's amendment provides that in case the government of the Dominion fail to accomplish the end in view, as cited in the amendment, then as a last resort they are to ask the government of Great Britain to enter into a commercial union with her colonies in regard to food supplies and to impose a protective tariff against all foreign countries. Now I hold this is as much as to say that the Government of the Dominion shall make a treaty with the United States almost to the exclusion of British trade from our shores, failing to do this they are to call upon Great Britain to do as above set forth. This, I consider would be slighting Great Britain and thus humilating to the Dominion Government, under these circumstances I hope to be excused for allowing my British blood to get warm.

Now gentlemen I wish it to be perfectly understood that I am in favor of fair and honorable reciprocity, between Canada and United States such as would not sever our commercial interests with other nations but there has been too much haste in this matter and too much American dictation, with all due respect to our American friends for I have no prejudice but sincerely hope that the government of the Dominion will be able to make an honorable and satisfactory settlement with them, but I believe there is a better way of doing so than that proposed.

Suppose our friends across the border are disposed to act fairly with us (and if not it is better to leave them alone) surely a bargain can be made with them that will be advantageous to both countries. It is well known they are very anxious about our fisheries and so well they might, a nice little property worth to the Dominion about seven million dollars annually. Well, now, say they allow the produce of the fields, forest, mines and fish of the Dominion of Canada to go into the markets of the United States without restriction and Canada in return allow them to purchase bait, provision vessels, and the free use of the vast waters bordering on the Dominion of Canada to fish in. Should this not satisfy both parties, then leave the matter with Sir John if he cannot do something for us, we can't. More when I see you.

Yours Respectfully,
THOS. KELLS.

Pres. Centre Grey Farmer's Institute.

[The above was crowded out of last week's issue]

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's block, Flesherton. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

Volunteers.

No. 6 Company, 31st Batt. will meet at the Drill Shed, Flesherton, on Saturday evenings for drill, until further orders. 25 young men wanted to fill up the above company. Apply to J. J. Field, Lieut., No. 6 Company, Flesherton. t.f.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

FOR CLOTHING.

Please call and inspect our new stock for spring and summer. Beautiful patterns and at astonishingly low prices.
R. TRIMBLE. (tf.)

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.
Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

Strayed.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 133, West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, one Ewe, about a month ago. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.
JOHN McKEE.
Flesherton P.O.
Artemesia, May 27th, 1887.

Court of Revision!

Township of Artemesia.

First sitting, in the TOWN HALL, FLESHERTON, on WEDNESDAY, 15th JUNE, 1887, at 10 o'clock a.m. Any appeals intended for hearing at this Court to be placed in the hands of the Clerk, on or before 10th June, 1887.
W. J. BELLAMY,
May 25th, 1887. Clerk.

DUNDALK
PUMP WORKS!
C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS:
Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.
JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT,
FLESHERTON.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT JOHNSON'S
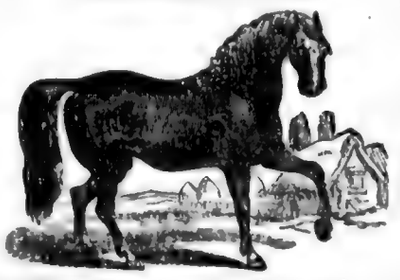
TONIC BITTERS
and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint.

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

THE ROADSTER STALLION,



BILLY V.!

Will leave his own stable in Flesherton, on MONDAY, MAY 2nd, 1887, at 12 o'clock noon, and proceed to Linley's hotel, Maxwell, where he will remain over night.
TUESDAY, will proceed to Jonathan Irish's, Wareham, for noon, thence to Johnston's hotel, Dundalk, where he will remain till Thursday morning
THURSDAY, will return to Flesherton for the night,
FRIDAY, will proceed to Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, for noon, and return to his own stable for the night.
SATURDAY, will proceed to Marsh's hotel, Markdale, for noon, and return to his own stable in Flesherton, where he will remain till the following Monday.
The above route will be continued during the season, health and weather permitting.

Description and Pedigree:
BILLY V., foaled June 18th, 1883, is a dark dappled bay, stands 15 hands 3 in., weighs 1150 pounds, and for bone, muscle, style and action, cannot be surpassed, was sired by Clear Grit jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger.

TERMS:
To insure a foal $10.00, payable March 1st, 1888. Season mares $8.00, payable last round of horse, or not later than July 12th, 1887, if not then paid said mares will be charged as insured mares. Single leap $6.00, payable at time of service. All mares not returned regularly to horse will be charged as insured mares. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Owners trying their mares to said horse and knowing them to be afflicted with any contagious disease, will be liable in damages. Groom's Fee 25 cents.

A. S. VANDUSEN, Owner, GEO. GLASSFORD, Groom.

TAMARAC
ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS
THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's.

Dentistry.

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,
GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry, will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Brauch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER, in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

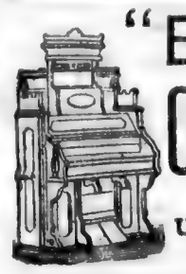
ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, - - ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance affected in first-class companies. Money to lend at owest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—:FROM:—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!
THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.
Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 312. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, JUNE 9, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

W. A. BROWN,

—THE—

PEOPLE'S JEWELLER,

Keeps the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, Wedding Rings, Spex, etc., between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden Watches, my own name on, accurately timed, 2 and 3 years warrants, $8.50 to $28.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto Cases. 2 to 5 oz. ½ Waltham, P. S. Bartlett's, 3 oz. coin case, $17.50; Ellery's, $14.50, lower grades, $8.00, to $13.00; Elgins if preferred. Ladies 10 & 14 k. Watches, and Gent's 10 & 14 k. filled cases always in stock. It is safe to buy Watches from me because I do business for myself, in my own name, and can be held to my warrants. 34 Seth Thomas, New Haven and Ansonia Clocks now in stock, bought close.

They will be sold below the "Terrible Bargains," prices at least 15 per cent.

It is easy to come down when goods are away up. I don't do a catch business.

Straight dealing ensures success.

I shall stay on that line. Small profits, modest prices. I secure patronage through low prices. Assortment Complete. Send for quotations. If I do not save you money I will make other Jewellers take cost. 18 years at the trade.

SPECIALTIES:
Watch Repairing, Fitting Spex.

Address Box 5, MARKDALE, ONT.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Wild strawberries commencing to boom.

Miss Frost, of Owen Sound, is the guest of Dr. Christoe.

Quite a number of cattle changed hands at our fair on Monday last.

Miss Smith, of "Poplar Hill" farm, Caledon, is the guest of Mr. Joseph Smith.

A good, steady man wants a situation as Farm hand. Apply at THE ADVANCE office, Flesherton.

Dr. Christoe returned from conference on Monday. Squire Armstrong got back on Tuesday.

Mr. John Nicholson preached a good sermon in the Methodist church here last Sunday morning.

Fall wheat out in head on the farm of Mr. Thos. Kells, Artemesia, on Monday last. Good. Who can beat it?

The annual rifle matches of the 31st Batt. have been postponed until after annual drill. Further notice later on.

The best assortment of Candies and Biscuits that can possibly be obtained at Keefer's Flour & Feed store Flesherton.

DANGER.—There are some who pay but little or any attention to a cough or cold, and say let nature take its course. This is just the time nature should have assistance. The lungs are threatened. Assist them with Tamarac Elixir.

Mr. James Ferris, of Proton, left a bunch of the largest and best rhubarb we ever saw at our sanctum on Friday last.

Master Bert. Armstrong, of this place while swinging in a hammock on Saturday last, fell out and broke his collar bone.

THE ADVANCE takes the strawberry for finest and cheapest job printing. Roll in a trial order and see for yourselves.

The Union Sabbath School picnic of the Presbyterian and Methodist S. S's, Flesherton, will take place on Thursday, 23rd inst.

Mr. Christopher Knott, Kimberley, has perhaps the finest and most extensive lot of strawberry vines to be found in Euphrasia.

It will pay you to go 20 miles to get your Flour from Keefer's Flour & Feed store, Flesherton. Bran, Shorts, Chop and Oats always on hand.

A new story will be commenced in THE ADVANCE next week, entitled, "Sir Hugh's Loves." Subscribe now: 50 cents pays for the paper till 1888.

We observe by the Republican Valley Echo that Messrs. Blakely and Little have arrived at their destination, Franklin, Neb., U. S. Success, boys.

The life-giving properties of Ayer's Sarsaparilla have established its well-earned reputation, and made it the most effectual and popular blood purifier of the day. For all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, this remedy has no equal. Price $1.

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON,

Has the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewelery, Wedding Rings, Spex &c. between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden, Columbus, Waltham, Elgin, and Swiss Watches, bearing warrants from 2 1-2 to five years from $7.50 to $25.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto cases 2 to 5 1-2 oz. We never ask any more than $16.00 for a P. S. Bartlett 3 oz. coin silver case, some dealers have the cheek to ask $17.50. Ellery's $13.25, while other dealers ask $14.50. Lower Grades from $6.90 to 11.50. Ladies & Gents Gold Watches. All kinds of American Clocks at lower prices than elsewhere. The fact is, other dealers cannot begin to compete with us notwithstanding the fact we do not sell at auction or trade on the church. A fine Stock just arrived at lower prices than ever. Always take your Watches, Clocks, & Jewelry to RUSSELL to repair, the only genuine Watchmaker & Jeweler in this section of country. Come right along and secure some bargains. It will pay you to come 20 miles to deal with us. You can save 25 per cent. by dealing at

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Flesherton now possesses a four-acre school site. The trustees purchased 2½ acres from Mr. W. K. Flesher, and that gentleman made the Board a present of 1½ acres more. Good for Mr. Flesher, of Flesherton.—Mt. Forest Representative.

Mr. John Gordon of this place received a telegram on Tuesday informing him of the death of an aunt of his who lived in Guelph,—and the death of whose husband was published in THE ADVANCE only a couple of months ago.

The Dufferin Post has again changed hands. Mr. D. J. Mungovan has resumed his seat in the editorial chair. Evidences of the change are to be seen in every department of that live journal. Mungovan Bros. are now the publishers.

Owen Sound, June 2.—A young man named Cook, living near here, was accidently shot by a lad named Samuel Greenshields, who fired a load of buckshot into Cook's back, shoulders and head. The wounded man is not likely to recover.

The addition of a magnificent $60 Circle Bass to the already fine lot of instuments in the Flesherton Band should have been noticed in last week's ADVANCE. Its a beauty. Next thing wanted is a band stand. Who'll move first in the matter?

We direct special attention to the announcement of Messrs. Little and Blakely, proprietors of the Maxwell Carriage Works, in another column of THE ADVANCE. The members of this firm are well known as straightforward and honest business men. Further comment would be superfluous.

The persons who dumped the refuse of their back yards on the street nearly opposite Mr. Neil's residence are respectfully asked to proceed from their respective places of abode to the spot in question and either spread the stuff so that it will not create foul odors, or cover it up with gravel or dirt.

A public entertainment will be held in the Orange Hall, Flesherton Station, on the evening of June 13th, under the auspices of Fountain Council No. 146, R. T. of T., Flesherton. The chair to be taken at 8 p. m., sharp by Thos. Granger, Esq. The public are cordially invited to be present. Admission free.

The District Council of Royal Templars for Grey was held in the rooms of Bethel Council, No. 14, New England on Tuesday last. There was a large attendance of delegates, four Councils being represented. An entertainment was held in the evening which was duly appreciated by the large audience present.

A number of travelling (or wandering) dealers in horse-flesh struck Flesherton last Friday afternoon and pitched their quilt-covered canopies on the left banks of the classic Boyne, in the midst of a drenching rain. They had a number of horses with them and several powerful and ferocious dogs. Our fighting editor cast longing and envious glances at the latter.

Last Sunday evening the pulpit of Flesherton Methodist church was occupied by Rev. A. Wilson, Presbyterian minister, who delivered one of the most earnest, stirring and eloquent sermons ever heard within the walls of that edifice. He took for his text the words: "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul." There was a sort of fiery eloquence and deep religious fervor about the sermon that it seemed to magnetize the large congregation and suggest bygone days, when a Luther, a Calvin, a Knox or a Whitfield preached the "glad tidings of great joy."

Do not take quinine for malarial disorders. Ayer's Ague Cure contains none, nor any other injurious ingredient. This preparation, if taken strictly in accordance with directions, is warranted to cure all malarial diseases.

We respectfully suggest that our Township Fathers do forthwith resurrect and enforce the now defunct dog tax.

"Be a man or a mouse," said Mulcahy to Muldoon the other day. "If the first, you'll subscribe for THE ADVANCE; if the latter, you won't."

Grand Temperance demonstration in the afternoon, and splendid entertainment in the evening, Monday, June 20th, in Flesherton. The greatest event of the year.

The 31st Batt. will go into camp at Niagara on the 14th inst. Volunteers of the Flesherton company are requested to get their clothing, etc., before that date in order that there may be no delay in taking train sharp on time. They are also requested to attend drill at Flesherton on Saturday, 11th inst., at 4 o'clock p. m., and on Monday following, 13th inst. at same hour.

Our well-known contractor, Mr. J. E. Moore, together with his assistants, have completely changed the appearance of our Town Hall. Outside it is painted a dark green with brown facings, the effect being very pretty. Inside the change has been equally radical in the matter of painting. No more white walls and ceilings; instead we find them boasting of a beautiful rich buff-sort of color, produced by the much-talked of new "wash" or paint, "Asbestine." The platform has been raised two feet and is approached by a pair of staircases. A great improvement has been effected throughout.

The pastor of the Methodist church here, Rev. Mr. Ayers, will remove from this District to the Listowel one at the end of this conference year. His headquarters will be the flourishing village of Gorrie, in the East riding of Huron county and on the Teaswater branch of the C. P. R. A large number of warm friends here—of all denominations—sincerely regret the removal, as the rev. gentleman and his estimable family are highly respected by the people generally. We are safe in saying that he goes to his new field of labor with the good wishes of everybody on this circuit. We might add the finances of the church have greatly improved in nearly every department under the pastorate of Rev. W. Ayers. May every success crown his future labors. His successor, Rev. Mr. Shilton, M. A., comes to us warmly and highly recommended.

DISGUSTING CATARRH.—A gentleman from Montreal writes:—For years I have been greatly annoyed by Catarrh. It caused severe pain in the head, continual discharge into my throat, and very unpleasant breath. By a thorough use of Nasal Balm I was completely cured.

FARMERS!

WOOLEN FACTORY

W. H. FLESHER.

BRITISH NORTH BORNEO.

The Colonial and Indian Exhibition.

(By Thomas C. Watkins, 1886.)

This is the youngest, though by no means the most insignificant of the numerous progeny of the grand old mother land. In December, 1877, and January, 1878, Mr. Dent and a few other gentlemen engaged in the eastern trade obtained the cession of the whole of North Borneo, from the Kimanis river on the west to the Sibuco river on the east coast, which, with the recent cession of the Pandas district, stretches over a territory containing about 31,000 square miles, with a coast line of 600 miles, and several of the finest harbors in the Eastern seas. It is asserted that Kudat, in Maruda Bay, the most northern point, is so favorably situated that it will be able to obtain all the trade from Palawan, Balabac, Sula and Cagayan-Sulu, which now passes westward through the Mallawalli passage; and probably a large portion of the trade of the Southern Philippines also. Amongst the great harbors which give importance to North Borneo, in view of the vast trade in the Chinese seas and future eventualities in time of war, are Gaya and Amboug on the west coast; Kudat, already named, to the north, and the nearest to the great gateway of our trade between India and China, Japan and Australia. The last lies in close proximity to the Palawan passage and lies nearly midway between Hong Kong, the Straits Settlements and Australia, being within five days of each by steam. Sandakan Bay, on the east coast, where the Government has its headquarters, has been described by a late writer in a report to Sir Stamford Raffles as "the finest in the world." This colony was founded by the "British North Borneo Company," under a royal charter bearing date the 1st November, 1881, so that it is but

AN INFANT GIANT

yet. The recent excessive anxiety on the part of Germany and France for the acquisition of colonial possessions in the East, and the numerous annexations made in furtherance of this object in Africa, in the Pacific and in the Eastern seas, give increased importance to the acquisition of North Borneo by the British at the present time. From its central position it possesses important advantages, both commercial and strategical, which no other island in the Eastern Archipelago affords. And under existing circumstances, considering the almost invaluable possessions held by Britain in the East, and the enormous interests she has there, its value in an international no less than a national point of view cannot well be over-estimated. Its past history shows that at one period it had a flourishing trade with China and the adjacent archipelago, and a large and industrious population, until the advent of the Portuguese, the Dutch and the Spaniards into those regions, after the discoveries of Bernardo Dias and those of Vasco di Gama round the Cape, opened the way to India and China by sea four centuries ago. The cupidity and ruthless policy of all the first settlers in the Eastern Archipelago, amongst islands so rich and populous, destroyed all security for life and property amongst the natives. With the loss of security their commercial and agricultural prosperity disappeared rapidly, and Borneo was reduced, in common with many other most productive and flourishing islands, to a wilderness, and the inhabitants converted into pirates, and murderers by the barbarity of these tyrannical Christians, who drove the inoffensive islanders from the more peaceful and productive pursuits of agriculture and commerce to

PREY UPON THEIR FELLOW CREATURES

wherever they could catch them in the neighboring seas. Large territories in Borneo, rich in all the natural products, with ranges of mountains to the tropical climate, and numerous rivers to afford cheap and easy means of transport from the interior, have thus remained for two centuries a jungle—a wilderness, with a very scanty population, a standing monument of the cruelty of their former tyrannical Christian masters! The land came into the possession of the original grantees in 1877, and was only transferred to the present company in 1882. Judging from the great variety, beauty and perfection of the products shown by this colony at the great family gathering in the Exhibition, great progress must have been made in such a short period, and the efforts made to introduce civil government in harmony with British laws must have been conceived in wisdom and carried out with great energy to develop the resources of a country reduced to such a ruinous state into such perfection in such a short period. There was not sufficient time to enable the resident officials to make a complete and exhaustive exhibition of even all the natural products spread over so large an area, much of which has not yet been fully explored or settled. But great exertions must have been made to bring together, at such short notice, such a magnificent display of the indigeneus products of that fertile land. If some may think this colony to be of little consequence to the trade of the world, let them refer to the smallness, unpromising and insignificant trade of Hong Kong and Singapore in the first period of British ownership, though now forming the great centre of a trade which encompasses the whole world in its circuit. Fifty years has not yet elapsed since Hong Kong was a barren island, a bare rock with only a few fishermen for its inhabitants. But at present Victoria rises as Queen of the seas in that island, with many British foreigners and 100,000 Chinese residents there, while ships of almost every nationality crowd its capacious harbors continually. A similar history has been wrought out for Singapore and the Straits Settlements. The commencement of the present century saw those places poor and insignificant, and it is only during the present half century that the

GREAT FLOODGATES OF TRADE AND PROSPERITY

have flown in upon them. From the geographical position and great natural advantages of Borneo there is every reason to believe the same prosperity will visit her people e'er long. The united imports and exports of Singapore in 1880 were £25,740,174, which was chiefly due to its position, an honest Government and a plentiful supply of cheap labor by the Chinese colonists. British goods are being shut out of the European markets more and more every year. Hence, in view of the present changes taking place in Europe and the United States, where British manufactures are being shut out by the large quantities of goods produced in nearly all those countries, which were until lately large customers of Great Britain, but are competitors now, and are offering their own manufactures to Britain at present, and hence the necessity of the British manufacturers finding markets for their enormous productions amongst the Oriental nations, where, owing to the slow, antiquated processes of manufacturing, Britain can undersell the native manufacturers. The markets of the East are still open, where Russian tariffs do not exist, and no prohibitive or hostile duties are likely to be imposed under native rule. If Britain does not waken up fully to the great danger affecting her commercial and manufacturing interests she will, before the lapse of many years, lose her rank as the greatest manufacturing and commercial nation of the world. The French, the Germans and the Americans are her competitors now for the trade of the world. She should

GIVE UP HER ANTIQUATED IDEAS,

